We called upon Mr. Jacobi to see what he had to offer, and found him to be a very entertaining gentleman, an artist and photographer of international repute, and considerably interested in the art of motion pictures, which he had made a study of in France. He said that American manufacturers could not compete in photographic quality with the French, chiefly due to the faulty construction of their studios, which seemed to have been erected without any knowledge of the principles of lighting. He is open for consultation in regard to studio erection. Mr. Jacobi was dodging here and there between rare and curious specimens of art and furniture of unique design. Old paintings, tapestries, armor and weapons, crowded each other almost out of the door. The Genuine Antique Store should be a Mecca for property men who desire realism in the pictures, and we understand that any of the articles in the store can be rented very reasonably indeed for stage purposes.

Eau Claire, Wis.—The Orpheum Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The incorporators are Albert Nelson, L. P. Dowling and Walter Bonell.

Erie, Ill.—Mr. Drake has opened a new moving picture theater in the Putnam Auditorium.

Observations by Our Man About Town.

Upon my table this week is a letter from a young man with whom I am well acquainted. He states he is ambitious, has plenty money behind him and is determined to make his mark in the moving picture business. From the general tone of his letter we are led to believe that he is going to make a hit as a manager. The letter is dated at a seaside resort and the writer makes many references to a tent—a black tent—and he says he has already versed himself in the black art business and feels confident that he can make good. All he wants to know from us is the best road to take.

* * *

Knowing the origin of the letter, the best advice we can give is "cross-lots." The shortest road home in this case is the best. The black art business is a thing of the past. The black tent is an entirely different thing and is good only for Summer business. Even at that it cannot be rated as good unless the investor is ready to "rough it." How many have seen the black tent in operation in a "Summer town?" It is really a novelty. Approaching the alluring spot we see a two-story structure about 16 feet high. The apartment on the ground floor—about 6 x 6—is the ticket office. The apartment above—the same size as the one below—is the operator's room. Adjoining this, to the north, we will say, is the black tent. At the northern extremity is spread the screen upon which the pictures are shown. At the northern extremity of this black tent is a one-story extension made of light wood. This is a kitchen and dining room. Sleeping apartments? Oh! yes. Plenty of that sort of thing after the last audience of the night has left. Do you like the picture? We are sure it has not been painted to the liking of the young man who is ready for the plunge. When the gentleman who appears in the full dress suit at the show is followed early the next morning with a market basket on his arm on his way to the grocer and butcher, and the young man who was heard the night before singing "Beautiful Eyes" is seen dodging the piece of wood he is chopping so that he may not get a pair of those much sung of eyes, then the full realization of the glories of tent work come upon us.

* * *

It is strange, but nevertheless true, that the people who see the most money in such undertakings are those who are out for pleasure. They come upon a tent of the kind we refer to pitched in the wildnerness and find it "packed to capacity." The tent really has a capacity—at the utmost—of three hundred. At ten cents a head—everybody paying—the house would mean thirty dollars. The fellow from the city looks it over and sees a mint. He can always see something the other fellow has forgotten. For instance, the other fellow gives too much for the money, or he doesn't give enough shows.

* * *

To the uninitiated, the inquiring correspondent included, let it be known that there is not a phase of the moving picture business that has not been worked out. Take it from any point you will and the answer comes back—it has been tried. The moving picture business is no longer an experiment, nor a bonanza. Only the active and enterprising spirits can hope to survive. It is now a legitimate business and investments in it must be made with the same painstaking care that is required of men who embark in any other legitimate enterprise. Tent shows are not criterions. They are frequently operated by natives. When run under any other managements it can be learned easily that the parties back of the shows are simply running them for Summer outing expenses.

* * *

We heard an argument the other day which was worth recording. At the beginning of the Summer a party closed down his house and sought revenue from another quarter. In his absence another party opened an open-air place near the closed house and made good. Now that the regular season is approaching the party who went away has returned and is preparing to reopen his place. He finds that the man who ran the open-air place is so well satisfied that he, too, is going to open up for the Winter. The question is: Should the man who closed for the Summer have his old field without competition?

* * *

The moving picture business presents more complex questions than any other. The stock business is certainly a puzzler—to the uninitiated—but the picture business is a hummer. Take, for instance, the exhibitor and the exchange. The former goes to the exchange and makes a contract for good pictures and he pays a good price. At about the middle of the show the exhibitor rushes to the telephone and this follows:

"Didn't I bargain for good pictures?" "Yes."

"Then why don't you give them to me? Don't I pay you enough?"

"Why, what's wrong? You've got good pictures. What are you kicking about?"

"I'm kicking about the pictures. The guy across the street had everything you sent me for to-day three weeks ago."

"What do you want—first run?"

"I want a run for my money."

"You've got that."

And then the exhibitor retires to the box office and wonders what the other fellow means.

* * *

I met a film exchange manager the other day and the sweat was pouring from his brow. I asked the cause and he told me he had spent two hours in trying to explain the difference between "runs." "I'm happy now," said the manager "Why?" I asked. "Because," said he, "I've got his measure. This is his first season in the business. Before he got into it he studied all the ins and outs and he had me guessing. He knew all the runs from start to finish. The man nearest him was running films two weeks old. None under that. I took that as my guide and supplied him accordingly, as near as I could, keeping away from pictures the other fellow had shown. Of course we made a mistake once in a while, especially as he was taking four reels a day. But yesterday I met my Waterloo. I gave him two 'beauts' for headliners, but in the 'fill up' I happened to give him two reels that the other fellow showed about four weeks ago. Oh, you should have heard what I got over the telephone. It would not look well in print. Well, I went over to see him to-day and tried to draw a diagram of the predicament attending the intricate possibilities attending the adequate supply of appropriate subjects. He looked at me in a wise sort of way for a moment and then asked if I was trying to 'guy' him. I finally assured him I was in earnest and asked him to get down to business. Upon his expression of willingness I asked him to leave it to me to fight his competitor and assured him that I would put on to-day something the competitor never thought of—something that would be a winner. He consented. I put on the reel at the matinee to-day, and it made a hit. What do you think it was? 'The Great Train Robbery.'"

* * *

Gen. Bingham's allegation that Mayor McClellan said to him, in response to a question as to the running of the wave of reform as to its bearing upon moving pictures, "I am playing a little game to win the ministers," is no revelation. Everybody saw through the game. The people most vitally interested in the moving picture business spoke plainly at the time. The stand Mayor McClellan took then was the best stroke the moving picture could hope for. It drew attention to a political move that might otherwise have gone on to this day, and longer. It resulted in the organization of the Board of Censorship. It practically took out of political power a weapon that is now used with an exercise of intelligence and conservation that no political administration can provide, as municipal politics are swayed to-day.

* * *

Mayor McClellan may have been perfectly sincere in his motives; Gen. Bingham may be perfectly truthful in what he says about the Mayor; there is nothing at hand to decide the question, except that the exhibitors of moving pictures were, and are to-day, bled by political emissaries. The only one relief they had was when the police were called off from shutting up a man's show house because some small child had practically slipped in unaccompanied by parents. And when the exhibitors exercised commendable vigilance in this respect, then they found themselves hounded by the building, fire and electrical departments. Gen. Bingham must be given credit for instructing the police department that it must use judgment and action should not be taken where the courts had granted injunctions. At the same time it is but fair to assume that the graft drawn from the picture men never went into the Mayor's pockets. Of course, whatever political move he had in view last Spring when he made what appeared to be a rather uncalled for aggressive step against the moving pictures will stand agianst him so far as politics go, but the fact remains that common sense has survived the onslaught. The representative citizens of Greater New York have endorsed the pictures and some of the most able and respected among them form the Board of Censors. The only regret is that there is not the same kind of people to supervise the other departments that assume supervision over the various branches bearing upon the pictures. If such were the case there would be far less graft—and the Mayor is away spending his vacation.

OLIVER.

New Film Manufacturers.

Among the latest additions to manufacturers of moving pictures is The Western Multiscope Company, of Salt Lake City, Utah. The company numbers practical men in its operating departments, with several wealthy and influential people as stockholders. The capital stock is $20,000, in dollar shares. The executive and operating is under the direction of the following officers and directors: Sig Simon, president; Walter Parkes, vice-president; treasurer, Louis Marcus; secretary, Briant S. Young. The active operations of the plant and business are directed by Walter Parkes, who is superintendent and managing director; Briant S. Young, general contract agent, and Louis Marcus, sales agent. The company has a fully equipped plant, including cameras, printing machines, punching machines, tanks, vats, and, in fact, every essential. Present capacity of the plant is about 20,000 to 25,000 feet per week.

During the recent G. A. R. Encampment in Salt Lake City the Western Multiscope Company secured several hundred feet of the most interesting phases of the affair. Being the only operators on the ground they have therefore secured exclusive pictures. Orders are now being filled for the film from Wisconsin, Illinois, Vermont, Idaho, Nevada, points in Utah, Montana, Ohio, New York and other places.

Other valuable subjects now under exclusive control of this company are pictures of the gulls, pelicans and other fowl of the Great Salt Lake in their natural habitation; "Frontier Days," a reproduction of the feats and doings of cowboys and cowgirls in annual championship meets; panoramic view of Salt Lake City; Indian scenes, and many others.

Preparations are now under way for the erection of a factory and studio. The company proposes making pictures of Western scenes, dramas and views a specialty. The company offices are 321 Atlas Block and the factory, 217 Hooper Block, Salt Lake City.

A NEW MANUFACTURER IN THE FILM BUSINESS WITH HEADQUARTERS AT CINCINNATI.

The United States Film Manufacturing Company have organized and incorporated under the State laws of Ohio in the sum of $25,000 and are going to manufacture moving picture films. Realizing the scarcity of American independent films on the market, they have adopted the above mentioned name to emphasize the fact that they are going to produce American subjects.

This new concern adds another independent American manufacturer to the business, and helps to strengthen the independent cause. They have secured one of the finest outfits in the country, and they are building their new studio in a suburb of Cincinnati, which will be ready in about three weeks, when they will be in shape to produce one reel per week.

The promoters are theatrical men of years of experience, and have been engaged in the moving picture business since its infancy, and know the wants of the American public. The first subject they are going to produce is the film entitled "The Life of the Red Man." Although they have quite a variety of picture stories they are very anxious to secure short sketches, to contain not over 300 words, and for all those they accept they are willing to pay from $5 to $100 each. Stories should be sent to the manager, Mr. R. C. Smallwood, and he will take them under advisement, and will announce through this paper the winners.

A complete synopsis of each film that they release can be had by sending a postal card to the above mentioned concern, stating that you want to be put on their mailing list.

THE CINEPHONE.

In order that the intention of the Film Import and Trading Company regarding the Cinephone, the exclusive rights of which it has acquired for the United States of America, may be thoroughly and correctly understood by the exchange as well as the exhibitor, the following explanation is given:

The Film Import and Trading Company have bound themselves to pay a very large sum of money for the exclusive rights for the Cinephone, films and records for the United States of America.

It is a fact that no single exchange in the business in the independent field could have afforded to have paid this price of itself. It would have been prohibitive because of the fact that in the territory where they would be able to rent the subjects conveniently, it would not have brought them the sufficient return to warrant the investment necessary; but on the basis that has been adopted it is not only possible for the exchange which has the right in certain territory to make a very decent profit, but it assures such exchange an absolute exclusive service, free of competition, as well as assures the exhibitor using the Cinephone a show which will not be given by his next door neighbor to kill his business. It also uphold the proper rental price and a proper maximum rental of reels.

We all know, and the majority of exchanges to their sorrow, what the unscrupulous competition in the regular moving picture business has meant. It is becoming so bad that unless some exhibitor can have from 18 to 25 different shows a week he is not satisfied. This condition is ruinous to any exchange, but with the Cinephone the conditions upon which an exchange can secure an agency make the possibility of such a state impossible. The Film Import Company has figured out the number of territories in the United States and applied against each a price which an exchange can afford to pay. The aggregate of the sums for all the territories will only equal about three-fourths of the price which we have bound ourselves to pay for the entire rights.

It is a matter of record that the Film Import and Trading Company is solely and absolutely a selling agency, and that it does no renting whatsoever. In connection with the Cinephone it will confine itself strictly to the sale of machines and films, and any benefit whatsoever it may derive from the arrangement under which it secured the Cinephone, it has got to see that the productions are of the very best, and that there is a demand created which will assure it of business from the exchanges in the purchase of machines and films. A number of territories have been sold at this time, and in every instance the purchaser has been mighty glad of the opportunity. As a matter of fact, the company is able, because of the attractiveness of this proposition for the exchange, to select only the most responsible and reliable exchanges in the business.

The Film Import and Trading Company ask the trade in general to please put a grain of salt on the tail of any information that may be published, unless it is announced as authorized by themselves.

Since the management of this concern was changed on the 21st day of May of this year, the main purpose, irrespective of cost of pursuing that purpose, has been to eliminate insofar as it is in the power of one concern to do, the very irresponsible and objectionable element that seems to pervade the moving picture business at the present time, and they will continue this policy, believing it to be the only proper one, by not recognizing any person or exchange who cannot give evidence of absolute good faith and intention to do business along the proper lines and in the proper business manner, and their action with regard to the Cinephone is another step to the end of which their purpose is aimed.

We learn from Mr. W. S. Cleveland, manager of the Prudential Vaudeville Exchange, that the drafting of vaudeville acts into moving picture theatres between subjects shown on the screen is becoming more popular as the Fall season approaches, and his predictions are that every moving picture theater will conduct vaudeville acts in the near future. The Prudential is now booking 159 theaters by their up-to-date methods, some of which have been open all Summer, in addition to approximately 150 fairs and parks also supplied by this company. Mr. Cleveland also states that all these houses are well patronized and are making money.

THE SONGS.

More life has been noted in the songs of the week, and new ones have been more numerous. Most of the new ones which are coming out now are better than they were earlier in the season, and the illustrations form additional attractions. It would be difficult to surpass the illustrations. De Witt C. Wheeler, A. L. Simpson, Scott & Van Altena, Levi, the Elite Company, Harstn & Co., and others have been represented in the illustrations and these have all been artistic work. The pictures follow the text closely, interpreting it more fully each time, and the technical work on the slides, including the coloring, adds to the beauty and attractive qualities of the pictures.

More and more it is realized that the illustrated songs can be made a drawing feature of the programmes and managers are exercising a wider choice in selecting. Good songs, sung with some power of appreciation of the sentiment of the author, and illustrated in a way to interpret that sentiment, will never lack for interested and appreciative hearers.

Girard, Kan.—Joe La Fayette, of Raymond Park, is preparing to open a new moving picture theater here.

Calumet, Mich.—C. S. Sullivan has leased the Ryan Building, on Sixth street, and will open a new moving picture theater there.

ON THE SCREEN.

By "Lux Graphicus."

I think I could write a moving picture song. And it would be a great success. Firstly, because I wrote it; secondly, because of its intensely human interest. The very title of it is worth a fortune. What do you think it is? Dunno? Listen: "The Drummer and the Girl." The—drummer—and—the—girl! with the emphasis on The Girl. Always emphasize the girl, boys; she is the be-all and end-all of things mundane and without her life would be impossible. Mere boy, or man, counts for very little without the girl.

* * *

I got my title for the words of my song in the front row of my favorite moving picture theater. Where (and which) is that? No more, no less, than the Bijou Dream, on Fourteenth street, New York City. Many a time and oft have I found my way to that seat for a double purpose: to look at the pictures, and to study the drummer and the girl. For many weeks I was unconscious of the reason why I always appreciated the moving picture best of all at Fourteenth street. When the consciousness arrived I fell to analyzing the cause—or causes—of it. And those causes were many. The Fourteenth street Bijou Dream is a compact and cosy house. The ushers are prompt and courteous They know me and they know my favorite seat. They automatically show me to it whenever I appear; and so they predispose me to a favorable state of mind when the silent drama starts on the screen.

* * *

So far; so good. And it is a good start. The Bijou operator knows his work. He gives us a well defined, evenly illuminated picture, without dark shadows or chromatic aberrations—or patches of color—he keeps good time; I have never known him to break down; and he works with remarkable precision in unison with his lecturer or song-slide singer. From the projection end of matters the moving picture and the lantern slide are shown, I think, to perfection at the Fourteenth street Bijou Dream, and the operator in charge deserves every commendation therefor. I hope he will be glad to read this; I hope, moreover, moving picture theater exhibitors from every part of America will, when they read this, visit the Fourteenth street Bijou Dream and see how well this branch of the work is done. It will be a good lesson to them; and they will thank me for the hint.

* * *

Then the picture starts. Curious to relate I get a better idea of the dramatic intention of a picture at Fourteenth street than anywhere else. The pictures that think, here seem to me to think the most and the best. Often have I been impelled to look round at my fellow visitors. What have I seen? A tense, well knit, immobile mass of human faces, with eyes alertly fixed on the screen. The minds of all these people receptively responding to the emotions portrayed by the performers in the photograph shown before them. Talk about sympathy between audience and actors! Your moving picture audience is all sympathy when a well photographed, well acted subject is shown to it.

* * *

But at the Fourteenth street Bijou Dream there is something more than all this to account for the extraordinary success which Keith & Proctor make there. House, ushers, pictures, operator, songs, all these, I think, would be powerless to produce the totality of effect without some mordant, coheric influence of which probably not one in ten of the audience is conscious. As I have said, I wasn't for a long time, but I am now. And so much so that I think it a duty to tell the readers of the World what it is that so greatly conduces to my enjoyment of the moving pictures at Fourteenth street. It's that drummer, and that girl.

* * *

Never, at a moving picture theater have I heard, or seen, a girl enter so completely into the spirit of the pictures shown. She absolutely adapts her music to them. Every emotion, every sentiment, every movement, every mood illustrated on the screen, is duplicated by the tones of the piano. It is a perfect concordance of sound, movement and thought. The ten fingers of that girl produce sounds that synchronize with what is done, said and thought on the screen. Time after time I have been simply fascinated by the wonderful spirit of sympathy which animates her work. So with the drummer. He is absolutely master of the necessary effects. No animal is shown which does not find his peculiarities of articulation illustrated by some one of the drummer's battery of weird and startling instruments. He almost makes men and women talk, almost; they groan, laugh, kiss, whisper, under his magic touch. It is mechanically simulacrated speech. The effects are startlingly ludicrous and sudden; so much so that they seldom fail to excite a smile and a laugh.

* * *

And my drummer and my girl work so well together. They are artists. They subordinate themselves. They play up to, they work with the picture; they aim to produce a totality of effect which shall please their audiences. And they succeed because they are artists; know their business; and confine themselves to their business. So I am not exaggerating when I say that I would like to immortalize them in a song. When I write that song I will distribute copies of it amongst the moving picture theaters. And its burden will be that the success of a picture in public esteem depends so much upon the symphonic efforts of the drummer and the girl, that the latter deserve every thanks, praise and encouragement. And the moral of the song will be that the musical and effects ends of moving picture shows are of supreme importance in the proper presentation to the public of the moving picture play. So now you know why the Fourteenth street drummer and the girl hold so deep a place in the affections of your Dear old "Lux-y," bless 'em!

NOTES OF THE TRADE.

The Vitagraph Company will have a power yacht in the flotilla that is to escort the "Half Moon" and "Cleremont" up the Hudson during the Hudson-Fulton celebration, and the varied pageants of the week of the celebration will be photographically recorded by the cameras of the field staff.

* * *

Amongst recent visitors to New York was Mr. R. Prieur, the London agent for the Lux films. We believe that it is the intention of the Lux Company to establish an agency in this country. Mr. Prieur proceeds to Chicago, Pittsburg, Toronto and other cities.

* * *

Mr. F. Marriott, who has been in this country for many weeks, has greatly interested himself in the moving picture, and has returned to London. We have no doubt that on his arrival there, he will have much to tell the London public about the way in which the moving picture is exploited in the United States.

* * *

Harstn & Co. have just received from Jerome H. Remick & Co. the exclusive right to illustrate their songs. A first order is for three hundred sets of song slides to subjects in Remick's catalogue. Harstn & Co. are increasing their force of colorists and photographers, and they are prepared to fill orders promptly as well as to accept standing orders.

* * *

There is, we understand, a probability of one of the processes for making moving pictures in natural colors now being exploited in England, coming to America. We have authoritative information to this effect. In an early number we shall give our readers fuller particulars.

* * *

Some of the daily papers last week carried an item to the effect that Annette Kellerman would be prevented from posing for the Vitagraph Company of America by legal action or managerial pressure. The best answer to this is found in the fact that workmen at the Vitagraph studio are at present engaged in the construction of a new tank twelve feet deep, into which Miss Kellerman will be able to make her most difficult dives. The regular tank is but five feet in depth, and does not permit her to make some of her best dives. The new tank will enable her to exhaust her repertoire of fancy diving.

* *

"Fantine," the second of the films de luxe of incidents from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" made by the Vitagraph Company of America, will be released Saturday, August 25. This is said to be even more noteworthy than the first of these subjects, "The Galley Slave," which comes out next Saturday.

* * *

Owing to a large increase in out-of-town orders, the Novelty Slide Company, New York City, has found it necessary to appoint a Chicago representative, Mr. F. G. Schindler, with office at 3933 Dearborn street. They are desirous of making satisfactory arrangements for representation in other large cities, and will consider applications for agency from energetic, up-to-date moving picture men. The Novelty Slide Company's line consists of lantern slides, moving picture specialties and money-making ideas and schemes for moving picture theaters.

Comments on the Week's Films.

A CHILD OF THE FOREST (Edison).

A comparison of the work of this beautiful picture with that produced by the same staff of, say, three months ago will reveal a really remarkable advance, especially in the technique of the subject. "A Child of the Forest" is no easy theme to handle. The canvas is crowded all the time and the work of production must, therefore, have entailed an enormous amount of effort. The actors seemed to have been amazingly well rehearsed and drilled in their work, and the result upon the minds of the audience is that of satisfaction and fullness of feeling at a splendid piece of spectacular drama. For drama it is. The papoose of an Indian squaw is baptised by mistake. Years later a white woman is abducted by Indian braves. The squaw, grateful to the white man for having spared her child, sends that child, now a boy, with a message that shall release the campers and cowboys who are threatened by Indians. The Indians, of course, are beaten and the captive girl released. And the picture ends with the restoration of happiness.

This outline of the story gives little idea of the picture. We were especially attracted by a river scene where the canoe containing the Indian braves advances to the capture of the white girl. This is one of the most beautiful pieces of pictorial moving picture work that we have seen. Then the scene in which the child of the forest, a boy, plunges into the water and swims across its placid surface. Here the tinter had done his work so well that the natural color of the water was most effectively suggested. The fighting between the immigrant campers and the Indians was also a realistic piece of stagecraft. Indeed, "A Child of the Forest" is nothing but a succession of very beautiful scenes knitted together by a powerful dramatic story.

What appealed to us in this picture, which we studied very closely, was the exceedingly fine photographic quality of the work. The negative seems to have been very accurately exposed and the printing end of matters done so carefully that few, if any, superficial flaws are perceptible. And then, again, the coloring and tinting were carried out with unusual feeling and artistic restraint. "A Child of the Forest" is so good and beautiful that we look upon it as a marked step in advance on the part of the Edison staff. It is rarely, after we have once seen a moving picture film, that our mind recurs to any particular part of it. Indeed, we make this a kind of test as to arriving at what constitutes a notable film of the week. We place "A Child of the Forest" in this category, because days after we have seen it we find ourselves dwelling on the very beautiful series of pictures of which it is composed.

THE PAY CAR (Kalem).

Locomotive life on the stage always attracts and holds the attention of an audience. Plays without number have been written around the steam engine. In childhood we are fascinated by these monsters, and as we progress through life, there is still a feeling of wonderment with most of us as to the power which your engineer controls. There is always a certain touch of romance about railroad life; so that the Kalem Company show considerable acumen in selecting these themes for one of their feature films. The picture is noteworthy from the fact that it shows the actual life on a railroad. The adventures that cling around the track are natural and by no means extraordinary. Very early in the picture we see the engineer about to take his position on the locomotive, and unfortunately his man appears intoxicated, and, of course, is prevented from taking his position on the engine. He vows vengeance, and in later scenes we find that the pay car on its way through the country is in danger of being derailed by an obstacle placed across the tracks. But a good genius in the shape of a girl waves her red petticoat as a signal of danger, which is seen in time by the engineer. The girl is forcibly carried off by a gang of ruffians, who, however, the engineer and his associates soon run to earth and kill. The film ends with the deliverance of the girl and a happy reception in the embraces of the brave engineer. This is eminently a picture which will please the young folks, for the locomotive is as large as life, and the pay car, on its progress through the country, meets with many adventures. It is a picture that will cause thrills and excitement, because, as we have said, the action is natural and spontaneous. Indeed, when we, ourselves, were looking at it the other day, we heaved a sigh of relief when it was all over. But then that is a habit in which we have lately got, because the more we look at some modern moving pictures, the more convincing they seem to us in their realism. And in the latter class we place the Kalem "Pay Car," which is bound to be a great success.

THE BULL FIGHT (Film Import).

Properly to appreciate this deeply interesting picture one should have the symphonic accompaniment of Bizet's immortal "Carmen" music. Visions of Minnie Hauk, Emma Calve and other immortal impersonators of the willful heroine of this opera rose before us as this film started on the screen. We wanted to hear the castanet song, "He Loves Me; He Loves Me Not," and, of course, the Toreador song. We hope that wherever this picture is seen, the pianist and other musicians will take the hint here given. For the picture is racy of the soil. It is redolent of national life and character. The matter-of-fact Anglo-Saxon seldom understands how persons of Iberian origin are so attracted by the lust of blood as to set so much store by bull-fighting. The present Queen of Spain, an English woman, is braving unpopularity, because she is trying to denationalize a national sport. She probably will not succeed. All this by way of introduction to this very remarkable piece of moving picture work. Remarkable in that it seems to us to portray all phases of this national sport. We believe the picture in question was taken in Mexico City. We see all the preliminaries of the fight. The bulls, the arena, the audience, the attendants and the horses, individual studies of groups in the boxes and the like, and then the fiery, untamed bull himself. He is released and enters the arena of death; for death is a certain fate. He is goaded, tortured, deceived, tricked and maddened by these clever, nimble sportsmen. He rips up horses; he throws men upon the ground. He fights for life like a brave beast. The odds are against him. He is pricked, punctured and speared, and finally stabbed to death, and falls a gallant beast. Then, when he is quite dead, horses come and drag his remains out of the ring and the crowds applaud the successful butchers. Fine "sport," if sport it can be called. We do not think it can, for the poor wretch of a bull has not the ghost of a chance for his life.

Quite recently a man and bull fight attracted great attention in the moving picture theater, and we have no doubt that this very interesting, if sanguinary, picture of a bull fight will be equally popular. We ourselves must confess having been somewhat fascinated by the theme, and given to a feeling that we would like to see the real thing. It is a very fine piece of photographic and descriptive work. Sport, after all, is merely a matter of national temperament, and most of us gratify the passion to kill something some time—if it is only a fish which we drag out of the water. Possibly, therefore, the less phlegmatic Anglo-Saxon does not allow for national temperament when he denounces bull-fighting. Anyhow, this is a very interesting picture, and we think everybody ought to see it to realize how bull-fighting is done.

"Wonders of Nature."—A picture, or rather, a series of pictures, which will go far to enhance the reputation of the Essanay people. The pictures represent a number of water falls in the Twin Falls region of Idaho and not only has the producing company done good work technically, but it has made it possible to increase the sum of knowledge regarding the wonders of the country. Not many among the thousands who will see this film will ever be likely to see the Shoshone Falls or the Twin Falls, but they are so faithfully reproduced in these pictures that one may obtain a good general idea of them and can appreciate to some extent what marvels they are. The photographer did his work well. As the water pours over the precipice it looks like water, not like milk or carded wool, and this in itself is an achievement worth noting. So many pictures supposed to represent water do nothing of the sort that this is refreshing and proves what the writer has long contended, that it can be done provided sufficient care is exercised in the photography. There is where the difficulty lies and the Essanay operator understood the requirements and accomplished a noteworthy feat. Some of the scenes were made under great disadvantages, too, but even so they are well done. Wherever the picture shows water, it looks like water, and no higher praise could be given than that. To accomplish what one undertakes under difficulties, marks one as fitted for the work and in this instance the operator did what he tried to do and the result is a picture which wins liberal applause from the audience wherever it is shown, and will be certain to mark a new record in photographing water falls. The toning is delicately done and adds materially to the general effect, while the view points selected were such as to give picturesque results. In another particular the operator did better than many have done. He succeeded in reproducing the impression of size and height which would be natural around a fall of this magnitude, something which not all operators have done when they have been making pictures of falls. This film is to be commended from every standpoint and the firm is to be congratulated upon being able to give the public such an excellent reproduction of a water fall.

"Two Lovers and a Coquette."—A Pathe which offers a variation of the oft repeated story of one woman undertaking to allow two men to make love to her, with the attendant complications and difficulties. Of course the second one escapes and the first one is convinced that his suspicions were unfounded, but the young woman gets a scare that undoubtedly cures her of coquetting forever afterward. Some of the situations are funny and the action is lively in all instances and furious in spots. The technical quality is good, even though it is wholly inside.

"A Smart Trick."—An Eclair which reproduces what purports to be a smart smuggling trick on the French or Italian frontier, which allows a famous smuggler, Meskal, to deceive the revenue officers and get cigars across the border without paying duty. The chief interest centers in the costuming and scenery which are both good. The action is of the swashbuckler type, and is quite in harmony with the subject, being largely drinking bouts, quarrels and various other forms of bravado. The smugglers escape, which is the point of the picture, and the officers return to their watch discomfited. A species of dime novel, such pictures as this are more welcome than those which are made up of funerals or the suggestions of funerals, but they are not to be commended for the lessons they teach.

"The Nightmare of a Single Man."—A Lux which has some claims to being funny, yet descends in places to mere silliness, still it is not unpleasant and no fault can be found with the technical quality. In a programme of heavy films this would be a pleasing diversion.

"A Jealous Husband."—A Hepwix in which a husband is cured of his jealousy by some pretty rough handling. The subject is not entirely satisfactory, since in this instance the picture shows that the husband had sufficient cause for his jealousy. Consequently the rough treatment is not deserved and seems out of place. But perhaps the consequences had the further effect of curing the wife of flirting. If so the picture doesn't seem so flat. The technical quality is good, with the exception of one or two interiors, which are rather dim, and in places the figures move so rapidly near the camera that they blur slightly, but these are minor defects which might be due partially to poor operation.

"The Babies' Strike."—An Itala which is pleasing since it shows a large number of interesting tots in various stunts directed against their nurses who leave them while they go out with their sweethearts. The strike is duly organized with banners making specific demands and the marching of the little folks is amusing. Finally the difficulty is amicably settled and the babies return to their former nurses. The technical quality is fair, but the pictures are blurred in many places due, apparently, to allowing the children to march too close to the camera and straight toward it.

"The New General."—A Lux which purports to represent the result when a general's uniform is lost and found by a tramp who put it on and then played the mischief with the army. The absurdity of some of the action makes it funny, but of course what is done is so impossible that it becomes mere nonsense. It isn't really a good burlesque. A drunken general, or one who offered subordinates something to drink from a bottle, is so utterly impossible as to be silly. Perhaps such pictures are permissible in hot weather, but there ought to be amusing subjects which will not create a wrong impression of military, or other duty, and which will make laughs because they are funny.

"His Wife's Visitor."—If a young wife feels as though her husband left her alone too much she should look at this Biograph film and go and do likewise. From the beginning of the film until the end it is full of lively acting and develops some extremely interesting situations before it closes. And the wife's successful attempt to fool her husband is funny because it is so serious and so well acted. It is a safe conclusion that he eschewed poker and stuck to his wife after that lesson. The picture has all the Biograph qualities, which are many, and is funny enough to please the most exacting.

"Mrs. Jones' Lover; or, I Want My Hat."—A Biograph rendition of some more of the delightful difficulties of the Jones family. It would be an interesting programme to see this series of Jones' mixups one after another. They are among the most amusing pictures that have ever been produced and the series would make a good entertainment. In this instance the tables are turned and Mr. Jones discovers evidences that his wife has had a caller and when she refuses to make everything plain he goes tearing through the house, bent upon destroying everything that comes in his way. The innocent cause of the disturbance in searching for his hat is almost stabbed with a sword, but after extricating Mrs. Jones from under a chair and receiving the explanation of the maid regarding the presence of the man in the house Mr. Jones is quite ready to ask forgiveness. The picture is funny and the laughter as it closes would be cheering to the actors if they could hear it. Technically it is satisfactory and the action is lively and in harmony with the subject.

"Measure for Measure."—A Lubin picture filled with dramatic situations which are developed to the full and make it interesting. The climax is reached when the young inventor answers the demand for the secret of his submarine mine by throwing the one he has in his hand on the floor and causing an explosion which wrecks the place and sends him to the hospital. The development of the story permits the working out of a treacherous plot which is interesting, though perhaps in some ways a bit impossible. Nevertheless, one can find little fault with the actors. They perform their parts as well as might be expected and the difficult points are carefully worked out. The picture tells a story that can be understood from the opening of the film to the close, which is important. The photographer did his work well, even the interiors in the machine shop showing clearly as much as is required to illustrate the story. The love story which is interwoven with the development of the submarine mine adds to the interest. At last all is set right in the hospital where the inventor was taken after the explosion, while those who sought his ruin disappear from sight forever.

"Yellow Jacket Mine."—A Selig Western drama, based upon an attempt of some sharpers to secure possession of a mine which they believe to be especially rich. They secure one-half, by deluding the young partners through the machinations of a treacherous woman. There is a pretty little love story in the picture and plenty of vigorous action, including some gun play which is not especially fatal. The details are worked out with considerable care. One scene is particularly good, where the young girl prevents the sneaking half breed from murdering her lover by dousing him from behind with a pail of water. The denouement is striking and one is almost ready to pity the young woman who has betrayed others when she is finally left alone and disappears from the picture, after doing all she could to set matters straight. The photography is good and the details of the mine opening, the cabins and the scenery seem to be in keeping with the subject. The acting is good in nearly all instances, no weaknesses of importance being apparent. The picture is so lively and there is so much action in it that minor discrepancies, if there are any, are overlooked.

"The Crusader's Return."—A Lux, the scene of which is laid in the Far East in the time of the Crusades. It has strong dramatic possibilities, more of which are developed fairly well, though the acting seems strained in places. The piece has two climaxes, the first when the wounded Crusader, left by his companions, is seized by the Musselmans and blinded. The next when he returns to his home and finds his fiancee married to another. Yet possibly he finds solace in the love and companionship of the Musselman girl, who has aided him during his captivity. The staging of the picture is quite in harmony with the subject.

"The Web of Fate."—An Edison purporting to represent an episode in the French Revolution, though it could quite as well represent an episode anywhere. Perhaps the costuming and setting of the French disturbance supplied a picturesque setting which was utilized to enhance the beauty of the film. The title is sufficiently elaborate to lead one into a train of thought which will almost invariably be wrong. As a matter of fact the web of fate is a spider web, one of those plain geometrical webs which can be seen anywhere almost any day, but it prevented the capture of a refugee because it was spun across the door through which he had just been taken by his sweetheart in his flight to escape the Jacobbins. That is the whole story, yet the dramatic situations are numerous and they are fully developed. The discovery of the web by the officer who is conducting the search is dramatic and is made the climax of the play. The girl's features are a study in facial expression as she is forced to lead this officer toward the room in which she has just hidden her sweetheart, and her collapse when the soldiers leave is well done. The faces back of the web in the last scene are interesting and indicate what is possible under some circumstances. The staging of the picture is good and seems to be in keeping with the period it illustrates. The film was fully exposed and there is a gradation of tone which adds immensely to the artistic qualities.

"Wright Brothers' Aeroplane."—An Edison picture reproducing the tests of the Wright Brothers' aeroplane at Fort Myer, Va., in July, in which they won the Government prize of $30,000. While this is only a record picture it will serve several purposes. First, let it be said that it is a record. It is well that such an important occurrence should be permanently recorded. Generations yet to come can see how the aeroplane looked and behaved during the time it was undergoing an official test of its capabilities. Next, it will afford means by which thousands can see that test who did not see it and never would have had any adequate idea of what it was or how the machine looked. These two purposes are perhaps sufficient to compensate for the effort required to obtain the pictures. Moreover, the firm is to be congratulated upon obtaining such excellent pictures. They were all made from just the right point of view to reproduce clearly the movement of the aeroplanes and they demonstrate anew the wonderful adaptability of the motion picture to record work. The pictures are clear. There is absence of the mud and blur which has made many other attempts of this character only partially successful and the one who sees these pictures will have a reasonably accurate knowledge of the test of the aeroplane and they will see the important men who witnessed it.

"The Queen of the Quarry."—A Kalem drama in which love in a quarry is used as a basis for misunderstanding between two men which narrowly escapes ending in murder. But fortunately the cruel looking knife is wrenched from the hand of the infuriated rejected lover, though not until the arm of the other man is seriously injured. But like plays of a melodramatic character this one ends happily and on Palm Sunday the former rival and would-be murderer goes up to the house where the happy couple live and presents them each with a palm as a token of his good will. These peace offerings are accepted and everybody is friendly afterward. Like all the Kalem pictures this one is full of go and energetic action. There is good, clear photography and accurate reproduction of the film and the staging seems to be quite in harmony with the subject. The picture is interesting because it tells a good story in a lively way and does it under excellent technical conditions.

"The Dog Circus Rehearsal."—A Kalem record film illustrating the interesting actions of a number of dogs who are undergoing regular drill for their circus. Apart from the curious appearance of the dogs the film has no particular interest. It is good technically, which those who appreciate the difficulties of the subject will understand is no small merit.

"The Strikers."—An Eclipse melodrama which has the attraction of beautiful scenic setting, rapid action and the triumph of right over wrong. The working out of these features takes a considerable length of film in which the strikers march one way and another, making violent demands which are opposed with equal violence. Finally the boss of the men before the strike forces the agitator to prove his own cowardice by offering to fight a duel with picks, a unique instrument, to say the least. The agitator slinks away, while the strikers cheer the young man and go back to work, attracted by his bravery. The love story which is woven through the picture culminates here when the young man's bride forsakes the agitator and goes back to her first love, she, too, attracted by his bravery. It is very melodramatic and the climax is well worked out. Technically the film is better than the average, though perhaps no better than most Eclipse films.

"Building Barrels."—An interesting and instructive Urban film which portrays the construction of a barrel. The picture is so clear that every motion can be seen and understood. Photographically it would be hard to surpass it.

"Elastic Transformations."—A Pathe, beautifully colored and devoted to an exhibition of the magic appearances and disappearances which the Pathe studio has made a feature. This has a number of unusual surprises, representing a new phase of the possibilities of disposing of people and things. The coloring is smooth and even and heightens the effect of the picture.

"Baby's Revenge."—A B. & C. film which gives one of the best pictures of a baby ever put on a film. Left alone by his nurse he disturbs the slumbers of the gardener by his crying. The gardener wheels his carriage away and leaves him alone again. The tot turns on the water and the gardener gets a good drenching. The story doesn't amount to much, but the life size, close range and perfectly clear pictures of that baby win applause from the audience. Aside from this picture the film is scarcely above mediocrity.

"The Village Idiot."—A picture without a manufacturer's mark. The story is not entirely clear. There is a robbery and an attempted abduction for which a man is falsely accused, and when the village idiot tells his story in court, fastening the crime upon the guilty one, he is stabbed in full view of the assembled court and spectators. There is crime enough to satisfy the most bloodthirsty. And it doesn't seem convincing. It seems like an incoherent series of events, which might or might not be any relation to each other. The staging is reasonably good, but the photography is poor in most instances, and many of the scenes are badly blurred. The attempts at toning brown are failures, substantially all detail being lost in the process. One can scarcely help saying that the picture, as a whole, is a shining example of how not to do it.

"A Mother's Fault."—A Lux which has for its motif marital infidelity, a mother taking her child and deserting her husband for another whose acts force her to leave him within a year. There is a circus ring attachment in which the little girl falls from a trapeze and is attended by her father, who is a doctor, and reconciliation follows. Objections to films of this character are numerous enough, but perhaps it is sufficient to say that it is objectionable to make infidelity in the marriage relation the subject of a picture. The influence is wrong, and ultimately will have its effect. The staging is fair, but the photography is not satisfactory. It is far from clear in many places, and in only one or two outdoor scenes does it come up to the standard. Details are not worked out as they should be. The little girl appears in the same costume though a year is supposed to elapse between the scenes. The setting of some of the interiors is well balanced, and the photography is clear, but in the main there is too much blurring. Technically it could be greatly improved. The dramatic possibilities are not fully developed as they might, on through the climax, the reconciliation is fairly well acted. Though the picture is ambitious it will not be a record breaker.

"Dances of Various Nations."—A Pathe picture in which are shown the dances of Brittany, China, Caucasia, Soudan, Japan, Cairo, Austria, Bulgaria, France, Spain, and Mozambique. These dances have been produced at the cost of enormous trouble and expense and are correct representations of the dances of the regions named. The costuming is a faithful reproduction and the movements are correctly carried out. The picture is lively and interesting and makes a welcome addition to a program.

"The Hat Juggler."—A finely colored Pathe which reproduces the astonishing acts of a juggler who performs with a number of silk hats. One might well imagine that these ill-shaped articles would be difficult indeed for a juggler to manipulate, but this gentleman does it perfectly and receives liberal applause when his work is finished.

"The Way of the Cross."—A Vitagraph picture which is strong, but one feels disposed to question the advisability of showing it. The subject is one that has considerable historical significance when it is understood that the scenario represents Rome in Nero's time, when the persecution of the early Christians was undertaken to divert the attention of the people from Nero's own acts. The love story involves a young Roman officer, beloved by a courtesan, who uses her influence to secure a decree ordering the extermination of the Christians. Perhaps this was the moving cause in Nero's decision. Such episodes have been common enough in history and this may not be wrong, though it has never been so stated in any of the books. The love of Valerius for Leah, the Christian girl, is well worked out, and the struggle which Valerius has with himself is, perhaps, the strongest scene in the piece. It is good acting, but the rest is little more than commonplace. The reproduction of fancied scenes in the Roman arena, with gladiators in combat, are copies of pictures or are supposed scenes. There is a creepy sensation when the Christians are thrust through the gate into the arena, while beyond the fence the lions and other wild beasts can be seen moving back and forth, awaiting their prey. It may be that the picture is too suggestive. It seems to pall upon one's desire for pictures, and even though it is watched with the closest attention through its length, it must be confessed that one breathes a sigh of relief when it ends. The staging is good. Perhaps some of the scenes might be called extraordinarily good. The acting, excepting in the instance mentioned, did not seem to measure up to the standard required. Technically the film is good, though there is some darkness here and there which might be lightened up a bit without injuring the artistic qualities of the picture.

"The Indian Runner's Romance."—A Biograph picture having as its scenario the Black Hills in 1867, just about the time of the discovery of gold there. The principal actors are a couple of Sioux Indians, a man and a woman, the man wooing the maiden with the blanket, signifying protection, and securing the consent of her father by presenting him with a quantity of valuable blankets and wampum. A dying miner tells him of the location of a rich claim. Three cowboys undertake to secure the secret from the Indian, but fail. After the wedding they attempt to extort it from the squaw, but failing in that they abduct her, treating her with extreme brutality to force her to divulge the location of the mine. She is carried away, thrown across the saddle like a bundle. The Indian returning home and finding her gone, divines the reason and sets out in pursuit. The fight between the Indian and the renegade cowboy on the back of a galloping horse is vivid and exciting. The cowboy finally falls dead from a knife thrust. The Indian and his bride return home together. The beauty of this picture cannot be described. The reproduction of outdoor scenery is so good that it seems as though one were actually in the woods and fields. There is a convincing quality about the acting which appeals very strongly, and as the climaxes are reached the attention is riveted closer and closer. There is plenty of action in the picture, while the staging and the accessories are made as true as it is possible to determine them. The costumes of the Indians are perfect reproductions of those actually worn by the Sioux. The effect is artistic and so attractive that one wants to see the picture more than once. No higher praise could be bestowed upon it than this.

"Too Gentlemanly."—A Gaumont depicting the difficulties of a man who was too gentlemanly on occasions where something else would have done better. The acting is quite in harmony with the subject, and in polished and studied gentlemanliness the picture offers a model for so-called society individuals to follow. The technical qualities are satisfactory and the picture is amusing.

"The Frock Coat."—A Gaumont which depends for its interest upon the different view points from which a frock coat is seen. While the employer insisted that a frock coat and a silk hat were essential to a position in his office, the employees of the mill were disposed to ridicule it and actually spoiled one for the gentleman whose position depended upon wearing one while at work. But when the matter was understood, the hands who assisted in spoiling the first, bought a second to replace it and the difficulty was cleared up with everybody happy. The suggestiveness of the picture, which lies in the viewpoint and the development of the different ideas regarding the frock coat, constitutes the chief interest. One cannot but be reminded of the fact that a frock coat and a silk hat are quite apt to exert an influence beyond their just value. And this picture is chiefly interesting because it confirms that understanding of these articles of men's wear.

"Judge Not, That Ye Be Not Judged."—A Vitagraph which teaches very graphically the lesson that sometimes there is a species of mitigation which might be accorded criminals. When the young man in the morning refused to entertain the idea of meeting his returning convict father, he never thought that he would approach dangerously near the convict's cell before he returned. And when he did, his attitude of the morning haunted him and his heart softened. And when the man whom he struck down forgave him for it, understanding that it was done in the heat of passion, the son returned home and welcomed the convict father. This film may be placed in the class of moral dramas. It teaches an important moral lesson, but withal it is a somewhat gloomy picture and one that the average person would not care to see a second time. The acting is strong, and the actors take advantage of all the dramatic possibilities, developing them to the utmost. One climax follows another so closely that they actually crowd together in the mind, making it impossible in some instances to separate them sufficiently to understand where one begins and the other ends. The staging is simple, but is in harmony with the story, and the technical quality is more than good in places, though in other places it is blurred and unsatisfactory.

"Borrowed Clothes."—A Vitagraph comedy which reproduces the antics of two impecunious artists, one of whom actually removes the clothes of a customer and wears them to a dinner and only because he returned too much under the influence of wine was the theft discovered. Then there is a rough house in which everybody but the janitor gets ejected from the studio.

"Tennessee Guards."—A Pathe showing a company of colored soldiers engaged in a highly intricate drill. The technical quality is good and the film is interesting for its illustration of a colored soldiers' drill.

"The Eternal Romance."—A Pathe in which love and romance, and parents who object, are intermixed in liberal proportions, combining a form of picture which interests because it tells the story so graphically. The dramatic qualities are not unusual, nor is the acting extraordinary, but the story is convincingly told and technically there is no reason for complaint.

DWIGHT MACDONALD RESIGNS.

Board of Directors,
Motion Picture Patents Company,
80 Fifth Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sirs:—I hereby tender my resignation as general manager of the Motion Picture Patents Company to take effect September 1, 1909.

The calls upon me from my professional connections which necessarily have been neglected by me while with the Patents Company, make it necessary for me to devote my entire time to the practice of the law with my firm, Macdonald & Bostwick.

As the work that required my personal attention such as the organizing of the Patents Company's staff and office, has been completed, I feel that I can now resign with the least inconvenience to the company.

I shall be glad to have you call upon me whenever I can be of any further service and I will be pleased to at all times supply any information that I have relative to the business of the company. Yours very truly,

DWIGHT MACDONALD.

MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY,
80 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
August 11, 1909.

Dwight McDonald, Esq.,
15 William Street,
New York City.

Dear Sir:—Your letter of the 10th instant, in which you tender your resignation to the Board of Directors of this company, has been received and has had careful consideration.

As experience has shown that your duties as general manager of this company prevent your giving much attention to your law practice, and as your resignation is based upon the necessity for your giving hereafter your entire time to your professional work, we feel that under the circumstances, we can best show our appreciation of your close attention to our interests by complying with your request.

We therefore accept your resignation, as such action is within the province of the treasurer of this company between meetings of the Board of Directors and in the absence of the president and vice-president.

We thank you for your offer to at all times supply us with information relative to such business as you transacted for this company as general manager.

It will always be a pleasure for us to learn of your success in your professional work and all your undertakings.

Respectfully,
MOTION PICTURE PATENTS COMPANY,
J. J. Kennedy, Treasurer.

When you want a good slide, there are several—when you want the best, there is but one:

BRAYTON

Brayton Manufacturing Co.
125 E. Randolph Street, Chicago
Advertising——Announcement——Contest

SPECIAL UNTIL SEPTEMBER 1st 1909
A Slide of Your Singer, 55 cts., Postpaid

Stories of the Films.

See Page 298 for Release Dates.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

THE SEALED ROOM.—There is scarcely a palace, castle or chateau in all Europe over whose crumbling ruins there does not hang the specter of some legend or mystery, but none are as intensely thrilling as the inspiration of this Biograph subject. Centuries ago, during the devastation of one of these castles, built in mediaeval times, a walled-up room was found to contain the skeletons of two bodies. Many theories were conjectured, but the one adopted as the theme of the story seems the most logical. The King is so deeply in love with his favored one that he contrives a sequestered dove-cote for themselves by sealing up a room in the tower, leaving but one entrance open. The room is finished and dedicated with pomp and ceremony. During these festivities, however, the King becomes suspicious of the attentions shown an Italian troubador by his favored one, so plans to surprise them in order to convince himself. To this end a guard enters with a bogus order calling the King away for a time. The room cleared, the lady and troubador declare their mutual love, and she, picking up the hour glass, intimates that they may enjoy each other's society for at least an hour. The troubador pours out his soul's devotion in song, while the lady taking the rose allows the leaves to fall in time with dropping sands of the glass. While they are thus occupied the King returns; his fears are verified, and calling the masons orders them to seal up the only entrance. The love song of the troubador has now, unknown to the couple, become a dirge. As the last grain of sand drops to the bottom bowl of the glass, the lovers make their way to the door only to be confronted with a cold immoveable wall of stone. Like a flash the horror of the situation besieges them and they realize their fate. Their cries and beatings on the walls is answered only by the taunts of the King, who stands outside in fiendish satisfaction of the terrible punishment he has meted out for them. Slowly the torturing oppression of the air-tight room overcomes them, which death only can relieve. In this production the Biograph has attained the very acme of motion picture art—most beautifully staged and costumed, and acted in a manner infinitely more convincing than anything ever before attempted. Length, 779 feet.

THE MILLS OF THE GODS.—"The mills of the gods grind slow, but they grind exceeding small." is but a synonym of "All comes to him who waits," yet a more correct expression would be "All comes to him who hustles while he waits." Genius is often rewarded with posthumous recognition, still there are occasions where fate has produced an agent who has lifted merit into the light of publicity quite unexpectedly. Such an occasion occurs in this Biograph film story. Henry Woodson, a struggling author, has experienced the usual discouraging indifference on the part of magazine editors, who have returned his literary efforts unread, for being unknown to them, they deem it a waste of valuable time to read them. Desperate beyond expression, he realizes that if something don't turn up he will be turned out of his boarding house by the mercenary landlady, whose daughter Nellie he is in love with—which love is returned. Hulda, the Swedish maid, is deeply smitten with the young writer, and is grieved at his misfortune. An idea seizes her. She has saved some money, so she takes his rejected manuscript to the publisher and begs that he accept it and pay for it with her money. This the editor indignantly refuses to do, but her sincere, simple manner appeals to him, so he at length consents to consider it sufficiently as to read it. It is a surprise to him, being possessed of such rare merit, that he sends a check to Woodson, with word that he will be glad to consider anything else he may write. Woodson is at a loss to know what caused their change of attitude, until the editor tells him of the Swedish girl's visit. He also realizes who had left financial assistance on his table anonymously, for which he gave the landlady's daughter credit. Hulda's action was induced by her love for him, but his heart is given to Nellie so the poor girl yields to the protestations of Ole, who loves her to distraction. His devotion for her really wins her heart, and makes her happy and forget the indifference of Woodson. Length, 672 feet.

PRANKS.—Cupid at times resorts to most unique methods to settle lovers' quarrels, and the subject of this comedy is possibly the most ingenious ever planned. Tom and Ethel quarrel over a most trivial matter. Despondently Tom wends his way to the beach for a dip in the cool waters as a balm to his wounded spirits. At the same time Ethel resorts to a like panacea. Each, of course, is unconscious of the other's movements. Two mischievous boys have followed them, and while the forlorn lovers are disporting (?) in the waves, the kids play the prank of exchanging the wearing apparel of the two bath houses, which are located some distance apart. Ethel finds the water cold, and is soon forced to emerge. Consternation! Well, chilled through she is compelled to don the attire left in her bath house—Tom's suit. The same is experienced by Tom. Back to the hotel they rush through a series of ludicrous incidents, until Ethel is waylaid by a tramp, who is inclined to use violence to force her to hand over money, until Tom rushes up and rescues her from the tramp's clutches with a well directed blow. Mr. Tramp hunts it, and Tom is the hero of the day, so the two bleeding hearts are healed. Length, 328 feet.

THE LITTLE DARLING.—This might be termed a comedy of errors, for the overzealousness of a lot of good-hearted simple folks places them in a rather embarrassing position. Lillie Green, who keeps a boarding house, receives a letter from her old school chum, Polly Brown, whom she hasn't seen in years, to the effect that as Lillie has never seen her little darling daughter, she will send her for a few days' visit, asking that some one meet the child at the 3:40 train. Lillie's boarders are a bunch of kind-hearted bachelors, who at once prepare to give the "Little Darding" the time of her life, buying a load of toys, etc., for her amusement, also procuring a baby carriage with which to meet her at the train. You may imagine their embarrassment when they find that Tootsie, instead of being a baby, proves to be a handsome young lady of seventeen, whose tastes run rather to garden gates, shady lanes and quiet nooks, than toys. Length, 211 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

ETHEL'S LUNCHEON (a Society Comedy).—Written expressly for Edison production by Miss Carolyn Wells:

Cast of Characters.

Peggy.....Miss Ethel Browning
Dolly.....Miss Katheleen Taylor
Ethel Adams.....Miss Myrtle Tannehill
Jack Fuller.....Mr. Tefft Johnson
Bob Hall.....Mr. Bertram Yost
And Company.

Carolyn Wells, the popular writer, has told here a jolly, mischievous little story, which shows that high comedy is as genuinely funny as that of the slap-stick variety.

A pair of lovers, an overzealous friend and two young madcaps of girls, who get everybody into trouble, except themselves, are concerned in the fun. Jack Fuller expects to entertain his fiancee, Ethel Adams, at luncheon at the Brookdale Country Club. A telegram from his brothers, calling him to town immediately, makes him glad to accept his friend Bob Hall's offer to become his proxy and entertain the young lady in his place. The young mischiefs, Peggy and Dolly, overhear this conversation. As Bob Hall has never met the real Ethel they determine that there shall be three Ethels entertained at luncheon. They purchase orchids (which the real Ethel is to wear) dress up in their big sister's clothes and one at a time present themselves for Bob Hall's entertainment. Having been instructed to spare no expense, Bob provides an elaborate lunch for the first scapegrace, and when on the appearance of the scond she confesses that she has played a joke on him, duplicates the luncheon for Dolly. In the midst of this second luncheon the real Ethel appears and Bob is in considerable trouble. Only the timely return of Jack from the city and the sight of the two girls laughing outside the cafe window from the club porch saves the situation and Bob from eternal disgrace.

The action is full of the spirit of youth and buoyancy, and the picture leaves one with the feeling that life is a pretty good and happy affair after all, and that such pictures represent its lighter side most satisfactorily.

THE TEMPTATION.—We read in this picture the old, old story of temptation yielded to by the man and a woman's love which is strong enough to blot out even the resulting misdeed.

Steven Philbert, a trusted employee of the great mills, is given a large check and sent to the city to get the money with which to pay off the men. The sight of the money in the bag which he carries first suggests to him how easy it would be to get away with it, and when he is delayed by the blizzard and reaches his suburban home after the factory hours, and finds that he must keep the money over night, his half-formed plan takes a definite shape, and leaving the house under the pretext of sending a telephone message, he disguises himself and returns at midnight in the role of a burglar.

The plan is foiled because his wife has let in a half starved stranger, whose rags are poor protection from the snow and storm and who falling asleep by the kitchen fire awakes in time to help her save the money and her husband from disgrace. There is an intensely dramatic moment when, after a brief struggle between the two men, the supposed burglar lies unconscious on the floor and the wife slipping the handkerchief from his face, discovers that it is Steven, and when after sending the stranger from the room she and Steven face each other and looking into each other's eyes realize the problem that confronts them in their mutual knowledge of his intended crime. The problem seems unsolvable, but the woman's love, triumphant as always, finds a way for them both.

BACKWARD, TURN BACKWARD, O TIME IN YOUR FLIGHT.—"A happy youth and their old age is beautiful and free."

Man and wife for fifty years, they are sitting by the fireside together. Old age has crept upon them, but the bond of love cemented in early childhood has never been broken.

The softening glow of the firelight reveals a picture of perfect peace and contentment. The arrival of a basket of fruit, containing a number of luscious apples, recalls to mind their childhood meeting, the incident most tenderly cherished in both dear hearts.

Memory spanning the space of time, once more brings the orchard into view. The old man laughs as he sees himself the ringleader of a mischievous set of village boys. But boys will be boys. The apples were ripe; the temptation was great. How they shinned up that tree, and what a harvest they gathered, until old Uncle Abner hove into sight! The boys were out of the tree in a jiffy, and then the chase began. And what a chase it was! Across the meadow, through the brook, and up the pasture lot to the hayfield.

The smallest boy was far in the rear, and at the turn at the big hay stack he was little ahead of his angry pursuer. Capture would have been certain, but for a quick witted, bright eyed little girl, who with quick sympathy covered him up with hay, and sat on him. The farmer, none the wiser, raged after the other culprits. The danger past, the boy was uncovered.

As the eyes of boy and girl met in laughter, the sweetest story ever told had its beginning.

A DANGEROUS PAIR.—Jack and Caroline have just been married and after seeing them board the train two of their friends conceive the idea of writing a letter to each of the newly wedded pair stating that the other is subject to fits and telling how they start and what to do to relieve them. The letters are delivered shortly after the arrival of the bridal couple at their hotel and the complications arising are very amusing. This synopsis would be incomplete if we failed to mention the bell boy who insists on doing everything in his power to add to the couple's comfort and always arrives at an inopportune moment.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

MY WIFE'S GONE TO THE COUNTRY (HOORAY! HOORAY!).—This is a typical Essanay comedy, brimful of the stuff that laughs are made of. With due apologies to the writers of that popular song, "My Wife's Gone to the Country," the Essanay Company offers another full reel comedy subject. The story follows:

There is always something doing around the Jones' household when Mrs. Jones is thwarted in having her way in some particular whim. In this instance Mrs. Jones has informed "Jawn" of her intentions of spending a month at the seaside, and the wily "Jawn" to make sure of her going, chuckles and feebly protests. The experiment works of course, Mrs. Jones will hear nothing of it and insists that he help her pack and furnish her with the necessary wherewithal for her month's outing.

Jones decides to make the best of it and carries her grips, bags, boxes and other parcels to the station. At the gate into the train shed, Mrs. Jones slips her purse into her husband's pocket while she gathers her belongings into her arms. She hurries away, the gate is shut and Jones leaves the station unmindful of having his wife's purse in his pocket.

Jones, the henpecked, suddenly realizes that he is free. Since his marriage he had never once been from under the watchful eye of Mrs. Jones, and now, like the spirit-crushed ex-convict just liberated, he hardly knows what to do with his freedom.

Leaving the station Jones meets a couple of old cronies. He tells them of his wife's visit to the country, they tender their congratulations and urge him to accompany them to a nearby cafe and have a drink. One of his friends tells him of a little theater party they are planning for that evening and that they have it fixed up with some of the chorus girls. He is invited to join them and he accepts.

They attend the theater and after the show meet the chorus ladies. A spin in the auto finally ends at Jones' apartments. Jones, the host, goes to the kitchen, dons his wife's apron and prepares an elegant repast.

But in the meantime Mrs. Jones, aboard the train, discovers the loss of her purse, containing railroad ticket and money. Unable to present her ticket, the conductor stops the train and helps her off. There follows a long tedious journey from the city limits into town and she arrives at the Jones' back door just as her wicked spouse is preparing the lobster salad.

Jones sees her from above, makes a dash for the drawing room and informs his guests of the return of his better half. Hurriedly he shoves one into a closet, packs one into a trunk and lets one out on the fire escape. Mrs. Jones is admitted, immediately scents trouble, and ends by dragging one after the other of her husband's frightened guests from their hiding places.

Oh, the unlucky ending of this short season of bliss. Mrs. Jones seats herself at the table while Jones helps her to the lobster salad and other delicacies. Her hunger satisfied, Mrs. Jones procures the old reliable rolling pin, a flat iron or two—but let us draw the curtain here. Length, 952 feet.

KALEM MFG. CO.

THE PAY CAR.—Scene I.—Engineer Byrnes Reports for His Run. The opening scene gives us a view of the main yards of a large trans-continental railroad system located on the outskirts of one of

Received in Response to Our Announcement

A MIGHTY MASS OF MOMENTOUS MAIL

Coming from as far distant points as the western coast, the writers of these letters of inquiry, representing exhibitors and business men of known standing and repute, who realize the importance of our Agency Proposition and who are eager to represent an Institution With Unquestioned Ability to Supply Superior Film Service, Honestly and Surely.

Exhibitors Who Can Place Service in Other Houses Write

We have a special proposition to make managers of reputable and established theatres who can interest near-by exhibitors.

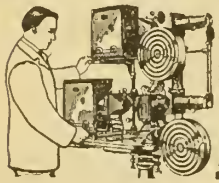
Special Inducements on Machines, Repair parts and Supplies

Don't Wait Another Day But Tell Us What You Need Now

SEE OUR LIST OF AGENCIES NEXT WEEK

CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO., Inc.
HARRY R. RAVER, Manager
28 W. LEXINGTON STREET - - BALTIMORE, MD.

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.
Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"
Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN
THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

MR. EXHIBITOR!

If you want to see your house "packed" every night for a week, ask your nearest Exchange Man to supply you with the GREATEST AMERICAN FEATURE FILM the MOTION PICTURE WORLD has ever produced—"The Only Authorized and Authentic Motion Pictures of the Great United States Military Tournament" held at Camp Taft the week of July 5th to 10th, Toledo, Ohio. Over 3,000 feet of film, reproducing, with wonderful clearness, The Modern Field Artillery in Action—Lively, Thrilling Drills by the Infantry—Wall Scaling and Skirmish Work—Wonderful Saddle and Bareback Riding by the Cavalry—Modern Quick-Firing Cannon in Action—Engineer Troops Building Bridges and Destroying Them with Dynamite—Signal Corps in Scientific and Instructive Field Work—Hospital Corps Showing How the Wounded Are Cared For—and the hundreds of other "stunts" that will excite your audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

Lively now! Be the first in your territory to exhibit these remarkable pictures. Now is the time to "stock up" on a little "Easy Coin of the Realm."

If your Exchange will not furnish you, let us know the seating capacity of your theater and we will send you further particulars.

Motion Picture Department
United States Military Tournament
TOLEDO, OHIO

ATTENTION

M. P. Men! Here is the

HALLBERG

Electric Economizer for Direct Current

Guaranteed to SAVE 50 to 85 per cent. on your bills for M. P. Lamp current. Here is another PROOF of satisfaction.

HALLBERG-D. C. ECONOMIZER

PICTURELAND
645 Penn Street
Finest Moving Picture House in the City

Reading Pa., July 8, 1909.

MR. J. H. HALLBERG,
30 Greenwich Ave., New York.

Dear Sir—It is now four months since we installed your direct current "HALLBERG ECONOMIZER," and machine has always given entire satisfaction.

It saves fully 50 per cent. on the current bill. The machine requires practically no attention whatever except occasional oiling and cleaning. Machine runs very quietly, current is very steady and machine does not heat up like a rheostat. I have the machine in the basement and the controlling apparatus is mounted in the operating booth. Thus I have perfect control over the light at all times.

The market is full of A. C. current savers, but M. P. managers having direct current have looked in vain for a current saver that could be used on D. C. Your D. C. "HALLBERG" Economizer will fill a long felt want, and I cannot recommend it too highly. Wishing you success, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM H. WAGNER.

Get in communication with me Mr. M. P. Man, I have many good things for you, among them Hallberg Economizers for all kinds of electric lighting—4,000 C. P. Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "Electra Pink Label" Carbons is complete. I also handle the best M. P. Machines, and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices they are interesting.

Write for FREE booklet No. 3W.

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Avenue, New York

our largest cities, the outlines of whose towering skyscrapers can be seen dimly silhouetted against the horizon. Up and down the labyrinth of tracks, trains are constantly passing. Here comes the Overland Flyer, the fastest train on the entire system. Engineer Byrnes, one of the characters of our picture, starts to cross the tracks on his way to report for his run. He sees the approaching flyer and stops to wait for it. As it passes he waves his hand to his fellow engineer in the cab. Passing on through the yard, with its hundreds of waiting engines, some standing idle, others apparently moving up and down in aimless fashion, but all intricate parts of that complex system of runs that makes a railroad time-table almost as reliable as a watch, Engineer Byrnes arrives at the time-keeper's little shanty. He signs the book and now he is ready for the return trip that will carry him back to his waiting family at the other end of his run.

Scene II.—The Drunken Fireman Is Discharged. At the roundhouse, Byrnes' engine stands ready for him. He has finished a thorough examination and knows that everything is fit for the run. He looks at his watch. Time to start for the train-shed. But where can his fireman be? Ah! Here he is at last, but in no condition to make the run. Byrnes remonstrates with him for coming so late, and the drunken fireman aims a blow at him, but Byrnes knocks him down. The fireman seizes a club and is about to strike Byrnes when the superintendent, who has heard the noise, comes running up. He demands the cause of the trouble. The fireman tells the superintendent that Byrnes attacked him and knocked him down. The superintendent notices his condition and accuses him of being drunk. This the fireman denies, but the superintendent draws the bottle of liquor from the fireman's pocket and orders him from the yards. The fireman goes, vowing vengeance against Byrnes. But who is to fire the engine for the run? The superintendent calls an ambitious young engine wiper from the shop and asks Byrnes if he will be satisfied with him for a fireman. Byrnes assents and the boy is ordered to the cab. Now Byrnes mounts to his place and the engine moves slowly out of the yards.

Scene III.—A Chance for Revenge. It is now a week later. The discharged fireman, by the aid of friendly trainmen, has traveled back along the railroad until he is approaching the other end of his former run. Across the track comes a railroad call-boy on his way to summon some railroad man to work. The half-drunken fireman greets him roughly. The boy is reluctant to stop, for he knows his call is special and urgent. The fireman, catching sight of the order sheet protruding from the boy's pocket, seizes it, and, holding off the protesting boy, reads it. As he does so, a cunning light comes into his eyes. He returns it to the boy and tells him to hurry on. So Byrnes, the man that caused his discharge, is going to take out the pay car. Here is a chance for both revenge and much-needed money. Back along the tracks, towards a small branch line that the pay car will visit, he hurries.

Scene IV.—Byrnes' Home: A Sick Baby. This is the humble home of Engineer Byrnes. Sickness has laid a heavy hand upon the little family; the only child, a beautiful little boy of two years, is dangerously ill with fever. Worn out with a night of watching, the tired mother has brought the baby out into the yard in the hope that the fresh morning air may help allay the fever which is burning up its precious life. Here comes the doctor. He feels the little one's pulse, then shakes his head. Perhaps a change of medicine may help. He draws out his pad and writes the prescription. Calling Byrnes to one side, he tells him the crisis of the fever is coming and cautions him to in some way induce the wife to take a rest or she will find herself broken down at the very time the child will need her the most. The doctor leaves, and Byrnes, going back to his wife, kneels beside her to comfort her. The call boy arrives with the order for Byrnes to take out the pay car special. Byrnes reads it and drops his head in sorrow, for duty calls him at the time when his wife and child's need for him is greatest.

Scene V.—A Plot to Wreck the Pay-Train.

Scene VI.—Cutting the Wires.

Scene VII.—The Plotters See and Followed. Out from the doctor's office, where she has been to secure medicine for her sick baby, comes the engineer's wife. She is hurrying home when she sees the gang just as they finish the cutting of the wires and dash off. Fearful lest some new danger threatens her husband, she starts bravely to follow them.

Scene VIII.—The Pay-Train. Now we see the pay car train rushing along, carrying the welcome monthly wages to the employees along the line. Up on the engineer's seat sits Byrnes, faithful to his duty, but with his sad thoughts back at the little home where his baby lies ill. At a small station near the end of the branch the station men are waiting the arrival of the pay car. Ah, here she is. She stops and the pay clerk hurries out and calls to the men to come and take their envelopes. Up the rear steps they go into the car. Soon out they file, each busy counting his wages. Now the last one has passed down. The conductor waves his hand to Engineer Byrnes and the pay train pulls slowly out and away to the unsuspected danger that awaits it in the lonely cut near the main line.

Scene IX.—The Wife Foils the Wreckers. Down the steep side of the lonely cut where he has planned the wrecking, comes the fireman, followed by the yeggmen. Quickly he tells them of his plan. Three of the wooden ties lying near are carried on the track, and under the skillful direction of the fireman are being placed in such a position as to lock securely into a firm pile. Back at the top of the bank appears the brave wife. Stealthily she creeps up on the gang, busy with the ties, and secures the revolver of one of the yeggmen. The gang turn only to find themselves gazing into the muzzle of the revolver. Holding them at bay, she waves her red shawl in warning to the fast approaching pay train. But only for a second. A quick exclamation by the leader draws her attention to the rear, and before she can turn they are upon her. She is quickly overpowered and carried away by the gang. Back on the approaching train the engineer and the fireman have seen the warning and the attack upon their brave savior. Up comes the train almost on top of the pile of ties that was to have wrecked it. Engineer Byrnes and the trainmen rush forward. Picking up the shawl, Byrnes realizes it was his own brave wife that saved them from destruction. Almost crazed at the thought of her being in the hands of that gang, he seizes the gun of one of the guards and starts in pursuit, followed by the trainmen.

Scene X.—The Pursuit.

Scene XI.—At the Pump Station—The Gang Captured. Now the pursuers are gaining. The gang realize they will not be able to reach the swamp and have decided to take shelter in an old pump station near the railroad. Up they rush. Quickly the door is opened and the senseless woman carried in. One of the gang is hit and falls. Now the remainder have reached the shelter. Up come the pursuers. A fierce battle is raging. One of the train guards falls. Engineer Byrnes, determined to rescue his wife at any cost, forces open the door of the pump station and starts in. Out staggers the fireman, mortally wounded, and falls lifeless. Byrnes carries out his wife. The remainder of the gang, knowing their leader dead, throw up their hands and surrender. Engineer Byrnes, seeing his wife is reviving, takes her in his arms and tells her the danger is over, and as a result of her bravery the pay car is safe and now they can return to the little one waiting for them at home.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine)

PROF. PUDDENHEAD'S PATENTS.—This film shows patent number one, called the Aero-Cab and Vacuum Provider. It will be followed by other devices and discoveries of the professor.

First, the professor exhibits his invention, an elaborate but fearsome-looking monster. As he leaves the combined airship and automobile cab, two mischievous young people attempt to manage it and shortly find themselves in the clouds. We see them pass over several miles of country, giving us an excellent view of England's White City.

Hunger assails the youthful aeronauts. By means of the vacuum provider the food problem is solved.

It performs many stupendous feats in acquiring the viands from terra firma, much to the consternation and personal discomfort of various dwellers along their route.

The denouement, although disastrous to machines and occupants, is of a vastly hilarious character to the audience. Length, 404 feet.

THE FRENCH BATTLESHIP "JUSTICE."—A series of perfectly photographed pictures, dealing with the life of the French sailor on board a battleship.

Among the scenes are morning call, the ship blacksmiths, hauling cattle aboard, saluting the flag at sunrise, firing the machine guns, the Commander's deck and front turret, flag signaling, officers reading the compass, mess kitchen, serving out rations, gymnastics.

Given leave of absence, the sailors climb down to the boats by means of rope ladders suspended from the yardarm of their ship. Another scene shows them lined up for inspection by the Prince of Monaco, whose arrival on board and welcome by the commanding admiral and his staff is shown. Length, 557 feet.

IN HOT PURSUIT.—Old Clifford Moore, a blind piano tuner, lives with his daughter Eleanor in a little cottage home at the beautiful city of Kaune. The daughter assists her father not only by caring for the house, but also by acting as guide to him in his trips to the various homes where his work calls him.

On the day with which our story opens Mr. Moore is called to the house of the wealthy Franklin family. Eleanor guides him to the mansion and attends him while he is at work in the music room.

The son of the household, a young man of evil habits, attempts to make love to Eleanor.

The old gentleman, hearing the pleadings of the dishonest youth, takes his daughter from the house, leaving the work unfinished.

A few evenings later young Franklin, with a pair of hired rogues, waylay the old man and his daughter on the street. After a short struggle, in which the blind man did his best to protect his daughter, Eleanor is captured and carried away in an automobile. Happily the father has secured the neckscarf belonging to young Franklin.

By this tie the identity of the abductors is discovered and after a lively pursuit the young lady is rescued and the young man punished. Length, 514 feet.

ROMANTIC ITALY.—A more than usually attractive travel subject, perfectly photographed, presenting unique views of the cities of Perugia and Gubbio, with their ancient walls and relics of Roman fortifications. Superb pictures of the majestic Marmore waterfalls; the Candles procession at Gubbio; weird and thrilling scenes. Length, 437 feet.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

AN AWAKENED CONSCIENCE.—Portraying first the farm home of the leading character, a good-looking country boy of ambitious temperament, who has heard the call of the city and is leaving for Paris to attempt to gain a fortune by his pen.

In the next scene we are taken to the production of his first play at the theater. Here his effort meets with great approval. The author is called for and forced to respond to numerous curtain calls.

Elated by his success, the young man immediately writes to the home folks about the ovation he has received. The old peasants are delighted at their son's success and they plan a surprise visit to their boy in the big city.

We next see them arrive at his house in Paris during his absence. Here they are informed by the servant that his master has gone to dine at an aristocratic home. The address he gives to them. Anxious to see their boy as soon as possible, they go to the mansion at which it proves he is in attendance at a dinner party.

When it is announced to the popular young man that two peasants, his parents, are awaiting him, he is embarrassed. Momentarily lost because of his success, he feels ashamed of the old people. He sends word that he has departed.

Sadly the old parents are about to leave. Alone in the great city, tired from their journey, heart-broken from their disappointment, the are comforting one another before the mansion when one of the late arrivals for the dinner observes them. Touced by their evident helplessness, she stops a moment to sympathize and as soon as she arrives among the guests describes the pathetic old couple vividly to them.

The young author realizes his false position and immediately resolves to own his mistake. He hurries out into the street to the old people before they have gone far on their way. He takes them back to the merry party where he introduces them and they are heartily received. Length 627 feet.

MAGIC CARTOONS.—An old and learned doctor discovers the secret of spontaneous generation and makes a microscopic germ which in its growth gives birth to the following people who dissolve into one another and into other shapes with startling mystery:

A girl, after passing through numerous forms, becomes a ferocious doorkeeper. He in turn evolves into a sheriff's officer, who changes to a fisherman of great weight, whose evolution forms a collector and a policeman, who in turn dissolve into a series of designs. Length, 340 feet.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE DOCTOR'S BRIDE.—Dr. Fletcher, while on a professional visit, finds a young girl homeless and penniless. Her father, a poor laborer, had just died. He offers her home and protection which she thankfully accepts.

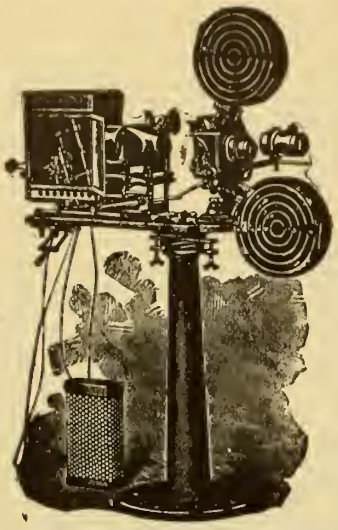
A year has passed. The new ward has found her way to the heart of the doctor. He finds that she is more to him than a child. He proposes marriage and is accepted.

The doctor's busy life keeps him much away from his young wife which time she uses for a little innocent flirtation. Some evening one of her admirers hands her a note and asks her to see him after her husband has retired. She reads the note and laughingly bides it in her bosom, never intending of taking the flirtation serions.

The company has gone. The doctor desides to work before retiring while his young wife stays in his office until he had finished his work. She lays down upon the couch and is soon fast asleep. She dreams that she met her admirer outside of the gate. He induces her to run away with him. He is soon tired of her and drives her from his home. Reverses come, her lover loses everything. He becomes a drunkard and drives her and her child from shelter.

Weak from lack of food, she breaks down on the road where she is found by Dr. Fletcher and revived. At this point of the dream the doctor has finished his work. He goes over to his young wife lovingly awakening her. She relates the dream and wants to show him the note but he smilingly tears it up; he does not want to read it. He has full confidence in his young wife which confidence is never betrayed. Length, 580 feet.

THE WOMAN HATER.—It is understood between the two partners that no woman will be employed, the senior partner being a deep-dyed woman hater. It happens that the typewriter is discharged just as the senior partner leaves for his vacation. He leaves the engaging of a new typewriter to the junior partner who advertises for a lady stenographer.



PREVENTS TIRED EYES AND HEADACHES

The rapidity of our new shutter has been so perfected that 30 to 40 per cent. less non-exposure (which has heretofore caused the tremulous vibration producing so many tired eyes and headaches) is found in the Motiograph than in any other machine, making perfect brilliancy of picture and sharpness of outline. Together with the rocklike steadiness of the pedestal the flicker is thus entirely eliminated.

Five-cent Theatre and Vaudeville-House Managers increase their bank account with the Motiograph. Patrons who come once will always come again where they know they see the best pictures, positively rest their eyes instead of tiring them, and where all fire risks are removed.

The Motiograph

1909 Theatre Model, Especially Approved by the Underwriters Association

OTHER POINTS OF EXCELLENCE IN THE MOTIOGRAPH found in no other machines are: A special Film Rewind by which the film can be rewound with the main crank in two minutes without removing either reels or magazines, saving time between pictures and entertainments; perfected Fireproof Magazines, Fire Traps, with four rollers and with spring actuated flanged guides, preventing side movement and making it impossible for fire to pass them; never failing Automatic Fireproof Shutters; Perfect Framing Device; Flanged Sprocket Rollers to prevent film being torn or ruined by accidentally running off sprocket wheels; Enclosed Gears and working parts; Perfect Take-up with new form of belt adjuster; Lid Off Wide Open Lamp House making it easily accessible; Improved Arc Lamp with all Hand Wheel Adjustments; Slide Carrier Swing, saving one-third more illustration for the Motion Pictures.

FILMS AND SLIDES

Headquarters for the finest, largest and most complete stock in the United States. The success of an entertainment depends on never allowing the interest of an audience to flag; patrons who have come once will come again when constgnt change of programme is made.

Send For NEW CATALOGUE of Entertainers Supplies explaining everything and showing how big money can be made entertaining the public, sent free. Special literature describing the advantages of the Motiograph for professional entertainers and theatre managers.

CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., E. D. OTIS, Mgr., Supply Dept., 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

SLIDES

of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

Was I a Fool?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do for a Girl Like You.
Good-by, Girlie, and Remember Me.
After 'While.
Bushel O' Kisses.
Alice (Still I Love Thee).
On a Monkey Honeymoon. (Posed by live monkeys.)
If I Had My Choice of the World's Pretty Girls.
My Wife's Gone to the Country, Hurrah! Hurrah!

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena

59 PEARL ST., NEW YORK CITY

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample.

FORMULA $3.00

W. A. FORD, 309 N. Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md

Moving Picture Supplies at Special Prices

Pink Label Electra Carbons, 5/8 x 6, $2.25 per 100.
Pink Label Electra Carbons, 5/8 x 12, $4.00 per 100.
Tickets in lots of 50,000 for $4.00.
Pure White Condensors, 55c. each.
Metal Slide Carriers, 75c. each.
Films, 10 reels in good condition, $100.00.
Opaque, 20c. per jar.
Cover Glasses, 8c. per doz.
Cement for non-inflammable and ordinary film, 15c. per bottle.
Agents for Hallberg Economizer, Power's and Edison Machines.
Goods shipped on receipt of money-order.

STERLING FILM COMPANY
32 Union Square - New York

For Sale

A completely wired electric board sign reading "Family Theatre" in raised lights. Length 26 feet, height 2½ feet, each letter 18 inches, cost $150. Will sell very cheap. Inquire

A. NEWMAN
715 Westchester Avenue - New York City

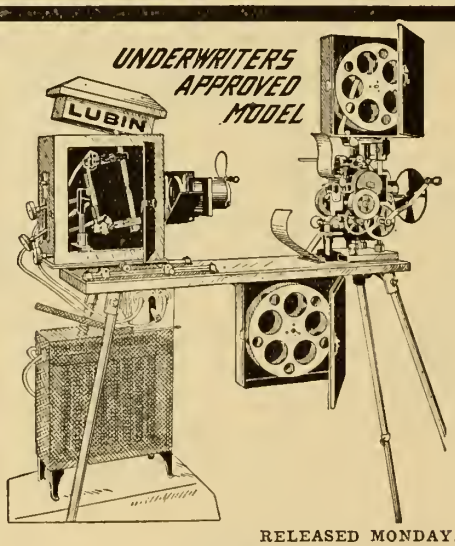
Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500 OPERA CHAIRS IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS



LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL

equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter. POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

RELEASED MONDAY, AUGUST 30th

THE DOCTOR'S BRIDE

While on an errand of charity the doctor takes a young girl from the deathbed of her father. He acts as her guardian, but soon falls in love with her and marries her. That she loves him dearly is shown by her resisting a great temptation. LENGTH, 575 FEET.

THE HAUNTED RAT

The whole borough is in a state of excitement on account of a haunted hat which is carried along the highways and byways by a playful little kitten. LENGTH, 300 FEET.

RELEASED THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2d

THE WOMAN HATER

The senior partner of the firm is a deep-dyed woman hater. Just before he takes his vacation he dismisses the stenographer. During his absence the junior partner engages a lady stenographer. When the senior partner returns, the junior partner leaves for his vacation, putting it up to the senior partner to make the best of the situation. This he does, and on the return of the junior, the senior presents to him the new stenographer as his future wife. LENGTH, 810 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The senior's vacation is over. He returns and you can imagine his consternation when he sees a girl stenographer. The junior partner now leaves for his vacation and it is up to the senior partner to make the best of the situation. This he does so well that when the junior partner returns the senior presents to him the new stenographer as his intended wife. Length, 850 feet.

THE HAUNTED HAT.—While walking down the street a man sees a Haunted Hat crawling along the street. Frightened, he runs away. He calls the town constable, the judge, he calls the fire department consisting of a fireman, the grocer and other leading citizens of the town. Each one is determined to solve the mystery of the haunted hat, but the courage leaves them after they see the slowly moving hat along the streets of the borough.

At last the ghost is tired and a little kitten playfully comes from under the hat. Peace reigns again in the hamlet. Length, 350 feet.

PATHE FRERES.

THE PROFESSOR'S DILEMMA.—A poor musician who is overwhelmed with hard luck, and possesses barely enough of the world's riches to afford him the price of a square meal, receives a note from some of his admirers, inviting him to attend a musicale. As the affair is to be strictly formal, the poor fellow, who resembles a ragamuffin, is at his wits' end trying to figure how he will make the raise of a dress suit to appear to advantage at the party where he will be expected to display his wonderful ability as a player. Going to the studio of his friend, who is a struggling artist, the poor professor states his sad case, but the friend, who is himself poverty stricken, can lend him no assistance. Just then an old fellow attired in the conventional evening clothes enters the studio to engage the young artist to paint his portrait in the costume of a Roman gladiator. The musician takes in the situation at a glance, and when the visitor changes his clothes for his unique costume, the aspiring society parasite steals the dress suit and hastens to his own attic room. Soon the gay professor is arrayed in the suit, which is much too large for him, but unmindful of his grotesque appearance, he starts out for the musicale. He is graciously received by the music loving guests, who immediately escort him to the piano stool, where he holds forth for the evening, entertaining his appreciative friends. At the studio the artist finishes the picture, and when the model looks for his clothes and cannot find them he becomes enraged and bolts from the place in his artistic costume. Realizing that the professor is the culprit who stole his clothes, the old fellow comes to the reception, where he finds the thief. The infuriated old model attacks the musician, and while the guests flee in terror, the professor is divested of his borrowed dress suit. Length, 423 feet.

THE HYPNOTIC WIFE.—The opening scene of this droll comedy reveals the interior of a home which can be termed anything but happy, as the wife, who is a strenuous exponent of woman's rights, holds the upper hand and leads her poor henpecked husband a lively chase in his pursuit of domestic happiness. The fuming wife is forever nagging and quarreling with her husband, and things reach such a serious state in the place that the husband sends a letter to his father asking the latter to come to his assistance, as his wife is beating him. The old man puts in his appearance, and after upbraiding the young woman in no mild fashion, he informs her that he has come to stay and protect his son from her wrath. The woman is not at a loss for words and looks to demonstrate to the old fellow the utter contempt which she holds for himself and son, and after a lively scene she leaves the place. Going to a hypnotist she gets a few pointers on the psychic influence, and feeling that she now has a safe weapon to protect herself from the interference of the old father-in-law, the young woman returns home, where she finds the old fellow just about to retire for the night. He is clad in his pajamas and bathrobe, when the hypnotic damsel enters and casts her powerful spell over him. He is now as docile as a child and does exactly as the woman wills. She commands him to pick up his traveling bag and follow her out of the place into the street, where they meet a couple of policemen, who are led to believe that the old fellow is a fit subject for the insane asylum. They call a cab and the whole party enter it and are driven to the asylum where the woman conveniently rids herself of her burden. Length, 482 feet.

RALPH BENEFITS BY PEOPLE'S CURIOSITY.—Ralph is an ambitious youngster who possesses an extraordinary amount of business ability, of which he makes good use. He has in his possession an apparently useless toy, which, by looking through, one can see all sorts of strange but pretty transformations. Realizing that his folks are very poor, and that he must earn some money, the youngster starts out on the street and, stopping in a public square, he hails several people and allows them to look through the little cylinder. So pleased are the latter with the amusing sight that they pay the youngster well for the privilege. Soon there is a large crowd gathered, and the curious spectators take their turn in peering into the object, and for a long time Ralph is kept busy passing it around and collecting the necessary fees for the privilege of a peek. He is doing a rushing business when two policemen put in their appearance and start to disperse the crowd, but they, too, being curious, have a look, and are amazed at the pretty sights that they see in the little machine. Finally Ralph, feeling that he has earned enough for one day, returns home, where his poor mother's heart is made happy by the profusion of coins which the little fellow throws in her lap. Length, 285 feet.

THE NEW MAIL CARRIER.—During the strike of the Government employees in Paris, the officials were compelled to call upon the soldiers in the army to assist in the postoffice service. The theme of this very droll comedy is founded on some of the experiences of a stupid private who comes to the local postoffice to assume the duties in whatever department he will be the most useful. The postmaster graciously receives the fellow who presents his credentials, and immediately he is put on the job of selling postage stamps. It is not long before the boss realizes the delinquency of the new clerk in his official position, for the latter, upon becoming vexed at a man who comes in to buy some stamps, kicks him out of the place. The postmaster immediately transfers the fellow into the mail-sorting room, where, not being experienced in the business, the indolent fellow takes the heaps of letters and throws them in every direction, mixing matters up in terrible shape. After trying him as a telephone operator with the same bad results, the boss sends him out to deliver the mail. The stupid fellow, after being loaded down with parcels and bags, starts out on the route, but before going far he tires of his burden, and rids himself of it by throwing everything away, and handing the letters to every one who happens along. After ridding himself of every bit of mail he returns to the postoffice, where he is congratulated for his good work, and given another load to deliver. This time he is in the act of throwing all the letters into the sewer when two policemen come along and arrest him for disorderly conduct. The unfortunate fellow is dragged off to jail, where he is thrown into a cell and left to dream about his many trials and funny experiences during his short term as a postoffice employee. Length, 672 feet.

THE LITTLE STREET SINGER.—A poverty-stricken woman is bewailing her fate at not having enough money in the house to buy food for her two loving children, who are the delight of her life and the only ray of sunshine in her otherwise dark and dreary existence. The noble little boy takes his sister by the hand and leaves the house, assuring his kind mother that he will not return until he has earned some money. As the youngsters wander along the country road they meet the parish priest, who stops to chat with them for a while, and who, before leaving, gives the pious little wanderers his blessing. They go on their way, and soon meet an old fiddler, who, upon hearing the story of their mother's distress, volunteers to teach the ambitious urchins a song which they can sing in public and earn an honest living. The old fellow takes the youngsters to a remote spot in the woods, where he holds a rehearsal, and when the pupils have committed the song to memory, the trio start off to the city to try their luck.

They come to a cafe, where the little singers are welcomed, and their efforts are so much appreciated that, after finishing their song to the accompaniment of the old violin, a lady in the place takes up the collection and realizes a large sum for the little entertainers. The happy youngsters and their benefactor leave the gay place and start for their home in the country, where the mother is anxiously waiting their return. When the poor woman receives the money she is made extremely happy, and showers her blessings upon the old man who aided her children in their quest of an honest living. Length, 426 feet.

SAM NOT WANTED IN THE FAMILY.—An old man who is out walking with his two pretty daughters, accidentally falls on the car track, and might have been injured but for the quick action of a young fellow named Sam who happens to come to his rescue. So grateful is the old fellow for the services rendered by the stranger, that he invites the latter to his home, where, as a reward for his heroic act, the old man presents him with one of his pretty daughters. The girl having something to say in such matters, shows her deep resentment, and when she informs her fiance of her father's latest whim, the young lover challenges his rival to a duel. The pair of contestants retire to the yard where they get ready to settle the dispute with the foils, but Sam, not being out in the art of self-denfense, refuses to fight. They finally compromise and decide to fight a very original duel with two streams of water. Each one takes a hose to drench one another, but little Sam gets the worst of the battle. His old friend comes to his rescue and carries him into the house, where he is given a change of dry clothing and told to hurry down to dinner. The family are gathered at the table when the guest puts in his appearance, and not being over particular about his table manners, he causes no end of amusement to the horrified people. His would-be lady love is bound to get rid of him, so she plays all sorts of tricks in order to drive him away from the place, but nothing seems to turn him from his chosen purpose of winning her. As a last resort, they wait until he retires for the night and then, getting some of the servants to help, they carry him in his bed out of the house and send him floating down a stream. Length, 502 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

MRS. JONES' BIRTHDAY.—Mistakes of the heart do not restrict themselves to single occurrences in a man's life—they often multiply themselves, and, moreover, resolve themselves into errors of judgment. So it happened with the sincere but unfortunate Jones.

It was the anniversary of his wife's birth, and she, womanlike, did not fail to impress the fact upon her husband's mind as he departed at his usually early hour for his customary day's work. A bit excited over the prospect of presenting his better half with a gift befitting the occasion, he loses his balance as he steps out of the front door and rolls pell-mell down a flight of six steps to the street. Picking himself up, he boards a street car, and arriving at his office he goes through his daily routine of business.

At the close of office hours he repairs to John Post & Co.'s crockery establishment, and after much cogitation and repeated questioning, purchases a rather handsome jardiniere. Delighted with his choice and anticipating the caress he will receive in return, he again takes a car, this time for home. As he seats himself he is accosted by an old friend. After a reminiscent talk Jones arrives at his destination and alights, forgetting his jardiniere. The car speeds on. Poor Jones, recovering his wits and realizing that he dare not return home without some token, betakes himself to the same store and purchases another jardiniere.

Again en route to his car, while passing a grocery store Jones is hailed by another old acquaintance. In the goodfellowship of this accidental meeting, Jones absentmindedly places his wife's present on the rear end of the grocery wagon near by. Thereupon the driver departs with his wagon and is out of sight before Jones realizes what has occurred. He gives chase, but to no avail. He glances nervously at his watch. Exasperated and overheated, he rushes back to the store, and to the amazement of the proprietor purchases his third jardiniere.

This time he is determined to get safely home; no friend shall balk his way. His car is in sight, when his attention is attracted by a heated altercation between a lady and a taxicab driver, she claiming that she is being overcharged. Now Jones was ever of a chivalrous tendency, and, upon being requested to decide the dispute, proceeds to do so, after first placing his precious parcel on the sidewalk near the cab. A few words, and with a satisfied feeling of having accomplished an heroic deed, Jones reaches for his jardiniere, but to his consternation finds that the chauffeur has mistaken it for the property of the occupant of the taxicab, and jardiniere and taxicab were "over the hills and far away."

Half-crazed with his repeated misfortunes, he rushes back to the same store. The clerk is dumbfounded at the reappearance of this monomaniac on jardinieres, but sells him another. Poor Jones, his very soul distorted by his anticipated reception of a late arrival home on this eventful day, dashes madly for his car, when he is startled by a woman who clutches him, not fondly, but too strongly, and screams into his ears "For God's sake, help me; my husband is killing my mother!" Much against his will, unfortunate Mr. Jones is urged into an apartment house.

Inside the house he finds himself battling for life, while he is chased madly around the room by a fiend incarnate, who wields an axe with a dexterity so accurate that Jones decidedly disapproves of accuracy. The woman and her mother flee from the house while he, poor man, makes a hurried departure, smashing his jardiniere and screaming anathemas on all birthdays.

Bruised, tattered and heartsick, he again slowly wends his way to the now so familiar store. "Another of the same kind, please," he meekly requests. He at last gets on a car safely. The car is crowded. A workman enters carrying a package, places it next to that of Jones' jardiniere, and he takes a seat beside our friend. At last Jones reaches his destination, and, grabbing the wrong parcel, alights. He enters his dining-room, much relieved, and, inscribing a loving message to his wife, he places it beside what he believes to be his well-earned jardiniere.

Calling Mrs. Jones, he points with pride to his gift. She embraces him fondly, after reading his words of affection, truly meant but unfortunately so inappropriate. For as she discloses the article so carefully wrapped, lo and behold! it is a workingman's teapot, black with soot. Poor Mrs. Jones, expectant all day, resents what she considers a practical joke, and belabors her husband with words well-nigh unspeakable, and leaves the room, vowing that henceforth he is no husband of hers and that she will return to her mother, never again to be called wife by such as Jones. He, amazed and crestfallen, and disgruntled with the world and himself, swears that birthdays should never exist.

WINNING A WIDOW.—Herman Winkle, a tailor, is a bachelor whose nephew, Tom, is in his employ. Benjamin Smart, the keeper of a candy store, is also a bachelor, whose niece, Edna, helps him in his store. Winkle and Smart have their places in the same block and are friends, although have be-

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.

(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)

1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

THIS WEEK'S FILMS AT A GLANCE.

MONDAY, AUGUST 30.

BIOGRAPH—The Mills of the Gods (Dramatic).
BIOGRAPH—Pranks (Comedy).
LUBIN—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).
LUBIN—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).
PATHE—Ralph Benefits by People's Curiosity (C.).
PATHE—The New Mail Carrier (Comedy).

TUESDAY, AUGUST 31.

URBAN—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).
URBAN—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).
VITAGRAPH—The Hunchback (Drama).
VITAGRAPH—Niagara in Winter Dress.
EDISON—Suffer Little Children . . . For of Such Is the Kingdom of Labor (Dramatic).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1.

GAUMONT—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).
ESSANAY—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C.).
PATHE—The Little Street Singer (Dramatic).
PATHE—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Drama).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 2.

BIOGRAPH—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).
BIOGRAPH—The Little Darling (Comedy).
LUBIN—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).
SELIG—Mrs. Jones' Birthday (Comedy).
SELIG—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 3.

KALEM—The Pay Car (Dramatic).
PATHE—A Visit to Biskra (Scenic).
PATHE—Show Your License (Comedy).
EDISON—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy).
EDISON—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Drama).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 4.

URBAN—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).
URBAN—Romantic Italy (Scenic).
PATHE—A Grave Disappointment (Comedy).
PATHE—Launching the "Voltaire" (Scenic).
PATHE—Training Bulls for the Fight (Scenic).
VITAGRAPH—The Galley Slave (Dramatic).

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

will make money for you day and night because it works all the time. It doesn't get out of order, it's simple to operate and is the most durable motion picture machine made.

The Edison gives the clearest and steadiest pictures ever shown. The booklet gives all details. Write for it today.

EDISON FILMS

Films Released August 31st and September 3rd

RELEASED AUGUST 31, 1909

Suffer Little Children...For of Such is the Kingdom of Labor

Dramatic. A story of a lovers' misunderstanding, an unhappy marriage, drunkenness, poverty and child labor in all its pathetic details, concluding with a husband's complete reformation through the medium of a vision. Scenes in factory built upon actual photographs furnished by National Child Labor Committee. A leader for Labor Day.

No. 6508 Code, VERRUQUEUX App. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 3, 1909

Ethel's Luncheon

A comedy by Carolyn Wells. Peggy and Dolly, overhearing Jack Fuller arranging with Bob Hall to act as his proxy and entertain his fiancee, Ethel Adams, at luncheon, take advantage of Bob's never having met her, and present themselves in turn for entertainment. Brimful of laughter and amusing complications. Special cast for this production.

No. 6509 Code, VERRUTO App. Length, 675 feet

Backward, Turn Backward, O Time in Your Flight

Dramatic. Sitting at their fireside, an aged couple, reminiscing on their childhood's first meeting, see it enacted in detail before their eyes. The story of a boyish raid on an apple orchard, discovery, pursuit, imminent capture, and rescue by the girl's concealment of the lad in a haystack. Photographically perfect. A pretty story.

No. 6510 Code, VERSAAGED App. Length, 325 feet

Films Released September 7th and 10th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 7, 1909

A DANGEROUS PAIR. (Comedy)

No. 6511 Code, VERSABILES App. Length, 520 feet

THE TEMPTATION. (Dramatic)

No. 6512 Code, VERSABUNDA App. Length, 475 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 10, 1909

THE MAKING OF HONEY. (Industrial)

No. 6513 Code, VERSADORES App. Length, 195 feet

THE AMATEUR WILLIAM TELL. (Comedy)

No. 6514 Code, VERSAGUNG App. Length, 805 feet

TO BE RELEASED SOON

"LITTLE SISTER"

Especially written for Edison production by Edw. W. Townsend, author of "Chimmie Fadden," and interpreted by a special cast.

We want every Exhibitor to have a copy of "The Kinetogram". Write for it.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

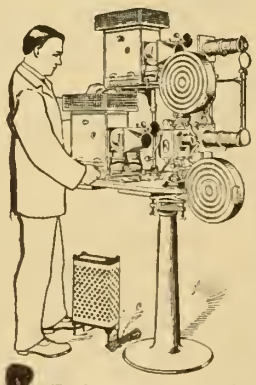
MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.

New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents

P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

come smitten by a captivating widow, Mrs. Dasher. Tom and Edna, seeing much of each other, have fallen in love. The opening scene of the picture shows them seated in a rustic nook "spooning." Edna's uncle comes suddenly upon them and objects to their love-making, insisting upon Edna's accompanying him and leaving Tom to his thoughts. Smart sends Winkle a note acquainting him of the spooning he has observed and his objection because of their youth; to all of which Winkle agrees, and calls upon Smart, assuring him that he thoroughly agrees with him.

Soon Mrs. Dasher, the widow, strolls by, and is greeted warmly by Smart and presented with a box of boubons by him. This his niece observes. Later the widow shows it to Winkle, whom she meets as she passes his store, and Winkle realizes he has a rival. He asks permission to call upon her that afternoon at three, to which she consents. Tom, overhearing it, writes a note to Smart asking him to call that day at three p. m., and signs Mrs. Dasher's name to it. It is delivered to him by Edna, his nicce.

Winkle and Smart are soon off to the florist, where they purchase bouquets on the quiet and hasten to the widow's home, followed unobserved by Tom and Edna. Winkle, having arrived first, is declaring his love, when Smart appears with the note, which the widow denies having written. Smart is forced to retire aud Winkle obtains her consent to his proposal, and is greatly elated. much to the discomfiture of Mr. Smart.

Tom and Edna having observed all this, obtain an infant from a nurse girl and leave it in front of the widow's cottage. Tom writes on a card:

"H. Winkle,

"Receive your child from its deserted mother."

This he pins to the baby's clothing. The infant is found by the widow and the card discovered and read by Smart. Winkle, unconscious of anything, appears and is denounced for his perfidy and deceit. Winkle, dumfounded aud crestfallen, rushes from the indignation of Mrs. Dasher. At this turn of events Smart feels there is a chance for him, and taunts Winkle with being a married man. Winkle, while pulling his handkerchief out of his pocket to wipe his troubled brow, drops his pocketbook, which Tom, who appears at that moment, picks up, and, unseen by either of the men, slips into Smart's pocket.

Turning to his uncle, he asks if he bas lost anything, and Winkle, upon finding his pocketbook gone, is told by Tom that Smart has it. Whereupon Winkle accuses Smart of baving stolen it. The widow appears in time to hear the accusation. Smart says, "Seareh me." It is done and the pocketbook found, much to his snrprise and that of Mrs. Dasher, also. Winkle calls Smart a thief, which so angers him that he knocks Winkle down, and in his indignation tears the collar and shirt from him, and, rushing through the shrubbery, he waves them aloft in his anger aud finally stamps them under his feet. With Tom's help, Winkle recovers his shirt and makes himself presentable. Smart, still feeling the sting of Winkle's accusation, is out for satisfaction.

He finds Winkle trying to catch his second wind, as it were, and charges him at the point of a pistol with having placed the pocketbook in his (Smart's) pocket himself. He threatens to blow the top of Winkle's bead off with a revolver which has no chamber in it; but Smart makes a good bluff with it and Winkle knows nothing different until he secures it and threatens Smart. Mrs. Dasher, fearing a serious turn of affairs, comes upon them. The nurse with the empty baby carriage follows in quest of the infant, and Tom and Edna, who have been looking for her, return the child. The nurse, after declaring that Winkle is not the father, goes on her way with an easy mind.

Tom then admits that he, with Edna's help, is the culprit—that he signed Mrs. Dasher's name to the note, that he pinned the card to the child's clothing and placed the pocketbook in Smart's pocket, all because both uncles opposed his attachment and Edna's for each other. The widow intercedes in their behalf and the young folks are made happy, while she willingly nestles in Winkle's arms and Smart is left to go back to his store and his candies.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

"JUDGE NOT THAT YE BE NOT JUDGED."—Synopsis: The picture opens at the plain breakfast table of a mother, an elderly and kindly woman, and her son, a pleasant-looking young workman. The son is about to leave for his day's work when a letter is received which reveals that the father, a convict (his term being shortened for good conduct), is abont to start for home. The father is sure that he retains the love of his wife, but fears that his son will he bitter against him. He longs for the love and respect of his son. The son is, in fact, angry at the thought of the father's return; and, though the mother pleads with him, he is unchanged. Going to his work in this frame of mind he meets his sweetheart and is about to part from her at the factory gate when his jealousy is aroused hy the attentions which the foreman bestows upon her. The sweetheart goes on her way and the foreman, twitting the young man, follows him into the factory. A little later the foreman criticises the work of the young man, who, still smarting with jealousy, quarrels with the foreman, strikes him and apparently kills him. The young man then, filled with remorse, voluntarily gives himself up to the police. The scene now shifting, reveals the exterior of the young man's home. A man enters the scene and goes toward the door. It is plainly the father, by the short-cropped hair and depressed bearing. The mother opens the door and eagerly welcomes him. Again the scene shifts and shows that the foreman is not so dangerously hurt. He regains consciousness, learns of the arrest of the son and leaves the factory. The picture now shows the son again. He is guarded by an officer and in his remorse he sees a series of visions. He sees the appareutly lifeless body of the foreman. He sees himself convicted and led away to prison while his sweetheart turns from him. Finally he sees himself locked in a cell in convict's stripes. He is aroused from his thoughts by the entrance of the foreman who, to his great astonishment, tells the police there is no charge against him, then shakes his hand. Filled with gratitude he starts for home. Entering his motber's kitchen the young man is surprised to see his father's satchel and hat upon the table. Now, however, he realizes that good people may do wrong. The mother anxiously comes into the room. The father, following feebly and trembling with emotion, fears to raise his eyes to those of his son, hut, slowly doing so, he finds, not the much-dreaded scorn and disrespect, but a loving welcome. Length, 447 feet.

BORROWED CLOTHES.—Gaston aud Henri, two struggling artists, are discovered in their poorly furnished studio as the postman brings a letter inviting them to a banquet. At first they are overjoyed, then realizing that their clothes are too shabby, sink back in utter despair. A few moments later, a young man fashionably dressed, but very awkward and gawky, enters and presents a letter. This proves to be from a mutual friend introducing the bearer, Mr. John Hayseed, who has falleu heir to a large fortune and wants bis portrait painted. Both artists are over-courteous to the newcomer, then the same idea comes to both—one at least can attend the banquet if clothes can be secured. They retire behind the screen and throw dice as to which will wear the clothes of Mr. Hayseed. Henri wins. Returning to their customer they discuss the kind of portrait he wants painted and find that his choice is to be portrayed in his new suit. After considerable coaxing, bluffing and threatening, they succeed in getting him to put on a Roman gladiator's costume. This, of course, necessitates his removing his entire outfit, which Henri at once appropriates and starts out for the banquet. Mr. Hayseed takes his position and Gaston starts painting, hut as the hours go by he becomes tired, hungry and begs for his clothes. The artist has his own troubles in pacifying Jobn, while Henri, resplendent in the "horrowed clothes," is being complimented on all sides for his sweli appearance. As time passes on, Henri gets into a blissful state of intoxication and, with his companions, starts for the studio. Here there is trouble. The countryman refuses to pose any longer, starts for the ante-room, where he discovers that his clothes are missing. He is furious, and while arguing with Gaston as to their whereabouts, the door bursts open and Henri, with three friends, stagger in. John recognizes his clothes, grabs the wearer, and commences to rough it, when the janitor appears and throws them all out of the building. Length, 538 feet.

THE EVIL THAT MEN DO.—Mary is sewing outside her cabin door, as the villain in our story enters and makes a proposal of marriage. He meets with a stern refusal and sneaks off, vowing vengeance. Mary enters the cahin and is setting the table as hero No. 1 enters and asks her father for her hand. The old man nods assent, but Mary, upon being consulted, refuses. The old man uphraids her, pleads with her, but she is resolute. A little later another suitor, hero No. 2 we shall call him, comes in and is joyously received by the girl. The father standing by, notices the reception. The truth dawns upon him, and he orders Mary from the house. The last named is evidently not as much infatuated with Mary as she is with him, and realizing that he has tired of her, the girl determines to commit suicide. She starts for the river, and is just about to end it all when hero No. 1 steps from behind a tree, thwarts her plan and asks what has driven her to such a step. Mary refuses to teil, wanders off and, coming to the dancing hall, she sees the second hero through a window dancing and flirting with different girls. She calls him away, pleads with him to marry her. This the young man refuses to do, and be is about to cast her aside when hero No. 1 appears and at the point of his gun forces the other to swear he will marry Mary. Hero No. 2 now returns to his cahin, sits down in deep thought. The villain enters, taunts bim of the girl, and in the fight whicb ensues the hero is stahbed. The murderer tears off the blood stained part of his sleeve and throws it out of the window, where it is found by a Chinaman who is passing. Then observing the approach of the first hero, the villain sees a chance of fastening the crime on him, slinks through another door, proceeds at once to the camp where he tells of the crime. A crowd at once returns to the cahin, where they pounce upon the hero and take him hefore a judge. Evidence is overwhelmingly against the accused and a verdict of guilty is speedily reached and all hands start for an immediate execution, when the Chinaman, noticing the torn sleeve of the villain, stops the proceeding, fits the piece he found on the villain's shirt and the tables are turued. Mary steps forward, embraces the exonerated man and they are married by the judge, who but a short time before had sentenced the bridegroom to death. Length, 925 feet.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE SHELL.—A working man, Charles Simonsen, is instructed to remove some heavy timber, hut being tired, he sits dowu a few minutes to rest himself. For this, the foreman rebukes him for laziness, and S. gets angry and gives a sharp reply. Soon after, the two men quarrel hotly with the result that S. is discharged and by aid of the police turned away from the working place. Raging over the uujust treatment, and fearing that his family shall now suffer want, drives the sensitive man mad. When he comes home and as usual embraces his children, he suddenly begins to unravel a secret plan in a wild, uncauny way with strange manners and words. His poor sick brain has inveuted a scheme to blow up the new ship, which is heing built at tbe wharf. Under pretense of getting a box for the uecessary dynamite, hiš wife runs out to fetch a doctor. But when they come back, S. is goue. The madman has in the meantime sneaked into the wharf, burst open the door to the dyuamite room, taken out a loading with conductor and clockwork, and placed it all under the big ship's hull. As he now at full speed runs away from the place the foreman happens to see him, becomes suspicious and runs after him. S. jumps into a boat, the foreman takes another and quickly pursues and reaches the fugitive. It comes to a violent fight in S.'s boat, they both fall into the water, but when S. again reaches the surface, he is more dead than alive. The foreman carries him ashore, and assisted by some policemen, he gets him so far restored that they can question him as to his doings. The doctor and his wife arrive also, and he tells them where he has placed the shell. The foreman rushes away to find it, and thus in the nick of time prevents a catastrophe. When he returns, S. pulls all bis strength together, asking, "Did you find the shell?" and when he hears the good news, a smile of relief brightens his face, and he closes his eyes and dies iu the arms of his faithful wife.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

HIS TWO CHILDREN.—The ups and downs of a thespian's life are clearly shown in tbis Bison production. The story is worked out to a nicety, and the most fastidious will see its merits. Mr. Fiske drives up to the stage door to meet his wife, who is the leading lady. Other men are also waiting for someone to come out. As Mrs. Fiske, kuown as Miss Everton, come from the door, another man greets her, and she is about to enter a cab with him, when her jealous husband pulls her aside, and quite a scene ensues between the two men. Finally husband and wife go off together. Miss Everton is next seen sitting on the balcony of her home. She kisses her baby, which is brougbt in by the nurse, and as they are about to enter the house, a man presents divorce papers to her. Miss Everton's sorrow at their contents is very apparent, nurse shows sympathy and enters house with baby. Mr. Fiske comes to say good-bye to his little one, and a most pathetic parting takes place between father and child, husband and wife. Four years have elapsed, and Mr. Fiske is married again. Mrs. Fiske's little girl is brought to her, and when her husband also enters room, they fondle and play with her. From this luxurious abode we go to an attic, which is now the home of Miss Everton. She enters and runs to the bed on which is her boy, whom she feeds from a cup. Her reverses have heen so great she feels she can no longer care for her child, so she fastens a tag to his collar and goes out with him. She comes to a large building, and making sure sbe is not watched, puts the youngster on the steps and hastily goes away. Mr. Fiske rides up to the door, sees boy, reads the tag, and takes him into building. He finally decides to carry him to him home, where the little fellow finds a welcome. Twenty years have gone by, and Miss Everton enters her dressing room at the theater, she starts to make up when the evening paper attracts her attention. She shows horror at what she reads, and regardless of the fact tbat it is time for the curtain to rise, she dashes from the theater. Guests are seen driving to the door of Mr. Fiske's home, and when Miss Everton presents herself there they do not want to admit her, hut she gets by the footman and into the drawing room, where stands her son and Mr. Fiske's daughter about to be wedded. She explains that Mr. Fiske is the father of both, aud she the mother of the boy, so the wedding is stopped and much excitement caused. Length, 1,000 feet.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

A STRANGE REUNION.—This picture shows a loving wife and a drunken husband. She puts up with his abuse and tries to make allowances for him for the sake of tbeir little baby. One day he is brought home in a drunken condition by his foreman. The wife is humiliated and cries. While the foreman, taking advantage of her position, en-

The Hit of the Country—SELIG'S FILMS

Don't Miss These Two

MRS. JONES' BIRTHDAY
Code Word "Day" Length 540 Feet

WINNING A WIDOW
Code Wor "Widow" Length 450 Feet

RELEASED AUGUST 30, 1909

Selig Polyscope Co. 45 RANDOLPH STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

Kalem Films

Issue of September 3d, 1909

"THE PAY CAR"

Length 930 Feet

A remarkably effective presentation of a series of thrilling incidents in the life of a railroad engineer. The saving of the pay car from a gang of yeggmen by the engineer's wife is intensely dramatic and an extremely well handled scene. Pronounced by a high railroad official a perfect picture of real railroad life.

Free Descriptive Lectures to All Applicants

KALEM CO., Inc.
EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.
235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

BE INDEPENDENT

Don't be the Fall Guy for $2.
We have proven what we said

NO GUNC

It has increased our business.
New, Live stock at all times.
Not the kind that walks but
the kind that talks :: ::

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 E. 23rd St. near 2nd Ave., New York City
ONE OF THE OLD TIMERS

Please mention The Moving Picture World when corresponding with advertisers.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED AUGUST 30, 1909.

THE MILLS OF THE GODS

A pretty comedy drama, in which a struggling young magazine writer is boosted to fame and fortune by an artless Swedish maid-servant of his boarding place. The poor girl deeply loves the author, quite unknown to him, and is moved by his extreme desperation at having his endeavors rejected by the editors. She interests herself to the extent of going and pleading with the editor to at least read his story—which she has surreptitiously taken from his room. The result is that the editor is so impressed that the writer is put on their regular staff of contributors, but the sight of his joys is the poor girl's only reward, for his heart is given to another.

LENGTH, 672 FEET.

PRANKS

A very funny farce comedy, showing how two lovers were reunited, after a bitter quarrel, by a mischievous boy exchanging their wearing apparel while they are bathing in the surf.

LENGTH, 328 FEET.

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 2, 1909.

THE SEALED ROOM

One of the most artistic film subjects ever produced, telling a story of medieval times, in which the king surprises his favored one in an intrigue with an Italian troubadour. Unknown to them, he walls up the only entrance to the room they are in, and there leaves them to their inevitable fate. The costuming, acting and staging of this production, it is safe to say, has never been surpassed, while the story is one of intense interest. The subject may, indeed, be termed a feature film.

LENGTH, 779 FEET.

THE LITTLE DARLING

This might be termed a comedy of errors, as it tells of a party of old folks who prepare to receive a visit from what they believe to be an infant, only to find that the little darling is a pretty young lady of seventeen.

LENGTH, 211 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects—MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

deavors to force his attentions upon her. She repulses him and orders him from the house. He goes, but thinking she will change her mind, he leaves a note for her to meet him later. The husband comes out of his drunken stupor, and demands his supper, but she needs money to buy provisions. He refuses to give her any, and abuses her. She cries and he leaves her, telling her he shall never return. She is heartbroken and, in despair, when she discovers the foreman's note. In desperation she decides to avail herself of the invitation and seek his help. But when she looks into the cradle and into the face of the little baby, the good in her wins, and she promises to remain a true woman.

Two years later, the husband is seen gradually going down hill. He is a hopeless drunkard and finally turns into a burglar. He is in the act of burglarizing a house, when discovered by two young people coming home late at night. They immediately call a policeman. The burglar takes alarm and runs into an alley and finally takes refuge in a tenement building. He tries several doors until he finds one unlocked and rushes into the room where he comes face to face with his deserted wife. He pleads with her to hide him, and she finally tells him to get into bed, which he does and when the officers come, she tells them he is her husband. They insist upon searching the other room, but she protests, and the police thinking she is concealing the man, push her aside and enter. Instead of a burglar, they find the little baby dead and laid out. Realizing that they have made a mistake, they sadly depart. The wife then leads her burglar husband into the room and shows him their little dead child. At first it is hard for him to comprehend the fact that his neglect has been mainly responsible for the little one's death. But it does finally dawn upon him that such is the case, and he solemnly vows to reform and henceforth lead a better life.

One year later the husband and wife are seen in a modest home. They are very happy for he is thrifty and now a model husband, his reformation being complete. Length, 910 feet.

FOR SALE

25 sets of song slides with music for sale cheap, all in perfect condition

LIST ON APPLICATION

PREMO, 934 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF! NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS! NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.

109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs Also Seating for Out-of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office, 44 Park Place

Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Western Office, Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

WANTED—Man to handle moving picture house. Salary and commission. State qualifications fully. Permanent. BIJOU THEATER, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

WANTED—Combination Pianist and Singer. Address, with full particulars, BIJOU, Lakewood, N.J.

FOR RENT—6,000 ft. film, 3 sets slides, on shipment, $12 weekly; 12 reels, $20. For Sale—1,000 ft. reels, late subjects, $10 and $15 per reel. New No. 4 Optigraph, $40; new Lubin Underwriters' Model, $100; Edison, $60; Power's, $75; Model B gas outfits, $25; 20th Century Graphophone, $50. Wanted to Buy—Passion Play, films, machines. H. Davis, Watertown, Wis.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 300 W. 45th St., New York City.

WANTED

Quantity Independent Films

Second hand Machines, all makes

WRITE PARTICULARS

CLIMAX BROKERAGE CO.

Box 50, Station D :: New York

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York

'Phone 4267 Orchard.

Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

"Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

Choke Coil For Moving Picture Machines

USING ALTERNATING CURRENT

Guaranteed to save 60% Meter Bills for Current

Takes the place of the rheostat and its heat

Will pay for itself in from one to two month's running

Price, $18.50

Address, L. A. FREUDENBERGER

Newark, Delaware

Singing Bird

The One Big Hit at Atlantic City. The greatest Indian Song ever published, and the slides are the greatest of any song ever produced.

These are the original slides, made by the original maker, and used exclusively by the publisher.

Get The Best

Next Thirty Days

$4.00

Per Set

SLIDES BY

Chas. A. Calehuff

A Member of the Film Service Association

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES.

NO JUNK

MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES $5.00 Per Set

Nuff Said. Order at Once

N. E. COR. 4th & GREEN STREETS PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BUSINESS FOR SALE.

STORE dealing in Moving Picture Machines, Parts, Supplies, Stereopticons, Slides, etc.

Owner has other business interests and would like to devote his time to them.

Rare chance for someone wanting a permanent and profitable business, or Eastern house wanting a Western branch.

Address "BUSINESS," care of Moving Picture World.

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides

The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.

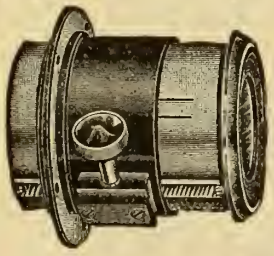
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

SONG SLIDES
FOR RENT

At the extremely low rate of 50c per set per week.

Guaranteed complete from Title Slide to Chorus. No broken or faked slides. Music in perfect condition. Making shipments consisting of your entire week's supply of sets in one consignment, not only saving you considerable in express charges, but giving your vocalist ample time to rehearse the songs.

CHICAGO SONG SLIDE EXCHANGE
Ninth Floor, Masonic Temple - CHICAGO, ILL.



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15 00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20 00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

Anti-Trust Film Co.

Very Latest and Best
Motion Picture Films for Hire

All Makes Motion Picture Machines

ANTI-TRUST FILM CO.
77-79 South Clark Street :: Chicago

Our Baby Show Contest Plan

Continues to Draw Big Houses Everywhere

READY SEPT. 4th

Our New Money-Making Proposition for Moving Picture Theatres

This will be a Genuine Novelty
Write at once for Exclusive Territory

Live representatives wanted everywhere. Excellent chance for wide awake men. If you're a hustler write.

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY
221 East 53rd St., New York City

Attention! Manufacturers

"Something New"

For Hire on Reasonable Terms

Artistic furniture, statuary, draperies, rugs, bric-a-brac, historic costumes, arms, armor, paintings, tapestries, prints, mirrors, mantels, andirons, art objects of all periods and countries. Especially rich in genuine antiquities of Colonial times. Estimates, sketches and photos supplied for complete equipment for single scenes or complete moving picture plays. Mr. S. M. Jacobi, of Paris and London, has charge of the collection. He is also well known as a stage director, scene artist and costume designer, press and pictorial photographer, and is prepared to submit plans and superintend building of up-to-date moving picture skylight and artificial light studios, dark rooms and workrooms, and controls some novel labor saving devices for moving picture manufacture. Improve your pictures, increase your output, lessen your cost by seeing or consulting JACOBI.

THE GENUINE ANTIQUE STORE
34 East 30th Street :: New York City

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.
Film Import and Trading Company.

June 12—Private Brown .....904 ft.
May 29—Scrappy Bill .....802 ft.
June 19—Love Wins .....931 ft.
May 8—Cowboy's Sweetheart .....854 ft.
May 1—Nevada Girl .....936 ft.
May 22—Johnny and the Indians.....877 ft.
May 14—The Temptations of John Gray....930 ft.
Aug. 18—The Lost Letter.....965 ft.
Aug. 25—The Blacksmith's Daughter .....985 ft.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July 17—Carnival Merriment in the North...352 ft.
July 24—A Clever Nurse.....450 ft.
July 24—Off the Coast of Norway.....315 ft.
Aug. 14—The Spy .....619 ft.
Aug. 14—Water Sports .....214 ft.
Aug. 21—False Alarm .....353 ft.
Aug. 21—Surroundings of Copenhagen.....396 ft.
Aug. 28—The Shell .....567 ft.
Aug. 28—Cowboys in Argentina.....387 ft.
Aug. 26—A Strange Reunion.....910 ft.
Sept. 3—His Two Children.....1000 ft.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

June 25—A Cowboy's Narrow Escape (Dr.)...965 ft.
July 2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.).....935 ft.
July 9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.).....850 ft.
July 16—I Love My Wife, But Oh, You Kid (Com.) .....775 ft.
July 23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.) .....1000 ft.
July 30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C).800 ft.
Aug. 6—Sailor's Child (Dr.).....1000 ft.
Aug. 13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes..450 ft.
Aug. 13—The Yiddisher Cowboy.....550 ft.
Aug. 20—Half Breed's Treachery .....1000 ft.
Aug. 27—Secret Service Woman.....1000 ft

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

The following films are released this week by the Empire Film Co., 150 East 14th street, corner Third avenue, New York.

How the Page Boy Cured a Flirt (Warwick).270 ft.
Love of a Hunchback (Empire).....522 ft.
The Boy and His Kite (Hepworth).....350 ft.
Florian De Lys (Aquila).....732 ft.
How the Bulldog Paid the Rent (Warwick)..423 ft.
The Boy Scouts (Williamson).....550 ft.
A Strong Woman's Lover (Lux).....554 ft.
Little Jim (C. & M.).....375 ft.
An Apostle of Temperance (Lux).....493 ft.
Biskra, Garden of Allah (Hepworth).....250 ft.
A Troublesome Malady (Hepwix).....500 ft.
Mr. A. Mutt (Itala).....380 ft.
Lonisa of Lucerne (Pineschi).....656 ft.
Who Laughs Last (Clnes).....295 ft.
Foolshead, King of Robbers (Itala).....630 ft.
Only a Tramp (Hepworth).....350 ft.
A Strange Reunion (Phoenix).....950 ft.
Mosimilla (Itala).....723 ft.
Blacksmith's Daughter (Centaur).....980 ft.
False Alarm (Great Northern).....360 ft.
Surroundings of Copenhagen (Gt. Northern).500 ft.
Secret Service Woman (Bison).....1000 ft.
Leap of Alola (Phoenix).....516 ft.

Imported and released by Exhibitors' Film Exchange, 138 Third avenue.

Love and Revenge.....403 ft.
Bad Brother.....591 ft.
Day After a Spree.....466 ft.
Bad Day for Lavinsky.....396 ft.
Origin of a Man.....394 ft.
Fancy Soldier.....475 ft.
Mexican Drama.....311 ft.
Madwoman's Child.....724 ft.
Baby's Revenge.....275 ft.
By Path of Love.....540 ft.
Gaffy's King of Detectives.....485 ft.
Blind Against His Will.....314 ft.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

NOTICE

High Class Baritone wants engagement for winter in first class vaudeville or picture house. Will also act as press agent or assistant manager. Position must be permanent. Address T. H. Base, care of Moving Picture World.

Theatre For Rent

The finest and best appointed in the city, completely furnished, with well appointed stage, scenery, picture curtains, etc. Everything complete, ready for opening. Capacity, 429.

The Kinedrome, Schenectady, N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY 110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc., Etc.

500 Reels of Film For Sale

One New Dressler Machine (complete) $115. One Second-hand Power's Machine (complete) $100.
One Edison Machine (complete) $125. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents a foot

Latest Song Slides Moving Picture Supplies

First Class Independent Film Service

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL CO.

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Main Office: 214 Sixth Avenue near 14th Street - - NEW YORK

Branch Office: 118 Bower Street, Jersey City Heights. Tel. 4006 R Jersey.

FILMS FOR RENT

6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week

$2.00 per change all in good condition

Signs and Banners no extra charge

FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.
Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

Mr. Exhibitor!

Why not have your Motion Picture Machine in first-class condition? It will Improve your show. This is the time to do it. :: :: :: ::

MODEL MACHINE AND REPAIR SHOP

Phone, Central 5554

125 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

"Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie"

Words by REN SHIELDS Music by GEO. EVANS

ORIGINAL SLIDES BY

Climax View Co.

133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

July 12—The Cardinal's Conspiracy (Dramatic).....999 ft.
July 15—The Friend of the Family (Dramatic).....749 ft.
July 15—Tender Hearts (Dramatic).....233 ft.
July 19—The Renunciation (Comedy Drama).....982 ft.
July 22—Sweet and Twenty (Comedy).....572 ft.
July 22—Jealousy and the Man (Comedy).....418 ft.
July 26—A Convict's Sacrifice (Dramatic).....973 ft.
July 29—The Slave (Dramatic).....998 ft.
Aug. 2—A Strange Meeting (Dramatic).....967 ft.
Aug. 5—The Mended Lute (Dramatic).....996 ft.
Aug. 9—They Would Elope Comedy).....572 ft.
Aug. 9—Jones' Burglar (Comedy).....388 ft.
Aug. 12—The Better Way (Drama).....990 ft.
Aug. 16—With Her Card (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 19—His Wife's Visitor (Dramatic).....526 ft.
Aug. 19—Mrs. Jones' Lover; or, I Want My Hat (C.)467 ft.
Aug. 23—The Indian Runner's Romance (Drama)..994 ft.
Aug. 26—The Seventh Day (Drama).....693 ft.
Aug. 26—Oh, Uncle! (Comedy).....292 ft.
Aug. 30—The Mills of the Gods (Dramatic).....672 ft.
Aug. 30—Pranks (Comedy).....328 ft.
Sept. 2—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).....779 ft.
Sept. 2—The Little Darling (Comedy).....211 ft.

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

July 27—Taking His Photograph (Comedy).....700 ft.
July 30—Love's Sacrifice (Dramatic).....520 ft.
July 30—Mulligan's Waterloo (Comedy).....455 ft.
Aug. 6—Lochinvar (Dramatic) .....790 ft.
Aug. 6—The Tobacco Edict (Historical Comedy)....199 ft.
Aug. 10—Apprentice Boys at Newport Naval Training Station (Scenic).....216 ft.
Aug. 10—A Coward (Dramatic).....784 ft.
Aug. 13—The Price of a Soul (Dramatic).....560 ft.
Aug. 13—Furnished Rooms to Let (Comedy).....425 ft.
Aug. 17—A Simple House Dinner.....220 ft.
Aug. 17—Far from the Maddening Crowd.....780 ft.
Aug. 20—The Web of Fate.....385 ft.
Aug. 20—Wright Bros.' Aeroplane.....600 ft.
Aug. 24—A Child of the Forest.....970 ft.
Aug. 27—The Patieuce of Miss Job.....185 ft.
Aug. 27—A Dash to Death.....815 ft.
Aug. 31—Suffer Little Children . . . For of Such is the Kingdom of Labor.....1000 ft.
Sept. 3—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 3—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Dramatic) ———
Sept. 7—A Dangerous Pair (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 7—The Temptatiou (Dramatic)..... ———

ESSANAY FILM MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

July 14—The New Cop (Comedy).....550 ft.
July 21—Romance of a Stranded Actress (Dram.)..1000 ft.
July 28—The Tramp's Story (Comedy).....715 ft.
July 28—A Case of Seltzer (Comedy).....210 ft.
Aug. 4—Much Ado About Nothing (Comedy).....510 ft.
Aug. 4—The Mustard Plaster (Comedy).....445 ft.
Aug. 11—A Maid of the Mountains.....1000 ft.
Aug. 18—The Wonders of Nature (Scenic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 25—On Another Man's Pass (Comedy).....950 ft.
Sept. 1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (Comedy).952 ft.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

July 24—Brown's Moving Day (Comedy).....290 ft.
July 27—The Last Confession (Dramatic).....837 ft.
July 27—Papa's Hat (Comedy) .....140 ft.
July 31—In Hot Water (Comedy).....447 ft.
July 31—An Easy Job (Comedy).....467 ft.
Aug. 3—The Sentinel on Duty (Dr.).....453 ft.
Aug. 3—The Morning After (Com.).....430 ft.
Aug. 10—Dust in His Eye (Com.).....400 ft.
Aug. 10—Retaliation (Drama) .....214 ft.
Aug. 10—Cyclist's Horn (Com.).....347 ft.
Aug. 11—Laurels (Historical) .....447 ft.
Aug. 11—A Long Reach (Trick Com.).....500 ft.
Aug. 14—The Foxy Farmer (Com.).....397 ft.
Aug. 14—Peddling Shoes (Comedy) .....287 ft.
Aug. 14—Why She Didn't Marry (Com.)).....234 ft.
Aug. 17—The Little Drummer of 1792 (Dramatic)...497 ft.
Aug. 17—The Cobbler and the Millionaire (Drama).427 ft.
Aug. 24—Too Gentlemanly (Comedy).....510 ft.
Aug. 24—The Frock Coat (Drama).....500 ft.
Aug. 25—Broken Ties (Drama).....777 ft.
Aug. 25—Sevres Porcelain (Mystic).....194 ft.
Aug. 28—A Generous Emperor (Drama).....304 ft.
Aug. 28—The Horse and the Haystack.....297 ft.
Aug. 28—Great Event at Podunk.....357 ft.
Sept. 1—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).....627 ft.
Sept. 1—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).....340 ft.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

July 21—The King's Conspiracy (Dramatic).....987 ft.
July 28—His Rival's Hand (Dramatic).....617 ft.
Iuly 28—Parks in Berlin (Scenic).....357 ft.
Aug. 4—The Turning Point (Drama).....614 ft.
Aug. 4—Stripping a Forest in Winter.....387 ft.
Aug. 7—Baby Is King (Comedy).....334 ft.
Aug 7—The Hidden Treasure (Drama).....624 ft.
Aug. 18—The Strikers (Melodrama).....567 ft.
Aug. 18—Building Barrels (Industrial).....400 ft.
Aug. 21—The King's Protege (Drama).....647 ft.
Aug. 21—Up the Mountain from Hong Kong (Scenic)287 ft.
Aug. 31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).....404 ft.
Aug. 31—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).557 ft.
Sept. 4—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).....514 ft.
Sept. 4—Romantic Italy (Scenic).....437 ft.

KALEM COMPANY.

July 23—The Tomboy.....690 ft.
July 23—Tickle Mary.....130 ft.
July 30—The Factory Girl (Dramatic).....850 ft.
Aug. 6—Traced by a Kodak (Dramatic).....980 ft.
Aug. 13—Out of Work (Dr.).....810 ft.
Aug. 20—The Queen of the Quarry.....690 ft.
Aug. 20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal.....170 ft.
Aug. 27—The Conspirators (Drama).....410 ft.
Aug. 27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Comedy)..575 ft.
Sept. 3—The Pay Car (Dramatic).....930 ft.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 2—When the Flag Falls (Dramatic).....915 ft.
Aug. 5—She Would Be an Actress (Comedy).....420 ft.
Aug. 5—His Little Girl (Dramatic).....530 ft.
Aug. 9—The Drunkard's Child (Drama).....605 ft.
Aug. 9—The Newest Woman (Com.).....215 ft.
Aug. 12—An Unexpected Guest (Dram.).....880 ft.
Aug. 16—How Brown Got Married.....680 ft.
Aug. 16—The Hungry Actor .....235 ft.
Aug. 19—Measure for Measure.....965 ft.
Aug. 23—Before the Dawn (Drama).....615 ft.
Aug. 23—Wifey Away, Hubby at Play.....320 ft.
Aug. 26—Nearsighted Mary (Comedy).....495 ft.
Aug. 26—Midnight Sons (Comedy).....385 ft.
Aug. 30—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).....580 ft.
Aug. 30—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).....305 ft.
Sept. 2—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).....810 ft.
Sept. 6—The Call of the Heart (Dramatic).....670 ft.
Sept. 6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic).....255 ft.
Sept. 9—A True Patriot (Patriotic).....735 ft.
Sept. 9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Scenic)....200 ft.

PATHE FRERES.

July 26—Sweet Dreams Intermingled With Nightmare (Comedy) .....311 ft.
July 26—Champion Heavyweight Lifter (Comedy)....266 ft.
July 28—The Barber's Revenge (Dramatic).....581 ft.
July 28—Amaozns of Different Periods (Scenic)....344 ft.
July 30—A Mother's Sorrow (Dramatic).....679 ft.
July 30—Charity Begins at Home (Dramatic).....298 ft.
July 31—Wonderful Rose Designs (Scenic).....262 ft.
July 31—The Gamekeeper's Son (Dramatic).....702 ft.
Aug. 2—Fantastic Heads (Scenic).....311 ft.
Aug. 2—The Butler's Trick (Comedy).....574 ft.
Aug. 4—Thellys' Heart (Dramatic).....968 ft.
Aug. 6—The Tragedy of Meudin (Dramatic).....951 ft.
Aug. 7—The Two Pigeons (Dramatic).....590 ft.
Aug. 7—Arabian Pilgrimage (Scenic).....295 ft.
Aug. 9—Satan's Smithy .....472 ft.
Aug. 9—Charity Rewarded .....476 ft.
Aug. 11—Pompey's Dream .....525 ft.
Aug. 11—The Sacrifice .....397 ft.
Aug. 13—A Trip to Jupiter .....623 ft.
Aug. 13—Cigar-Butt Pickers in Paris.....361 ft.
Aug. 14—The Wild Ass's Skin.....981 ft.
Aug. 16—A Heroic Father .....672 ft.
Aug. 16—Cold Plunge in Moscow.....246 ft.
Aug. 18—Elastic Transformation .....295 ft.
Aug. 18—Two Lovers and a Coquette.....567 ft.
Aug. 20—Doomed (Dramatic) .....836 ft.
Aug. 21—Rover Turns Santa Claus.....417 ft.
Aug. 21—Getting Even, with Everybody.....544 ft.
Aug. 23—Dances of Various Countries.....482 ft.
Aug. 23—The Hat Juggler.....377 ft.
Aug. 25—The Eternal Romance.....771 ft.
Aug. 25—Tennessee Guards .....207 ft.
Aug. 27—Manufacturing Bamboo Hats.....443 ft.
Aug. 27—A Billposter's Trials.....426 ft.
Aug. 28—The Professor's Dilemma.....423 ft.
Aug. 28—The Hypuotic Wife.....482 ft.
Aug. 30—Ralph Benefits by People's Curiosity (C.)..285 ft.
Aug. 30—The New Mail Carrier (Comedy).....672 ft.
Sept. 1—The Little Street Singer (Dramatic).....426 ft.
Sept. 1—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Dram.)..502 ft.
Sept. 3—A Visit to Biskra (Scenic).....443 ft.
Sept. 3—Show Your License (Comedy).....420 ft.
Sept. 4—A Grave Disappointment (Comedy).....361 ft.
Sept. 4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Scenic).....253 ft.
Sept. 4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Scenic).....331 ft.

SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

July 1—Ben's Kid (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
July 8—The Lion Tamer (Dramatic).....975 ft.
July 15—The Peasant Prince (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
July 22—Won in the Desert (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
July 29—The Heart of a Race Tout (Dramatic)....1000 ft.
Aug. 5—Before the Mast (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 12—The Leopard Queen .....1000 ft.
Aug. 19—The Yellow Jacket Mine.....1000 ft.
Aug. 26—The Royal Outcast (Drama).....1000 ft.
Aug. 30—Mrs. Jones' Birthday (Comedy).....540 ft.
Aug. 30—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).....450 ft.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

July 24—The Sword and the King.....991 ft.
July 27—The Little Orphan, Etc. (Dramatic).....755 ft.
July 27—Mid-Winter Sports (Scenic).....236 ft.
July 31—A Georgia Wedding (Dramatic).....420 ft.
July 31—The Artist's Revenge (Dramatic).....570 ft.
Aug. 3—The Bugle Call (Dramatic).....565 ft.
Aug. 3—The Truant (Comedy).....461 ft.
Aug. 7—A Woman's Way (Dramatic).....865 ft.
Aug. 10—Princess Nicotine .....392 ft.
Aug. 10—For Her Sweetheart's Sake.....570 ft.
Aug. 14—The Obdurate Father.....409 ft.
Aug. 14—The Gift of Youth.....535 ft.
Aug. 17—Liberty for an Hour (Drama).....355 ft.
Aug. 17—The Judge's Whiskers (Comedy).....591 ft.
Aug. 21—The Way of the Cross (Drama).....900 ft.
Aug. 24—Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged.....447 ft.
Aug. 24—Borrowed Clothes (Com.).....538 ft.
Aug. 28—The Evil That Men Do (Dram.).....925 ft.
Aug. 31—The Hunchback (Dramatic).....633 ft.
Aug. 31—Niagara in Winter Dress.....350 ft.
Sept. 4—The Galley Slave.....885 ft.

My sweet competitors are hammering at me again with anonymous letters to exhibitors. If it wasn't so disgusting it would be funny. Utterly lacking the nerve to come out in the open, they are adopting the tactics of the guerrilla, working in the dark and behind the back. It only goes to prove that the rush of exhibitors to my different offices is hurting the anonymous letter writers. But all the letters in the world can't damage the quality of my service nor the quality of my genuinely independent films. I have become the biggest film renter in the world by sticking to quality and I'm going to stick to that same thing through thick and thin. If you care to get in on a winning game, write to me this day.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE Laemmle Film Service

(196-198 Lake Street)
CHICAGO

(111 East 14th Street)
NEW YORK

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville, Ind.
Omaha. Neb. Salt Lake City, Utah
Portland, Ore. Montreal, Can.

THE BIGGEST AND BEST
FILM RENTER IN THE WORLD

YOU CAN INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

If You Are Open To Conviction

The Manager who is alive to conditions and will cater to the wants of his patronage has success at his finger ends. There is but one conclusion—

Install Our Premier Service

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio. Omaha, Neb.

HOW ABOUT UNIFORMS?

For Doormen, Ushers, &c

WE KNOW HOW!

Our Uniforms are Business Getters
Attractive and Inexpensive

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Complete Outfit as Low as $7.50

We Equip the Attaches of the Leading Theatres and Hotels in the U. S.

SPECIAL DESIGNS FOR MOVING PICTURE THEATRES

D. KLEIN & BRO.

Military Outfitters

927 Market Street :: Philadelphia, Pa.

Reference: Lubin Mfg. Co.

Chorus of Moving Picture Men

The Summer has gone to the Country

HOORAY! HOORAY!

Are you trying to discover the best Film Exchange in town?

Where to get the best Film Service for the fall?

DON'T WORRY!

We are on the job

Commencing Sept. 1st, we will release 21 reels of film weekly

Exhibitors' Film Exchange

PHONE 2775 STUYVESANT

138 Third Ave. Between 14th and 15th Sts.

"THE" Independent Service

WE IMPORT FILM, made by the foremost continental makers.

The most interesting, attractive and eductional subjects.

"USE FILM"

That your competitor has not!

DO NOT depend on the prescription made by the TRUST for yourself and your competitors alike.

Have New Film

and in consequence new trade.

Our stock is LARGE.
Our price is SMALL.
Our service is GOOD.
Our selection is the BEST.

The Largest Illustrated Song Slide Makers In The World

Complete Outfitters and Suppliers

Try US and watch the increase of your receipts.

Harstn & Company

ESTABLISHED 1897

The Oldest and Best Equipped Film Exchange in the U. S.

138 East 14th St., New York, N.Y.

Telephone, 3812-3813 Stuyvesant

Every newspaper is devoting page after page

ABOUT THE Great Airship Flights

AT RHEIMS

Early in September we shall release the above film without further announcement. At much expense this picture was taken for us right on the grounds and we are advised by cable that it will show six airships in flight at one time.

The approximate length is seven hundred feet. Supply will be limited so RUSH YOUR ORDERS.

A Real Bull Fight in Spain

Ever see a bull fight? It's fierce. It is something so unfamiliar to the American public that it causes shudders in its terrible fascination. During September we shall release the only real bull fight ever shown on a screen. It was not trumped up just to get a picture from. It shows from the time of entering the ring to the death of the bull all the marvelous tricks of a bull fighter and the escapes that attend this most popular of Spanish sports.

Ganoa the champion bull fighter of the world once more proves his rights to his title.

This picture was taken right at the ringside and shows incidentally an audience which for numbers and enthusiasm make our ball grounds with their 40,000 attendance look pretty slim.

It will undoubtedly be the FEATURE film of the year. Shipped only on special order.

Wire or write at once if you are going to want a copy.

Length approximately one thousand feet.

Peaceful Jones

(Centaur)

Shipped from New York, September 1st. Length approximately 990 feet.

Another big feature. Another typical American story of the east and west that will surely gain the approval of every audience.

CONTROLLED EXCLUSIVELY BY

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23rd Street - - - - New York

GRAND PRIX
Awarded First Prize and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Manufacturers of
Films of Quality
Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

NEXT ISSUE

THE SHELL
or, "A Madman's Revenge" Fine Dramatic Production
Length Appr. 567 Feet

COWBOYS IN ARGENTINA
Unique and Interesting Subject
Length Appr. 387 Feet

Sole Agents for Columbia American Films:

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY
NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN
7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Box Ball Doubles the Profits of Your Theatre

$800 a Month With No Expense But Rent!

Moving picture shows pay out big money every week for employes, song slides and film rental. But Box Ball is a business that often brings in $200 in six days, yet has absolutely no expense but rent. One customer with four alleys took in $1,845.20 in 59 days.

Customers who spend only five cents in the theatre spend more than a dollar at Box Ball. Crowds are quickly fascinated with this new game. They never tire—the more they play the more they want to keep on playing. No one wants to quit loser, so he plays game after game—often spending hours when he first intended to spend a few minutes.

When the crowds are in your theatre give them free tickets for the first game. Every one will play at least once and many will become regular customers. Women and children play as well as men—they form teams and clubs and often spend a whole afternoon or evening.

Install one of these money-making games in connection with your theatre. Rent the room above or get the store next door. Put in two or more alleys and you will be simply amazed at the wonderful profits.

Your only expense will be rent. Players set the pins with a lever and the balls are automatically returned. One man to collect the money is all you need, and he can care for as many as ten alleys.

One game usually lasts six minutes with two players. At 5 cents each that's $1.00 an hour from every alley—you can figure the profit yourself. With ten hours' play two alleys will bring you $20 a day, or $120 every six days.

Send for our free booklet and learn how you can own one of these great money-making games for only a few dollars down and the balance payable from your profits. Remember—you pay just a few dollars down, and your profits the very first month should more than pay the entire cost of the outfit. Write for booklet at once. Address

AMERICAN BOX BALL CO., 1909 Van Buren Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, September 3d

HIS TWO CHILDREN

Dramatic | Code Word, Retain | Approx. Length 1,000 ft.

The New York Motion Picture Company here presents another stirring dramatic production, based on the ups and downs of a thespian's life, perfectly acted by artists of sterling worth, and the most fastidious will see its merit.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

Gaumont

First Airships Crossing English Channel

Gaumont

(Gaumont Release September 7th).

This unique Motion Picture Film, consisting of both the Bleriot and Latham flights, marks a period in the World's History.

No longer is the science of Aviation a theory. Bleriot has proved to the World that it is almost as simple a matter to travel from one country to another, crossing intervening seas, as it is to make the same trip by steamship. The Firm of Gaumont, represented in the United States by George Kleine, has been exceedingly fortunate in securing excellent Films of both Bleriot's successful flight from France to England, as also Latham's attempt to make the same flight some days previously.

Latham is seen in his experiments, and his start for Dover from Calais. As is known, he fell in the sea, and the next views show his return to Calais in the French torpedo boat which picked him up, and then the tug bringing in the wrecked aeroplane, which is seen from different positions, with Latham dressed in the clothes loaned by a sailor. Then follow the first trials of Bleriot at Issy-Moulineaux, near Paris; his flight near Calais, and then his departure across the Channel on Sunday last. These views were taken at 4:30 a. m., and are a splendid piece of photographic art.

George Kleine

Importer of Gaumont and Urban-Eclipse Films

52 State St., Chicago, Ill. 19 East 21st Street, New York

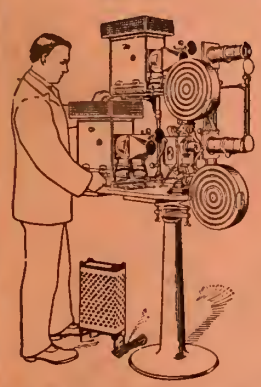
Vol. 5., No. 11. September 11, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WHICH IS INCORPORATED WITH THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.
F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."
F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes, but none to compare with Motiograph.—

PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light
Write for Catalog today

Calcium Gas Outfit

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

The Eagle Film Exchange

We have the INDEPENDENT goods for the hot Summer weather. Write us and we will tell you all about it.

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarc

Branches: { MAUCH CHUNK, PA., Oscar Bittner, Mgr.
BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY,
Builder's Exchange Bldg., Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

143 N. 8th Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A WORD TO THE WISE

Successful Moving Picture Exhibitors Use

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

The best results with alternating current are obtained with

POWER'S INDUCTOR

SEND FOR CATALOGUE G AND CIRCULAR A

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, New York

For Two Years the Standard

"CURTAINYLINE"

The only absolutely fire-proof curtain paint on the market. When such exhibitors as the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, Geo. H. Hines' "Senate Theatre," Thompson's "Pastime" and all the high-class moving picture houses in Chicago and throughout the country use Curtainyline in preference to any other paint on their curtains, certainly this is proof sufficient that Curtainyline will do all we claim for it. :: ::

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE

Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $3.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock.

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

Curtainyline Curtain & Producing Co., Inc.

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill.

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles. We make all kinds of Special Announcement and Advertisement Slides.

Write for our list and prices.

New Process Film Title Company

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

Made in France
1909 Model
PATHÉ
PROFESSIONAL

COMPLETE OUTFIT, $225.00

Built for long wear.

Approved by the New York board of fire underwriters.

For sale by all leading film exchanges.

PATHÉ FRERES

NEW YORK
41 West 25th St.

CHICAGO
35 Randolph St.

NEW ORLEANS, 813 Union St.

If you are satisfied with your present receipts don't write us.

But if you wish to Increase your Profits

Get our Latest Money-Making Proposition

Particulars mailed free to all interested

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY
221 East 53rd St., New York City

SONG SLIDES

The clearest and best colored slides on the market

$4.00

per set, cash with order or will send C. O. D.

"Singing Bird"

The greatest song success of the season

Published by
JOSEPH MORRIS COMPANY
Philadelphia

Every Slide a Winner

Made exclusively by

The Premo Co.
934 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Box Ball Doubles the Profits of Your Theatre

$800 a Month With No Expense But Rent!

Moving picture shows pay out big money every week for employes, song slides and film rental. But Box Ball is a business that often brings in $200 in six days, yet has absolutely no expense but rent. One customer with four alleys took in $1,845.20 in 59 days.

Customers who spend only five cents in the theatre spend more than a dollar at Box Ball. Crowds are quickly fascinated with this new game. They never tire—the more they play the more they want to keep on playing. No one wants to quit loser, so he plays game after game—often spending hours when he first intended to spend a few minutes.

When the crowds are in your theatre give them free tickets for the first game. Every one will play at least once and many will become regular customers. Women and children play as well as men—they form teams and clubs and often spend a whole afternoon or evening.

Install one of these money-making games in connection with your theatre. Rent the room above or get the store next door. Put in two or more alleys and you will be simply amazed at the wonderful profits.

Your only expense will be rent. Players set the pins with a lever and the balls are automatically retnrned. One man to collect the money is all you need, and he can care for as many as ten alleys.

One game usually lasts six minntes with two players. At 5 cents each that's $1.00 an hour from every alley—you can figure the profit yourself. With ten hours' play two alleys will bring you $20 a day, or $120 every six days.

Send for our free booklet and learn how yon can own one of these great money-making games for only a few dollars down and the balance payable from yonr profits. Remember—you pay just a few dollars down, and yonr profits the very first month should more than pay the entire cost of the outfit. Write for booklet at once. Address

AMERICAN BOX BALL CO., 1910 Van Buren Street, Indianapolis, Ind.

YOU CAN INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

If You Are Open To Conviction

The Manager who is alive to conditions and will cater to the wants of his patronage has success at his finger ends. There is but one conclusion—

Install Our Premier Service

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio. Omaha, Neb.

WANTED

5000 Theatre Owners and Managers to hook up with our Illustrated Song Slide Service, it gets the business, increases box office receipts and naturally swells your Bank Account. Try it.

OURS ARE

The best Slides Camera and Brush will produce. Beautifully Hand Colored by skilled Artists and our sets are complete from Title Slides to Chorus. 2 copies of music with each set. Ship your full week's supply in one consignment. We do this all for you at the very small rental of 50c per set per week. A trial order is all we ask. Our service will do the rest.

Disc and Cylinder Records Furnished

Chicago Song Slide Exchange

9th Floor Masonic Temple :: Chicago, Ills.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

Tuesday, September 7th

THE FISHERMAN

A tragic tale rich in tense dramatic situation and presenting a series of exceptionally beautiful marine views. An old fisherman and his son set out on a fishing trip in spite of an approaching storm. A squall upsets the tiny craft, and the boy is washed beyond his father's reach, disappearing in the thick mist of rain. The old man clings to the keel of the overturned boat until rescued by his brave wife, who faces the danger of the sea alone, impelled by a foreboding of disaster. They return to their humble cottage, lamenting the loss of their child, when two fisherman are seen approaching bearing the body of the boy. There is still a spark of life in the inanimate body, and hard work snatches him from the gates of death. Length, 450 feet.

HE TRIED ON HAND CUFFS

An hour before the ceremony the expectant bridegroom is reminded that he has forgotten the license. He rushes off to the City Hall to obtain the important document, and while waiting for the form to be filled in curiously examines a pair of handcuffs the sheriff has laid upon the desk. He accidentally snaps these upon his wrist, but cannot wait the sheriff's return to obtain his release and starts for the church, being arrested as an escaping prisoner just as he reaches the church door after a series of exciting experiences. At the police station explanations are made, the sheriff arrives with the key to the cuffs and the ceremony is performed without further delay. A lively and laughable comedy subject, and a sure winner. Length, 564 feet.

Saturday, September 11th

AN ALPINE ECHO

Antoine lives with his grandfather in the Swiss Alps. An avalanche destroys the home of a neighbor and kills the parents of little Lena, who is adopted by the old woodcarver. She and Antoine grow up together and their affection ripens into love. Antoine acts as a guide in the tourist season and becomes enamoured of a pretty American flirt, who encourages him in his madness. He follows her to America, but she does not even recall the man until reminded of the incident, and she orders him from her house. Antoine procures a situation with a woodcarver, following the old trade, and one day he hears the song of the Alps that was played by the handsome music box that was his grandfather's greatest treasure. The melody conjures up visions of the far-off home, and when he finds that it is the same music box, sold to his employer by Lena, who has come to America in search of him, and who has been reduced to selling the cherished possession, they are once more united and the benevolent employer presents them the beloved music box as a wedding gift. A dainty romance told amid picturesque scenes by a thoroughly competent cast. The picture of the avalanche is a decided novelty in motion photography. Length, 990 feet.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA

NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St.
CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St.
LONDON, 25 Cecil Court
PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

The Exhibit.

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company, 125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative, 913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill. Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 SEPTEMBER 11, 1909 No. 11

Editorial.

The many readers of the Moving Picture World who have favored us with letters of appreciation will please accept this public acknowledgment of our thanks. Those who have kindly offered suggestions will see them carried out in due course. Many new features of interest are in store which we think will make the World still more valuable to the trade at large. No doubt these innovations will be copied by other papers, as they have done our printing of the "Stories of the Films," the chronological listing of the "Latest Films," our form of the "Week's Program at a Glance," the "Comments on the Films of the Week," the condensed "Notes of the Trade," etc., etc. If "imitation is the sincerest flattery," we certainly should feel flattered by the promptitude with which every idea which we have originated has been copied. Our contemporaries who have thus endeavored to make their pages of more interest deserve our thanks for such acknowledgment that the Moving Picture World is the leading journal of the trade.

* * *

Last week we commented on a film of peculiar interest which will be issued by the Film Import and Trading Co. some time this month. In favorably commenting on the film it was not without misgiving, as "The Bull Fight" belongs to a class of films that we would rather not see. When shown the sample print, we said to the importer: "We do not think you should issue this film, but, if you do, let it go as it is. Do not cut out any of the horrible details. It is possible that the exhibition of this film in civilized countries may lead to a protest by the nations against this national sport of the semi-barbaric Spaniard." The wanton disembowelling of blindfolded horses upon the horns of the infuriated bull is so graphically shown in this film that we again refer to it for the purpose of warning exhibitors to post a notice in their lobbies to the effect that ladies enter at their own risk; and children should not be admitted.

J. J. Murdock is quoted in his paper as saying: "With the opening of the season a new era in the moving picture business will be ushered in. . . . The days of the faker, wild catter, duper and all-around so-called Independent film cheater are drawing to a close." Now, Mr. Murdock has always been regarded as a shrewd, far-seeing man, and this quotation which we have selected as the most important from his statement really comes as a note of warning to certain people to make their exit from the moving picture game before the tidal wave of reform strikes them. We say this in all seriousness, because we do not like to see anyone suffer. Already a few ex et al. have gone back to their former vocations and others are looking for opportunities to close out. This word of warning from Mr. Murdock shows his chivalrous nature, and as the Moving Picture World is shoulder to shoulder with him and all others who have at heart the placing of the moving picture business on a higher plane, we echo his note of warning. The wise will take heed—the erring mend their ways, or vamoose.

At the close of the Summer season it is most encouraging to record that the volume of business on the part of both the licensed and independent manufacturers has shown steady increase. Those who are on the inside claim that the independents have made more proportionate progress, which is encouraging—for them. There is, however, little hope to offer new manufacturers. The licensed fold is closed. The independent field is amply covered. There is no other opening except in specialization. This has been successfully tried by the Exclusive Film Co., of Chicago, who offer a continuous service to any one exhibitor in a town, of films which have never been exhibited before in this country. The Cinephone talking and singing pictures is another special line offered in territorial rights to exchanges and bids fair to be a welcome addition to the show. The new model Cinephone that is now ready for the market is so great an advance on the early attempts at talking pictures that they do not belong in the same class. Simplicity and perfection sums up the new Cinephone, and the exchange which secures territorial rights will have a good thing. The season now opening will be a prosperous one for the showman who gives a clean and up-to-date show of either licensed or independent film. The exclusive show will also prosper, and the travel shows such as Howe's and Craerin's illustrated travel talks. Outside of these there is no room and no opportunity for anyone to make money at the game, as the public taste is now so educated to good pictures and clean surroundings that the small piker stands no chance.

The location of the Great Northern Film Company at the landing place of the now famous discoverer of the North Pole gave them the opportunity of preparing a film showing Dr. Cook's landing at Copenhagen and the celebrations. The film will be in this country next week and will no doubt be very interesting.

Next week we will give the first chapter of the series of articles on the conduct of the modern moving picture theater, of which we gave an introduction last week. Pressure on our space compelled us to hold over this and other important matter which will also appear.

The Supreme Court has denied the injunction asked for by Jack Binns against the Vitagraph Company. In his opinion Justice Brady says: "In this case it appears that the demand for films of pictures of current events abates very soon after the event and that there is now very little demand for the films containing plaintiff's alleged portrait and his name. Practically all the injury which plaintiff suffered from the use of his portrait and name is passed. Motion denied without costs."

The Largest German Ocean Liner.

How we made a Motion Picture of the "George Washington."

By Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S.

Many a time and oft have I cast an envious eye on a trim little ship which is seen and admired by countless thousands who take the ferry to and from Staten Island, or whom other business leads down to the historic, the fascinating and always exciting Battery. To my mind there is no more interesting spot on earth than that little tongue of land which projects, as it were, into the inner waters of the Atlantic Ocean. Behind you are those vast piles of skyscrapers, monuments to the constructive ingenuity of American architects, seething hives of business, finance, industry—everything that goes to make up the sum of human struggling, human ambition, and human achievement.

It is said, I know not with what truth, although it is probably near the mark, that this little tongue of land up to the Post-office, is the most valuable piece of the earth's surface, and that during the day it harbors a greater number of human souls than any other equal sized spot on the face of the globe. I can quite believe it. So that whenever I take me down to the Battery for a breath of fresh air, it is with a consciousness that there lies behind me a vast and unequalled conglomeration of struggling humanity, all fighting the daily battle of life.

And before me stretches the incomparable panorama of the bay, the surface of whose waters carries the biggest ships in the world, a ceaseless, never ending fleet of the leviathans of commerce coming from and going to all parts of the globe. Then there is the life of the ferry, Uncle Sam's warships, pleasure craft, strings of railroad cars, and a thousand and one other marine incidents which please the eye, distract the tired mind and constitute all through a living, palpitating, moving panorama upon which I, for one, am never tired of looking. And then the magically pure and invigorating air which sweeps up the bay from the Atlantic Ocean! How reviving, how stimulating, how cooling it is after the hot, oven-like breath of the city!

Time after time that I have enjoyed this, I have found myself watching the trim little "Owlet" steam out into the bay in search of news. And I have wanted to be on that ship; to feel what it feels to be like to board an Atlantic liner; to cross-question home-coming magnates such as Edward Harriman or John D. Archbold; to tell the readers of my paper what the great man said, or what he did not say, or what I made him say, or what he thought he said. It does not matter what, so long as you get the story. For the "Owlet" is the "New York Herald" news boat, familiar by sight to hundreds of thousands, familiar by its work to millions.

Well, Providence at last was kind to me, and by the good offices of Mr. R. G. Craerin, of Travel Talk fame, I got the opportunity I wanted last Sunday afternoon. For Craerin, full of enthusiasm for moving picture work of the best kind, fresh from his triumphs with the moving picture camera over the Cunard flyer, the "Mauretania," had decided to make a film of the largest and newest North German Lloyd liner, the "George Washington." So we all boarded the "Owlet": Craerin and his magnificent moving picture camera, mounted on a tripod that looked about as steady as the rock of Gibraltar; the operator; myself with two snapshot cameras; Mr. Ewan Justice, representing the North German Lloyd Company, and "Judge" Smith, representing the "New York Herald."

Off we shot into the bay, an alert and an interested party. The sporty little ship played jokes with the waves, for there are waves within rifle-shot of the Battery, and some of us, myself in particular, had difficulty in finding our sea legs. I snapshotted those skyscrapers from a variety of angles. Past Governor's Island, with the "Judge" entertaining us with reminiscences of adventures on incoming liners. Greetings are exchanged with passing craft, for everybody knows the "Owlet," which dips and lurches so professionally that only a seasoned veteran like the "Judge" can keep a perfect equipoise without effort.

Down we skim toward "Quarantine" at a good clip, in a champagne-like atmosphere, a bright sun overhead, with all the excitement of strong anticipation, for we are certainly about to attempt a big thing. At last the mammoth hull of the "George Washington" is seen looming through the sunlight against the shadowy green of "Quarantine," and then only a few minutes pass ere we make her towering stem. Now is the time for Craerin to get busy. The operator takes his position behind the gun. The course of the "Owlet" is entirely at the disposal of Craerin, the captain being agreeable to maneuver her just as the photographer wishes. Then, as we come broadside, the film in the camera is set in motion, and we pass slowly by the great two-funneled fortress with its thousands of faces peering down at us from the decks. The revenue boat, the doctor's boat and other similar vessels skirmish in the shadow of this steel monster from Bremen. Down we glide to her stern, entirely encircling her. The course of the "Owlet" is altered just as occasion demands. Smith and Justice leave for the revenue cutter, and groups are taken of them in the moving picture camera. I get busy with my snapshots. Finally, when all is done that can be done to the arrested monster, we forge a little ahead, making for Hoboken.

Now comes the most absorbing sight of all. The "George Washington" gets under way and majestically steams for her pier. We have reached the most exciting work of the day. The camera is pointed to the oncoming liner, looming vastly, grandly, majestically in our wake, proudly defiant, as it were, of the little ship, whereon the photographic records of her vast bulk are being made. The smoke curls lazily out of her lofty stacks and she makes a magnificent picture, as the hundreds, if not thousands, of immigrants crowd to her sides, cheer us and wave their handkerchiefs at us. Intense excitement is thick around us. Craerin is like a general directing the movements of his machine, for he feels, I feel, we all feel, that this is a moment of sharp emotion, big with possibilities in the way of moving picture making. Surely nothing can be more fascinating to look upon than the moving picture of a mighty Atlantic liner, speeding to her berth after seven days' strenuous conflict with the great Atlantic Ocean.

So in due time all the film is wound off, and the liner grandly passes us. We follow in her wake to her pier in Hoboken and a final moving picture is made of the staunch little "Owlet" as she maneuvers out into the stream and heads in for the pier, whilst the "George Washington" is slowly forced into her berth by impertinent, puffing tugs, which look like nothing so much as little insects buzzing round a recumbent lion.

Thus ends a splendid afternoon, full of the realest sport, animation, excitement, health-giving ozone and the consciousness of having participated in a notable attempt to record by motion picture photography the incoming of the latest, proudest and largest addition to the magnificent transatlantic fleet of the North German Lloyd Company.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

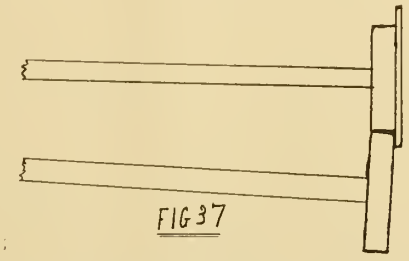
F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

CHAPTER XVI.

MACHINE HEADS.

It was the original intention of the writer to give detailed instructions for the adjustment of each make of machine. In looking over the field, however, this is deemed to be impractical. Not only are there many makes of machines, but nearly every one has two or more models, and to cover them all would take up an immense amount of space. Instead, therefore, I have concluded to give general instructions which will cover the essential adjustments of all but one machine, touching somewhat, however, on each one individually, in so far as the model most in use is concerned. The one exception is the Motiograph. This machine is of such radically different construction from anything else on the market that I feel it necessary to include detailed instruction concerning it. One thing in particular which equally applies to all machines is, keep them clean. This is not much of a task if the head be wiped off each day, and there is nothing looks more slouchy than a machine head covered with gum, oil and dirt. "Cleanliness is next to godliness," and it applies here as elsewhere. As to oil: Any good grade of medium oil that will not gum is suitable for a machine, but cheap oils should by all means be avoided, since they are diluted with kerosene. There is no motion picture machine bearing which is not adequately lubricated with one drop of oil. More than this is too much and will just run, or be thrown off, making a dirty mess and perhaps injuring the film. A drop of oil doesn't look like much, true, but it will cover more surface than you may imagine, and once a bearing is covered with oil an additional gallon would not make it run one whit better. Some operators wash out the bearings once in a while with gasoline. This does no harm and may do some good, although the writer thinks the benefit derived is largely imaginary, unless a gummy oil is being used. To do this, just run the machine slowly while you flood the bearings with gasoline from an ordinary oil can, continuing until the bearings are thoroughly washed out. A piece of old Turkish towel is ideal to clean a machine head with, as it can be drawn into the crevices and gathers all the oil and dirt.

Of intermittent mechanisms there are two types, viz.: the cam and star and the cam and pawl, the latter being commonly known as the "finger feed." It is not the purpose of this work to discuss the relative merits of the two methods of moving the film, but merely to give necessary instructions for their adjustment. The adjustment of the Power's, Edison and American intermittent movements are practically the same, so that one instruction will do for all. It is of the utmost importance that there be absolutely no lost motion between the star and cam, while at the same time there must be absolutely no binding. The adjustment to eliminate lost motion between the star and cam is a very simple operation, but few there are who make it right. The cam shaft of the machines named all run in bronze metal bushings, which may be removed and renewed, and they should be just as soon as they become worn. The operation is too simple to require much explanation. To renew the old one, loosen the set-screw which holds the bushing and slip it (the bushing) out and the new one in. With the Edison machine it is best to first remove the gears, so that you may readily get at it. The one on the left-hand end is more difficult, especially in the Power's, since the shaft must be taken out, but even this is readily done. Just examine the mechanism closely before you begin and you will be able to see how it is done. Right here let me caution you. Don't imagine you are working on a freight-car or a locomotive. Don't go at it with a four-pound hammer, a Stillson wrench and a cold chisel. If something sticks a little, have a little patience and remember that your getting mad at it won't help to any appreciable extent. You may feel like going after it with an axe, but while that might cool your temper down it won't improve matters a particle and will probably make them considerably worse. You are working with a delicate piece of machinery and you must proceed gently, else, instead of repairing, you will do precisely the opposite. Motion picture machine parts are accurately made, and if something doesn't come out readily you can pretty near gamble it is for the reason that you are not going about it right. Of course, it may be necessary to use a punch and tap a boxing or shaft lightly, but in such cases one should use a soft steel or brass punch or a piece of hardwood. Be very chary about using a tempered punch except for very light tapping. The start shaft runs in bronze metal bushings also, but the holes in these bushings are not central. They are what are called "eccentric bushings," and turning them slightly has the effect of raising or lowering the star shaft in relation to the cam shaft, thus tightening or loosening the star in relation to the cam. Now in making this adjustment it is absolutely essential that the star shaft be kept exactly parallel with the cam shaft, and right here is where all but the very best operators fall down. If one bushing be turned more than the other a condition, or its exact reverse, such as is shown in Fig. 37, is produced, though in the picture it is exaggerated.



To take up lost motion between the star and cam, loosen the set-screws which hold the bushings. These screws will be found in the face of the casting opposite the bushings. Now, with a screwdriver, turn the bushings until there is no lost motion in the star when the cam pin is clear of the star slot. But be very sure to turn both bushings exactly the same amount. There are several ways of knowing when you have turned the bushings the same, but the three I shall name are simple enough for anyone to carry out successfully. One is to lay a straight-edge across the end of each bushing and with the point of a knife blade make a scratch-mark at one edge of each bushing, extending it on to the frame, as per Fig. 38. When the bushing is turned the marks will, of course, separate, and with a machinist's steel rule, using a condenser lens for magnifying, you may easily measure just how much you have turned each bushing, or you can, after making the scratch-mark, set an ordinary carpenter's compass open about half an inch and setting one point on the scratch-mark at edge of bushing, make a mark on the casting wherever the other compass point comes. Now by using this latter mark you can tell with the compass when you have turned each bushing the same. Another and better method is to have a pair of small, inside calipers, calipering the distance between the two shafts as near their ends, inside the bearings, as you can get. It will require some little ingenuity to do this, as the shafts are not the same size throughout their length; by calipering the shafts before moving the bushings, marking the measure of each caliper and then measuring for the same increase of measure at each end, you will get it right, assuming that the shafts were parallel to start with. But the best way of all is to make a tool like Fig. 39. It is a half-inch square piece of iron with two screwdriver points held in place by set-screws. With this tool you will move both bushings precisely the same if you are at all careful. If you produce a condition such as is shown in Fig. 37 you will wear both the cam and star face on a bevel as well as cutting the side of the cam, star, star slot and cam pin. You may say, "Oh, it won't be enough to amount to much," but I say to you, there is where you are much mistaken. So rapid and accurate must be the work of the star and cam that they must be absolutely mechanically correct, and this is impossible under the condition shown in Fig. 37. The time is at hand when the best possible results are going to be demanded of the operator. The "picture as steady as a rock house" will be an actuality in the near future, and the operator is going to be expected to produce it. This he cannot do unless his intermittent movement, at least, is in perfect adjustment and condition. The haphazard, "guess-at-it" adjustment of machine mechanism must be abandoned and accuracy substituted instead.

The American machine bushings are a little different from the Power's and Edison in that they are longer and are turned by inserting a pin in holes in their sides. Also they are clamped by short bars instead of by set-screws. Their action is precisely the same, however. The motiograph star movement will be dealt with further on.

The star, the pin of the cam and the intermittent sprocket, especially the first and last named, should be watched and promptly renewed when there are signs of serious wear. In the nature of things, the thicker the star is, other things being equal, the longer it will wear, but as soon as the points wear sharp or the slots are loose on a new cam-pin the star should be renewed. The spurs on the intermittent sprocket wear faster than is imagined, and worn sprockets are responsible for much mischief. Examine these spurs occasionally, looking at them carefully, and if one side—the side bearing on the film—is worn concave the sprocket should be promptly renewed. With the finger feed machine the film gradually cuts a slight groove on the under side of the pawls, or fingers. This is hard to detect by looking at the pawls while attached to the machine, and it causes a slight but constant vibration on the curtain. If there is such a vibration, remove the pawls and examine them, replacing with new ones if a groove is discovered. It doesn't have to be a deep groove to make mischief. Remember that every 1-1000 of an inch becomes noticeable when magnified on the curtain. The aperture plate is another thing to be closely watched. You must remember that a very slight variation of the film from the projection lens seriously affects the focus. With some machines using short, pliable tension springs the pressure of the short spring on the film wears a short depression in the aperture plate tracks. When the film passes through this depression, which is usually deepest in its center, there is a decided tendency to "cup," and in any event the entire picture is not exactly the same distance from the projection lens. This is bound, to some extent, to affect the focus. Worse than this, however, sometimes the springs wear one side of the track more than the other or wear depressions at either end of the springs with a hump in the middle. This will cup the film every time, and, if it is bad, affect the focus very much. Plates worn thus should be replaced immediately. In threading, the operator should make it an invariable practice to run his finger around the edge of aperture. Dirt and dust will collect, and a grain of dust the size of the head of a pin will look like a cobblestone on the curtain. A picture fringed with ragged edges caused by dirt in the operator is a standing advertisement of the carelessness or incompetency, or both, of the operator in charge.

(To be continued.)

Evansville, Ind.—John S. Weber is erecting a new moving picture theater on Fulton avenue.

Shelby, Neb.—Jack Rathbun has opened a new moving picture theater.

Decatur, Ill.—John Borden, of this city, has decided to go to Springfield, Mo., and open a moving picture theater in that city.

Geneva, Ill.—Philip Martell, owner of the moving picture theater in the Fargo Building, is making preparation to remodel the building and make extensive improvements.

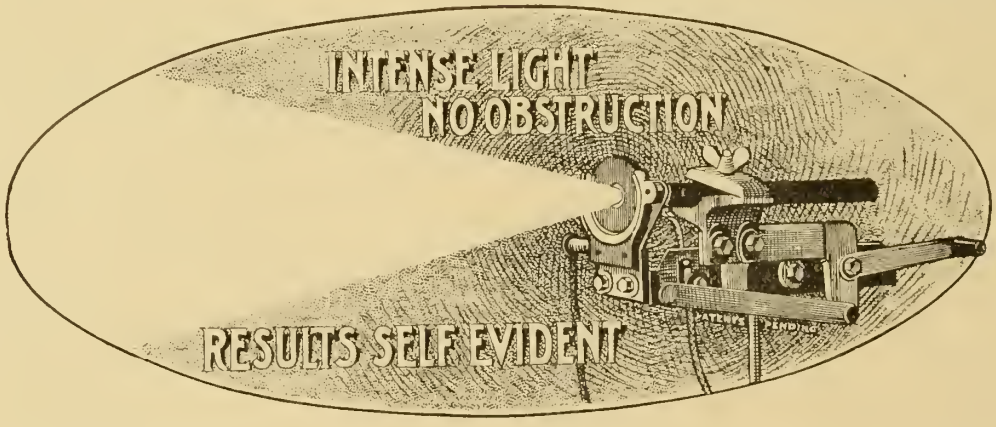
Buffalo, N. Y.—George D. Curtis, owner of the Happy Hour picture theater on St. Paul street, has filed a petition in bankruptcy.

Sedalia, Mo.—Frank Bailey, owner of the Electric Theater, corner of Second and Third streets, has made extensive improvements.

Baker City, Ore.—Wm. Merriman, of North Yakima, Wash., has purchased the Dreamland Theater here, and has taken possession.

"The Bioscope" Annual and Diary for 1909, published by our London contemporary, at 31 Litchfield street, Charing Cross Road, London, is no doubt a useful book to those in the moving picture business on the other side. It has a list of all the cities with moving picture theaters, population and capacity of the hall. There are also lists of companies, a complete directory of the trade, patent and other information, diary spaces interleaved with blotting and a great deal of other matter liable to be valuable to persons doing business in England.

Mr. Carl Bitzer, who conducts a moving picture theater at Sandusky, Ohio, has installed one of the "Hallberg 550-Volt Direct Current Economizers." This machine is a duplicate of the one which was installed about eight months ago for Mr. Charles Reark, proprietor of The Theatorium, Sandusky, Ohio. The saving guaranteed is about 85 per cent., as compared with rheostat control, and the quality of the light is also improved, and there is no heat, as no rheostat is required. Managers and operators on direct current have been looking for a reliable current-saver. The "Hallberg" Economizer is made for all voltages and lamp combinations. When inquiring for price, state voltage, as well as the distance from lens to screen, and the size of the picture should be specified.



TRADE NOTES.

Augusta, Ga.—Jake Wells is making arrangements to open a new vaudeville theater here, which will be known as the Bijou.

Albia, Ia.—Herman & Priesman, of Red Oak, Ia., are making arrangements to erect a vaudeville and moving picture theater.

Ainsworth, Ia.—A. Stapleton has opened a new moving picture theater.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Fred Becher has purchased the interest of Maurice Jenks in the New Theater here.

Pekin, Ill.—Mr. McClelland is making arrangements to reopen the Dreamland Moving Picture Theater here.

Ottawa, Kan.—J. A. Miler has purchased the interest of A. E. Carpenter in the Airdome Theater and has taken possession of it.

Springfield, Mo.—George F. Olendorf is planning to erect a moving picture theater on Commercial street.

Cincinnati, Ohio.—Mrs. B. Verkamp is contemplating the erection of a moving picture theater at East Walnut Hills.

Germantown, Pa.—Dr. Walter C. Stemping will erect a large vaudeville and moving picture theater here. He proposes to expend about $50,000.

THE FUNNEL ARC BURNER.

In the illustration above is shown an entirely new style of burner for moving picture machines. With this style of burner all the light from crater is thrown on screen through the hole in disc carbon, the crater being formed and maintained on point of pencil carbon through the use of a carbon in form of a disc with a hole or opening centrally located. As there are no carbons to obstruct the light and as the crater is always pointing horizontally towards the screen, it is claimed that fully 40 per cent. more light can be obtained than when using two regular pencil carbons. It is built of the very best materials and a two-year guarantee against imperfections in workmanship or material is furnished with each burner. All connections are made to solid parts, thus making it impossible to short-circuit burner. The burner is manufactured and sold exclusively by The Denison Mfg. Co., Warren, Ohio, and they wish us to call attention to their introductory offer of the first 2,000 burners at half-price, as when these are sold the price will be doubled, and as they do not wish anyone to be disappointed later, have requested us to mention this. We have a letter from the manager of the Luna Theater, Girard, Ohio, warmly endorsing the Funnel Arc Burner.

Observations by Our Man About Town.

Nothing helps to build up the prestige of a paper, whether it be a news or trade publication, than the publishing of articles which carry with them an evident endeavor on the part of the publisher, or editor, to get at the true facts of a matter. Some over-zealous writers, particularly those who are continually reaching for prestige with a stretch that is moved by selfish disregard of sentiment, do great harm to journalism in all its branches. It sows a seed of mistrust that the most conscientious writer finds very difficult to dislodge. These reflections are due to a case of "eating crow" by a moving picture trade publication—and a most humble eating it was, too. Week before last the publication referred to a project of a New York concern in an editorial manner, advising film exchanges "to look twice at their money before spending it on such harebrained schemes" and adding the declaration, "We would sooner throw in our lot with the M. P. P. Co. than be drawn into such a fiasco." This is pretty strong language, such as would lead those to whom it was directed to suppose and believe that the editor who penned it was well fortified with facts gleaned by careful, personal investigation. But—will you believe it?—in last week's issue of the same publication the editor says he was in "error" regarding the matter. He says somebody gave him figures and he was assured they were entirely correct, but he learned after that "it ought to be the most profitable proposition ever put before the film renters" and "instead of taking money from the renters' pockets would very largely replenish the coffers of any film renters in the business." Such diverse expressions of editorial views are disgusting. The apology offered is both the most humble and nonsensical of the times in journalistic work. A man who is willing to unreservedly acknowledge a fault or mistake deserves credit, but widespread as the newspaper writer may make such an acknowledgment, he cannot blot the scar that is left by neglect to get at the truth. Reporters are very frequently imposed upon and the transgressions made in news columns are frequently overlooked on that score, but when a man who edits a paper accepts statements from another and without trying to investigate them as to accuracy becomes the spokesman of the sentiment, it is about time he vacated his chair.

* * *

Well, September is here. Any improvement in business? Are the manufacturers producing more pictures? Have the exchanges secured more customers? Is there a big increase in the number of exhibition places? These three questions can be answered in two words, "Not yet." To these may be added, "but soon," and to put on another extension, "none too soon." September has been awaited with impatience and anxiety in many quarters. The exhibitors who closed their places in the cities and towns and had no locations at the Summer resorts have been awaiting the coming September with suppressed emotion several weeks. Now that it has arrived they are in a measure relieved. You will note the statement "in a measure." The turn for the better is slow to date. The weather is not just the thing yet. In this city there have been numerous reopenings during the past week. There has really been no business, as the term is generally accepted, but everybody is hopeful. This city will probably be the last to feel the return of business for two reasons: First, the Mardi Gras week at Coney Island will be a big drawing card. If it does not pull the people from the picture houses in Manhattan and Brooklyn, it will certainly do something to the picture houses on the Island. And then, the next week, the Hudson-Fulton Celebration starts. The latter, of course, will be an attraction of far greater magnitude than the other, but the pictures will have no easy running until both have closed, so that picture men must not blame the pictures, the weather or the people if business is not good in Greater New York during the first month of the season. Visitors brought to the city by the big event may patronize the houses liberally, but the conservative men in the business fix the second or third week of October as the true start of the predicted revival.

* * *

The announcement that Dwight McDonald, Esq., had tendered his resignation as general manager of the Motion Picture Patents Company came as a thunderbolt to many. It may be said that it was wholly unlooked for by the trade. It is known, however, that several weeks ago Mr. McDonald stated that his mission as organizer and systematizer of the Patents Company office had been fulfilled and he felt that the time was near at hand when he could gracefully give up his office and resume his practice at law, which would be far more remunerative than his position with the Patents Company. The statement is a plausible one and discounts to no little extent the rumors that have been set afloat that the resignation was due to internal dissensions and a spirit of antagonism that is said to have existed against Mr. McDonald among the film exchanges of the West. Whatever truth may be behind these rumors there can be no doubt that when the Patents Company started out Mr. McDonald's position as its general manager was a most unenviable one. It is safe to say that among the film exchange men and the exhibitors there were few at that time who mentioned his name with respect. The two dollar license fee was looked upon as his creation, he was called a tyrant and the champion of aggrandizement. If half of what was said of him reached his ears and he is at all sentimental he must have lost a great amount of sleep. Whether he did or not, he always "came up smiling." It is not intended here to make a hero of "Mac," as he is familiarly called by many picture people, but to accede to him that to which he is entitled. His position in the Patents Company was one which naturally, in some way or another, engendered hostility to his actions or motives. It was an administrative position which required at times qualities that Mr. McDonald demonstrated he possessed. No one in an administrative position, outside of, possibly, Solomon, has satisfied everybody all the time, and there is even a suspicion connected with Solomon's record on that score. Of course "Mac" was not Solomon, nor was he Job, but I have been in his office when I could plainly see that he wished he had the latter's patience. As the score board reads there were no rumors in advance that Mr. McDonald would soon relinquish his duties as general manager involuntarily; his resignation was not asked for; the acceptance of his resignation by the Patents Company is framed in terms of confidence and esteem; wherefore, then, has anyone the right to assume that what Mr. McDonald declares to be his reason for resigning is not true? All such insinuations appear to be not only uncalled for, but entirely unjust.

* * *

To the close observer it must be apparent that the affairs of the Motion Picture Patents Company have settled down to a routine basis. The business involved may now be termed as practically clerical—a matter of bookkeeping. All intricate problems can be handled as they have in the past by the legal departments associated with the company, so that the position held by Mr. McDonald really became superfluous. This is not said with any discredit to him, but in confirmation of a statement made by him several weeks ago that the routine of the business had been systematized and his mission had been fulfilled.

* * *

Intimations have been made from time to time in these columns that if those most interested did not put a little ginger in their movements the film exchanges as well as the exhibitors would receive a shock from the direct current of business. The same intimation is again made. During the past month or two some extraordinary steps have been taken by people engaged in the film rental business. It was thought at the outset that gradually the manufacturers would become, to an extent, direct renters to the exhibitors. Developmens of the past two months, however, show another condition of affairs. Film exchanges are extending their holdings of sites and arranging for shows that will ultimately cripple the smaller exhibitors in the vicinity of their houses. The plan that was adopted by the straight vaudeville houses several years ago in publishing a schedule of the appearance of each vaudeville act and the running of pictures has not been adopted by these new picture houses. It is an attractive scheme. Some of the schedules make one hesitate in speaking of the places. It is difficult to determine whether it is a picture of a vaudeville house. The vaudeville business has now been arranged so that the best of talent can now be secured by picture houses, especially those charging 10 and 15 cents. The close of the coming season will be awaited with great interest. The outlook appears to be this: There will be a large falling off in the number of exhibitors; those having the capital will practically be in competition with the film exchanges that are becoming direct exhibitors. Then comes the question: What will the manufacturers do? There cannot be the same number of large exhibition places as the existing number of small and large places, consequently the demand for subjects will drop. This view is not concurred in by some of the exchange-exhibitors, who claim that the greater the number of large exhibition houses the greater will be the demand for new subjects; only subjects fresh from the camera will satisfy the patrons. That may be so, too. Is there any line of business that presents more intricate problems, more varied forecasts and more new developments than the moving picture business?

ON THE SCREEN.

By "Lux Graphicus."

The September number of the Edison Kinetogram pleases me very much, for I perceive in it some distinct marks in the progress of moving picture making, which are entirely consonant with my view of how things should be. Readers of this column during the six or seven months of its appearance in the World, will bear me out when I say that I have strongly urged the employment of qualified writers for moving picture dramas, stories, etc. Over and over again I have protested against the practice of advertising for these things, on the ground that such a course only attracts the illiterate, the uninformed and the stupid; and that, therefore, the film makers cannot possibly get the best selection of work.

* * *

Then again I have protested against the absurdly low prices offered for film stories. I have pointed out that five or ten dollars cannot buy the best efforts of a man's brain. Since I started this crusade quite a change has come over the spirit of the scene. One film manufacturing company has engaged the services of a noted writer, and others show a distinct disposition to encourage the best talent instead of only the cheapest. In the last few months the days when the Clyde Fitches, the Augustus Thomases of the period will write for the moving picture stage have been brought appreciably nearer.

* * *

For this consummation most devoutly to be wished, the future historian of the moving picture will probably ascribe some credit to the Edison Company. I have read each of the three numbers of the Kinetogram with real pleasure. They show me that the company, or the officials down at Orange responsible for the publication, are thoroughly alive to the upward trend of matters. Each of the numbers contain something new, stimulating and fresh, and the September number to my mind, as I have already hinted, is not the least notable in its spirit of progressiveness.

* * *

The Kinetogram, in fact, is accentuating the revolution of the economics of the moving picture stage. Last month it told of the engagement of a celebrated actress, Cecil Spooner, by the Edison Company. Now we have an intimation that such gifted writers as Miss Carolyn Wells and Mr. W. E. Townsend are writing the stories. Page three of the Kinetogram of September gives the cast of characters of the play called "Ethel's Luncheon," written by Miss Wells. Page nine gives the cast of characters for a dramatic story by Mr. Townsend, entitled 'Little Sister." There are brief biographies of both writers in the bulletin. And from what I have read, much good work is expected from both of them in the future.

* * *

I shall look with the keenest interest to both these stories, which, for the first time in the history of the moving picture stage, are admittedly acknowledged to be by practiced dramatists and story writers, and I shall tell the readers of the World what I think of them. I am quite prepared to be agreeably impressed. Finished work, the work of a master, always impresses, no matter what its nature is.

* * *

Now where one company leads, others are sure to follow. The example set of engaging better talent is bound to be imitated if other manufacturers are determined to keep in the running. At the risk of wearying the reader with my views on this subject, I would like to quote from this column something I wrote on the subject of moving picture plays in March last. Here is what I said:

* * *

"But better times are surely at hand. The critical writers in the theatrical papers are saying unkind things about the silent plays and their producers. They are often plotless concoctions badly staged. They begin nowhere, and they finish in the same place. If you doubt me read The Dramatic Mirror and similar publications. Week by week they accuse moving picture producers of ignorance, ineptitude, and plagiarism. No business conducted on such lines can hope permanently to thrive and prosper. Its only hope lies in its intrinsic good qualities.

* * *

"Good writers, scenic artists, producers, and photographers are vital to the production of good moving photographs. Have we got them? An answer to this question lies buried in the criticisms that are printed weekly in this and other journals. Ten dollars WON'T, CAN'T buy a good moving picture play—nor even a good idea, sketch or scenario. People can dispose of their brain-work at more profitable rates. They can make more money out of starting a new religion, or peddling. Far easier work than 'writing for the stage.'"

* * *

The above did not please everybody. The gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue erroneously accused me of saying that film makers did not know a good story when they saw one; other persons murmured "sour grapes." But that I was right is proved by the fact that in the Kinetogram for August and September the Edison Company admit the necessity of employing none but the best talent for the writing part of the work, and they do themselves credit and set their competitors a lead by adding to their staff such gifted craft-people as Carolyn Wells and Edward W. Townsend. Decidedly the spirit of progress is in the air, and we may look, no doubt, for yet more important developments.

TRADE NOTES.

Levi & Co., incorporated, 24 Union Square, New York City, hand us their newest catalogue of perfection song slides. This is a list of 54 subjects which are popular with moving picture audiences and will no doubt meet with great success during the present season. Levi & Co. are laying themselves out to do thorough justice to the illustrated song slide, and their work shows continuous improvement.

The Golden Gate Film Exchange, San Francisco, Cal., is a new independent exchange which is handling new films not previously shown in San Francisco. They have arranged with the Crescent Amusement Company, of 30 East Twenty-third street, New York City, of which company Mr. Pease is manager, to represent them in the East as buying agents. They propose to release from 9 to 12 reels per week, and every picture sent from the East will previously be examined by Mr. Pease. Mr. Lesser, the proprietor of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, has been in the business for over two years, and has engaged the services of a manager who thoroughly understands the exchange business in all its branches. Mr. Lesser is at present in the East and is keeping an open eye for the latest novelties. His first purchase of film in New York City was 19,000 feet of film.

The Crescent Amusement Company, 30 East Twenty-third street, New York City, have been appointed Eastern purchasing agents for the Twentieth Century Optiscope Company (Chicago), the Ante-trust Film Company (Chicago) and the Michigan Film Exchange (Detroit).

In the review of a film elsewhere we allude to the fact that the Essanay Company have adopted the time honored name of "Jones" for their comedy characters, and we also point out that the Biograph Company have, we think, a prior right to the use of Jones. Now we perceive that our excellent friends, the Selig Polyscope Company, are also calling their comedy characters Jones. We venture to suggest a little alteration here. Let the Biograph Company stick to Jones, the Essanay Company take the name of Brown, and the Selig Company, Robinson or Smith. Then we shall not have confusion in regard to the names of the characters.

The latest addition to the brokerage branch of the trade is the International Film Company, who on Monday, the 23d inst., entered into this field. It is the intention of the International to conduct business along general brokerage lines, that of buying and selling films, machines and parts, tickets and general supplies. They are now settled down in their new quarters at 110 West Thirty-fourth street, and extend a cordial invitation to the trade to call on them.

Charleston, Ill.—Richter & Katz are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Allegan, Mich.—Will McClelland has bought the interest of his partner, Harry Kolloff, in the Star Theater and will continue the business alone.

Taylorville, Ill.—Dr. W. H. Hauser has sold the White Palace Moving Picture Theater to F. A. Rahmeyer, of Litchfield.

Baltimore, Md.—James W. Bowers was granted a permit to build an addition to the building, 932 West Baltimore street, and convert it into a moving picture theater.

IMPORTANT MEETING OF INDEPENDENT FILM RENTERS IN CHICAGO.

A meeting of the independent film renters, called by the Independent Film Renters' Protective Association, was held in Chicago, Thursday, August 26, at 6 o'clock p. m., in the offices of William H. Swanson & Co. Some thirty exchanges responded to the invitation. Temporary officers were elected: Max Lewis, of The Chicago Film Exchange, chairman; Maurice Fleckles, of Laemmle Film Service, treasurer, and T. E. Powers, of Columbia Film Service, secretary. The object of the meeting was to accomplish a general betterment of conditions of the trade and establish an organization with the purpose of supporting the manufacturing of American films. The trade demand American subjects and good American subjects and the organization would meet this demand. This fact had even been recognized by several outside parties who were willing to invest considerable capital providing a satisfactory guarantee would be given of co-operation from the independent film exchanges. A model plant of 20 acres was in prospect and no expense would be spared in order to secure an output equal, if not superior, to anything in the country. The aim of the meeting and purpose of the organization would be to place the independent films on a basis of quality above the average output of the trust.

The meeting formulated the plans of organizing a stock company, paid up capital at least $50,000, stock to be offered for sale by subscription among independent manufacturers, renters and exhibitors, limit of subscription $5,000 per individual. This organization, which will be called the United Film Manufacturing Company of Chicago, will promote the manufacturing of American independent films and projecting machines and absolutely guarantee a market for American films of quality. A board of censors will be appointed and every film approved by the board will be guaranteed a liberal sale. In this way a superior film supply would be guaranteed and the independent manufacturer would be in a better position to meet a heavy expense in order to secure a first-class film. He would also be compelled to use his best facilities in order to meet the requirements of the censor board, that would not accept anything but the very best. The meeting resolved to call a general convention on the 11th of September at the Sherman House, where the details and full plans of the proposition were going to be presented for a general assembly of the independent film renters all over the United States of America. A committee on by-laws was appointed, with W. H. Swanson, M. Fleckles and Luke H. Mithen as officers, to construct the plans of the meeting. An organization committee of ten was appointed to secure universal attendance of the convention. J. W. Morgan, of Joplin, Mo., was elected chairman. Thirty-five thousand dollars was subscribed on the floor and $1,000 was put aside as entertainment fund for the convention.

The Brayton Manufacturing Company, Chicago, report a growing demand for their high grade advertising slides from up-to-date exhibitors and merchants. The stock advertising slide so much used in the past, is being relegated to the junk heap and its place is being taken by the Brayton slide, made for each individual advertiser. No two of these slides are made exactly alike; therefore, two or more merchants selling the same line of merchandise may have slides entirely different in design and wording. The slides made by this company are cleverly designed and illustrated, therefore meeting with approval of both exhibitor and merchant, for in the first place the exhibitor must please his patron and this is impossible with poorly made slides, those with stock borders and stock phrases. Secondly, the advertiser is awake to the fact that if he wishes to impress the public favorably he must use a medium which pleases. The Brayton Manufacturing Company are working along these lines and are meeting with unusual success.

Hailey, Ida.—A. R. Kolls has sold his moving picture theater to W. A. Soule.

Saybrook, Ill.—J. C. Plasket has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Rock Port, Mo.—Rundle Brothers have opened a new moving picture theater in the Lewis Building.

Cairo, Mich.—Geo. W. Wilson has purchased the interest of Geo. Phelps in the Airdome Theater and is now in charge.

Saybrook, Ill.—Mr. Plasket, of Boswell, Ind., has opened a nickelodeon in the Grapes Building here.

Evansville, Ind.—Architects Willis & Ingle are preparing plans for the remodeling of the Colonial Theatorium, on Main street.

MAURICE FLECKLES,

General Manager of Laemmle Film Service.

The big working machinery of the Laemmle Film Service with numerous branches all over the United States of America, is now in the capable hands of Maurice Fleckles, representing Carl Laemmle during his travels in Europe. Mr. Fleckles is a fixture in the Laemmle Film Service and his association with the firm originated from the very day he and Carl Laemmle went out together to get a location for an office in Chicago. Being a man of exceptional ability and a most genial, pleasant personality, Mr. Fleckles has to great advantage held the position of general manager for the Laemmle amusement enterprises for a period of years. Previous to this position Mr. Fleckles had been for several years connected with various photographic and art societies and has a lifelong training in photography. Mr. Fleckles is an optimist and takes life from the rosy side. He always sees the humor of a thing when others despair. Always a genial smile, always a friendly shake—that's Maurice Fleckles. By the way, he is a brother-in-law of Carl Laemmle, and Carl Laemmle is no pessimist. Mr. and Mrs. Carl Laemmle are now in Wurtemberg, Germany, accompanied by Mrs. Fleckles, and enjoying "das alte Vaterland" very much.

MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' ASSOCIATION OF PENNSYLVANIA.

The regular stated meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania was held August 25, Odd Fellows' Temple, Broad and Cherry streets, with President Bennethum in the chair. The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved, after which several applications were read and acted upon. After the paying of dues and the transaction of all other business, there were several remarks and suggestions made for the good of the Association. The Association is rapidly increasing, taking in several new members at each meeting and receiving communications from exhibitors from all parts of the State with the assurance of their co-operation in any fight to adjust any unfair legislation which may affect their interests. The initiation fee is $10, and the dues 50 cents per week; $5 to accompany application, balance when elected a member. Application blanks will be forwarded to any exhibitor in Pennsylvania on request to secretary.

GEORGE H. ROTH,
Secretary.

818 West Erie Avenue,
Philadelphia, Pa.

Coming Headliners.

FIRST AIRSHIP CROSSING THE ENGLISH CHANNEL (Gaumont).

A film of unusual interest will, in a few days, be released by George Kleine—a Gaumont picture of Bleriot in his monoplane crossing the English Channel. On Sunday morning, July 25, the English Channel was crossed for the first time by a heavier than air machine sailed by M. Louis Bleriot, the well known French aviator.

Numerous other aeroplanes failed in the difficult task, among others Hubert Latham, who made two attempts in his monoplane Antoinette VI. and VII. In the first attempt the monoplane subsided into the water after some six miles out. The second attempt was more successful and the aviator almost reached the pier at Dover when his motor gave out and the machine was hurled into the ocean. Both times the Antoinette floated like a big seagull on the surface of the water and the daring aeronaut escaped with only a few bruises. The following cable was sent from a Paris correspondent, which gives a fair idea of the character of this remarkable picture:

"The firm of Gaumont has been extremely alert and enterprising in obtaining views of the recent first crossing of the English Channel by a flying machine, and has secured a couple of reels which are unique. Latham is seen in his experiments, and his start for Dover from Calais. As is known he fell in the sea, and the next views show his return to Calais in the French torpedo boat which picked him up, and then the tug bringing in the wrecked aeroplane, which is seen from different positions, with Latham dressed in the clothes loaned by a sailor. Then follow the first trials of Bleriot at Issy-Moulineaux, near Paris; his flight near Calais, and then his departure across the Channel on Sunday last. These views were taken at 4:30 a. m., and are a splendid piece of photographic art. They were on view in London on Monday night, so that Bleriot saw them himself at the Empire, where he was an honored guest. He returned to Paris on the Wednesday at 5 o'clock, and at 8:30 that same evening I witnessed a public show of the film describing his triumphant entry into that city. The reels have already been despatched to America."

THE GRAY DAME (Great Northern).

In taking up the strong vein of detective romances with which the name of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle is associated, the Great Northern Film Company show considerable shrewdness, for the doings of Sherlock Holmes and his miraculous success in unraveling apparently insoluble mysteries appear to have struck the imagination of the world, and especially the juveniles, for all time. Mention Sherlock Holmes and the mind instantly conjures up murder, mystery, confusion and finally happiness, due to the master mind of Baker street, London. We know Baker street, London. It is the home of many modern curiosities of intellect and Doyle wisely chose it as the home of his star detective. But to the splendid story illustrated in the latest Great Northern film: There is a legend in a noble English family, that when the Gray Dame, a respectable family ghost appears, then the eldest son of the house dies. This paves the way for an ingenious plot on the part of a visitor, who sees, it is to be supposed, early possession of the title and estate by the removal of father and son. Well, the Gray Dame appears, the lady of course being the conspirator, dressed up for the occasion. In this manner the death of the old lord is assured. Then the son is similarly attacked by this Gray Dame, who has discovered secret doors in the castle. In this dilemma, Sherlock Holmes is sent for, and he also discovers the secret doors. But in doing so he discovers too much, for the Gray Dame outwits Mr. Holmes, and at a very critical moment precipitates the detective into a subterranean dungeon, where presumably he is to rot to death. The resourceful Holmes, however, gets busy on the walls, discovers a secret door which opens, and so regains entrance to the castle. Disguising himself as the son of the house he awaits the next appearance of the Gray Dame, who is considerably surprised when paying her visit, to be attacked, held and unmasked by Holmes and the servants. The culprit is presumably marched off to prison and happiness restored in the castle.

The story is full of exciting movements, and the plot is worked out with decision and sureness of attack. There is not a lingering moment in the story, which moves rapidly, tensely and convincingly, as all detective stories should. Above all it is exceedingly well acted and then it has been very nicely set and mounted. The furniture of the castle, the uniforms, the carriage and the horses, everything, in fact, are provided to give the romance an aspect of veri-similitude. Yet again, as we watched this picture, which is a very fine piece of photographic work, we found our unemotional selves being carried away by the excitement of the story. And later when we told a small boy of nine what we had seen, he clapped his hands and said, "Oh, I wish I could see that picture." We have no doubt a similar reception awaits this latest Great Northern success at the hands of the public.

The other Great Northern releases, besides the feature film, "The Gray Dame," noticed elsewhere, comprise a diversified series of pictures which will surely please this company's innumerable patrons throughout America. In a Swedish scenic subject, "Norrkobing," we were attracted to some very fine renderings of water in rapid motion. The forms of the waves, and the colors of the liquid were excellently shown. We think that the photography of waves in the moving picture camera offers fine scope for interesting work. Then there is a delightful comedy subject of "The Henpecked Husband," who is scorned by his wife for surreptitious smoking. So he goes to his club and hatches a plot, whereby he bravely rescues his wife from the fierce attacks of two of his fellow clubmen. By these spurious attempts at bravery he restores himself to the good graces of his wife, who gracefully allows him to smoke in future. Unfortunately, however, at the moment of reconciliation she discovers in hubby's coat pocket an article of feminine attire, so all her old antipathy to hubby revives and the picture ends by the termagent soundly whacking her spouse. God forbid that we should have a wife like that!

"The Witch and the Cycle" is a very fantastic picture which is bound to amuse and delight an audience. A witch appears to a cyclist, and apparently some unpleasant remarks pass between them, for presumably through the influence of the witch the cyclist's machine changes into all sorts of funny things in the way of wheeled vehicles, and finally he has the mortification of seeing his bicycle annexed by a pretty girl, who rides away on it. And here he awakes, for he has been dreaming by the roadside. This film is full of ingenuity in the way of trick work.

"A Shell" is the story of a discharged workman in a shipyard. He goes insane and then takes revenge by seeking to blow up the ship. He is discovered in his nefarious work, takes flight in a boat and as the result of a hand to hand conflict in the water, is drawn ashore more dead than alive. He dies in his wife's arms. So death reconciles all things. This is a short film of great dramatic power which will please all lovers of strong fare.

These releases of the Great Northern Film Company show that the company has prepared itself for the Fall trade with some magnificent subjects.

Rockville, Ind.—Lewis Hayes, of this city, will open a moving picture theater in Cayuga.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Ladel & Co. will erect a moving picture theater at 1209 North Fifty-second street.

Lebanon, Ore.—R. Kuhn is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Albany, N. Y.—The Deimling Amusement Company has been incorporated wtih a capital stock of $10.000. The incorporators are: Charles Deimling, Rowe Deimling and Henry Deimling, of New York City.

Comments on the Week's Films.

MY WIFE'S GONE TO THE COUNTRY (Essanay).

The moral of this story, if moral there be, is: When you see your wife off to the country, be sure that she has her railroad ticket with her or sufficient money to pay for one, otherwise she may come back at an awkward moment, as did the heroine of this highly diverting Essanay film. But to the story proper. Mrs. Jones—by the way we suggest to the Essanay Company not to call their comedy characters "Jones"—the Biograph Company have already done so. Well, Mrs. Jones makes up her mind to go to the country. Jones sees her to the depot, and when she has disappeared in the train he dances a fandango of delight. We see the lady in the car making herself very objectionable with all her packages and we leave her for a time. Jones, good man, in his new found freedom decides to have a good time, so he starts in drinking. He goes to the theater and with two friends takes a couple of the girls for an auto ride and finally to his own home. Meanwhile how fares it with Mrs. Jones? Called upon for her railroad ticket she has not got one, nor any money. She unwisely entrusted her pocketbook to her husband. So the poor girl is fired from the train and painfully makes her way home, just at the moment when Jones is preparing to entertain his lady friends and male cronies. Of course he has to let Mrs. Jones in the house, but before doing so he hides his friends. Equally of course the guilty four are discovered by the irate Mrs. Jones. The story ends by the quartette being fired and Jones getting a good drubbing.

The Essanay Company have worked out this humorous sketch, for such it is, with great skill. It excited great laughter on the occasion when we saw it. Then again you have the symphonic accompaniment of the familiar song running through the piece—a clever stroke which prepares the audience for something to laugh at. The acting throughout was excellently good, and the photographic part well done. Especially comical were those parts of the film which showed the intruders in the Jones' house in their various places of hiding. They looked supremely uncomfortable. We congratulate the Essanay Company on having produced a highly diverting film which we think will be popular.

THE LITTLE STREET SINGER (Pathe).

Here is another film that pleased and charmed us by its simplicity of theme and the beauty of its treatment. It is briefly the story of two little French peasants, who start out to earn money by singing in order to support their mother. They are blessed by the curé, and in their wanderings are fortunate enough to attract the attentions of an old man who teaches them how to sing. So they go; and in a cafe, their efforts are rewarded by the richly dressed pleasure seekers. Then they return home with the money they have earned, and the mother in her gratitude showers blessings upon the old man who taught them the means of getting a livelihood. Nothing can be simpler. But how naturally all this was acted! It looked just like life itself. There was no effort, no declamation, the various characters just went through their parts without apparent effort, and yet at the same time with sureness of conviction. The scenes of the film gave Messrs. Pathe an opportunity for producing a series of very beautiful pictures in color. Indeed, in the latter respect we have not seen a better or more satisfying polychromatic rendering on the screen. On this point alone we look upon the "Little Street Singer" as a masterpiece of stage coloring which should be seen and studied by others who are seeking to produce illustrated song slides and moving pictures with coloring that appears both natural and artistic. "The Little Street Singer" was popular with the audience and must be written down as another Pathe success.

AN AWAKENED CONSCIENCE (Gaumont).

Aside of its interest as a story and the acting qualities of the film, "An Awakened Conscience" is of interest to us in respect of the fact that it is one of the finest pieces of monochrome photography that we have seen in a moving picture theater. Well illuminated and accurately exposed, the positive is a perfect rendering in pure blacks and white with the most delicate intermediate tones. The effect of the picture on our minds was that of an extremely fine platinum print which, as those familiar with the technique of photography quite understand, is the high water mark of printing in monochrome. So we would like any reader who wishes to have our opinion as to what constitutes a good monochrome moving picture to look at "An Awakened Conscience" if they get the opportunity.

The story is simple and convincing. A young French peasant goes to Paris, becomes the author of a successful play and springs into fine society. His old parents come to call upon him but are repulsed. Hearing of their straits, however, he boldly introduces them into his fashionable circle, where to his honor and to the honor of his companions, the old people are cordially received and made much of. So everything ends happily. Not much of a story but very affecting and cleverly worked out. We admire the magnificent bearing of the handsome men and women of the salon scenes of this film; and then again the little scene where the author comes to the front of the stage and bows to the delighted audience is admirably done. But the entire production of this delightful film reflected credit on all concerned. As we have said, the photography of it is superb, and the rehearsing, the acting, etc., are irreproachable. We think "An Awakened Conscience" a very strong Gaumont success.

MILLS OF THE GODS.

A Biograph picture which opens with a love complication that threatens to make a number of people permanently unhappy. The housemaid loves the young author, the young author loves the daughter of his landlady and the chore man loves the housemaid. From this circular bunch of trouble the gods are expected to grind something that shall satisfy them all. The star part is played by the housemaid, and her love and sacrifice are much the tenderest and most convincing features of the picture. It is none the less effective that her passion is hopeless. Her secret presentation of money is well done and her plea to the editor regarding the rejected manuscript was effective. It is not the first instance that the love and sacrifice of a woman have brought success to a man. Perhaps this picture is all the more convincing because it is true to life. The acting of the young author is perhaps quite as good in a way, but it lacks the decision which characterizes the young woman's work, and for that reason is, in a degree at least, much less satisfactory. That the housemaid should finally accept the former chore boy is inevitable, and in that the mills of the gods perform their grinding with precision. The other characters are merely accessories and fill the otherwise blank spaces. The photography of this film is quite up to the standard of the Biograph studio in definition and tone values, but apparently the photographer has been sitting at the feet of Dunkoop. Some of his figures tower almost up to the ceiling in their heroic size. But they are still clear, and that saves them from descending to mere silhouettes. The picture will rank among the best the Biograph has offered.

"The Professor's Dilemma."—A Pathe which has for its motive the same idea that was recently developed by an American house. A music professor is invited to attend a musicale, but has no suitable dress suit. A gentleman enters an artist's studio to have his portrait painted and they induce him to assume the pose of a Roman hero, while the professor takes his discarded dress suit and goes to the musicale. The gentleman later goes and wreaks vengeance upon the frightened professor, to the great amusement of the assembled guests.

"A Hypnotic Wife."—A Pathe which might be funnier if certain parts of it were developed more forcibly. The scene of the big cringeing husband is funny enough and when his sturdy papa appears at his summons the incongruity between him and the little wife is funny. Later the wife learns hypnotism and succeeds in landing the giant papa in an insane asylum where to calm his ravings he is placed under the shower. The odd association of ideas is the basis of the fun in the picture, not what the characters do.

"The Evil That Men Do."—A Vitagraph Western drama which illustrates some very startling machinations that lead to murder, the accusation of an innocent man and the conviction of the real murderer by a Chinaman. There is a love story connected which shows a young woman in agony over a mesalliance. But the difficulty ends happily for her afterward. The principal interest attaches to the acting of the Chinaman, which is true to life. The hesitating way in which he moves and the effort required in making up his mind, with the natural or assumed Oriental imperturbability are all interesting and mark a distinct departure from the ordinary acting of such parts. While the other actors are good, and the murderer is as villainous as one might wish, it must be admitted that the Chinaman outshines them all and makes a rather commonplace subject notable by his truthful characterization. The story is plainly told. There is no hesitation and no question about what it means from the beginning to the end. The lighting in nearly the entire picture is adequate, dispelling the mysterious dimness and heavy shadows which have sometimes marred Vitagraph subjects. The picture is entertaining and when the wedding occurs in the court room the audience almost invariably breaks into applause.

"An Emperor's Generosity."—The French are as fond of deifying Napoleon as they formerly were of ascribing to him all the monstrous attributes which they could find. This little sketch from the Gaumont studio is supposed to represent an affair in which Napoleon showed a generous trait. Discovering one of his guard asleep he reads a letter which the young man has written to his mother. Instead of ordering him shot for neglect of duty he puts money under his hand and then bids him write to his mother that he has been promoted to captain of his guard. This little bit may be true to life. The emperor was a man of such varied and whimsical impulses that this is not impossible.

"The Horse and the Haystack."—A Gaumont which illustrates a horse that devoured a haystack and had his vigor so increased that he rushed through the most intricate evolutions hauling a heavily loaded carriage behind him, dodging in the most astonishing manner all sorts of obstacles and obstructions. The film is interesting because of this exhibition of speed and mysterious turns and twists without spilling the occupants. Finally when the outfit comes to grief it is on level ground and the horse is merely detached from the rig. The film is clear when the rapidity of motion is considered. In nearly its entire length it is sufficiently clear for the figures to be distinguished, notwithstanding the unexpected dashes and turns made here and there.

"The Patience of Miss Job."—An Edison picture which has two sides, depending upon one's point of view, which may be one way or another, depending upon personal attributes. The lover of boys, no matter what their natural proclivities may be, will see in it a confirmation of their oft repeated assertions that every boy has good in him. While those who incline to the opinion that boys are naturally bad will still use the arguments presented in the picture to enforce their claims. And the patience of the much abused Sunday school teacher is good to contemplate. The boyish pranks are naturally acted, and the loving efforts of the teacher win sympathy by their long suffering persistence, and when she finally conquers the boy the audience rejoices with her. The chief interest in this film lies in its fidelity to life, its appeal to humanity. For this reason it cannot fail to please.

"Dashed to Death."—An Edison picture which makes one sit up and take notice when the automobile race begins, and when the Duke's machine plunges down a precipice, exploding and taking fire as it goes, enveloping its occupant in a blinding cloud of smoke and steam, the action is so natural that it seems as though the accident actually occurred. The tangled mass of wreckage at the foot of the cliff which presumably contains the mangled body of the duke is sufficiently realistic to satisfy the most exacting critic. The race itself is exciting and so good is the acting that it is possible to read the thoughts of the occupants of the two machines by the changing expressions of their faces. Incidentally the disposition to seek empty titles and crumbling castles that come with foreign husbands and the too frequent results are graphically illustrated. The action is very spirited. Of that there is no question, and when the athletic American overcomes the Italian duke the audience becomes enthusiastic. It is needless to add that the American gets the girl he wanted finally, which supplies a pleasant outcome for an unpleasant situation. Technically the picture is quite up to the Edison standard, even the swift moving automobiles being reasonably clear and sharp. Too much clearness when an object is moving swiftly makes it appear unnatural, almost to the point of stillness. A little blur adds to the appearance of swift motion. In other words, it helps to make them go. This picture tells a good story in a convincing way, and it is satisfactory when seen upon the screen.

"Making Bamboo Hats."—A Pathe educational picture illustrating an important industry in India. The entire process of manufacture is shown, from selecting the bamboo as it grows to the finished hats which cover many acres of ground as they dry in the sun. It is an interesting and instructive addition to Pathes' series of industrial subjects.

"A Bill Poster's Trials."—A Pathe comedy, illustrating the experiences of a bill poster whose pictures suddenly become animated and make life interesting for him. He gets several beatings, is drenched with a hose and tormented by boys, hits two officers with his paste brush and as a result lands in the police station. The situations are funny because unexpected and never fail to raise a laugh.

"The Conspirators."—A Kalem picture which utilizes a supposed South American revolution for its setting and with it entwines a love story which is based upon the infidelity of a wife in the marriage relation. The story is interesting and the acting is good, with actors who take advantage of and develop every possible dramatic situation offered by the author. With revolution, death and marital infidelity there should be enough to thrill the most exacting in this particular and that is what the picture does. The private secretary and the wife of the general, who are guilty of illicit love, receive their punishment when a bullet intended for the general kills the secretary. Then the general learns the truth regarding the relations of the two people whom he loved. The picture closes with the wife weeping over the body of the dead secretary and the general in agony at having discovered the truth. The story is so well told that the realism is almost too strong in places, while in others it is not so serious. As a whole the picture is to be commended.

"The Dyspeptic's Double."—An amusing Kalem picture which makes a rich man afflicted with dyspepsia the hero of a strange adventure that restores his appetite and forever prevents the recurrence of the disease. But it must be confessed that the method will not become popular with dyspeptics. They will scarcely want to be arrested and sent to the rock pile for ten days to recover their relish for food. But that was what occurred in this instance, and while it was effective and there was not the slightest indication of any recurrence of the malady, the nature of the cure will forever prevent it from becoming general in such cases. The tramp with whom the millionaire changed places had the time of his life for that ten days, and so did the millionaire. The tramp got kicked off the place when the millionaire returned, but the millionaire himself was welcomed with much rejoicing when his identity was discovered and afterward there was much amazement at the improvement in his appetite. And when he waved the physician aside it was proof that his cure was complete. Photographically the film is good, and the acting is well done.

"A Strange Reunion."—A Phoenix picture which may tell a good story, but the story told is open to question. The desertion of a wife and baby, the struggle of the mother to maintain herself and little one, the death of the baby and the meeting of the husband and wife when he was driven into the house by the police who wanted him for burglary, form a chain of events upon which to hang a melodramatic picture, and the author has done it. But the objection frequently urged before, the tendency to a funeral is quite as marked here. The picture is in reality a temperance sermon, but one doesn't always care to be sermonized in a motion picture theater. The idea of having the police drive the husband into the wife's rooms after three years of separation is good and may be said to make the picture. Then comes the ending with the happy home and the reformed husband giving his pay envelope to his wife. The picture impresses and more than one pair of eyes were wet before it closed. One could but wish that the photographer had done his work better. The features of the actors were scarcely visible, the work was so poor. The operator may have been partly to blame because he was not careful of his focus, but he was not responsible for the tones. It would be possible to improve the picture in this direction. The actors did their work well, so well, in fact, that one sees little to criticise. As a whole the picture pleased.

"A False Alarm."—A comedy from the Great Northern which modifies the idea of having a number of men visit one servant girl by changing her friends from policemen to firemen, and introducing a new feature in having the man of the house entertain under the impression that he is the maid's brother. She manages to dispose of all the hidden ones but the last. The closing scene is a rough house with the hose playing on the master from a number of different directions. As a comedy it is a success in that it is heartily applauded and many outbursts of laughter greet it.

"Surroundings of Copenhagen."—A Great Northern record of some of the points of interest about Copenhagen. The photographer was an artist, else his selections would not have been so satisfactory and his exposure was nearly correct. The pictures have a good range of tone gradation and there is an element of attractiveness to them which pleases. The brown tones are soft and satisfactory, but in some instances the blue tones are not so pleasing. The brown toned landscapes of the Great Northern have always been satisfactory, perhaps more so than any other tone the firm has used.

"The Day After a Spree."—A Le Lion which is extremely Frenchy and almost passes the border line between decency and indecency. While these pictures may seem attractive to French eyes it might be said with a basis of reason that not all Americans care to see such pictures, hence the indifference with which this type of picture is often received in this country. Good fun is always in demand, but the subjection of this individual to all sorts of jokes and his cavorting about only partially dressed emphasize the main proposition that such films might better be put on the scrap heap than used.

"A Bad Day for Levinsky."—A comedy from Precision, London. One can scarcely commend this picture even though it is well acted and the mechanical work is quite satisfactory. There is too much malicious feeling expressed in the fun and one cannot but believe that this apparently holding up a certain people to scorn and making them the basis of a certain species of fun which is anything but funny and which in the opinion of many might be "Niagara in Winter Dress."—A beautifully toned picture from the Vitagraph studio reproducing Niagara in all its beauty of Winter dress. The falls are shown from all viewpoints and interesting views are given of the ice under the falls and the rough ice pack below and in the rapids above. Except in one or two instances the photographer failed to convey the impression of the size and majesty of the falls, an important consideration in pictures of this character. Without this impression the picture fails of its whole purpose, and here there is much to be desired in this particular. The photography of a water fall, or even of a tree, should impress with the size. The rendering of the texture of the snow and ice is all that could be desired and the photography of the water is to be commended. Only in that one particular is the picture faulty.

"The French Battleship 'Justice.'"—An Eclipse giving a series of animated views on a French warship, each presenting some particular phase of the life on the big vessel. The photography is clear, with full tonal gradations and sharp pictures even when the figures are moving rapidly close to the camera have been made. As an insight into life on board a French vessel the picture has an educational value and its novelty makes it interesting.

"Prof. Pudd'nhead's Inventions."—An Urban which offers a reproduction of a combination automobile and flying machine, with a vacuum arrangement which sucked up everything that came within reach. But the car went crashing to earth after soaring in the clouds and the occupants were hustled away by the police on complaints of those who had suffered from the depredations of the vacuum provider. The absurdity of the picture makes it amusing. It has no special claim to consideration otherwise.

"Suffer Little Children."—An Edison which ought to be a potent influence in helping advocates of laws regulating, or even prohibiting, child labor. An explanation of what this film means might be obtained by transposing the title to read "Little Children Suffer." While a love story is interwoven, leaving one sincere heart to mourn, the interest will center around a frail little boy who is driven to work in the factories by his drunken father, where he falls exhausted and is carried home, only to be driven out again by his father. While the acting of this play is good, the interest will be with the children and their pleading mother, not because she apparently chose the wrong man when she was young, but because she is true to her husband, even though he is a drunkard and abuses his family. And then when her former lover, now wealthy, offers her everything, which she indignantly spurns, there is a thrill of pride runs through the audience, and this is changed almost to exultation when the husband promises to reform. In technical quality this film is an advance on others from the same source. Some very beautiful lighting effects are introduced, effects which emphasize the faces while subordinating everything else. The lesson this film teaches and its superior technical and dramatic quality should give it a wide audience. It should do great good.

"The Doctor's Bride."—Marital infidelity is so often made the basis of a picture story that it comes as a grateful variation to have Lubin bring out a picture which makes the fidelity of a young wife the basis for a drama. And it is quite as interesting, while far more satisfactory than the other kind. There are true wives, many more than the other kind, and there are true husbands. It is well to have a picture occasionally illustrating that side of daily life. And when it is as well staged and as well acted as Lubin's players have done it the picture becomes all the more impressive and helpful.

"The Haunted Hat."—A comedy from Lubin which has as a basis a hat that crawls along the street. Most of the population of the town, including all the leading men, take part in the slow chase, but none dares lift it. Suddenly it stops and a little kitten crawls from under it and the ghostly mystery is solved.

"Ralph Benefits by People's Curiosity."—A Pathe which illustrates how easy it is to arouse the curiosity of the people and when they are interested how willingly they will pay to gratify that curiosity. It is made the basis of a pretty home story and shows a boy helping his mother with the proceeds gained from playing upon the curiosity of the multitude.

"The New Mail Carrier."—A Pathe which illustrates what might happen if a stupid fellow were given free rein in the postoffice. The contingency here is so remote that the picture posseses little real interest.

"Pranks."—A Biograph comedy which takes an original idea. A young woman drives a young man away from her, but some boys mix their clothes in bathing pavilions and they are forced to start for the house grotesquely dressed. This brings about a reconciliation and apparently the turtle doves coo ever after. Like previous Biograph comedies this one is funny, more, perhaps, because of the absurdity of the idea than anything else. The curious figure the couple cut dressed in each other's clothes adds to the gayety, and the excellent technical quality assists materially in holding the interest.

"The Seventh Day."—A Biograph picture, which, like all that come from that source, is strong and well acted. Perhaps it tells a story which is worth hearing, particularly by those who are prone to neglect little ones for the claims of society or some other cause which may appear to them important. That the mother's heart was drawn to the little people when circumstances forced her to become acquainted with them is not strange. It has almost always been so from the beginning of time. Nor is it strange that the little ones should unite the estranged parents. That has always been true, too. But the story is told in such a forceful way, and is based upon an episode in the history of a court in Cook County, Illinois, that occurred not long ago, and these features add to the interest and seem to make it more real. While this film is different it must be acknowledged that the departure from the beaten path has been attended with pleasing results. The Biograph people are to be congratulated upon their success.

"Oh, Uncle."—A Biograph comedy which apparently puts a premium upon the disposition to be a little sporty. But the situations developed are so genuinely humorous and the acting is so in harmony with the subject that one is disposed to accept the uncle's view of the circumstance and commend him for his determination to stay with his nephew and his wife, the Wrights.

"Broken Ties."—A Gaumont which graphically depicts the serious effects of the divorce court. A series of striking pictures is shown, showing the child, the father and the mother, and finally the reunion of all three. The acting is quite up to the standard of the house and technically the film leaves little to be desired. Perhaps the lesson it teaches is justification for its production, but unless it is, such films seem out of place in an institution devoted to amusement.

"Sevres Porcelain."—A Gaumont in which mysticism is developed. A number of pieces of beautiful Sevres porcelain are shown in series and in each instance the pieces of ware are in reality composed of living people. When the pieces disintegrate into the original models who pose in various dances and drills the surprise of the audience is marked. The film is beautifully colored, adding to its attractiveness.

"On Another Man's Pass."—An Essanay comedy which includes more melodrama than is usually put into these comedy films. Finding a pass Rupert travels as the president of the road, but is prevented from actual wrong by a Salvation Army lass who induces him to return the money to the real president. Like all melodramas the action leads to a business connection which turns out as well as it possibly could. The acting is so good that it is humorous. To see Rupert impersonating the president of the road is comical because it is so good, and this is enjoyed immensely by the audience. And when the real president is put off the train because his hat, coat and pass are missing there is another laugh. The picture is distinctly amusing, without being silly, and will add to the high reputation for comedy which has been established by this company.

S. M. Spedon, formerly of "Talent," and an author of note, has been added to the staff of the Vitagraph Company of America. He will be connected with the producing department, passing upon and revising manuscripts of stories, a task for which he is eminently well fitted.

NOTES OF THE TRADE.

Rockford, Ill.—Frank Thielen, of Elgin, is planning to open remodeling the Rex Theater here.

Davenport, Iowa.—M. Berkell is preparing to open a moving picture theater here.

Bloomington, Ill.—A. W. Ackerman is preparing to open a new moving picture show here.

Wellsburg, Iowa.—Thelore Watt, of Hampton, will open a new moving picture theater here.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Unique Moving Picture Theater here is closed for alterations and repairs.

Beloit, Wis.—Archer & Harvey have sold the Lyric Moving Picture Theater to Frank McCarthy.

Gallatin, Mo.—A. C. McCoy has sold his moving picture theater here to M. E. Moore, of St. Joseph.

Wichita, Kans.—Frank Garrity is preparing to open a new moving picture theater at 809 Main street.

Tacoma, Wash.—William Morris, of New York, has decided to erect a modern vaudeville theater here.

Twin Falls, Idaho.—T. O. Orr has purchased the Dime Moving Picture Theater from B. C. Woods.

Norfolk, Va.—F. A. Roethke has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater.

Newton, Iowa.—C. D. Barngrower has purchased the Electric Theater here, and has taken possession.

Independence, Mo.—Joe Peterson has purchased the Lyric Moving Picture Theater here from Mr. Jarvis.

Santa Clara, Cal.—George Bowman is preparing to open a new moving picture show on Franklin street.

Cayuga, Ind.—Lewis Hays, of Rockville, has opened a new moving picture theater in the Silva block here.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Morgan & Walls are completing plans for a new moving picture theater for San Pedro.

Warren, Minn.—Charles Treadwell, of Crookston, has purchased the Bijou moving picture theater here.

San Diego, Cal.—Walter J. Fulkerson has sold his interest in the Grand Theater to his partner, Fred Ballein.

Hartford, Ark.—Messrs. Hall & McMahan are operating an airdome here, with a seating capacity of 500.

Scammon, Kans.—A. W. Parker and F. H. Lewis have sold the Airedome to Mr. Walker, of Coffeyville.

San Francisco, Cal.—Frank B. Ross is making arrangements to open a nickelodeon at 2692 Mission street.

East St. Louis.—Joseph Erbe will expend about $4,000 in a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

New London, Conn.—A new moving picture theater has been started here. It is known as the New Orpheum.

Mesa, Ariz.—Frank Vance has leased the Vance Auditorium and will operate a moving picture theater there.

Hamilton, Mont.—F. H. Drinkenberg will open a new vaudeville and moving picture theater on Second street.

Appleton, Wis.—Henry Essler is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater in the Reuter Block.

La Grange, Ind.—Frank Burke, of Wakarusa, is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Florence, S. C.—E. T. Haselden has opened a new moving picture show here to be known as the Arcadium Theatorium.

Fort Morgan, Col.—J. R. Burford has purchased the Idle Hour Moving Picture Theater here and has taken possession.

Belvidere, Ill.—William Pratt has bought the Lyric Moving Picture Theater from Mack & Allen and has taken possession.

Carthage, Mo.—J. M. Finsh, of Newton, Iowa, has made arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here in the Regan block.

Bellevue, Ohio.—Willis Daywalt has purchased W. J. Fry's moving picture theater here, known as the Theatorium, and has taken possession.

Muncie, Ind.—The Theatorium Moving Picture Theater at 516 South Walnut street, owned by Lewis H. Dunmyre, has been closed for repairs.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The International Theater Film Association has been incorporated with a capital stock of $15,000. The incorporators are J. P. Olinger, Frank H. Grabhorn, W. G. Truettner and others.

Logan City, Utah.—T. C. Jensen, proprietor of the Lyric and Globe, reports that these places have been doing very good business all the Summer. Incidentally he remarks that the M. P. World is the only paper and he would not think of doing business without it.

New Brunswick, N. J.—The Unique Theater which has been conducted at 210 Neilson street, by Philip Mechanic for some time, has been leased to Samuel Clafter, of New York, a well known moving picture man. The place will be renovated and the new manager will conduct first class productions in all the latest moving pictures besides the latest illustrated songs.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM ONE OF THE PUBLIC.

August 17, 1909.

Editors of Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Gentlemen:—As a subscriber and regular reader of the World I find letters from all classes of people interested in the moving picture business, except the ones who sit in front of the screen and pay the money at the door. It may be interesting to have one of us tell you what we think of the business. I have been a pastor of a church and a user of the stereopticon both as operator and lecturer for twenty years. It falls to my lot now to run the projection apparatus in Princeton Theological Seminary whenever we have an illustrated lecture. I can thus claim to have at least a little discrimination as to effects. First of all I want to say that I have been repaid over and over for my investment in the World by Mr. Richardson's talks to operators. I hope to graduate one of these days as an operator myself, in an amateur way, into the moving picture field. Much that he has written has helped me to appreciate what is to be met there. In addition much of his advice applies to the stereopticon operator and there I feel quite able to speak as more than an amateur.

But now permit me to offer an opinion upon the whole matter of the entertainment. And let me be specific. Last Saturday night I was in Woodbury, accompanied by a young man twelve years old whose mother asserts that he is almost as much interested in the moving picture and stereopticon business as his father—and that is saying a good deal. We started out in the evening and found that evidently the local "Opera House" had entered the moving picture field. We paid our money and went in. There must have been upwards of three hundred people in the room and the operator was putting through the Edison film of "The Man Without a Country." In general he was too high and so had to tip his machine too much. His screen should have been hung above the stage opening in part at least. Then his pictures were not in exact focus. In the fight scene on shipboard he also ran his film so fast that there was really no satisfactory view. When he presently stopped to change reels and put on an announcement slide, and then ran the screen clear, his light showed in very bad shape and it was clear to me that he had not tried for a clear field before he began the film. Later on he did better, but that was to me pretty clear evidence that he had been careless at first.

But now the most serious objection I had to the whole performance was something which two young men tried to get off in the middle of the hour. They came on and tried to sing songs which they evidently thought were "smart." Then they got off some cheap minstrel jokes and ended by a song in which they endeavored in a long drawn out series of verses to "roast" some persons in the audience. Sometimes the attempted jokes were profane and they were always coarse and inane. This whole performance was of the style of the so-called humor which is found in the Sunday newspaper supplement. Now I want to say that while some of the audience laughed at this and even some applauded it, that manager disgusted more of us by that silly business. As a close we had some comedy films from Eclipse and Essanay studios. The whole of the moving picture part of the entertainment was distinctly and emphatically much above this other vapidity. I and most other people, I think, go for moving pictures. We can stand illustrated songs and well illustrated lecturettes. But if we cannot have those, then cut the performance to two reels and let us go. I shall be in Woodbury again, I expect, in a couple of weeks. I should enjoy going to this house for the pictures, but I shall not go for I cannot allow my example an influence to count toward a place which offers such puerile nonsense in the name of fun. And that leads me to say that so far as I am concerned, I hope you will not cease to print the story of the new films. It helps to the enjoyment of a picture when one has read the synopsis before.

Yours truly,

W. B. SHEDDAN.

Washington, D. C.—Jacques Haidenheimer is planning to erect a large moving picture theater here.

Hutchinson, Kan.—Ed. Green has purchased a half interest in the Elite Motion Picture Theater, at 13 South Main street, from Scott Wikie.

Oregon, Ill.—Harry L. Emerson has purchased the Lynn Moving Picture Theater from the Eastern Amusement Company, and will make extensive improvements.

Stories of the Films.

See Page 360 for Release Dates.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

1776; Or, The Hessian Renegades.—Guerrilla warfare is assuredly the worst feature of any conflict of nations, and it is safe to say that there has never been a war in which this profligacy has not existed. As a subject for a motion picture story, the Biograph has taken an incident of the Revolutionary War, for while those mercenaries, the Hessians, may not be conclusively styled as such, their acts were very little short of the deeds of out and out guerrillas. Fearful devastation, foraging, lawlessness and depredation seemed their forte. They, of course, had no heart in the cause, simply like any hireling that is working for so much, and what extra could be gotten. The British themselves even discountenanced many of their acts, as reflecting upon their honor as men and soldiers. The incident here depicted shows a young American dispatch bearer, who, surprised by a band of these foragers, seeks shelter in his father's house. The old man has just time to hide the boy in the fireplace when the Hessians enter. After a fruitless search they express their intention of putting up at the house. As a subterfuge, the daughter takes them upstairs to show them their quarters, while the father hides the boy in a clothes hamper. The Captain, on his return downstairs, sees the basket, and suspicious, asks what it contains; not satisfied with the old man's answer, sends a bullet crashing through into the boy's body, killing him. The poor old man is frantic with grief and vows to avenge his boy's brutal murder, so stealing outside with his daughter, they surprise the sentry and carry him off. The daughter, dressing in the sentry's uniform, takes the post, while the father scurries off in search of help. Knocking at the doors of his neighbors, each is opened by a sympathetic friend, but the young men all away fighting their country's cause, only the old folks and women remain. However, they are ready to aid him, and as all their arms and ammunition have been confiscated they must take up anything at hand. What a motley army they are, old men and young and old women, armed with clubs, axes, scythes, etc., eagerly anxious for the fray. The little band of patriots reach the house just as the identity of the daughter is discovered by the relieving sentry, who is silenced, and the invaders stealthily enter the house by windows and door, taking the Hessians entirely unawares. A brief struggle lays most of them low, while the old man singles out the Captain, who had killed the boy, keeping his vow of vengeance. In this subject we feel a pride, which will be deemed pardonable, for no more vivid nor interesting war episode has ever been presented than this. Beautiful scenery, powerful acting, with unexcelled photography, lift it to the very transcendentalism of motion picture art. Length, 965 feet.

COMATA, THE SIOUX.—A story of an Indian's constancy. That the Indian is the soul of honor, where his own is concerned, has been demonstrated many times, and if he has been guilty of any lawlessness, it has been induced by his misanthropic attitude towards the white man; and can we blame him? How often has he been deceived and taken advantage of until his erstwhile trustful nature has been changed to that of cunning suspiciousness. Monumental examples of white man's unscrupulousness are presented him on all sides until his faith in him has vanished. This story of the Black Hills consistently tells of the unrequited love of a Sioux brave for his chief's daughter, and how he premonished the awful results of her ominous marriage with a white cowboy. Clear Eyes, the daugher of Chief Thunder Cloud, is beloved by Comata, a Sioux brave, but having met and listened to the persuasion of Bud Watkins, a cowboy, leaves her mountain home to become his squaw. Poor little confiding Clear Eyes lives only for Bud, and he at first seems devoted to her, but at the end of two years, a little papoose arriving meanwhile to bless their union, he tires of her, and courts Miss Nellie Howe, a white girl, who thinks him single. Comata, however, has unremittingly watched his movements, and vows to avenge his lost one. Following him to the white girl's home, he sees enough to convince him of the whelp's villainy, so he goes and reveals the truth to Clear Eyes. The poor squaw is stunned by the news, and yet she herself has discerned a change in Bud towards her. Clear Eyes bowed in grief, Comata leaves taking the papoose with him, which he shows to Miss Nellie as evidence of Bud's perfidy. The girl must satisfy herself, so she retains the child and sends for Bud. He, confronted, cannot deny the truth. Clear Eyes discovering the absence of her papoose, is told of its whereabouts by Comata, who guides her to the place. A painful scene takes place, during which Bud is ordered off by Nellie's father, and the child restored to Clear Eyes. The heart-broken squaw goes back to her cabin, resumes her native attire, and starts back with her baby for her home in the mountains. It is but reasonable, however, to assume that hunger and fatigue overcome them on the way. Aside from being a story of intense interest, the scenic splendor of it has never been surpassed, transporting the spectator psychologically to the very heart of the Black Hills. Length, 963 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

THE MAKING OF HONEY.—Have you ever given any thought to that small bit of honey that often lies before you on your dining room table? We dare say you have not; still there is more food for thought in a small piece of honey no larger than an inch square than in your fifty-page Sunday newspaper. The statement has been frequently made that it requires more skill and knowledge for bees to produce a single pound of honey than it does for our modern architects to build a New York skyscraper.

It is with this thought in mind that we present this short industrial subject to the motion picture audience. Here we show the modern bee hive which is far superior to the ancient straw skep. These modern hives are constructed in such a way that the bee keeper may, with perfect safety, remove each separate comb or section without disturbing to any great extent the bees at their work. This picture, in addition to showing the interior of a modern hive in which 40,000 bees are at work, illustrates also the present method of what is known as artificial swarming. The queen bee is pointed to the observer, and she certainly is a queen indeed, when one considers that these 40,000 little workers are practically her slaves and come and go at her beck and call. It is useless to try to describe the various interesting and wonderful works of these minute giants. One must see this film to appreciate its interest and beauty. Length, 190 feet.

THE AMATEUR WILLIAM TELL.—The hero of this story gained inspiration for his exploits through reading of William Tell's historical feat of marksmanship. In so far at least as accuracy of aim is concerned his emulation of the noted Swiss patriot was decidedly successful. His bubbling spirits had brought him within the pale of parental discipline. For breaking some of the parlor bric-a-brac with a base ball bat he had been condemned to stay indoors. Rummaging among some books he came upon the story of William Tell, which suggested a wealth of possibilities to his active brain.

Stealing to the woodshed he constructed a primitive but effective bow and some arrows. Disappointed at his young sister's refusal to pose as young Tell he sallied forth in quest of subjects. Number one was a stout old gentleman sitting on a boot-black stand, whose high hat he neatly pinned to the building. Evading pursuit he next pierced a darky painter's can of green paint, almost drowning the painter as a result.

His next victim was an Italian plaster statue peddler, a well-directed arrow in the middle of whose back brought ruin to his wares. After severing the string that held a stock of toy balloons he returned to his home and attempted to shoot an apple from the head of his sleeping parent. His aim this time was bad and he retreated to the yard to escape punishment. There he wonnd up the day's sport by falling into the well. After being fished out and strapped by his father, he was put to bed.

His conscience troubled him that night for he was visited by a frightful dream. He saw himself conducted by shrouded and hooded figures into the awful presence of a scowling judge. Accused of all sorts of misdeeds he saw to his consternation, when their hoods were removed, that his accusers were all victims of his marksmanship of the day before, and the stern judge was his own father! Despite his pleadings he was sentenced to be chained to the wall and shot by his accusers, armed with enormous bows and arrows. Just as the arrows were about to speed to the mark he sat up in bed with a shriek that brought the whole family to his bedside.

Was he a wiser and better boy because of that realistic dream? Well, perhaps. At any rate his exploits furnished a film that is replete with comical situations. Length, 810 feet.

LITTLE SISTER.—Written especially for the Edison Company by Edward W. Townsend:

Cast of Characters.

Little Sister.....Miss Ethel Browning
Dick, Her Brother.....Mr. Bertram Yost
Mr. St. Clair.....Mr. Tefft Johnson
Mrs. Manning.....Miss Josephine Fox
Mrs. McGlinn.....Miss Maggie Weston
And Company.

Every great city has some particular section that stands out clear and distinct from all others because of the peculiar characteristics of its denizens in their daily walks of life. London has her West End, Paris her Latin Quarter and New York her East Side.

It is from the latter that material for our silent drama was drawn, and no one is more competent to correctly picture the life and habits of the denizens of the crowded East Side tenement district than Edward W. Townsend, the famous author of "Chimmie Fadden;" for he has made an exhaustive study of the underworld where virtue and vice walk hand in hand with poverty and crime.

In the opening scene of "Little Sister" Mr. Townsend introduces us to what is commonly called the "sky parlor" of the tenement district—the roof of a house. Here we see Jew and Gentile, foreigner and native, mingling in a common fellowship, all because of the crying need of that community—want of God's fresh air. We are shown the silent, pathetic figure of a youth who, though naturally good at heart, because of his association and environments is losing the great battle of life. Already he has slipped into the class called "suspects" by the Central Office men. His faculties dwarfed by his constant contact with misery and crime, Dick has ceased to strive for an honest means of livelihood.

Embittered by his lot, he regards society as his natural enemy and eks out his precarious living without the effort of labor, though with the full knowledge that in doing so he is hourly gambling with the price of liberty. All this is unknown to "Little Sister," who dearly loves him and for whom he entertains an affection strikingly at variance with his evil habits. We see her in the small but neat room over which she presides as housekeeper, alternately fondling her doll and preparing a meal in fond anticipation of Dick's return; while at the same time we witness his theft of a pocketbook from an aged member of the group on the tenement roof.

The theft traced to Dick through the suspicion that is ever attached to his presence, she refuses to believe his guilt but determines, with a precocity born of hard knocks, to thereafter follow and guard his footsteps lest he succumb to temptation. Along the crowded streets Dick prowls, with evershifting eye alert for opportunity to pick a pocket or steal a valuable, the pathetic figure of his little guardian angel, with rag doll clutched tightly in her arms, ever close by. His opportunity comes in front of a theater, but the attempt is clumsy and the watch on which his fingers close for an instant is jostled from his grasp and falls to the sidewalk, where it is recovered.

Wandering along the residential portion of Fifth avenue, an open window attracts his attention. A momentary glance up and down the street and he mounts the iron railing and climbs into the house of wealth, observed by none but "Little Sister," who is crouching in the shadow of a neighboring stoop. Once in the room, he hides behind a screen and waits for a propitious hour to carry out his plans. Chance does not favor him, for the master of the house, while in the act of closing the window, discovers his presence, overpowers him and sends for the police.

While awaiting their arrival Mr. St. Clair is astonished to see the window raised and an elfish figure, doll in arms, climb through and gaze enquiringly about. Discovering their presence and realizing what arrest will mean to the brother she loves so dearly, "Little Sister" throws herself on her knees and pleads for his release. Struck by her resemblance to his own little girl whom death has taken from him, and moved by the sincerity of her pleading, his captor not only grants her request but gives the youth a fresh start in life, far from the temptations of the city.

The story closes with scenes of "Little Sister" and her now reformed brother enjoying the simple and wholesome life of the country.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

JUSTIFIED.—The awakening to a broader understanding of one's life partner in marriage, after the primrose path of the honeymoon is left behind, and the more commonplace things in life are to be dealt with, is often a tragedy which harvests bitter tears and many vain regrets. The story of Mr. and Mrs. John Seymour is the old, old story of love lost after marriage. In the closer intimacy which marriage offers, Mrs. Seymour finds in her husband anything but ideal characteristics which she imagined he possessed, and consequently ceases to love him. On the other hand, her husband, blind in his devotion, overlooks his wife's shortcomings. As is often the case in such a woeful one-sided love, Mrs. Seymour finds the company of other men more pleasant than that of her husband, and becomes infatuated with handsome John Hazleton, who, in turn, loves her passionately. Unbeknownst to her husband, Mrs. Seymour meets secretly with Hazleton, and in the end the misguided woman is persuaded to elope with Hazleton. Seymour has lately been suspicious of his wife's unfaithfulness to him, and upon the day Mrs. Seymour and Hazleton have chosen to leave the city together, he enters the house. Hazleton, who is in Mrs. Seymour's apartments, assisting her in her packing, and findisg escape from the room cut off, hides himself in the woman's trunk just as Seymour enters the room. The woman offers no explanation of her excitement and flurry and accounts for the trunk and the litter of clothing about it in a feeble excuse that she had decided to spend a few days at the seaside. Seymour's suspicions are verified when he observes on the table a lighted cigar. A movement from within the trunk satisfies him of the whereabouts of the intruder in love and home. Seymour plans revenge and adopts a unique and novel one. From a drawer in the writing table he draws a revolver, picks up a sheet of paper, and tearing a hole in the middle for a bull's-eye, requests his wife to place it on the trunk—that he is going to show her some expert marksmanship. The woman, horrified, refuses to do so. He forces the paper into her hand and compels her to place it upon the trunk. Calmly he raises the revolver and fires. A moment later a railroad ticket agent, accompanied by two baggagemen, enters the room, in answer to Mrs. Seymour's summons. The trunk

Received in Response to Our Announcement

A MIGHTY MASS OF MOMENTOUS MAIL

Coming from as far distant points as the western coast, the writers of these letters of inquiry, representing exhibitors and business men of known standing and repute, who realize the importance of our Agency Proposition and who are eager to represent an Institution With Unquestioned Ability to Supply Superior Film Service, Honestly and Surely.

Exhibitors Who Can Place Service in Other Houses Write

We have a special proposition to make managers of reputable and established theatres who can interest near-by exhibitors

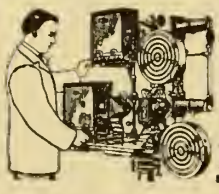
Special Inducements on Machines, Repair parts and Supplies

Don't Wait Another Day But Tell Us What You Need Now

SEE OUR LIST OF AGENCIES NEXT WEEK

CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO., Inc.
HARRY R. RAVER, Manager
28 W. LEXINGTON STREET - - BALTIMORE, MD.

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." A stonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.
Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"
Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN
THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

MR. EXHIBITOR!

If you want to see your house "packed" every night for a week, ask your nearest Exchange Man to supply you with the GREATEST AMERICAN FEATURE FILM the MOTION PICTURE WORLD has ever produced—"The Only Authorized and Authentic Motion Pictures of the Great United States Military Tournament" held at Camp Taft the week of July 5th to 10th, Toledo, Ohio. Over 3,000 feet of film, reproducing, with wonderful clearness, The Modern Field Artillery in Action—Lively, Thrilling Drills by the Infantry—Wall Scaling and Skirmish Work—Wonderful Saddle and Bareback Riding by the Cavalry—Modern Quick-Firing Cannon in Action—Engineer Troops Building Bridges and Destroying Them with Dynamite—Signal Corps in Scientific and Instructive Field Work—Hospital Corps Showing How the Wounded Are Cared For—and the hundreds of other "stunts" that will excite your audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

Lively now! Be the first in your territory to exhibit these remarkable pictures. Now is the time to "stock up" on a little "Easy Coin of the Realm."

If your Exchange will not furnish you, let us know the seating capacity of your theater and we will send you further particulars.

Motion Picture Department
United States Military Tournament
TOLEDO, OHIO

KEEP YOUR EYE ON US

American Film Brokers, German Savings Bank Bldg., 145-147 4th Ave., New York

Films, Accessories. Tickets at low prices. A lot of new Films very cheap

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT

The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE
14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

FILM CEMENT—5c AN OZ.

Don't pay 25c for ½ oz. when you can make a Better Cement Yourself for 5c an oz. Unites perfectly, in neat, clear, strong manner, Both Non-inflammable and Inflammable Films. Welds firmly. Satisfaction Positively Guaranteed. Complete Formula only $1.00. Or send 10c for sample and Test It.
H. E. Huffington, 8 S. Carey St., Baltimore, Md

Feature Films for Traveling Show

For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.

ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities and its contents are carried out of the room and Mrs. Seymour given her ticket, while her husband expresses the hope that she "may have a pleasant stay at the seaside." The woman, dazed by the sudden and awful tragedy, stumbles out of the room, and Seymour drops into a chair, his face in his hands. This big dramatic subject is enacted in one scene and the situations are intense and nerve-tingling. The photography is all that can be wished for and the interpretation of the story is by clever pantomimic talent. The film should prove a most successful one.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

FIRST AIRSHIPS CROSSING THE ENGLISH CHANNEL.—The firm of Gaumont has been extremely alert and enterprising in obtaining views of the recent first crossing of the English Channel by a flying machine, and has secured a couple of reels which are unique. Latham is seen in his experiments, and his start for Dover from Calais. As is known, he fell into the sea, and the next views show his return to Calais in the French torpedo boat which picked him up, and then the tug bringing in the wrecked aeroplane, which is seen from different positions, with Latham dressed in the clothes loaned by a sailor. Then follows the first trials of Bleriot at Issy-Moulineaux, near Paris; his flight near Calais, and then his departure across the Channel on Sunday last. These views were taken at 4:30 A. M., and are a splendid piece of photographic art. They were on view in London on the Monday night, so that Bleriot saw them himself at the Empire, where he was an honored guest. He returned to Paris on the Wednesday at 5 o'clock and at 8:30 that same evening I witnessed a public show of the film describing his triumphant entry into that city. The reels have already been despatched to America. Length, 510 feet.

THE MASON'S PARADISE.—A wealthy householder and his family are seen strolling about the beautiful grounds of their estate. They find a portion of the wall which surrounds their property has fallen down. The property owner immediately goes in search of a skilled bricklayer to repair the damage. The masons are found enjoying the luxuries of their union club, most of them being engaged in games. They object very much to any interruption, and the rich house owner is forced to await their pleasure. When he is finally given an audience, he learns that the regulations of the union require that he pay in advance, board, room, and treat with utmost kindness and respect the man he secures to do the work. Anxious to have the work done, the man promises to meet the terms and scale of wages. The construction which the mason puts upon the word "respect" furnishes material for a great deal of wholesome comedy. First, he insists on being taken to work in an automobile, the maid and the chauffeur are left in his service to hand him refreshments and bring him easy chairs when he is tired. After this has been done to please him, he refuses to work the first day. He is taken into the home and entertained royally for the evening. The entire family exert themselves in every way to entertain him, while the fortunate union member accepts their service with the air of a lord. The very fitting final scene shows the house owner and his family on the following morning at work under the orders of the workman. Length, 414 feet.

THE STOLEN GEMS.—This is an episode of the early part of the seventeenth century. The scenes are laid at the court of a beautiful and gracious queen, surrounded by a suite of brilliantly cloaked and plumed lords and ladies. The first scene is in the grounds of the castle, showing an old beggar woman and her child soliciting alms. She is repulsed by the noble lords, but receives charity at the hands of a nobleman who passes by in earnest conversation with one of the queen's ladies-in-waiting, of whom he is deeply enamored. The next scene is in the throne room. The queen enters amid the obeisances of her courtiers. Seeing the lovers, she joins their hands and gives her consent to their betrothal. As she turns aside, she drops a beautiful necklace of priceless gems, which is found by the lover and laid by him on a chair, whence it is stolen by a dishonest courtier, who hides it in a wood near by. The necklace is found accidentally by the beggar woman, who fears to remove it, so leaves it in its hiding place. The loss is discovered and the enamored courtier is accused by the dishonest one. He is seen under arrest in his cell, where he is visited by his lady love, who laments his misfortune and seems to doubt his honesty. She then leaves him, but at the castle steps she meets the beggars, who tell her of their discovery of the hidden gems. She goes with them, finds and takes the necklace away, and returns it to the queen, just as her unfortunate lover is brought into the torture chamber before the queen and is about to be branded "Thief" with a red-hot iron heated for the purpose in a charcoal brazier. Then the guilty nobleman, who is present, is shown to be the thief. He is branded in the place of the innocent courtier, who is next seen in the epilogue of the story, rewarding the beggars and happy in the presence of his love. Length, 464 feet.

GLIMPSES OF PARIS.—This film gives us a vivid conception of the pleasures of the smart set, horseback riding in the famous "Bois-de-Boulogne," which is suggestive of Central Park, New York. The riders exercise their steeds on the tanbark riding paths, while pedestrians parade on the paths on the left and automobiles spin by on the road on the right. A beautiful lake is exquisitely depicted, covered with pleasure boats, swans and ducks. Children and women feed the waterfowl and all around is an atmosphere of restful enjoyment. Next is shown a sparkling waterfall in the recesses of a stalactite grotto, and from the entrance to the cave can be observed the animated scene on the lake with its myriads of boats and their happy occupants. Then we see the equestrians riding through the shady glades of the woods and jumping their horses over hedges, ditches, etc. Length, 417 feet.

MOZART'S LAST REQUIEM.—In the opening scene we are taken to the music room in the Master's home, where he and his favorite student, Sussmayer, are at work with their music. Constance, Mozart's faithful wife, and little son are also introduced in this scene. The master musician has for some months been near to a serious illness. While he and his pupil are at work, a strange man in gray arrives with a message from some unknown party ordering a requiem for as early a date as possible, and asking the price at which the work will be held. Mozart is filled with a strange foreboding that his life is near its close and the order for a piece of funeral music comes to him as an omen of his own death. Overcome by the thought, he becomes lost in a vision of a funeral service within a cathedral. Recalling himself, he gives answer that he will deliver the music as requested. Following the departure of the messenger, the great musician is haunted by the idea that the requiem is his last work. In melancholy thoughts finally affect him to such an extent that he becomes very ill and a physician is called, who recommends perfect rest and by all means the abandonment of music for a time at least. Through all the illness Sussmayer remains with his teacher. During this time the sick man forever has the dream of the requiem upon his mind and feels that beyond hope his days are numbered and that he must hasten the production. The messenger comes again, bringing the money for the promised piece of music, and a message asking that the funeral song be hurried. The sombre bearer of this news spurs the composer to work beyond his strength, and for some time it is doubtful whether he will recover vitality enough to complete his work. However, he regains some strength and begs his companion and student to play for him upon the violin. As Sussmayer plays the music most dear to his friend, Mozart, the dying man moves calmly about, a gentle sadness seems to fill his soul, and he calls for his material and starts his last masterpiece of composition. A little work overcomes him, then as he listens to the strains of the violin visions come before him of scenes from his favorite operas. First he hears the magnificent strains and sees the excellent stage settings of the Cherubins' Romanza from the Marriage of Figaro. This is followed by the dashing scenes of the Serenade from Don Juan. The next vision is from the Magic Flute, the opera which had brought great wealth to the man for whom it was written. Now the composer's mind is filled with melodies for his last song and he shakes off his lethargy and feverishly applies himself to the task of recording the melodies that cross his mind. The work is almost finished when a deputation of musical men, scholars and celebrities arrive to inquire after his health. As they enter the composer requests them to take the different parts and sing them for him. He, himself, sings the alto part and as the last chord dies away in an artistic ecstasy, his life departs. Length, 940 feet.

KALEM MFG. CO.

HIRAM'S BRIDE.—Scene I—Hiram's Sister, Miranda, Plans His Marriage to Fanny. The scene opens with a view of the old homestead where Hiram and Miranda grew up and where they have been living alone since the death of their parents. It is the early evening of a Summer day. Through the door comes Miranda and with her is Fanny, the only daughter of a well-to-do farmer, whose spreading acres adjoin those of Hiram. It is Miranda's plan that Hiram and Fanny must marry. Fanny is a silly, flighty girl, fond of admiration, and ill suited to be the wife of an earnest young farmer like Hiram, but to this fact Miranda is blind, seeing only the material advantage of such a union. Hiram returns from the barn, where he has been helping the hired men with the chores. Miranda tells Hiram to see Fanny to her home. Hiram demurs, pleading work, but at last yields good-naturedly and departs with the simpering, gushing Fanny leaning on his arm. Miranda watches them disappear with a pleased look on her face, for she sees her dearest wish about to be gratified.

Scene II.—Hiram Answers Beth's Advertisement.

Scene III.—Beth's Arrival.

Scene IV.—The Wedding—It is Hiram and Beth's Wedding Day. The farm house is too small to hold the crowd of neighbors gathered to witness the ceremony, and, as is customary in that section of the country, the wedding is to take place in the front yard. Here comes the minister—the son of the very preacher who married Hiram's father and mother forty years ago. Beth and Hiram come slowly down the path. Hiram approaches Miranda, who stands at one side, and asks her if she is not going to wish him happiness. She answers curtly that he will never be happy with that girl and turns her back on them. Now the minister joins their hands, the simple ceremony is said, and after a word of blessing he pronounces them man and wife. A shower of rice falls on the newly wed and the neighbors crowd around to offer their congratulations. Here comes Zeb Hawkins, the fiddler, who has not missed a wedding in twenty-five years. Soon the young people are enjoying a jolly country dance, with the minister watching them from the steps in amused tolerance.

Scene V.—Miranda Arouses Beth's Jealousy. It is now several months after the wedding. Fanny has been calling on Miranda and as she leaves Miranda follows her to the door. Hiram comes in and Fanny smiles at him foolishly, for she is still in love with him. Miranda asks Hiram to take Fanny home. Hiram looks for some excuse to get out of it, but finds none, and as Fanny stands simpering and waiting, he goes to her. Fanny takes his arm and clings to him as they leave. Now Miranda, who has never forgiven Beth for marrying Hiram, calls her and shows Hiram and Fanny to her, hoping to arouse her jealousy and make her unhappy. She succeeds. Poor Beth, as soon as Miranda goes into the house, drops to the steps and stares out after Hiram, struggling hard to keep back the unhappy tears.

Scene VI.—Beth Suspects Hiram of Loving Fanny. The little Sunday School that Hiram and Beth attend is giving its annual picnic. Beth arrives just in time to see Hiram leading Fanny away, his arm around her and her's around him for support. Beth watches them out of sight, then sinks to the ground heartbroken, for she is now convinced that Hiram's love is given to Fanny and not to her.

Scene VII.—Miranda Forges a Letter. And now Miranda thinks the time has arrived to carry out another plan of revenge that she has made against poor Beth. She is just finishing a letter, which she addresses to Hiram. Then tearing open the end as if it had been read, she leaves it on the table and goes into the house to watch for Beth. Here Beth comes. She takes a drink from the well, then, tired from her household duties, sinks into the chair for a moment's rest. In taking up a paper to fan herself, she accidentally knocks off the letter Miranda has placed there for her. She sees it is in a woman's handwriting and addressed to her husband. She becomes suspicious, looks about, then opens the letter and reads.

Scene VIII.—Sunday Morning—Beth Goes Away. She has determined to leave this place where she is not wanted and return to the city. She has written a pathetic little note to Hiram telling him why she is going. This she leaves on the well, where she knows he will see it when he returns from church. With a last look back at the farm house where she had hoped to spend many happy years with Hiram, she goes sorrowfully down the lane to the road.

Scene IX.—Hiram Follows Beth. Down at the flag station Beth is waiting for the train. Just as it arrives Hiram drives up. In a few hurried words he explains all to Beth. The astonished conductor is told to move on and Beth finds herself with Hiram's dear arms about her hurrying to the buggy that is to take them back to the farm.

Scene X.—Miranda Deposed. Arriving home, they reach the house just as Miranda comes from it with a valise in her hand, ready to depart. True to her unforgiving nature, she is leaving Hiram's home rather than submit to the defeat of having Beth mistress there. Beth gives Miranda a look of gentle forgiveness as she passes, but Miranda ignores her and stalks grimly by. Hiram and Beth watch Miranda out of sight, then Hiram turns to Beth and, taking her in his arms, tells her that henceforth she is not only his bride but the mistress of both his heart and his home.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE CALL OF THE HEART.—A young widow is engaged to an old friend of the family. Having a daughter 16 years old, she asks her intended to keep the engagement secret until some later date.

The intended is coming on a visit. He is heartily greeted by his fiancee and more so by the daughter who recognizes her old friend.

A month has passed. The young daughter has fallen in love with her mother's intended, but he is too honest to let his heart get the best over his honor, having promised his hand to the young widow.

Accidentally the parting words of the lovers have been overheard by the mother, who seeing her mistake and only looking for the happiness of her child, tells her intended that she never can marry him and begs him to make her daughter happy. The call of the heart has been heard. Length, 670 feet.

OUR COUNTRY IN ARMS.—The picture opens with children playing soldiers. Boys and girls are in line and one of the little soldiers bravely defends the flag.

We next see the cadets at the military school in drills.

Boys and girls have grown up. The play has become serious. The soldiers are marching away.

The next generation is the Grand Army man. Grandfather, the Grand Army man, is visited by his sons, one of which is in the army, the other one a naval cadet, and by his grandchildren, who also have donned military uniforms.

The picture finishes with the North and South joining hands, Columbia laying a laurel wreath on both of them. Between them the American shield

NEXT Sand A FILM ISSUE

Two Jolly Little Comedies

"A CASE OF TOMATOES"
(Length Approximate 495 Feet)

"THREE REASONS FOR HASTE"
(Length Approximate 485 Feet)

"A LAUGH IN EVERY FOOT"

READY
Wednesday, September 15th

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.
62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

For Sale

A completely wired electric board sign reading "Family Theatre" in raised lights. Length 26 feet, height 2½ feet, each letter 18 inches, cost $150. Will sell very cheap. Inquire

A. NEWMAN
715 Westchester Avenue - New York City

SLIDES
of Highest Quality
LATEST SONG SETS

I Wonder If I'll Ever Have a Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Was I a Fool?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do for a Girl Like You.
Good-bye, Girlie, and Remember Me.
After 'While.
Bushel o' Kisses.
On a Monkey Honeymoon. (Posed by live monkeys.)
If I Had My Choice of the World's Pretty Girls.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

FOR RENT—6,000 ft. film 3 sets slides, one shipment $12 weekly; 12,000 ft. $20, one shipment.
FOR SALE—1,000 reels slightly used film 1c and 2c per ft. Power's, Edison and Lubin machines new $100. Will buy Machines and Film
H. DAVIS - - Watertown, Wis.

FILMS FOR SALE

50 Reels Film free from rain and scratches, titled and in good condition, $16.50.
20 Reels Film for sale at $12.50 per reel.

MAYER SILVERMAN
322 Futon Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample.

FORMULA $3.00

W. A. FORD, 309 N. Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500 OPERA CHAIRS IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

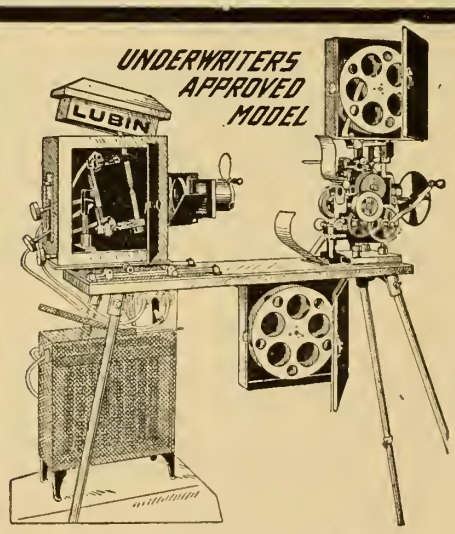
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF!
NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!
NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.



LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL

equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

Released Monday September 6th

THE CALL OF THE HEART

A picture dealing with a mother's love who gives up her own happiness for the sake of her daughter. LENGTH 670 FEET

OUR COUNTRY IN ARMS

From early childhood until the end of our days we are in arms. The spirit of 1776 is still in us. LENGTH 250 FEET

Released Thursday, September 9th

A TRUE PATRIOT

A stirring dramatic picture, beautiful in every respect. LENGTH 735 FEET.

GLIMPSES OF YELLOWSTONE PARK

A picture of scenic beauty just as the name implies. LENGTH 185 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

with the word PAX, meaning peace. Length, 255 feet.

A TRUE PATRIOT.—The English are hard pressed by the Americans. The English General wants to send a message to his regiment and promises a country lad fifty pounds if he will deliver the message safely. The country fool overhears the promise. The country lad asks for time to consider the proposition and in the dark of the night rides to the American General telling him of the English offer. He is advised to accept the money and deliver the message to the American General instead of the English. This our patriot does but not before he has been sworn not to divulge the secret.

When the father returns and is informed by the country fool that his son betrayed his country for money's sake, the enraged man takes an axe and strikes down his son. At this moment the American General with his staff enters to thank the lad for the great service rendered to his country. The father is prostrated when he learns how he wronged his son and with the wounded lad in his arms he begs forgiveness. Length, 735 feet.

GLIMPSES OF YELLOWSTONE PARK.—This is a very interesting film of rare natural beauty. It begins with a panoramic view of the "Mammoth Hot Springs," passing to "The Devil's Fire Hole." We have a panoramic view of the "Yellowstone Falls" (305 feet high) and of "The Canyon" (1,200 feet deep). Next we get "A close view of the falls," pass on to the "Giant Geyser Crater," a most beautiful sight. Senator Miles of Montana "Feeding the Elk" and "A Herd of Buffaloes" close this short but beautiful picture. Length, 180 feet.

BEFORE THE DAWN.—On the Verge of Bankruptcy. Clure for the sake of his family kept up appearances, even though he found himself on the verge of bankruptcy. Hale, his confidential clerk, is just conferring with Clure when his wife and daughter enter.

The Last Dollar. Mrs. Clure asks her husband for money. He gives her his last dollar and smilingly kisses her good-bye. Hardly has she gone when Clure drops to the floor, and before help can be brought dies of heart disease.

A Faithful Servant. There is consternation in the house when Mrs. Clure learns that she and her daughter have nothing to live from. She begs Hale to keep the news from Erna, which he promises.

Everything is Sold. Mrs. Clure sells all her household goods with the understanding that they remain in her use while Erna is courted by a rich young man. The faithful clerk pays the rent unknown to Mrs. Clure.

Working Weary Hours for Her Daughter's Sake. Mrs. Clure is embroidering. While her daughter is enjoying herself at balls and parties, she is sitting at home working to earn a living.

The Mother Discovers that the Faithful Clerk Pays the Interest on Her Furniture and Gives Up Her Home. The interest on the furniture is due. The men demand their money. The faithful clerk was just at their house to pay the interest but he missed them. He quickly runs to Mrs. Clure's home, but he comes too late. Mrs. Clure knows everything. She gives up her home and decides to live in a small garret room. Erna, her daughter, for the first time knowing the true circumstances, thanks Hale and promises to stay with her mother, happen what may.

Sunshine After Rain. It is a plain, cosily furnished room where the woman's loving hands now reign. A message is brought for Miss Clure from her intended, informing her that he is so sorry to learn the loss of her fortune. He informs her that he shall not be able to call on her in the near future as pressing business calls him ot once out of the city. Thus she learns the true character of the man she was to marry. Just then Hale enters, hesitatingly, confused. At last he takes courage and asks Miss Clure for her heart and hand. There a heartless youth speculated at her fortune and here stands a true heart, a man who made sacrifices for her, a man who loves her for her own sake. Could it be difficult to choose? And with a happy smile she says "yes." Length, 620 feet.

WIFEY AWAY, HUBBY AT PLAY.—The husband sends his wife for her recreation to the country. The parting is a very sad one for hubby and he almost cries his heart out not to see his sweet wifey for such a long time. Hardly has wifey gone when hubby invites a chorus girl and they have a good old time. In the evening he sends his wife a letter telling her how much he misses her. This brings wifey back at once to the great surprise and consternation of hubby. Length, 320 feet.

MIDNIGHT SONS.—Four young men had a good time at the club. It is midnight when they leave. They create some disturbance at the music hall from where they are finally ejected. The adventures of the leader are most curious and build the foundation of an excellent trick film. Length, 385 feet.

NEARSIGHTED MARY.—Mary applies at an employment office for work. She is so nearsighted that she nearly walks over the clerk. Having paid her fee she is handed a card on which is written her place of employment. She introduces herself and begins work. At once her troubles begin. She falls over everybody and breaks everything. She pours tea over the madam's dress and the soup over the master's head. She breaks the statuary at an Italian marble shop where she was sent for a marble statue. She really manages to bring the statue home unbroken but slips on the last step and the statue breaks in pieces. This is too much for the enraged master of the house and he pushes her down the step, where she upsets a policeman. She is now looking for another position. Length, 495 feet.

PATHE FRERES.

A VISIT TO BISKRA.—In this beautifully colored picture we present some realistic scenes taken in Biskra, a French possession in Arabia, and the public will enjoy the novelty of seeing and studying the manners and customs of the inhabitants of this place, which is situated on an oasis in the desert.

In the first part we get a good view of the surrounding desert, then looking over the town from the ruins of an ancient Turkish fort. The market place is shown with the natives going about, then some of the principal streets, and lastly is a parade of the native soldiers. Length, 443 feet.

SHOW YOUR LICENSE.—A hunter is having great sport bagging some fine game, when an officer puts in his appearance and demands to see his license. Having a keen sense of humor and wishing to put the officer of the law to great inconvenience and have a little fun at his expense, the hunter tells him that if he wishes to see the license he must chase after it, whereupon the sport starts to run. The policeman, who is an awkward, clumsy old fellow, starts in pursuit of his adversary, and the many funny situations that ensue are extremely amusing. The hunter keeps a fair distance ahead of his pursuer, but at times he stops long enough to strike the latter and tease him a little in order to arouse his wrath to an exciting point and keep up the life of the chase.

Finally the sportsman runs into a Summer garden where he orders some refreshments, and is just imbibing the alluring beverage when the officer comes upon him and demands to see the license. Without losing his gravity the fellow takes the document out of his pocket and satisfies the protector of the law that he is entitled to have as much sport as he desires without the interference of anyone. Length, 420 feet.

A GRAVE DISAPPOINTMENT.—A pretty girl who is employed in a large millinery establishment is called upon to deliver a hat to one of the customers. She takes the bundle and starts out, but before going far she has the pleasure of meeting her fiance, who invites her to partake of some refreshments. Entering a restaurant, the happy young couple take their places at a table, and all during the meal the youth makes desperate love to the girl. As she must be about her duties, the maiden begs to be excused, and after bidding her friend a fond adieu she hastens away.

The next picture shows the girl at work in the store several days later, when she receives a note from her fiance which gives her a terrible shock. The girl has been living in happy anticipation that some day she would become the wife of the youth, but now he realizes that her social position is such that it will be impossible for him to marry her, and he sends her the note stating that the engagement must be called off. The poor girl, now feeling that all hope has abandoned her, goes to her room where she decides to end it all by inhaling gas. A man living in the next apartment, who has always loved the gentle girl, but whom she cared little for, discovers the attempted suicide and rescues the would-be victim just in time. Upon hearing the girl's sad story, the noble fellow confesses his undying love for her, and begs her to forget her grave disappointment and become his wife. Length, 361 feet.

LAUNCHING THE "VOLTAIRE."—This interesting picture shows the wonderful feat of launching a large battleship in France. The monstrous sea lion is shown on the ways where everything is being made ready to give the signal to cut the ropes and let her slide gracefully into the water. She is cut loose and slides slowly down the ways amidst the cheers of the throng, dipping her keel into the water and floating for the first time. Length, 253 feet.

TRAINING BULLS FOR THE FIGHT.—In Spain, where the bull fight is the national sport, it is natural that a great amount of attention is paid to the rearing of the animals which are used for this sport. In the first picture we see the herders driving the bulls into the river, where they are compelled to swim in order to strengthen their muscles, after which they are driven through the country on a steady trot, all to give them the proper exercise. When they are ready to put in the ring they are driven to the village, where they are given a little practice every day, and this portion of the picture is very interesting, for it shows how they drive the bulls into the arena, and force them to fight the trainers. Length, 331 feet.

VERSAILLES.—Versailles is a place about eleven miles from the city of Paris, made famous by the magnificent marble palaces built by King Louis XIV., and which at the present time are kept up in their grandeur, forming a fitting memorial to the great kings of other days. It is one of the show places of Paris, and the public enjoy the privileges of visiting this magnificent place, which in the time of the Louis' was their private estate, but at the present time the massive buildings are used as public museums and the vast estate is a beautiful park. Great pains have been taken in the making up of this interesting picture, which shows all the principal buildings, the gardens and grand canal with its famous fountains. In the first portion of the picture a vivid idea is given of how the place appeared in the time of Louis XIV., and the latter portion shows the estate as it appears today. Length, 462 feet.

THEY ROBBED THE CHIEF OF POLICE.—This droll comedy shows the pompous chief of police taking his good wife to call upon some friends, leaving their home unprotected. While they are absent a couple of burglars come to their place with a wagon and are in the act of dismantling the rooms and loading the spoils on the wagon, when the couple unexpectedly return. The robbers, instead of running away, cover the chief of police and his wife with their guns and force them to carry some of the furniture down to the cart. The old chief having no weapon with which he can defend himself complies with the wishes of the burglars and is compelled to drag the wagon down the street. As the enraged couple are running along with the load they meet a couple of policemen, who, not recognizing their superior officer, arrest him. The burglars make their escape, and although the old chief tries in vain to explain the embarrassing situation, his word is not taken, but he and his wife are hurried off to the station. They are thrown into cells, and the reserves called out to find the other culprits. When some of the officers from his own station arrive on the scene they recognize their superior officer, and after many apologies he is turned loose. Length, 456 feet.

THE LITTLE SOLDIER.—In innocent childhood the little boy and girl are sweethearts, and as the years roll on their love for one another becomes stronger. The happy youngsters are patiently waiting for the time to come when they will be old enough to become man and wife. Finally the youth reaches his majority, and his father being a soldier, the son inherits the same fighting spirit, so one day he enlists in the army. The father of his sweetheart is the general, and although the youth is only a private, the proud commander feels that there is a social barrier which will prevent the young private from ever becoming his son-in-law. When the young couple are informed by the gruff old man that their friendship must cease, they both feel the sad disappointment keenly. The maiden feeling that there is no other interest in life without her sweetheart of childhood days, becomes violently ill, and although her father tries every possible way to divert her mind, it all proves fruitless. The lovelorn youth is affected in the same manner, and although his father pleads his cause with the old general, all hopes of a reconciliation seem remote. Finally feeling that he has done the young couple an injustice, the general accedes to the wishes of all his friends and gives his consent to the marriage of the young couple. Immediately they recover their health and receive the blessings from both proud fathers. Length, 394 feet.

SWEDEN—GOTHA CANAL.—In this interesting picture we are given the rare privilege of viewing some of the magnificent scenery around the city of Stockholm. On account of dangerous rapids in the river, the boats are compelled to pass through the Gotha Canal, and herewith is given a good picture of the locks in operation, showing the boat going through them, and then peacefully sailing down the stream. All along the river bank the scenery is magnificent, and a clear view of the ancient Vadsteva Castle is given. Length, 456 feet.

TOM THUMB.—This is a refreshing little fairy tale, full of good humor, with a touch of pathos, in which the leading character is portrayed by a little boy, who plays his part in a manner which is bound to hail approval from young and old, and make this picture stand out as one of the best in its particular class. In the opening picture we see the father and mother, who are too poor to support their large family of boys, take the youngsters out to the lonely wood and lose them. Tom Thumb, although the smallest of the lot, insists upon his brothers keeping up their courage, assuring them that he will eventually find them another home. He leads the little brood through the wood, and as they roam aimlessly along, tired and footsore, Tom discovers a tall tree. Telling the other children to wait for him, he climbs to the top of the tree, and from his elevated position sees a light in a house in the distance. Feeling that at last he has found a home for his little brothers, Tom quickly descends and leads his little band to the place, which happens to be the home of a vicious old giant. The good wife of the latter, when she sees all the little fellows, hides them in a wood box, but her husband upon entering the room soon discovers the hiding place of the little wanderers. The cruel old fellow immediately orders the youngsters off to bed, and they at once prepare to retire. The seven youngsters are all put in one bed, and in another bed in the same room are seven little girls with crowns on their heads. When all are asleep, Tom gets up, and taking the nightcaps off of his brothers, puts them on the heads of the little girls, and places the crowns on the boys. Through this act he saves the lives of his family, for in the middle of the night

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.
(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)
1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

SATISFACTION

In every slide or money back.

BABY SHOW SLIDES
(Colored)

Made from any good photo

50 cts.

2c. a Slide extra for postage.

Send for lists of Announcement and Special Slides :: ::

Some new illustrated songs $3.50 a set :: :: ::

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

THEATRE MANAGERS

Give away Souvenirs and keep the crowds coming

We handle the largest variety of Souvenirs and Premiums in the Country
Send for Our New Catalogue it is Free
H. C. Wood & Co., 112-114 5th Ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

Thomas W. Lawson's prescription for getting rich certainly applies to the moving picture business:

"Get a little money from a lot of people."

The Edison Kinetoscope is by far the most reliable and satisfactory machine you can buy. The pictures are steady and clear, the machine is easily and economically operated, is the most durable made and will more that save the difference in cost between it and a cheap machine by absence of repairs. The Edison is the money-maker for you.

Write to-day for booklet of full particulars and a copy of the "Edison Kinetogram."

EDISON FILMS
Releases of September 7th and 10th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 7

A DANGEROUS PAIR

Comedy. A newly married couple, after the customary "send-off," are made victims of a practical joke successful beyond anticipation. Arriving at their hotel, each receives a note warning that the other is subject to fits and describing symptoms, which in the case of each correspond to the relief suggested for the other. Full of laughs.
No. 6511 Code, VERSABILES Approx. Length, 520 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 7

THE TEMPTATION

Dramatic. A trusted employee, overcome by cupidity, disguises himself and attempts to rob his own home of a large sum of his firm's money. After overpowering his wife, he is frustrated by the intervention of a tramp whom she had sheltered from the blizzard. Intensely dramatic throughout and superbly enacted.
No. 6512 Code, VERSABUNDA Approx. Length, 475 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 10

THE MAKING OF HONEY

An educational film showing the improvements in the honey-making industry in comparison to the old-fashioned and less profitable methods of our fathers. The construction of the modern hive, artificial swarming, etc., are shown. Interesting and instructive.
No. 6513 Code, VERSADORES Approx. Length, 195 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 10

THE AMATEUR WILLIAM TELL

Comedy. A youthful admirer of the Swiss patriot starts on a rampage with a bow and arrow. His victims are many, his aim is good, and the result is an indescribably funny picture. The dream that follows his punishment is vividly shown, as is also its effect upon his rest.
No. 6514 Code, VERSAGUNG Approx. Length, 805 feet

Releases of September 14th and 17th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 14

LITTLE SISTER—Dramatic
No. 6515 Approx. Length, 1000 feet
Code, VERSALETES

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 17

HOW THE LANDLORD COLLECTED HIS RENTS—Comedy
No. 6516 Approx. Length, 460 feet
Code, VERSALILLA

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 17

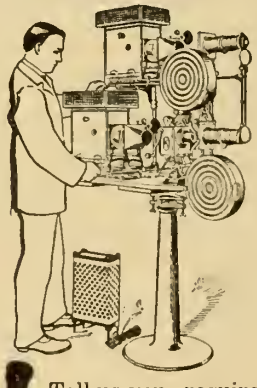
'TIS NOW THE VERY WITCHING TIME OF NIGHT—Comedy
No. 6517 Code, VERSALITA Approx. Length, 500 feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.
New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents
P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

the old giant comes into the room to cut off the boys' heads, but mistakes the girls and destroys them instead. Immediately the little brood jump out of bed and escape from the dangerous place, where their lives are in peril. The old giant soon misses the little fugitives and starts out in pursuit, but being tired and worn out he falls asleep under a tree. Little Tom steals his big boots, and when the giant awakens he is unable to proceed further on account of the tenderness of his feet, thus giving the youngsters an opportunity to make good their escape. They make their way back to the home of the giant, and the latter's good wife presents Tom with a magic wand and starts him on his way home, where, upon arriving, his poor parents are overjoyed to see their family once more. Tom makes good use of the magic wand and transforms everything from poverty into the splendor of riches, and under the guidance of the Fairy Queen the family are installed in a magnificent palace, and Tom Thumb is the hero of the hour. Length, about 1,016 feet.

CHASING A SEA LION IN THE ARCTICS.—This unusual subject is well worth seeing, for few people can ever hope to enjoy the rare sight of capturing sea lions in the Arctic regions. The first picture is taken from the deck of a large vessel as it piles its way through the region of icebergs, and some magnificent specimens of the latter are shown in the perspective. As the boat plunges along through the foaming deep, all on board become excited, for the alert sailors have sighted a sea lion floundering around on a large cake of ice. One of the men takes aim and is successful in killing the beast, and it is not long before they have him on board the ship, where he is skinned, after which the carcass is thrown overboard. Length, 371 feet.

SPORTS IN JAVA.—This unique and interesting subject, which is bound to prove a potent feature among the scenic pictures which have preceded it on the market, depicts some of the sports indulged in by the natives of Java. Their ideas of sport, while vastly different from most people on account of certain cruelties, is nevertheless interesting, being so wide apart from anything witnessed by Americans. In the first picture we are treated to a strenuous combat between two large bucks, after which the natives show their skill in handling themselves in a friendly bout. Next is a bow-and-arrow contest, and the marksmanship with the arrow by some of the contestants is indeed commendable. Lastly is a fight between two quails, and so intense is the combat between the game little creatures that the men are compelled at times to separate them. Length, 298 feet.

HOW TO TAME A MOTHER-IN-LAW.—In this home, which can be called anything but a happy one, the mother-in-law holds forth, and being jealous of the attentions paid to her daughter by the latter's husband, the old woman raises ructions and oversteps her authority by beating her son-in-law. The latter, after defending himself in no mild fashion, bolts from the house and goes to a hypnotic professor's office, where he attempts to learn the art of hypnotism, that he might use it to advantage in taming down the wild old woman. This scheme does not work, for the latter's mind is not so easily influenced, and when she learns the nature of the young man's scheme, she becomes more tyrannical than ever. Finally the unhappy man goes to a suffragette's court, where he states his case and asks for a little advice on the trying task of taming his mother-in-law. The gentle creatures formulate a scheme whereby he will find happiness in the company of the old woman if he will only try their plan. They tell him to try flattery as a last resort, and this the youth gladly consents to do. Going to a market, he purchases a large bouquet, after which he starts for home, and hardly has he entered the place when the old woman starts at him, but instead of stopping to quarrel with her, the man presents the old tyrant with the flowers. Immediately she falls a victim to his false flattery, and from that moment the best in the house is none too good for the favored son-in-law. Length, 351 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE BLIGHT OF SIN.—In a little river town of the South, early in the seventies, lived a young married couple with but one child, a bright little cherub, idolized by her father but neglected by her mother, who unfortunately was too young to realize the responsibility of motherhood. Jim Langdon, her honest and big-hearted husband, pondered long on the seeming coldness of his wife, little dreaming that the cause of it all is a mad and unreasonable infatuation for Joe Herndon, a gambler, who dressed well and lived at the best hotel. Poor little Mabel Langdon was dazzled by the veneer of this clever rogue, and so carefully did he plan his schemes and so seemingly sincere was he in his protestations of undying love that the young wife, without realizing the danger she is in, places herself in the gambler's power and consents to an elopement with the blackest of villains. The opening scene of the picture shows the wife planning to leave by the early morning boat with her paramour. A letter left at a trysting place instructs her to be in readiness to embark on the steamer "Gem," which leaves at daylight. We next catch a glimpse of the bar of the Hotel Royal, where Herndon is engaged in a game of cards with big Jim Langdon, the man he is seeking to ruin. Jim has lost nearly every dollar he has in the world, and that, with his domestic troubles, drives him to desperation, and forgetting all else but that the smooth, crafty gambler sitting opposite to him has brought him to beggary, he springs at the throat of his adversary and would throttle him but for the interference of others. Gathering up the stakes quickly, Herndon notes the time is fast approaching when he is to meet Mabel at the landing. He listens to his room, packs his valise, and makes his way quickly to the appointed spot, and is soon joined by the guilty wife. But back in the little home a baby girl awakens, and hearing no familiar voice to greet her cries, gets out of bed and toddles about the house to find her mamma. In vain she searches; then making her way to the front door she is soon outside the house and on her way down the street, crying for her papa. Reaching the entrance to the hotel, the child is found and taken to her father inside. With a cry of alarm the distracted man clasps his little one to his breast and questions her as to what brings her there and where was her mother that she allowed her child to wander forth on the streets alone and in such a garb. Then the revelation comes. Pinned on the gown of the baby is a crumpled note which Mabel had placed there. With trembling hands Jim unfolds it and reads the awful confession of his child's mother—that she no longer cares for him and has gone away with the man who has robbed him of every dollar he had in the world. With the cry of a wounded heart, the betrayed husband staggers to his feet and swears an oath of vengeance on the wrecker of his happiness. He is instantly surrounded by sympathizing friends, among them old Judge Hay, a fire-eating and fearless war veteran, who at once volunteers his assistance to help run down and punish "the miserable hoss thief and tinhorn gambler," as he expresses it. Someone suggests that the boat has not yet left and perhaps the guilty couple could be apprehended before they had time to embark. Jim and the judge hurry to the landing, but arrive just in time to see the "Gem" swing out into midstream, and catch a glimpse of the triumphant Herndon and the shrinking, terror-stricken wife. "Get horses at once, ride down to the levee as fast as we can go, overtake the steamer and pass her, then take a rowboat and board her," gasps the winded and excited judge. His suggestion is at once acted upon and carried out successfully. A small boat shoots under the prow of the steamer and two men fling themselves over the forward rail. It is Jim Langdon and his friend, the judge. The guilty couple see them as soon as the crew of the boat, and, completely unnerved, the gambler throws the terrified wife from him with brutal force and rushes aft to hide himself from the wrath of the avenging husband, leaving the woman in a dead faint on the deck. Now the chase begins, the gambler making desperate efforts to elude the maddened husband, while the wife, who has awakened from her swoon, pleads wildly with the officers of the boat to prevent bloodshed. At length, almost insane from fear, Herndon rushes below to the furnaces, and securing a burning brand hurls it into the midst of the cargo of turpentine, setting fire to the boat, and then dives headlong into the eddying waters and strikes out for the shore. Not being a strong swimmer, and ignorant of the treacherous currents of the river, his effort at escape proves futile, and battling desperately for his life, the unfortunate wretch sinks from view and is seen no more, thus ending a life of corruptness and sin. Now we return to the burning boat, where the crew are fighting furiously to quench the flames. A lifeboat is lowered, and, carrying the inanimate body of his wife in his arms, big Jim Langdon and his friend leap into it and in a few seconds are safely beyond the danger zone of the burning steamer. Back to town the saddened husband returns with his repentant and crestfallen wife. Her neighbors turn against her and flaunt her sin in her face. It is then that the big heart of her husband speaks and makes excuses for the erring woman. "She is too young to know her own mind," he explains to those who judge her, and so folding her on his breast he stands like a rock between her and the scoffs of those who would crush her further by their taunts.

THE STAMPEDE.—A Western picture in a new setting; the scenes are laid on an Oklahoma cattle ranch. The foreman of the ranch is in love with the owner's daughter, and how near this love comes to costing him his life forms the basis of the story. Ranch scenes never before introduced to motion picture audiences are embodied in this strange tale of love and hatred. Mabel, the ranch owner's daughter, returns Jack's affection, and has long promised him a photo that he may have a picture resemblance to cheer him during the long hours he is forced to be away from her while attending to the vast herds of cattle under his charge. We see Mabel ride into the prairie town for the daily mail, and as she passes an itinerant photographer's cart she remembers her promise and secures a picture. Jack has a rival, an unscrupulous neighboring ranch owner. He meets Mabel as she comes from the photo wagon and begs for the picture. Mabel coolly tells him that she intends to give the photo to Jack, and the rival leaves, vowing vengeance. We then witness a meeting between the lovers as Mabel rides out where Jack is on duty. The rival also sees the two, and, maddened by a realization of the success of Jack in winning Mabel's love, he determines to be revenged. A daring plan occurs to him as he rides by the monster herd. He knows that Jack is just out of sight. "I'll stampede them over that rise of ground," and his trained eye takes in the distances at a glance. The cattle, several thousand in number, are stretched over a range of nearly a mile; a wide river winds its crooked way just below. Jack is reclining half asleep, still gazing at the pictured features of the girl he hopes soon to call his own. The coward strikes his spurs into the flanks of his mustang and in two minutes has reached the head of the herd. Ranch-raised cattle feeding are a peaceful sight, but only those who have lived among them and cared for them can realize how easily they can be turned into a living and irresistible flood. Once started, panic seizes them, and only tired nature can stop their mad flight. A few rapid shots, a quick sharp yell, and frenzy seizes the mass. They are off. Jack's trained ear notes the sound as the stampede starts. He rushes to the top of the valley's bank and looks for his horse, but too late; he has taken the alarm and is off like the wind down the valley. "My God! someone has started them. I haven't a chance on earth." You are wrong, Jack. The woman who loves you has seen the danger and also knows intuitively what has brought it upon you. She turns her horse and rides for the life she loves, and as Jack in despair watches the death he cannot avoid, approach, Mabel's voice reaches his dazed senses. "Get up behind; Pinto will save us. The boys have seen the cattle and will turn them." Jack reaches the camp with the half-fainting girl and tells the story of the stampede, and with but little respect for the law the cowboys would have made short work of Jack's rival. However, justice seldom goes amiss where men and women live close to nature, and the neighbor gets his deserts to everybody's satisfaction.

For rapidity of action and surprising scenes depicting Western ranch life, even Selig has few such pictures as "The Stampede" to his credit. A new and stirring spectacle of life on the plains.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE HUNCHBACK.—Cursed with the deformity of a crooked spine and made the butt of the village jesters, the hunchback seeks at least temporary forgetfulness of his lot in the bottle. Earning a meager pittance as sexton of the church, his wages all go for drink, and he staggers about his duties sodden and filthy, a fair mark for his tormentors. His soul knows no peace, for his fellows allow him none, and his mind is more terribly deformed than his body by hatred and the wretched life he leads. He is seen first in the belfry of the church, where, after performing his duties, he drains the bottle and hurls it from him with terrible imprecations. He staggers down the rickety stairway and stumbles along to the common, where he throws himself into a seat before the inn and calls for more drink. He falls into a drunken stupor and a rural clown amuses himself and his fellows by tickling the hunchback with a straw. All roar with laughter when the sleeper seeks to dislodge the troublesome insect, but their laughter grows too boisterous and rouses the man from his slumber. With brute fury he charges his tormentors and strikes one of them to earth, for which he is arrested, and, in default of a fine, placed in the stocks, where the others have full liberty to continue their torments without fear of retaliation. Lady Gertrude, the Lady Bountiful of the village, comes upon him in the course of a charitable visit, and, paying his fine, obtains his release. She takes him into her own employ as a gardener, and a wonderful change comes over the erstwhile drunkard. With sobriety, his face loses its brutish cast, and the innate nobility of the man's real self shines out through untroubled eyes and is displayed in the fine markings of the well-cut features, no longer crusted with the dirt that, in his debauches, he took no trouble to remove. He worships Lady Gertrude with passionate adoration, and, when she encounters a gay young rake in the park of her estate and he seeks to steal a kiss the hunchback comes to her rescue and is restrained from wreaking vengeance upon her insulter only through her appeal. Later the libertine sends a lying appeal for her aid in his sickness, and, despite her misgivings, she consents to visit him. Arrived at the shooting box, where he is supposed to have been stricken, she is locked in the room with her pursuer. The hunchback, searching for his lady, finds the decoy letter and arrives just in time to strike down her assailant and his confederate. He receives his death thrust, but staggers home with Lady Gertrude, and not until she is safe does his great heart give way as he falls at her feet, faithful unto death. The subject is splendidly mounted and the action is spirited and compelling. An unusually good production. Length, 633 feet.

NIAGARA IN WINTER DRESS.—Taken last Winter, just as the famous ice jam was forming, the subject becomes doubly interesting. In these oppressive dog days the great masses of ice present a delightfully cooling suggestion to the mind, for the most famous falls in the world are in the grip of the Ice King. The ice mountains formed at the base of the falls by the frozen mist tower the ice pack, rising nearly to the height of a hundred feet, while the swift current flows beneath great masses of ice, over which the visitors to the Falls walk from side to side. The rapids above the

Every Exhibitor will want to Show SELIG'S GREAT PICTURE

THE BLIGHT OF SIN

Code Word "Sin" Length 995 Feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 2, 1909

Selig Polyscope Co. 45 RANDOLPH STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

Kalem Films

Issue of September 10th, 1909

HIRAM'S BRIDE

LENGTH 950 FEET.

A bucolic drama along entirely new and novel lines, woven around the marriage of a stalwart young farmer to a poor working girl from the city, against the wishes of his spinster sister. Full of beautiful, realistic scenes of farm life. The barn lot scene, with its flocks of ducks and chickens and its herd of cows, being one of the most effective ever shown.

Full Descriptive Lecture to All Applicants.

KALEM CO., Inc.

EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.

235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

BE INDEPENDENT

Don't be the Fall Guy for $2.
We have proven what we said

NO GUNC

It has increased our business.
New, Live stock at all times.
Not the kind that walks but
the kind that talks :: ::

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE

300 E. 23rd St. near 2nd Ave., New York City

ONE OF THE OLD TIMERS

Please mention The Moving Picture World when corresponding with advertisers.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 6, 1909.

"1776"

OR, THE HESSIAN RENEGADES

A story founded on an incident of the Revolutionary War, embracing a series of thrilling scenes never before excelled. It shows a young American despatch bearer being pursued by a band of Hessian guerillas, who seeks shelter in his father's house. The Hessians following, after subjecting the old man to gross indignities, find and kill the boy. For this the father vows vengeance, and, stealing from the house, gathers together the folks of the village, who armed with clubs, axes, scythes, etc., their arms having been confiscated, surprise the band of renegades and the old man fulfills his vow. The subject is an exceptional one, comprising beautiful scenery, powerful acting and unexcelled photography, and is destined to create a decided sensation.

LENGTH, 965 FEET.

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 9, 1909.

COMATA, THE SIOUX

A STORY OF AN INDIAN'S CONSTANCY.

Again we present a beautiful Indian masterpiece, the movement of which is entirely different from anything attempted in that line. Comata, the Sioux brave, deeply loves his chief's daughter. She, however, has given her heart to Bud Watkins, a white cowboy, with whom she runs off and marries. Comata looks with grief on what he premonishes a disastrous union. His fears are prophetic, for Bud after a couple of years tires of his Indian wife, and would have ran off with a trusting white girl who thought him single. Comata thwarts his design by exposing him to the girl, showing the child of the squaw as evidence. The poor heart-broken squaw takes her papoose and makes her way back to her mountain home, and Bud answers to Comata for his perfidy. The scenic splendor of the picture is indeed extraordinary.

LENGTH, 963 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects—MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

Falls are fairly open because of the swiftness of the current, but below the cataract the ice is packed solidly save at the whirlpool, and the camera operator shows every aspect of the ice-bound current. As a scenic presentation the subject is a remarkable one, the toning of the film addiug much to the pictorial effect. Several splendid panoramic effects are introduced and no phase of the river is overlooked. Length, 350 feet.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

THE PAYMASTER.—The opeuing scene of this Bison production shows Silver Bird, an Indian girl, riding on when she is met by Private Jones, who dismounts and attempts to drag her from her horse. Lieut. Barnes and a companion who enter dismount from their horses and go to assist the young girl. They bind and disarm Jones compelling him, at the point of a gun, to mount, and insist upon Silver Bird accompanying them to the fort to make charges against Jones. Major Pond after hearing Lieut. Barnes' report, and the Indian girl's story, orders that Jones be placed under arrest. Later he is marched before the Major and is dismissed from the ranks. After leaving the regiment Jones joins a band of outlaws. Silver Bird, hidden behind a rock, bears of a plan to rob Barnes, the Paymaster, when he goes to the depot for the money. While returniug from this quest Barnes is overtaken by the outlaws. Although he succeeds in disabling one, he, wounded, slips from his horse. The outlaws are overcome with astonishment at seeing Silver Bird grab the sack and ride quickly away. Here is seen a remarkable chase between the Indian girl and the outlaws. After reaching the fort, delivering the money to the Major and telling of all that has happened, orders are given to mount in search of the outlaws, Silver Bird leading the soldiers. During the excitement of the soldiers capturing the outlaws, Silver Bird dashes off to aid Barnes, whom she finds lying by the roadside. After making him comfortable, she helps him to mount the horse with her, and they ride away. The soldiers with their prisoners enter the fort. The Indian girl also returns with Barnes, whom the guards help to the ground. The Major thanks Silver Bird for her bravery, and Barnes, with gratitude, extends his hand, which she shyly takes.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

THE WISHING CHARM.—Professor Tompkins, of Boston, is in Egypt, looking for specimens of ancient pottery. His Egyptian servant unearths a peculiar looking casket, and breaks it open. A cloud of smoke arises and from it the enormous figure of a Geni appears. In gratitude for his release the Geni presents to the professor a silver charm, saying: "Who holds this charm shall have every wish granted." A puff of smoke and the Geni is gone. Tompkins wishes that he were home. He and his wife each believe the other to be ghosts. The Irish maid enters, sees the professor, drops her tray of dishes and collapses on a sofa. Later. The maid in dusting smashes a costly vase. The professor wishes the vase whole, and the maid, to show her gratitude, hugs him. Wifey comes in, sees this, and there is a picnic. The professor is explaining to his wife the wonder of the charm. A tramp comes up begging. A touch of the charm and Weary Will holds a sandwich and a bottle of beer. The tramp figures that anything that will bring beer and food so easily is too good for anybody else. He grabs the charm and dashes off with it, and now the fun begins. The professor and his wife, after chasing the tramp, are made to do a funny run backward. Perry, the dude, offended by the tramp's offer of a drink of beer from his "growler," is made to exchange clothes with the tramp. A driver beating a small mule is made to take the mule's place, and the mule is seen seated on the wagon enjoying his first ride. A man and his wife quarrel and fight over the mysterious disappearance of a growler of beer brought about by the tramp and his charm. They suddenly stop fighting, hug and kiss each other. A man and his girl drive up in an auto and the man goes into a house. The tramp flirts with the girl; he touches the charm; the automobile jumps across the street, the tramp enters and rides off with the girl. The girl's beau comes running up with a policeman, who is about to arrest the tramp. The policeman arrests the real owner of the auto and pulls him off to the station. The girl is made to kiss and hug the tramp. She sees the charm, asks about it, and the tramp explains. The girl seizes the charm and says to the tramp, "Go to the devil." His Satanic Majesty comes up out of the ground, seizes the tramp and pulls him down below.

THE DIAMOND NECKLACE.—Hallett, a stock speculator, urgently needs $10,000, and he borrows that sum from his friend Bradford, giving as security for the loan the famous Hallett diamond necklace, valued at $50,000. The necklace is placed in Bradford's safe. A week passes. Hallett calls, prepared to pay the loan, and demands his diamond necklace. Bradford goes to the safe, takes out the case, and Hallett opens it. The necklace is not there. Bradford and his wife are astonished and Hallett, furious, tells Bradford that unless the necklace is in his hands by the following day he will turn the matter over to the police. Bradford sends to New York for a detective. The detective sees the butler place a note under a vase. The detective reads the note, which is to the French maid, asking her to meet the butler in the woods. On the trail! We see the detective following the butler through the woods; the butler with a mysterious air hands the maid a package. The detective draws his handcuffs: creeps nearer. The maid opens the box and takes from it some candy.

Midnight. Bradford is in despair. To-morrow will bring disgrace. The detective is baffled. Suddenly footsteps are heard. The two men hide. A figure in white enters the library. It is Bradford's wife. She is walking in her sleep. The two men see her go to the library safe, then, as if remembering something, she goes out into the garden; she searches about the roots of a large plant, and placing something in the bosom of her robe, she goes back into the house, followed by her husband and the detective. The sleeping woman opens the safe, places the diamond necklace into the case, locks the safe and goes out. Bradford runs to the safe, opens it, takes out the case, sees the necklace, and he and the detective collapse in surprise.

Theatre For Rent

The finest and best appointed in the city, completely furnished, with well appointed stage, scenery, picture curtains, etc. Everything complete, ready for opening. Capacity, 429.

The Kinedrome, Schenectady, N. Y.

NOTICE

High Class Baritone wants engagement for winter in first class vaudeville or picture house. Will also act as press agent or assistant manager. Position must be permanent. Address T. H. Base, care of Moving Picture World.

If it has this Mark It is the Best

BRAYTON SLIDES

Have an Individuality Distinctly Their Own

Advertising Slides—No Two Alike

Made to Sell the Goods as Advertised

193 of the Most Beautiful Announcements

YOU SHOULD HAVE OUR LIST AND MONEY MAKING SCHEMES

BRAYTON MANUFACTURING CO.

122 East Randolph Street : : : Chicago

LEADERS NOT TRAILERS

Moving Picture Supplies at Special Prices

STERLING FILM COMPANY
32 Union Square - New York

Pink Label Electra Carbons, 5/8 x 6, $2.25 per 100.
Pink Label Electra Carbons, 5/8 x 12, $4.00 per 100.
Tickets, 8c. per 1,000.
Pure White Condensors, 55c. each.
Metal Slide Carriers, 75c. each.
Slightly Used Films, $10 and $15 per reel.
Opaque, 20c. per jar.
Cover Glasses, 8c. per doz.
Cement for non-inflammable and ordinary film, 15c. per bottle.
Agents for Hallberg Economizer, Power's and Edison Machines.
Goods shipped on receipt of money-order.

A BETTER SHOW A BETTER CHAIR

And 10 Cents Admission

That is what the live ones are bringing about.

Throw out your old chairs and put in stronger and neater ones—not necessarily expensive.

We carry good chairs in stock for prompt shipments. Write for Booklet T 13 and prices.

American Seating Company

CHICAGO
215 Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK
19 W. 18th Street

BOSTON
70 Franklin Street

PHILADELPHIA
1235 Arch Street

CINCINNATI, Mitchell Building

BRANCHES IN EVERY PRINCIPAL CITY IN THE UNITED STATES

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides

The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.

A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

Please mention The Moving Picture World when corresponding with advertisers.

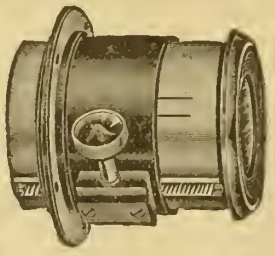
J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED SONG
ADVERTISING
ANNOUNCEMENT
SPECIAL

SLIDES

Special Slides Made to Order

58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614
CHICAGO



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY 110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc., Etc.

500 Reels of Film For Sale

One New Dressler Machine (complete) One Second-hand Power's Machine (complete) 1 New Lubin Machine (complete)
One Edison Machine (complete) OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents a foot

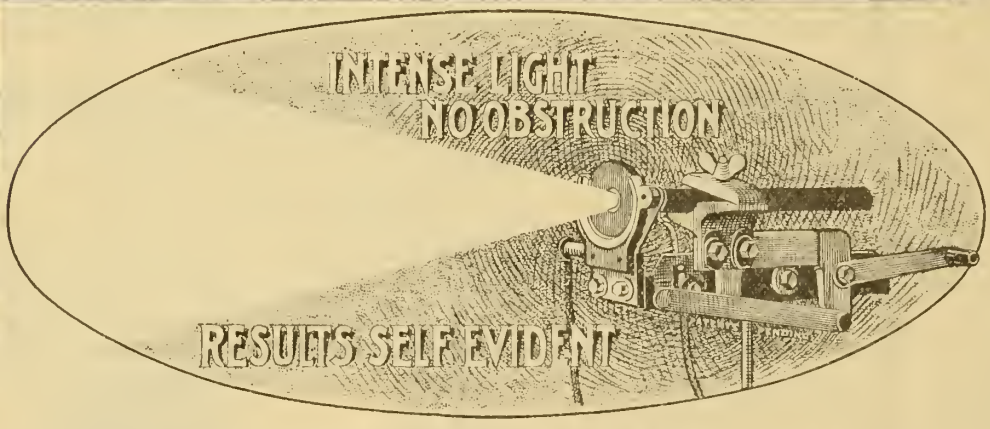
EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

"Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Camaers, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York



$25,000 GIVEN AWAY TO INTRODUCE THE MARVELLOUS NEW FUNNEL ARC BURNER FOR MOVING PICTURE MACHINES

When operating your burner is it not a fact that you endeavor to have the crater, which is formed on carbon point as near as possible towards the screen? You know what the results would be if the crater always pointed directly towards the screen.

WITH OUR NEW FUNNEL ARC BURNER THIS CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED.

There are over 60,000 picture machines in operation in the United States and Canada, and in order to introduce our burner we are going to dispose of 2,000, or a little over 3% of that number, at HALF PRICE. When they are sold the price will be doubled. This is our method of introducing the burners and is no catch-penny proposition.

A TWO-YEAR GUARANTEE

against imperfections in workmanship and material furnished with each machine.

The public is quick to recognize the theater that is first in the field with the latest improvements.

"THE THEATER WITH THE BEST LIGHT" is a reputation worth striving for. A glance at the illustration will convince you that the RESULTS ARE SELF-EVIDENT.

Your competitor will see it as quick as you and nine chances out of ten will send his order.

We can ship the first 2,000 burners promptly; after that there will be a few weeks' delay in filling orders. Can you afford to be two or three months behind your competitor on so important a proposition?

Send your order in to-day. Remember you have but

ONE CHANCE IN THIRTY OF SECURING BURNER AT HALF-PRICE.

Price of burner complete with one pencil carbon and one dozen disc carbons with express charges prepaid is only $12.50. Terms, cash with order. Address

THE DENISON MFG. CO., WARREN, OHIO, Box 25

Points of Superiority

1st. As the crater is directly on the point of pencil carbon and the light is thrown on screen through the hole in disc carbon you receive all the light from crater. With all other burners fully 40% of the light is lost owing to the obstruction of carbons.

2d. There is absolutely no chance for short circuits, as all connections are made to solid parts. With all other burners this is an impossibility. In ease of operation, workmanship and quality of material our burner is unequalled.

Our Reliability

As to our reliability we refer you to Dun or Bradstreet's, also to any bank in Warren.

How to Order

When ordering burner be sure to state name of machine and lamp house you are using. Prices of disc carbons, 35 cents per dozen. Each disc will last from three to four shows.

GEO. MÉLIÈS

Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co.

204 East 38th Street, New York

The new pictures we put on the market this month are the acme of perfection.

The first American headliners released will include

"THE ROSE," a story taken from life, with intense interest from beginning to end.

"THE STOLEN WIRELESS," a war-time story.

"FOR THE CAUSE," a farcical subject, full of humor.

"THE RANCHER'S DAUGHTER," &c. &c.

No expense has been spared to produce pictures which will appeal to the American public. They are of the highest order.

The names of the winners in the prize contest will be announced as soon as the judges have completed their work.

Rental exchanges should send in their standing orders as these subjects will be in great demand by exhibitors.

There will be no extra charge for these prize pictures.

Our first release will take place on or about September 15th.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York

Phone 4267 Orchard.

Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs

Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office, 44 Park Place

Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Western Office,

Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.

ASHLAND, OHIO

CALEHUFF

A Member of the FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk. MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES

$5.00 per set

N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets,

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

Latest Song Slides Moving Picture Supplies

First Class Independent Film Service

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL CO.

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Main Office: 214 Sixth Avenue near 14th Street - - NEW YORK

Branch Office: 118 Bower Street, Jersey City Heights. Tel. 4006 R Jersey.

FILMS FOR RENT

6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week

$2.00 per change all in good condition

Signs and Banners no extra charge

FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY

Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.

Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

FIBRE, BRAINS AND HUSTLE

have made the Bal Fibre Trunks the lightest, strongest and most serviceable moving picture machine trunks on earth. If the best is not too good—Buy a Bal.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE—W

WILLIAM BAL, Incorporated - - 210 West 42d Street, New York

Mr. Exhibitor!

Why not have your Motion Picture Machine in first-class condition? It will Improve your show. This is the time to do it. :: :: :: ::

MODEL MACHINE AND REPAIR SHOP

Phone, Central 5554

125 South Clark Street, Chicago, Ill.

Anti-Trust Film Co.

Very Latest and Best Motion Picture Films for Hire

All Makes Motion Picture Machines

ANTI-TRUST FILM CO.

77-79 South Clark Street :: Chicago

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH CO.

Sept. 2—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).....779 ft.
Sept. 2—The Little Darling (Comedy).....211 ft.
Sept. 6—"1776," or the Hessian Renegades (Dr.)..965 ft.
Sept. 9—Comata, the Sioux (Dramatic).....963 ft.

EDISON MFG. CO.

Sept. 3—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 3—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Dramatic) ———
Sept. 7—A Dangerous Pair (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 7—The Temptation (Dramatic)..... ———
Sept. 10—The Making of Honey (Industrial).....190 ft.
Sept. 10—The Amateur William Tell (Comedy)....810 ft.
Sept. 14—Little Sister (Dramatic).....975 ft.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Sept. 1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (Comedy).952 ft.
Sept. 8—Justified (Dramatic) .....970 ft.
Sept. 15—A Case of Tomatoes (Comedy).....495 ft.
Sept. 15—Three Reasons for Haste (Comedy).....485 ft.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

Sept. 1—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).....627 ft.
Sept. 1—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).....340 ft.
Sept. 7—First Airships Crossing the English Channel (Scenic) .....510 ft.
Sept. 7—The Mason's Paradise (Comedy).....414 ft.
Sept. 8—The Stolen Gems (Dramatic).....464 ft.
Sept. 8—Glimpses of Paris (Scenic).....417 ft.
Sept. 11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dramatic).....940 ft.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.
(George Kleine.)

Aug. 31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).....404 ft.
Aug. 31—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).557 ft.
Sept. 4—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).....514 ft.
Sept. 4—Romantic Italy (Scenic).....437 ft.

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug. 27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Comedy)..575 ft.
Sept. 3—The Pay Car (Dramatic).....930 ft.
Sept. 10—Hiram's Bride (Dramatic).....—— ft.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 30—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).....580 ft.
Aug. 30—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).....305 ft.
Sept. 2—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).....810 ft.
Sept. 6—The Call of the Heart (Dramatic).....670 ft.
Sept. 6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic).....255 ft.
Sept. 9—A True Patriot (Patriotic).....735 ft.
Sept. 9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Scenic)....200 ft.

PATHE FRERES.

Sept. 6—Versailles (Scenic) .....462 ft.
Sept. 6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (Comedy).456 ft.
Sept. 8—The Little Soldier (Dramatic).....394 ft.
Sept. 8—Sweden—Gotha Canal (Scenic) .....456 ft.
Sept. 10—Tom Thumb (Dramatic).....1016 ft.
Sept. 11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics (Sc.)..371 ft.
Sept. 11—Sports in Java (Scenic) .....298 ft.
Sept. 11—How to Tame a Mother-in-law (Comedy).351 ft.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

Aug. 30—Mrs. Jones' Birthday (Comedy).....540 ft.
Aug. 30—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).....450 ft.
Sept. 2—The Blight of Sin (Dramatic).....995 ft.

VITAGRAPH CO.

Sept. 4—The Galley Slave.....885 ft.
Sept. 7—The Fisherman (Dramatic).....430 ft.
Sept. 7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dramatic).....564 ft.
Sept. 11—An Alpine Echo (Dramatic).....990 ft.

A Money Maker

Historic Slides of

HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION

With Lecture

Phone, Wire, Write or Call

American Film Brokers

145-157 Fourth Avenue, New York

Telephone 2314 Stuyvesant

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

WANTED—Man to handle moving picture house. Salary and commission. State qualifications fully. Permanent. BIJOU THEATER, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

WANTED—Combination Pianist and Singer. Address, with full particulars, BIJOU, Lakewood, N.J.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

AT LIBERTY, experienced Moving Picture Operator, can also operate the Cameraphone; ready to go on the job at once. Chas. Lord, 59 E. 21st street, New York City.

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 300 W. 45th St., New York City.

Choke Coil For Moving Picture Machines

USING ALTERNATING CURRENT

Guaranteed to save 60% Meter Bills for Current

Takes the place of the rheostat and its heat
Will pay for itself in from one to two month's running

Price, $18.50

Address, L. A. FREUDENBERGER
Newark, Delaware

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

The outlook for fall easily skins anything known in the history of moving pictures. Hundreds of exhibitors saw this coming, so they kept their houses open all summer. They scented some of the big doings that are afoot. The result has been a tremendous summer business, even my New York office (as yet only an infant) being hard pressed to handle its trade. I am going to spring a few surprises on my own hook before long and my customers as usual will get the first benefits. If you are not dead certain you are hooked up with an exchange which will keep you abreast of the times, write to me and let's have a heart to heart talk. Don't let sentiment stand in the wa of your prosperity. See that youyget the finest films and the swiftest service your money will buy. Connect with the Laemmle bunch!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE Laemmle Film Service

(196-198 Lake Street)
CHICAGO

(111 East 14th Street)
NEW YORK

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville, Ind.
Omaha Neb. Salt Lake City, Utah
Portland, Ore. Montreal, Can.

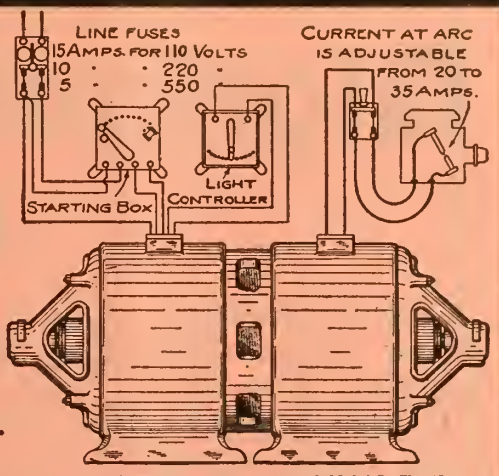
THE BIGGEST AND BEST FILM RENTER IN THE WORLD

ATTENTION

M. P. Men! Here is the

HALLBERG

Electric Economizer for Direct Current



HALLBERG-D. C. ECONOMIZER

Guaranteed to SAVE 50 to 85 per cent. on your bills for M. P. Lamp current. Here is another PROOF of satisfaction.

PICTURELAND
645 Penn Street
Finest Moving Picture House in the City

Reading Pa., July 8, 1909.

MR. J. H. HALLBERG,
30 Greenwich Ave., New York.

Dear Sir—It is now four months since we installed your direct current "HALLBERG ECONOMIZER," and machine has always given entire satisfaction.

It saves fully 50 per cent. on the current bill. The machine requires practically no attention whatever except occasional oiling and cleaning. Machine runs very quietly, current is very steady and machine does not heat up like a rheostat. I have the machine in the basement and the controlling apparatus is mounted in the operating booth. Thus I have perfect control over the light at all times.

The market is full of A. C. current savers, but M. P. managers having direct current have looked in vain for a current saver that could be used on D. C. Your D. C. "HALLBERG" Economizer will fill a long felt want, and I cannot recommend it too highly. Wishing you success, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM H. WAGNER.

Get in communication with me Mr. M. P. Man, I have many good things for you, among them Hallberg Economizers for all kinds of electric lighting—4,000 C. P. Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "Electra Pink Label" Carbons is complete. I also handle the best M. P. Machines, and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices they are interesting.

Write for FREE booklet No. 3W.

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Avenue, New York

Chorus of Moving Picture Men

The Summer has gone to the Country

HOORAY! HOORAY!

Are you trying to discover the best Film Exchange in town?

Where to get the best Film Service for the fall?

DON'T WORRY!

We are on the job

Commencing Sept. 1st, we will release 21 reels of film weekly

Exhibitors' Film Exchange

PHONE 2775 STUYVESANT

138 Third Ave. Between 14th and 15th Sts.

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, September 10th

THE PAYMASTER

Dramatic | Code Word, Repose | Approx. Length 1,000 ft.

This is a sensational production of unusual merit, embodying several startling features, and shows how Silver Bird, an Indian girl, saves Lieut. Barns, the Paymaster, from a band of outlaws.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

Glorious September

IS HERE

Month of magnificent business opportunities for the progressive, far seeing, Moving Picture Theatre Managers who utilize every agency for getting and keeping business; and good Films are one of the most Powerful and Effective of these Agencies. And, Mr. Manager, let us give you a quiet TIP, insist that your exchange furnish you with CENTAUR FILMS.

Note the Following Headliners

SEPTEMBER 8th

The Wishing Charm

(A Comedy Trick Picture)

Length approximately 455 Feet Code Word "Charm"

The Diamond Necklace

(Dramatic Mystery Story)

Length Approximately 545 Feet Code Word "Jewel"

Attractive Posters Supplied with all Centaur Films

WATCH FOR THE BIG FEATURE FILMS

Great Airship Flights at Rheims

RELEASED ABOUT SEPTEMBER 11th

The Bull Fight

RELEASED LATE IN SEPTEMBER

This will be a Box Office Winner and all Managers who show this Film will have to hang the S. R. O. sign out

---

Descriptive Circulars Free to all Applicants

CONTROLLED EXCLUSIVELY BY

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23rd Street - - - - New York

SPECIAL Dr. Cook Discovers The North Pole

A Cable from Copenhagen reads as follows:

Northfilm, New York. Copenhagen, Septemder 2nd.

"The North Pole discoverer Dr. Cook will arrive here Saturday, September 4. It is the intention of the populace to give the intrepid explorer an enthusiastic and elaborate reception. We will take a picture of the event which we will ship you on first steamer bound for the U. S."

NORTHFILM.

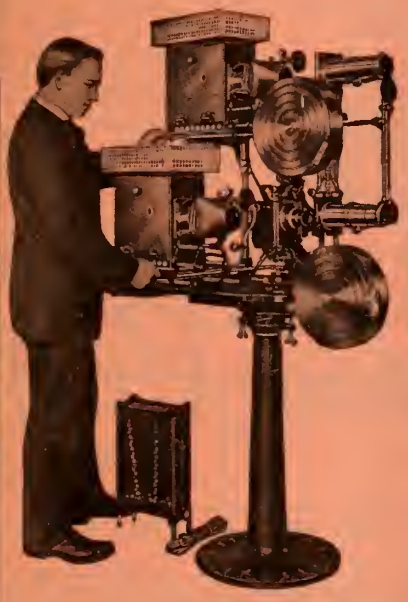
Wire orders for this unique subject, which honors an American citizen, at once. Released about September 22nd.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN

7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

WHY—The Motiograph is the Best Motion Picture Machine



Because the Pictures are More Brilliant. The special patented Shutter is so arranged that it saves a lot of illumination otherwise lost.
Because Flicker is eliminated by the new patented Shutter.
Because the Pictures are Rock Steady when using a good film, and are restful to the eyes of your patrons. The result is because of accurate workmanship and excellence of design.
Because it has patented quick Rewind (one and one-half minutes) connected to main crank handle. No other similar.
Because it has the only perfect Fire-proof Shutter, automatic and absolutely reliable.
Because it has Enclosed Spiral Gears. They work smooth and wear longer.
Because it has a Perfect Take Up. Easy on the film and always reliable.
Because it has inclosed Framing Device. Wears longer, is quickly removed and patented.
Because it has "Wide Open" Lamp House, convenient for changing carbons, adjustment, etc.
Because it is absolutely Fireproof.
Because it has Double the Wearing Qualities possessed by other Machines.
Because it is almost Noiseless; runs more quiet than any other.
Because it has Heavy Pedestal Base, adjustable and patented.
Because it has more than 40 other points of special merit. Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco approved.

SEE WHAT USERS SAY:

ON MARCH 28TH, F. L. F., CHICAGO, ILL., SAYS:
"I purchased my Motiograph Machine latter part of August, and have not spent one penny for repairs since. To say that I am pleased can hardly express it."

D. F. E., DENVER, COLO., FEBRUARY 1ST, SAYS:
"I have not sold a Motiograph to anyone who is not delighted with it."

O. T., GREAT FALLS, MONT., JUNE 7TH, SAYS:
"It's running fine, and we get the picture and the 'Biz.' We cannot say enough for the Stereo Motiograph. A snap for any operator."

M. F. F., OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., MAY 18TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph is the talk of the town."

E. T. S. CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA., JUNE 2ND, SAYS:
"Machine at the Grand Opera House is a dandy, and is daily making Motiograph converts."

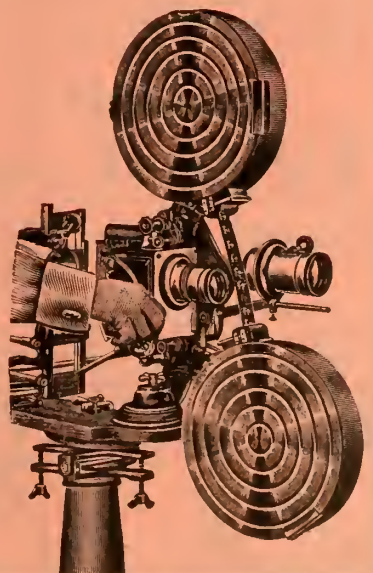
P. & K., ST. ANTHONY, IDAHO, APRIL 16TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph projects the best picture in the country. We show a much better picture than our competitors."

Hundreds of Others Say Similar Things

OUR CATALOG will tell you lots of interesting things about Motion Picture Machines. Write for it To-day

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

564-572 West Randolph Street - - - Chicago, Ill.



Rewinding the Film on the Motiograph

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

Films—Gaumont—Films

COMING! COMING!

Licensed by Motion Gaumont Picture Patents Co.

"Saved from the Quicksands" — Gaumont Dramatic 600 Feet

A thrilling drama, representing the rescue by the Monks of St. Michael's Mount, Cornwall, England, of an exhausted wayfarer caught between the tide and the quicksands. In order to reward his rescuers the talented wanderer sings to them while playing on the mandolin, and also undertakes to paint a sacred picture. While engaged in this latter work the artist falls asleep. Angels appear and miraculously complete the picture, which is marvelled at and worshipped by the awe-struck monks and the amazed traveller.

COMING! COMING!

Films-Urban-Eclipse-Films

Licensed by Motion Picture Patents Co.

"Breach of Promise" — Urban-Eclipse Comedy 484 Feet

A comedy of matrimony. A gay young actress receives in her morning's mail a newspaper, containing the announcement of the coming wedding of her former admirer with another girl. The enraged actress runs to the house of the young man and chastises him soundly, leaving him locked up in his room, after he had admitted the truth of the announcement. The unfortunate lover escapes from the window and hurries to the place appointed for the wedding, only to arrive there late. He is severely reprimanded by his intended bride and by the other people present. In utter disgust he renounces his purpose and declare that he prefers to remain single.

IMPORTED BY

George Kleine

52 State St., CHICAGO - 19 East 21st Street, NEW YORK

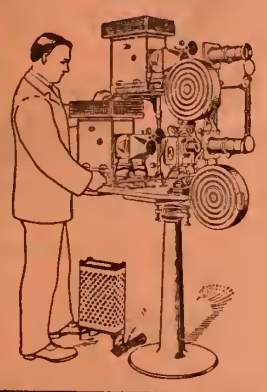
Vol. 5.. No. 12. September 18, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WHICH IS INCORPORATED WITH THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."

F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes, but none to compare with Motiograph.—

PRICES. $150.00 AND UP

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light
Write for Catalog today

Calcium Gas Outfit

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

Eagle Film Exchange

One of the signs of the times, is the fact that business is drifting to the best houses, our independent service is unsurpassed.

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarc.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY COMPANY :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

KEEP YOUR EYE ON US

Hudson-Fulton Celebration Slides with lecture artistically colored. For Rent or Sale. Write, Phone, Wire, or Call

TELEPHONE 2314 STUYVESANT

American Film Brokers, German Savings Bank Bldg., 145-157 4th Ave., New York

A WORD TO THE WISE

Successful Moving Picture Exhibitors Use

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH

The best results with alternating current are obtained with

POWER'S INDUCTOR

SEND FOR CATALOGUE G AND CIRCULAR A

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY, 115-117 Nassau Street, New York

Listen To This, Mr. Exhibitor!

I am in better shape to give you a high class film service this Fall than any film renter in the world. My selection of new subjects is the marvel of the film world. I have positively the best things from everywhere and everybody, and I am going to maintain the lead in schemes and plans to help boost the receipts of my customers. There is no use in your limiting your possibilities by dealing with half-baked rental agencies when you can just as easily deal with the biggest and best film renter on earth. To exhibitors and operators who have been clamoring for service from my new office in New York I say this:—I am not going to take you on until I can keep all the promises I have made about giving you a typical Laemmle service. But if you find the people you are now dealing with are turning the screws too tight, let me know and I'll take care of you if I have to buy ten times as much stock as I ought to!

Not a single film renter in the world shows half the enterprise that my offices do in plugging for the exhibitor's benefit. If you believe this, you ought to take advantage of it. Slip me a line today!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

CHICAGO OFFICE: 196-198 Lake St. NEW YORK OFFICE: 111 East 14th St.

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville, Ind. Omaha, Neb. Salt Lake City, Utah. Portland, Ore. Montreal, Can.

The Largest and Best Film Renter in the World—I CAN MAKE IMMEDIATE SHIPMENTS ON ALL MAKES OF MACHINES, ETC.

For Two Years the Standard
"CURTAINYLINE"

The only absolutely fire-proof curtain paint on the market. When such exhibitors as the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, Geo. H. Hines' "Senate Theatre," Thompson's "Pastime" and all the high-class moving picture houses in Chicago and throughout the country use Curtainyline in preference to any other paint on their curtains, certainly this is proof sufficient that Curtainyline will do all we claim for it.

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE

Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $3.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock.

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

CURTAINYLINE CURTAIN AND PRODUCING COMPANY, Inc.
Room 405 Northwestern Building, 22 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles. We make all kinds of Special Annoucement and Advertisement Slides.

Ladies Popularity and Baby Contest Slides, plain 50c. Colored 75c.

All accessories and plan for carrying out all contests furnished

WRITE FOR OUR LIST AND PRICES

NEW PROCESS FILM TITLE COMPANY

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

Made in France
1909 Model
PATHÉ
PROFESSIONAL

COMPLETE OUTFIT, $225.00

Built for long wear.

Approved by the New York board of fire underwriters.

For sale by all leading film exchanges.

PATHÉ FRERES

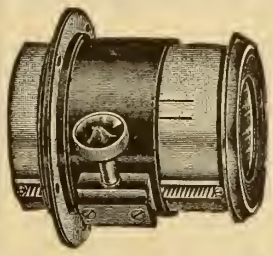
NEW YORK 41 West 25th St.
CHICAGO 35 Randolph St.
NEW ORLEANS, 813 Union St.

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies. : : : :

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND —OHIO—



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

Box Ball Doubles the Profits of Your Theatre

$800 a Month With No Expense But Rent!

Moving picture shows pay out big money every week for employes, song slides and film rental. But Box Ball is a business that often brings in $200 in six days, yet has absolutely no expense but rent. One customer with four alleys took in $1,845.20 in 59 days.

Customers who spend only five cents in the theatre spend more than a dollar at Box Ball. Crowds are quickly fascinated with this new game. They never tire—the more they play the more they want to keep on playing. No one wants to quit loser, so he plays game after game—often spending hours when he first intended to spend a few minutes.

When the crowds are in your theatre give them free tickets for the first game. Every one will play at least once and many will become regular customers. Women and children play as well as men—they form teams and clubs and often spend a whole afternoon or evening.

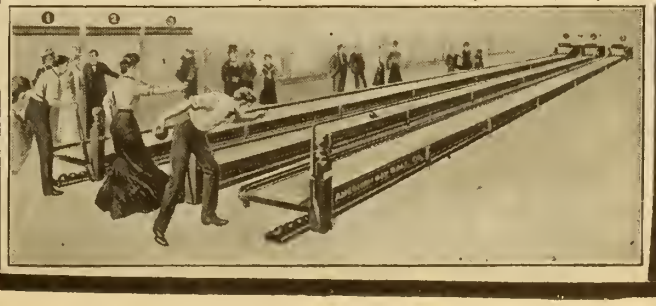
Install one of these money-making games in connection with your theatre. Rent the room above or get the store next door. Put in two or more alleys and you will be simply amazed at the wonderful profits.

Your only expense will be rent. Players set the pins with a lever and the balls are automatically returned. One man to collect the money is all you need, and he can care for as many as ten alleys.

One game usually lasts six minutes with two players. At 5 cents each that's $1.00 an hour from every alley—you can figure the profit yourself. With ten hours' play two alleys will bring you $20 a day, or $120 every six days.

Send for our free booklet and learn how you can own one of these great money-making games for only a few dollars down and the balance payable from your profits. Remember—you pay just a few dollars down, and your profits the very first month should more than pay the entire cost of the outfit. Write for booklet at once. Address

AMERICAN BOX BALL CO., 1911 Van Buren Street, Indianapolis, Ind.



NORTH POLE

Dr. Cook discovered the North Pole only recently, but a great many theater owners and managers have discovered an up-to-date Song Slide Exchange, many moons ago, and they don't besitate in proclaiming

The Chicago Song Slide Exchahge

9th Floor Masonic Temple :: Chicago, Ills.

the only exchange where you get complete sets from title to chorus, two copies of music with each set, at the small rental of 50 cents per week, and your full week's supply shipped in one consignment.

NO FAKE

No faked-up sets from our house. Many times we have been asked to fake up a song; we will positively not do so; please do not ask us. We are in the game to uphold it, and not down it by dupe song slides. We furnish disc and cylinder records. Write us for particulars. All correspondence answered promptly. Any information asked for cheerfully given.

Write Us Try Us

OUR PREMIER FILM SERVICE

is the result of heavy purchases of the entire output of the Licensed Manufacturers—nothing about it is guess work. We sure have the Film Service that is THE BEST. :: ::
How about an inquiry.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio. Omaha, Neb.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14:

THE LITTLE FATHER

Bereft of her husband and with three children to support, Mrs. Northfield makes a scant living by dressmaking, helped by Bobby, the eldest of the three, who runs errands and serves a newspaper route. Accused of theft by one of her patrons, Mrs. Northfield is convicted upon circumstantial evidence and is sentenced to prison. The burden of the family falls upon ten-year-old Bobby, but the "Little Father" manages so well that when the discovery of the hiding place, where the owner concealed her jewels and forgot them, results in the release of the mother, she finds Bobby the proud and happy owner of a prosperous newsstand. The little girl has new dresses and the baby a new coach, all supplied by the brave youngster. A simply told tale that will attract the feminine and juvenile patronage.

LENGTH, 610 FEET.

THE WEALTHY RIVAL

One of the most thoroughly artistic humorous subjects ever produced. A wealthy nobleman seeks to cut out his American rival at the seashore. His money and title have some effect, but when the object of his adoration is capsized in her canoe and he runs for help instead of bodily plunging to her rescue, the laugh is turned against him when it is found that the water is only waist deep. His discomfiture is complete, and again Young America triumphs. This series was taken along Long Island Sound and shows some of the most perfect bits of that picturesque coast.

LENGTH, 360 FEET.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18:

THE MARBLE HEART

A splendid pantomimic production of this dramatic classic, made under the stage management of a master of the craft. In the prologue the love of Phidias, the young sculptor, for the lovely Phryne, and her desertion of him for the wealthy Gorgias, is interestingly told amid handsome settings of ancient Greece. In more modern times the characters find themselves again upon earth, and their changed names do not alter their characteristics. Now it is Raphael who loves Marco of the Marble Heart, but again his love is unrequited because of the superior attractions of Vandre, who has wealth and position to offer where Raphael can offer only love. She finds when it is too late that this is the more precious possession, and she mingles her tears with those of Marie over the dead body of the artist. The Marble Heart is a favorite with stock companies, and this production will attract the attention of the theatergoers. It is a splendid accomplishment from every point of view.

LENGTH, 968 FEET.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA { NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World
The Exhibit.

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company,
125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative,
913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 SEPTEMBER 18, 1909 No. 12

Editorial.

Children and the Moving Picture.

Amongst the thousands of readers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, we have many, many young people of both sexes for whom there is a warm corner in the editorial heart. Some of these we know personally, and we are delighted to know that week by week these pages are carefully studied and that they are leading, on the part of these highly educated children, for such they are, to real appreciation of the dramatic and other possibilities of the moving picture. The stories of the films and criticisms are attentively followed—so attentively that we have been surprised at the intimate knowledge of the pictures which our young friends possess. Only last week one bright girl, fresh from an ocean resort, asked her parents for the latest copies of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, which she had missed during her absence.

There are many similar signs of an intelligent interest in the moving picture taken by American children. Whenever we go to a moving picture theater we have a keen eye for the effect made upon the minds of the children. It is one of our greatest pleasures in life to watch the rapt attention which they give the pictures, to watch their wondering eyes and the expression on their faces which indicates wonderment, interest and attention. It is the same with all degrees and classes of children—the prosperous, the highly educated, the children of the very poor. Some months ago, when we were in Mr. Jacob's Bronx Theater, the house held seventy per cent. of children from infancy up to adolescence, and it amazed as well as pleased us to note their absorbed interest in the pictures.

Here history is repeating itself. Do we not all, those of us who are no longer young, remember the effect made upon our minds (as children) by magic lantern pictures, the kaleidoscope, the thaumotrope, the dark lantern, dissolving and other optical phenomena on the screen? The love of most of us for these things has lasted through life, because of the depth of those earlier impressions.

And so it clearly is and we believe will be, irrespective of the moving picture and its effect upon the minds of the rising generation, the more especially as the pictures have the marvelous, and, to the infantile mind, almost miraculous, property of motion. Children are good judges and good critics. They have the intuition for what is good. Take the case of books especially written for them. How they fondly cling to fairy stories, stories of adventure, and good deeds! Try them with the literature of modernity or realism and see how they instinctively recoil from it.

The future of the moving picture, of course, rests with the children. The love they are conceiving for it just now will probably never leave them. Their children, too, in their turn, will no doubt take the same attitude. Consider, then, what terrible danger was done to the minds of these young people, and, of course, to the moving picture industry, by the prevalence of the unsatisfactory and undesirable pictures which the good sense of the American people killed off some time ago, once and for all and forever. It is consoling to reflect that at the present time the minds of our small patrons, the future sovereigns of the country, are being properly fertilized by moving pictures which seldom nowadays merit censure in respect of unsuitability of subject.

Government Recognition of the Moving Picture.

It is not generally known that Uncle Sam is a great patron of the moving picture. We do not mean in respect of the body politic, or, in other words, the great mass of American people, but the State Departments who do Uncle Sam's official work at Washington. Both the naval and military authorities of the United States of America have long utilized the moving picture for a variety of purposes. Quite recently we saw a number of films of battleships and smaller craft, and also scenes of the life of the sailormen employed on those vessels. These pictures serve a variety of purposes, not the least important of which is the recruiting end of matters. The pictures, in short, show life on the ocean wave to be full of attraction, variety and adventure, and thus in a measure act as a recruiting agency for the United States Navy.

Similarly the Military Department make a like use of the moving picture, though, perhaps, not to the same extent as the Navy. Both departments realize that for the purpose of enlisting popular appreciation of naval and military work, the moving picture is a valuable agent. Of course it is known that for strategic and official purposes, the moving picture, as well as stationary photography, is largely employed by both departments. But it would obviously not become us or any other responsible newspaper to deal with matters of this kind in too much detail, however alluring the temptation to write attractively reading articles on this topic would be.

Yet a third Government department has taken the moving picture in hand for the purpose of furthering its work, and it is going about the business in an even more thorough manner than either the naval or military branches of the public service. These latter have the moving picture work done for them, but the national Department of Agriculture has actually gone, itself, into the business of moving picture making for the purpose of spreading a better knowledge of the principles of agriculture amongst the farmers of the country. Last week the Minnesota Agricultural College was visited by the departmental moving picture man and films were shown illustrating grain standardizing and grading, breaking and subduing the land, road making and plant breeding. These films were made in various parts of the country, and they include a series showing the whole process from pasturing the cows to the moulding of the butter.

It seems to be the intention of the Agricultural Department to make films at the various experimental stations throughout the country, showing not only the work described above, but the breeding of cattle, horses, sheep and farm animals, and the many other branches of work that farmers have to take in hand. These pictures are to be exhibited at popular meetings of farmers all over the country. The films are developed at Washington; we understand that duplicates of them will be furnished to such of the farmers' organizations desiring them for agricultural meetings.

This is a great and good work, and we are glad to see the Department of Agriculture going so thoroughly into the business. This official recognition of the utilitarian value of the moving picture is one that pleases us immensely, for, as our readers know, we have never slackened in our advocacy of the moving picture for disseminating industrial, scientific and educational information. We are sure that the State Department of Agriculture will be the means of disseminating most valuable knowledge amongst farmers by means of these scientifically made records of farm life, progress, and possibilities.

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

Chapter I. "Your House in Order."

In Greco-Roman times, the theater, or ampitheater, as it was called, formed a recognized part of the amusement of the people. It was, if we remember our history right, supported by the State, and the consequence was that you had that best plays and the best actors to interpret them. To this day classical plays are held in great esteem, and occasionally you will even find one or two of them disinterred from the limbo of antiquity, adequately mounted, well played and accentuated by all the best accessories in the way of music, lighting and general good mise-en-scene. In other words, the classical drama of the past is recognized by modern students as offering the high water mark of what a theatrical representation should be. That they are not more popular with the public of to-day is solely due to that change in taste which comes over a people with its change of amusement and general outlook on life.

Now the Greeks and Romans of 2,000 years ago not only had fine plays well acted, as the records show, but they also had beautiful houses in which those dramatic representations were made. The theater managers of those times appealed in every possible way to the eye and the ear and to the sense of beauty and luxury which is inherent in all of us. They gave the drama a beautiful home. That this is true, is shown by the fact that the great ampitheaters in which spectacular productions were put on, in Greece, Italy and other old countries, are amongst the finest architectural ruins now to be seen.

The humble tenant of a moving picture five-cent theater may not unreasonably ask: What has all this to do with the way in which I conduct my house? We reply: It has all to do with it. There is no branch of work or industry to-day, nothing in art, science or literature, engineering, manufactures, of which we cannot learn something from those people to whom we all owe so much—the Greeks and Romans. Those people knew how to enjoy themselves. Indeed, it is questionable if their refinement, in these respects, has ever been equalled. It certainly has not been excelled since the alleged dawn of modern civilization in the middle ages, when enlightenment due to the printing press began to spread. At this very moment there is about to be opened in New York City a new theater which is built on classical lines; and when the other day Miss Maude Adams acted "Joan of Arc" at Harvard, her advisers went back to first principles, for, it will be remembered, the play was presented in an open-air theater.

We don't want the moving picture man to dream of converting his house into an open-air place, or amphitheater, but we do want him to go back to first principles in the construction, the care, and the administration of his house. First of all we want him to attract the eye of the public by obvious means: that is, by presenting to sight a dignified exterior. Let us give a concrete example by way of illustration. Quite recently, business and some pleasure have taken us up and down Eighth avenue, New York City, between Twenty-third street and Columbus Circle. In these thirty-six blocks there are many moving picture houses which catch the eye of the passerby, especially at night. At the risk of being considered invidious, we will say that we are impressed by the beauty and brilliancy of the facade of one of those houses. We believe it is called the Columbia Theater. It is a two-story building. The color scheme is white. It is brightly lighted, the entrances are kept clear of rubbishy-looking posters, the pay box is neat, and on the first story there are banks of plants, giving the whole a singularly refined and inviting aspect. Understand, this is just an impression in passing, and that impression, as we are trying to convey to the moving picture exhibitor, is so pleasing that we will assume for the present that we are entirely unconnected with the moving picture business and found ourselves promiscuously wandering through Eighth avenue. Well, we would patronize the Columbia Theater, because its exterior looks so neat, refined and inviting.

It must always be remembered that the vast bulk of the public are very much moved by first impressions. We think we are well within reason in saying that if an educated man or woman took a tour amongst the moving picture houses of New York City, either by day or night, his or her first impression of those places gathered by a short study of their entrances would by no means be favorable to the class or character of the entertainment to be seen within. In fact, we have instances in our mind where the effect has been a repellent one. How different it is with an ordinary theater! Take those theaters round about Forty-second street. There you have brightness, neatness, elegancy, a suspicion of luxury; the whole aspect of the entrances to these places is that of refinement, from which not even the most sensitive man or woman shrinks.

The case is different with a greater number of moving picture theaters in New York City. Some of them are positively forbidding in their exterior aspects, requiring very considerable courage, especially on the part of women and girls, to penetrate the cavernous-looking entrances. We ourselves, in the course of the many visits we have paid during the past eight months, have felt this disagreeable effect somewhat keenly. We have never been nervous about our personal safety, but we have felt that if the entrances to some of these places were less forbidding, less vulgar, less gloomy, less dirty and less disreputable, our enjoyment of the pictures about which we went to write, would have been far greater.

The object of this, our first chapter in this series of articles, is to strike a sharp note of dissatisfaction with the way in which the exterior aspects of moving picture theaters that we see in New York City and elsewhere, are managed. What we want the moving picture theater manager all over the country to realize is this: that he must be like any other tradesman who seeks to attract public patronage. He must dress his window to the best advantage, and put his house in order. He must commence with the outside of the house.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

CHAPTER XVII.

Setting the shutter is a simple operation, but comparatively few men in charge of operating rooms know how to do it correctly. Here is a method which is correct and will work equally well on any machine: Loosen the shutter on its shaft and take it off. On the wide blade lay out the center line A, Fig. 40. Now replace it loosely on its spindle. Next cut a short piece of film (say a foot long) exactly on the dividing line between two pictures. Thread this into the machine and by looking through the projection lens, frame it up carefully. Be very sure to get it exactly in frame. Now carefully, with the flywheel, turn the machine in the direction it runs until the end of the film is exactly half way across the picture opening. Turn the shutter, in the direction it runs, on its spindle until mark A, Fig. 40, is exactly opposite the end of the film. Tighten your shutter on its spindle and the job is done. With the motiograph machine set the crease in the center of the inner shutter blade opposite end of film and set cutter shutter in exactly the same position. That is to say: set inner blade as directed and tighten it on shaft. Then, without moving machine a particle, set the outer blade central back of inner blade. A moment's thought will convince you that a shutter set thus must be right if the shutter itself is properly proportioned. The office of the wide blade of the shutter is to cover the aperture entirely during the time the film is in motion and not an instant longer. With some machines the film begins to move just a trifle before the opening is entirely covered. This is for the reason that unless it be too much the effect is not noticeable on the curtain and every bit taken from shutter width increases the amount of light which reaches the screen. The narrow blade of the shutter is of no interest to the operator except that he wishes to study the peculiarities of optics. It is added to the shutter simply for the reason that the flicker caused by one blade alone comes far enough apart that the eye catches them more noticeably than the more rapid flicker of two blades. Perhaps that particular explanation is somewhat crudely put, but in the main it is correct. Take all the spokes but one out of a wagon wheel and revolve it rapidly. You see that one spoke plainly all the time. Put in all the spokes and revolve the wheel at the same speed and you see no spokes at all—just a sort of blur. Project light through the revolving wheel with one spoke and you will see the spoke's shadow plainly. Project light through the revolving wheel with all its spokes and you will see no spoke shadow at all, but the amount of light going through will be reduced. Right here let me say that those purchasing machines should closely examine into the matter of its shutter width. If the intermittent movement be comparatively slow the shutter must perforce be wider than in a machine with faster movement, and this naturally reduces the light you will get to the curtain from a given arc intensity. In other words, you must have a more powerful light to get the same result on the curtain if your machine has slow intermittent movement with consequent wider shutter. Look into this carefully. That is the secret of the one pin movement being better than the two pin. Its star movement is necessarily very much faster, which allows of material reduction in shutter width. On machines where the side of the shutter hub and spindle can be plainly seen it is a good plan to mark the shutter while it is set right. Do this by making a small prick-punch mark on the spindle close to the hub. On the hub, exactly opposite the punch mark make a scratch mark. You may now set the shutter correctly any time it slips by simply bringing the two marks together. To set a shutter quickly and with approximate accuracy turn the machine by its flywheel in the direction it runs until the cam pin just begins to move the star. Now set the shutter so that all but about a quarter of an inch of the lower righthand corner of the aperture is closed and tighten on its shaft. This will, or should, be very nearly right. It applies equally to the finger feed machines, but cannot be used with double shutter machines. With them the leaves of the shutter should be set so as to just barely close the opening (in its exact center) as the star begins to move. Ordinarily, however, double shutters require very fine adjustment. I would recommend to purchasers of machines that they insist on being provided with an exact pattern cut from paper, of the shutter of each machine under consideration. By placing these patterns one on top of the other you can see at a glance which one cuts the most light. In this test both the small and large blades should be taken into consideration. On double shutter machines the width of both blades must be counted; that is to say, you must add together the width of both wide and both narrow blades.

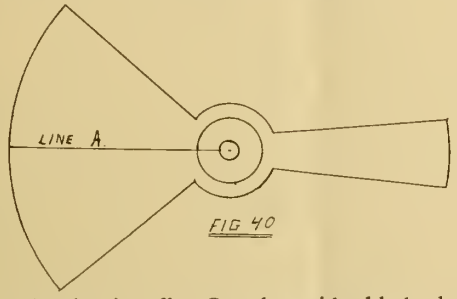

FIG 40

Sprocket idlers should never run clear down on the sprocket unless there be a ridge on one or the other for that purpose, as is the case with some machines, notably the Viascope. There are setscrews for the purpose of holding the idler away from the sprocket and they should be set so that the idler is off the sprocket by about the thickness of a film or a trifle more. Idlers running clear down have a tendency to make the film climb the sprocket teeth. The tension springs which hold film against aperture plate should be set so as to provide just enough pressure to prevent vibration in the film and no more. Some operators who are too lazy or ignorant to keep their intermittent movement in adjustment seek to take up the lost motion by added pressure of tension springs. The result is accomplished all right, unless the case be too bad, but at expense of heavy wear on driving gear, star, cam-pin, aperture plate and film. The office of the tension springs is to stop the small section of film between the upper loop and the intermittent sprocket and hold each picture absolutely stationary before the aperture during the time of its exposure. More tention than is required to accomplish this is very bad practice. Keep your intermittent movement in accurate adjustment and a very slight tension will do the required work. Automatic shutters all depend on the same principle, viz.: centrifugal force. They are too simple to require remark other than that they are rather delicate in their action and should be kept scrupulously clean and in the best of order.

The Powers machine is a very finely built piece of mechanism and like all other finely made machines requires intelligent attention and care. It is, however, perhaps one of the easiest machines there is to adjust, since its mechanism is all "in sight." Now right here I feel that in justice to myself and others I must make some explanation. To serve the purpose of these articles I am obliged to give to some machines considerable space, while with others this is not the case. Frankly, there is no machine on the market I personally like better than the Powers, yet I feel that what has already been said covers that machine completely and very nearly covers the Edison as well. With the Lubin I am not acquainted. That company very kindly offered to send on a head for my inspection, but operators who have run the Lubin inform me that what has been said covers the essential points of that machine also, so that I do not feel justified in putting the company to that expense. The Viascope is very simple, but being radically different from other machines I shall give detailed instruction on it. The Motiograph is such an entirely different form of construction from any other machine that detailed instruction on it is imperative. Trusting that the various manufacturers will understand my position and that I have no desire other than to treat everyone fairly and impartially, doing even and exact justice to all, and that the fact that I say more about one machine than another indicates nothing except that the writer feels one to require more detailed instruction than another, I will proceed.

The Edison machine has been put out in several models, but I shall only consider the latest, known as "Type B." There is little which is not covered in the remarks already made, except that the gears on operating side may be removed in a moment's time as follows: By taking out the screw in end of main gear-wheel hub, remove that gear. By removing split key take off second, small, intermediate gear wheel above main gear wheel. You will now see the heads of two screws, one which was near bottom of main gear wheel (it may be seen through one of the holes in the wheel, and may be taken out without removing wheel if desired), and one which was behind the small gear wheel you removed. Take out both these screws and by carefully prying with your screwdriver you can take off the cast bar which holds the main gear and the two small intermediates next above it. You can then, by releasing the cam and bevel gear on camshaft, pull the shaft out if desired. The removal for renewal of other parts of this machine is too simple a matter and the necessary operations too self-evident to require further directions, other than those already given under general information. The gears of the Edison Exhibition Model are removed in practically the same manner as above described.

The Viascope, unlike most other machines, passes but twelve pictures to one turn of the crank. Another peculiarity of this machine is that it has two flywheels, one on either side, which makes for steadier motion and is an advantage in other respects. Still another decided peculiarity of this machine is its tension shoes, which are perfectly stiff and rigid, eight inches in length, with a bearing on the film of three inches at the top and two at the bottom. On the lower corner next you as you sit in operating position is a small, square lug with a screw in its end, through which passes one of the round, upright rods. Inside this lug is a loose shoe on which the screw bears. By tightening or loosening the screw the frame-up movement is made tight or loose. When the feed fingers become loose remove the small plate near bottom of film track (when gate is open). The finger plate will then be fully exposed. Remove the two screws holding them and lift them out, replacing with new ones. The screws are very small and you should first arrange a newspaper underneath so that if you drop them they will not be lost. You cannot possibly get the new fingers in wrong, as there are two pins for a guide. The intermediate gear wheel on top of the main driving gear is held by a pin through its hub, the removal of which allows the gear to slip off. The gear next above this one is removed by loosening a screw in back end of shaft, but to get it out you must also loosen the casting which holds it by removing the three screws holding it in place. By loosening upper feed-sprocket on shaft both shaft and gear slip out. To remove tension shoes take off jam nuts behind spring bearing on face of gate. To remove main shaft loosen set screws in hubs of both fly wheels, set screws in small bevel gears inside machine, and heavy set screw in hub of cam movement. You may then slip the shaft out, tapping it lightly if necessary, to start it. To remove the cam movement first remove the main shaft. Projecting through the small door on lens side of machine is a lug with a set screw in its end and a nut on side next you. Loosen set screw and remove the nut and you may pull the whole intermittent movement out of the machine. To set the shutter proceed as previously instructed except that the shutter is not loosened on its spindle. Looking through the door on lens side of machine you will see to the right two small brass bevel gears meshing into each other. Loosen the one on main shaft and you will find that the shutter will revolve freely. Remove the half-round wing covering the shutter to facilitate handling it. The whole front plate of the machine may be readily removed as follows: remove two set screws near bottom in front. Each upright, round post is held to top casting by a screw. Take these out and the front plate will lift off, exposing the entire interior mechanism. Before starting the day's run pull out the lower magazine spindle and oil it. The take-up friction surface is leather and should be greased sparingly, occasionally with castor oil. There are five oilholes which the operator who is not familiar with this machine might overlook, viz.: one in front plate near top of projection lens; two on back sideplate; one in top plate near back, left-hand corner, and one in collar on further end of main shaft, inside machine. I think the other points about this machine are too obvious to require mention. If the picture trembles or jumps, tighten your tension just a little. If this don't stop it (provided the fault is not in the film itself) it is a pretty sure thing that the fingers are worn. A good, heavy machine oil is best for use on the Viascope.

(To be continued.)

According to the statistician of the Illinois Firemen's Association, there were 10,159 fires reported in that State last year. Twelve of these are assigned to moving picture apparatus, which is the lowest percentage of any contributive cause specified.

J. M. Mullin, of the Mullin Film Exchange of Syracuse, N. Y., has recently opened a branch at 10 Third street, Troy, N. Y., which occupies the old suite of the Syko Film Exchange. This is an independent concern which will buy twelve reels per week from the domestic independent manufacturers. Their offices are well equipped for business and we recommend independent exhibitors in the vicinity of this exchange to get in touch with them.

THE ELEMENTS OF ACCURACY IN MOVING PICTURE MANUFACTURE.

By Arthur S. Newman.

CHAPTER V. (Continued from page 309.)

The camera mechanism should run quite easily, and at the first sign of a bind in any of the parts, or stiffness on turning the handle, provided such troubles are not due merely to want of oil, the camera should be sent to the maker for rectification. On the other hand, careful notice should be taken of the particular mechanism which moves the film intermittently, and when wear can be detected by feeling the smallest amount of shake in the bearing or joints of the parts, the maker's attention and refitting are required if good results are to be attained. The sprockets and other gear may wear considerably without affecting accuracy, and the camera become quite noisy in use; but the intermittent mechanism must be kept in first class condition.

I shall not say anything about accurate focussing or accurate placing of the picture on the film in these articles, because I am leaving the optical and chemical side of the subject for treatment in another series, this series being intended to deal only with the mechanical problems. Having stated last week that the average camera was usually well constructed and that it had the right to be considered the most perfect of the four principal instruments, I am now going to condemn one of its appurtenances, the revolving tripod head, as being usually the most unsatisfactory of all the appliances for the production of moving pictures. Having examined many revolving heads, I think I may say that not one passing through my hands could lay claim to thorough smoothness in working, and at the same time freedom from what mechanics call "loss of time." To make a revolving head to combine these two attributes requires the exercise of considerable mechanical skill; not that the problem is a difficult one in itself, but it certainly calls for extreme care, and if made on the present lines, it requires that the last 1-1,000th of an inch should have attention. "Near enough" will not produce good results—nothing can be "near enough," it must be right. How seldom do we see a "panorama" film move steadily across the screen? And, again, how often do we see a succession of jerks, during the most rapid of which all detail is momentarily lost? Now, with a perfectly working revolving head this should not occur. Tripods have to stand a considerable amount of rough usage, and as the head is often permanently fixed to the tripod, it comes in for its share of trouble. The rough usage must not be blamed for all the faults. When these instruments leave the workshop they are often far from satisfactory in action, and as a rule their condition does not improve with use; still, the rough usage they often meet with is frequently to blame for the poorness of the results for which they are responsible. In choosing a revolving head the photographer should note in the first place that the handle turns evenly, not only when at one part of the revolution of the top, but at all parts; and, secondly, that the screw is so well fitted that on reversing the direction of rotation of the handle the top immediately responds to the reverse. Many of the "market" heads will not stand this test, even when quite new. Sometimes it will be found that in one position all is as it should be, while at another, perhaps a half revolution of the handle must be made before the top responds. This loss of time is not in itself detrimental to the immediate results, but it shows lax manufacture, and such a head will sooner develop serious defects than one which will stand the above stated test. For panorama work the head should receive a careful overhauling from time to time, and at all times should be kept free from grit and dirt, and be well oiled. In cases where the head is also fitted with an elevating attachment still more care should be exercised, because should anything become loose, either by wear or injury, much film may be inadvertently spoiled. The tripod should always be examined for side twist whenever the camera is placed in position, and should any be detected, the legs should be spread wider apart if possible. Many otherwise perfect tripods show a considerable amount of side twist if the legs are spread over too small a ground space.

We now come to the printer. This is a critical instrument, and has been in the past, and is at the present time, responsible for much of the unsteadiness on the screen. Given perfect perforation, and a good camera, producing a steady negative, a bad printer, or for the matter of that a good one unsuitably treated, may turn out fearfully unsteady pictures. Rotary printers, in which the negative and film to be printed pass together over a sprocket wheel and are drawn together through a "gate" with a mask or slit exposed to the printing light, are not much in use at the present time. A machine with a "pin" or a "claw" movement seems generally preferred. This is as it should be, and no doubt experience, and a process of trial and error have done much to discountenance the rotary printer.

The same reason which prevents the sprocket-spacing perforator from being a perfect instrument, causes the rotary perforator to be unreliable, the difficulty and improbability of getting a perfect sprocket and one perfectly mounted. There is another fact which militates against good results in a rotary printer. The film on which the negative is taken generally shrinks somewhat during development and drying, usually about 1-16th of an inch in a foot, and if the positive film has been perforated to the same gauge as the negative film, the gauge of the latter after development will not agree with the former. Both films pass together partly round the sprocket wheel, and the outer one ought to be the longer in gauge. This point has escaped the attention of all the makers of the machines which have passed through my hands.

The printer is the only machine of the series which is required to operate two perforated films at the same time. The gelatine sides of these films are in contact during the operation of printing, and owing to a small amount of drag of the one on the other, or in other words, to a slight adhesion of the gelatine surfaces; by whatever means they are operated, they tend to move at the same rate exactly. Now if the gauge of the two films could be made to exactly correspond, this adhesive quality would be a great advantage, but it is practically impossible to get two perforated films to agree exactly for a distance of six feet, even when both are undeveloped and fresh from the perforating machine; therefore when only one gauge is used in the perforating room, the developed film will be very different in gauge from that which is undeveloped. In all the rotary perforators I have examined, the positive film has been arranged to run in contact with the sprocket wheel, and the negative outside it, so that the short gauge film had to pass round part of a circle larger in diameter than that round which the positive film traveled. The negative during drying and development, usually shrinks about 1-16th of an inch to a foot—more in some samples of film, and more or less according to the rapidity or slowness of the drying process. When passing round the wheel the two films tend to cling together, but their gauges being different demand that they should move at slightly differing rates. As they will not easily slide the one on the other, the usual result is that for a few picture lengths they travel exactly together, and when the discrepancy in the perforation becomes great enough, the sprocket teeth, trying to enter pairs of holes not exactly coincident, cause a sudden small slip of the one film on the other as the teeth are forced into the perforations, and the two holes are brought into agreement. If the teeth of this sprocket could be made to exactly fill the holes, this slipping of the film would be a continuous process and steady pictures obtained, but as the films have not the same gauge—measuring angularly round the part in contact with the sprocket—and also because the difference of the gauges is accentuated by the fact that the longest gauge is in nearly all cases nearest to the center of the sprocket wheel, latitude and shake must be allowed between the sides of the perforations and the sides of the sprocket teeth, to prevent injury to the perforations, and also to overcome the tendency of the short gauge film to ride on the tops of the sprocket teeth.

With "pin" or "claw" movement printers this defect is much reduced. Instead of the slip having to be dealt with at each hole, it requires to be provided for at each picture length—i. e., only once in every four holes. The "pins" or "claws" should be made to exactly fit the holes, otherwise the defect of the rotary printer is present in the other forms, though in a lessened degree. Rotary printers, not being provided with shutters, cause the print to be slightly blurred each time the slip takes place; the "claw" or "pin" printer, being provided with a shutter, does not cause this blur, because when the compensating slip takes place the light is obliterated by the shutter.

A properly adjusted "pin" or "claw" machine should compensate at each picture, and this will only be possible when the perforations of both positive and negative are of exactly the same shape, which shape must be exactly filled by the claws or pins.

Rotary printers are rapid in action, and turn out a large quantity of work in a given time, and, unfortunately, like the rotary perforators, that work is in most cases second rate in quality. The absence of a shutter allows the light to work for the whole of the time, and the mask can be made to show more than one picture at a time, so the light value will be about four times that of a "pin" or "claw" printer. With the same light a rotary printer can easily turn out four times the amount of work that is possible with the other forms, in the same period of time. The quality of the work so produced could be much improved if a proper measurement of the developed gauge were to be taken, and if, after allowing for the difference of diameter round which the positive film had to pass, the latter film were perforated to a gauge to suit the angular measurement of the sprocket teeth; but I have never heard of this being done, and, after all, a "pin" or "claw" machine would probably be found more satisfactory in spite of its more tardy production—due to, first, its mask only embracing one picture at a time; and, second, to the necessity of a shutter, which, in most cases, cuts off the light for one-half of the time.

From the point of accuracy the rotary printer must be condemned; and the pin or claw machine, to produce first-class work, must have its parts which actuate the film, nicely fitted to the perforations; which again must all be of the same size and shape in both positive and negative films. The printer—like the camera—should have its reciprocating parts well fitted, but the most important parts are the pins or claws, which should be renewed as soon as wear causes them to allow even the smallest amount of shake in the perforations. If the bearings or fittings of the reciprocating parts become loose through wear, no harm will be done to the picture (provided the pins fit well) but the margin may show a variation. Many people look at the spacing between the developed pictures, and if this appear even, are quite satisfied with the action of a camera or printer. Certainly the spacing should be even; nevertheless, uneven spacing in the printer is not a certain sign that the picture will be unsteady on the screen; if the pins fit well, it may only point to wear in the joints of the reciprocating parts, in which case the margin of the picture will not be steady on the screen, but will embrace a varying amount of a steady picture. The mask in the projector will most likely prevent this defect being detected.

I have previously laid particular stress upon the necessity of accurate adjustment and careful treatment of the printing machine, and I am now going to try and impress on my readers that the printing operation is a very important one. The room in which the machine is used also calls for special attention. Like the perforating room, it should be kept at an even temperature, but this is not so essential as that the air of the printing room should be dry.

Gelatine has the property of absorbing to some extent moisture from the atmosphere; and if it be placed—as I have often seen it—in the moisture laden atmosphere of the developing room, the films will be liable to become slightly damp. This condition does not improve the brilliancy of a print, and it has the great disadvantage that the gelatine surface of the two films will have a great tendency to adhere the one to the other, which condition, as I explained last week, is fatal to accuracy, and is liable to produce a print much less steady than the negative from which it was printed. I am of opinion that in many of the unsteady prints with which the market has been supplied for years past, at least half of the inaccuracy has been imparted during the operation of printing in a moist atmosphere. To get the best results with a printing machine in which the pins are fitted accurately to the perforations, it is necessary that the perforation of both negative and positive should be of good quality, i. e., even in gauge from end to end; but it is not absolutely necessary that the gauge of the positive and negative should exactly agree, nevertheless, the exact agreement would make assurance doubly sure, and the little extra trouble necessary to achieve this point also is well worth taking. Even and regular drying of both positive and negative films after development and washing should also be aimed at, so that the gauge of the finished films may also be even.

During the last few years many changes in the sizes and shapes of the perforations have been gone through, and in many houses, negatives which were taken years ago, and in which the perforations differ in size and shape from those now in general use, require to be printed from time to time. Where possible, the positive film should be perforated by the same or a similar machine to that which perforated the negative in question, so that the coincidence in dimension of the perforations may be a certainty. The modern perforation has usually larger holes than that in use so recently as three years ago, and though we hope finality has been reached, it is not safe to prophecy that another two years hence, will not bring either still further alterations or a return to old ideas.

When it is necessary to print from a negative having its perforation different from that of the positive film, an improvement in the steadiness may be assured by providing the printing machine with two distinct tensions, one to act on the negative and one on the positive film, just before they enter the gate of the printer. By such means one side of each of the perforations in the films would be held against the leading side of the sprocket teeth, or claws, or pins, as the case might be, and the varying dimensions of the perforations would not introduce further errors. I have never met with this arrangement in any printing machine, but am convinced that its addition to the rotary printer would much improve its performance, as it would counteract the tendency to adhesion in the two films, and in the case of the gauges not being exactly in agreement, would cause the necessary slip of the one film over the other to be a continuous process.

We have now arrived at the end of our subject if the title of these articles be rigidly adhered to; and this title I still further narrowed down by stating at the commencement that only the mechanical side of the matter would be dealt with. From a purely mechanical point of view, the projector should next claim our attention, and although that machine has little or nothing to do with the "manufacture" of pictures, I shall claim sufficient license to include it in this series.

(To be continued.)

TRADE NOTES AND NEWS.

Cosette, the third of the Les Miserables series to be released by the Vitagraph, is announced for October 16.

* * *

When last heard of Mr. W. N. Selig, of Selig Polyscope fame, was travelling in France and Italy. He is expected to return to this country in a few weeks' time.

* * *

Mr. R. Prieur, the London agent of the Lux films, returned to England by the "Lusitania" on Wednesday last, after visiting New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Toronto, Montreal.

* * *

Mr. W. G. Barker, who has severed his connection with the Warwick Trading Company, London, announces the formation of a new company with himself in control.

* * *

Expected visitors to New York include Mr. Ellis, the president of the Warwick Trading Company, London; Mr. I. I. Bamberger, of the Electric Palaces (Limited), and Mr. Jeapes, the patentee of the Cinephone.

* * *

The Vitagraph Company is now having designs drawn for the largest studio in use by any picture plant. It is planned to occupy the entire end of the Vitagraph plot with a huge glass and concrete structure for the purpose of taking aeroplane pictures which presently will be demanded because of the increased interest taken in aviation. Cycloramic and panoramic drops will be provided for and any demand short of actual distance flight can be met. The studio is the first practical acknowledgment of the newest fad by the picture people, though several airship subjects have been released dealing with air flight.

* * *

In addition to recording the daylight pageants of the Hudson-Fulton celebration, the Vitagraph Company is planning to record some of the features of the night illuminations of the bridges and other structures during the celebration. Each of the four bridges across the East River will be outlined in electric lights with further illumination by searchlight batteries and it is believed that many unique night pictures will result.

* * *

Contracts were signed this week for two additions to the Vitagraph Company's studios in Brooklyn. An addition will be made to the dark-room in the shape of a two-story building 50 by 100 feet, the roof of which is arranged for the taking of out-door pictures. An addition to the studios, 30 by 70 feet, also two stories in height, will provide the necessary increased accommodations for dressing rooms and the extensive wardrobe equipment.

* * *

Liberty Moving Pictures, which enjoyed great popularity on Sunday afternoons and evenings at the Majestic Theater last season, will be continued at that playhouse this year. The season will open next Sunday afternoon, September 12. Music will be furnished for these Sunday entertainments by the regular Majestic Theater orchestra, and Johnny Nestor will sing the latest illustrated songs.

* * *

It is expected that November will see the release of the first of the Biblical subjects written and produced for the Vitagraph by the Rev. Madison C. Peters, of New York. The scenery is almost complete and the company is in rehearsal. The first series of three or four reels will deal with the incidents in the life of Moses.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

Labor Day for me meant a series of perigrinations conceived and carried out in the interests of the readers of the Moving Picture World. For with malice aforethought, I set myself the task of observing as far as possible how the crowds that made holiday on Monday last took in the moving picture as part of their scheme of enjoyment. In the city the various houses seemed to be doing extremely good business, and in no direction could I hear of any falling off in attendance.

* * *

Then I wandered farther afield and took in those popular Beaches which are a feature of one shore of Staten Island. Here again I noticed that the little moving picture theaters in the day time were crowded by appreciative seekers of pleasure. At Midland Beach I paid my nickel with the rest of humanity, and formed one of the audience who watched the moving picture with evident interest and delight.

* * *

Thence to Coney Island, where the moving picture is a staple part of the entertainment. On Surf Avenue you can sit and take your refreshment and witness the moving picture free gratis and for nothing. I noticed a very handsome ten-cent house, the attractions of which were trumpeted forth by an energetic barker and the people seemed to be pouring in in great numbers. All over the Island, of course, the moving picture is much in evidence, and it is astonishing to note the hold which it has upon all sections of the community. If there were any visible signs of decadence in public interest, it is certain that at those places of entertainment, where the moving picture is shown you for nothing, there would be nobody to look at it.

* * *

There is one little fact in this connection of my gathering the harvest of a quiet eye in my ramblings which impressed me more than any other. I had with me a small companion to whom I was incidentally showing the sights and giving some of the giddy pleasures for which the Island is famous. Towards the close of the day, on our return to the city, we sat down and watched the people shooting the chutes in Dreamland, always a very pleasing sight to those who do not care to engage in the sport itself.

* * *

Just where the chutes reach the ground level, there happened to be a moving picture machine in a booth and a screen fixed up axially to the chutes. Every frequenter of Dreamland can locate this position for himself. My young companion, who has got the moving picture affliction very severely, drew my attention to this and down we sat to have our alfresco exhibition of moving pictures.

* * *

I took stock of my fellow companions, to the number of 30 or 40, and these, like myself, had been doing the Island for a few hours, and yet, tired as they evidently were, their interest in this little exhibition of moving pictures held "far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife" was most instructive to watch. Even the waiters paused in their work to turn their eyes to the screen. On that screen were being shown some Gaumont pictures and I assure you the little audience followed the films with as much interest and concentration as if it was the first exhibition of the kind they had seen.

* * *

As I have said, this little fact made a great impression on me. The other people were men of education and some standing who seemed to have quitted the noisier delights of the Island or to have tired of them, and yet they found relief, pleasure and interest in this alfresco exhibition. They followed the pictures, as I have said, with the most alert closeness and interest. I and my young companion left them sitting there apparently immovable, and apparently just as eager as ever to see more of these wonderful manifestations of moving picture photography.

* * *

I wish that many of those who bombard me with questions as to the probable fugacity of the moving picture as a form of public entertainment—I wish that the crowds of those who shrug their shoulders and in pure ignorance and stupidity half wonder to themselves whether the moving picture has come to stay—I wish that all these and others who are timorous as to the stability of the moving picture in public favor, would take the trouble that I took and travel around, as I did on Monday last, amongst all sorts and conditions of popular audiences of these pictures.

If they would do this, or indeed, only do half as much, then I am sure they would be convinced the moving picture has got such a firm hold on public favor that it is absolutely inconceivable it can ever lose the proud position it has won for itself on its own merits. There is always the temptation in little reviews of this nature to sink into platitudes and I for one cannot resist a little platitude on this occasion. Merely then will I say that if, before Monday last, I had any doubt as to the position or the hold which the moving picture has upon the people at large my experiences here recorded would have absolutely dispelled it.

OPERATORS' UNIONS.

Several weeks ago we published a letter from the secretary of the New York Operators' Union inviting qualified men to apply for membership. Now we are informed that this notice has inundated the secretary with hundreds of letters from operators from all over the country asking for particulars as to how to become a member. Not having the time to reply to all the correspondence, Secretary Sherman asks us to say that his call for members to Local 35, I. A. T. S. E., applied only to Greater New York, under which their charter is granted. Many operators have also written to the Moving Picture World asking for information how to become a member of the operators' union and others have asked how to proceed to start a union in their locality. Mr. Sherman tells us that all the information desired can be obtained from Mr. Lee M. Hart, care of State Hotel, State and Harrison streets, Chicago, Ill. As far as we have investigated the New York local union, we find that their objects and aims are honorable and tend to the improvement of the picture business. Chicago and some other cities have well organized unions that work in harmony with the theater managers and if the operators in other sections desire to organize they should meet and appoint a temporary secretary to correspond with Mr. Hart at the above address.

THE UNIQUE THEATER.

This handsome show house on East Fourteenth street is playing to standing room, notwithstanding the addition of the new gallery which added some 300 to the former seating capacity. Good management is obviously the key to the success and the well-selected programs of vaudeville and pictures are so different from anything else on the street that one going the rounds is pretty sure of something new at the Unique. From the doorman to the manager's office there is an air of respectability and enthusiasm in the work. The Unique has lately adopted programs with advertising and we suggest that more details of the program, even to printing a synopsis of the films, would tend to bring more patrons to the theater and more advertisers in the program.

EXPLORER COOK HAS BEEN FILMED.

A long cablegram to Ingvald C. Oes from the Great Northern Film Company, Copenhagen, says that they have succeeded in getting a remarkably successful and clear film of the arrival of Dr. Cook at Copenhagen, the Esquimaux, the Danish whaler which brought them from the Arctic regions, and the fetes attending the reception on shore. Mr. Oes immediately cabled for a double supply of this film, which will be shipped from Denmark on the same steamer which conveys Dr. Cook. Arriving here about the time that his countrymen will be doing honor to the explorer, this film will no doubt be in great demand and we advise film exchanges to place their order early with the Great Northern Film Company.

NEW THEATER FOR PHILADELPHIA.

Architect Carl P. Berger has completed plans for a big moving picture theater for Charles A. Calehuff, at 501 to 515 Moyamensing avenue. It will be a brick and stone structure, with a frontage of 70 feet and a depth of 160 feet to Jackson street. The building will have a completely equipped stage and an auditorium with a seating capacity of 1,000.

AUTOMATIC TICKET SELLER.

We learn that the Motion Picture Supply Company, Cox Building, Rochester, N. Y., will shortly place upon the market a thoroughly tested automatic ticket seller and change maker. It is said that the crowds can be handled more readily by this device and expenses reduced, which will appeal to the theater manager. It is said to occupy little space in the box office and is attached to an ordinary incandescent lamp socket and is ready for business all the time. We hope to give more particulars in an early number.

Coloring Song Slides.

The artistic coloring of lantern slides is very delicate work. The slide is so small that the detail is not only almost infinitesimal but very much crowded, and the gelatine surface, as soon as it becomes wet enough to be sticky, is easily roughened and spoiled.

To be at all successful the worker must have a good eye for color and experience in handling a brush. One's first attempt at lantern slide coloring is apt to be a startling surprise when thrown on the screen, for its faults are so great as to dampen one's enthusiasm; but if one were discouraged over first attempts there would be very little accomplished in this world. Persistence being therefore the root of all successes, the novice must be willing to try, and to try again.

The fault of many colored slides is that the artist paints instead of tints his slides, the tendency being to apply the color too thickly and in too strong tones.

The English colorists are favorable to oil colors, made to flow easily by mixing with copal varnish. The French, who excel in this work, use water colors and the aniline colors. The latter colors will be found more satisfactory for the beginner, as they flow easily and are free from any sediment. They are in liquid form, very much concentrated, and are diluted with water to the tint required.

These colors may be bought in sets (ten colors in a set) or one may buy them singly. The latter is perhaps the better way for the beginner, who will find five colors quite enough for any attempt he wishes to make in coloring. These colors are yellow, orange, crimson, brown and blue. The only objection to aniline dyes is that they cannot be guaranteed as permanent; but in some cases this would be an advantage rather than a fault, for time would tone down the harsh or brilliant coloring.

The necessary apparatus for coloring slides is a negative retouching frame fitted with the very finest ground glass obtainable, a dozen or more brushes, and a water color palette. One should have three or four sizes of camel's hair or sable brushes of the kind made specially for water color work, and these should be of the quality that comes to a fine point when wet. In addition one should have three blending brushes, a sable about half an inch wide and very evenly trimmed, so that the color will follow without streaking.

The water color palette with a double row of depressions for mixing—sixteen in all—will be found the most convenient for mixing and handling the colors, but one may use separate dishes like the small china pans that come with color boxes. The advantage of the palette is that the whole gamut of colors lies before one in its entirety, with no danger of one color mixing with another, while with the separate colors the eye must travel from pan to pan to select the tint desired.

For work one requires two or three glasses filled with filtered water and several pieces of old cotton for wiping and cleaning brushes. In addition to this three or four bell-shaped glass covers are most convenient for covering the wet slide when it is necsesary to wait for one color to dry before applying another.

The beginner will find it easier to begin with figure studies rather than with landscapes. His only difficulty—or perhaps it would be better to say his greatest difficulty—will be in getting a good flesh tint.

"Colors seen by candle light do not look the same by day," and so to obtain colors to be shown by artificial light, the coloring itself must be done by artificial light. A gas burner fitted with a good Welsbach light is the nearest approach to the light of the stereopticon. This light can be arranged easily by using a drop light and a long piece of rubber tubing. Such a light can be set on the floor so that it shines up on to the ground glass, giving a very agreeable illumination for the work.

Lantern slides designed for coloring should be fixed in an acid bath, preferably alum, for the purpose of hardening the film. After being washed they should be placed for five minutes in a tray of alcohol to remove all traces of grease, and in handling the fingers should never touch the film. If the slide does not take the color smoothly, rinse and place in a diluted solution of acetic acid, twenty grains of acid to each ounce of water; rinse again and color without drying.

In coloring figure slides avoid strong, harsh tones. A soft color is much more artistic and far more pleasing to the beholder than the violent blues, reds, greens, and purples shown so often in colored slides.

A word about portraits. Never attempt to color a head which when thrown on the screen will be of heroic size. A heroic sized head on a screen never gave pleasure to any one; when colored it is positively hideous.

The detail in the draperies of figure studies often gives the desired effect of light and shadow without resorting to painting in two or more tones, thus necessitating only a simple wash over the surface. Vermilion and yellow in proper proportion make an excellent flesh tint. It should be put on in thin washes, the desire being usually to put on too much color. Allow each wash to dry before putting on another. This is a precaution well to follow, for without it one is very apt to make them too dark. When working with figures, it is a good idea to examine the work now and then with a magnifying glass to discover defects and remedy them before it is too late.

Having learned to apply the color in even washes and in light tints, one may attempt a landscape. The stumbling block here will be the sky; but if one has studied water color painting, his work will be comparatively easy, for the tint is applied in broad washes as in some water color work. The color of the sky depends on the time of day the picture was taken. A bright blue sky would never do for a picture of declining day, nor a tinted sunset sky for a landscape taken at noontide; yet such things are done, and exhibited too.

Having chosen the proper tint for the sky, dip a brush in clear water and brush over the sky very quickly, using one of the blending brushes; then with a second blending brush dipped into the color wash the sky over rapidly and evenly with light strokes, taking great care that the brush does not drag on the softened gelatine. This color must be perfectly dry before a second wash con be applied; and as soon as the slide is drying it must be covered. Before beginning work make some tiny cardboard easels, of very thin board not much thicker than a visiting card. Fold a piece and from the folded paper cut a double right-angled triangle, and toward the base cut two notches projecting at the lower side. When opened out it sets firmly on the table, the slide rests on the two notches and the glass cover is set over the slide until dry.

Having learned to color a sky evenly, one may attempt blending two or more colors. The simplest form is to try to make the effect of a sunset sky, where at the horizon line it is a rather deep orange and fades gradually upwards where it melts in a tint of blue which deepens more and more as it approaches the zenith.

Take two blending brushes, one of which dip into the color selected for the nearest the horizon, and the other into clear water. Now with the first draw across the plate next the horizon an even band of color, and follow immediately with the brush wet in water, thinning and blending until at the edge farthest from the horizon it shows a very faint tint. The tint must be applied in a swift, even sweep of the brush, in order to get the effect aimed at.

Next take a brush dipped in blue, and beginning at the edge of the plate paint a similar band in blue, and with the wet brush blend and soften until it finally melts and blends into the band below. In applying the color to the sky it is often desirable to reverse the plate so that the superfluous moisture may run off the plate instead of into the detail of the landscape.

Water which reflects the sky usually has a tint of blue in it. In some cases the color of the water is greenish blue, sometimes grayish green, and leaping, foaming water, white with just a hint of green in the shadows.

In coloring a landscape a dilute tint of green is washed in lightly over all objects to be in that color, and when dry worked over in different shades of green as lights and shadows seem to demand.

If buildings are included, the color must be carefully chosen, the coloring depending on whether the whole edifice seems to be starting out of its surroundings, or whether it appears in its fit and proper place. Some colorists never color a building whose original color is white, for when thrown on the screen it will of course appear white. If, however, the building has very strong high lights, it should be washed over with a dilute tint of lampblack, which will tone down the glaring lights and yet not destroy the impression of a white building.

Some natural objects like large stones or boulders in shadow do not require tinting, but may be left in their natural reproduction.

One will have to learn by experiment just how to mix the colors to obtain the tint desired.

Blue and yellow may be mixed to obtain almost any shade of green from light to dark, and in blue or in yellow tints. Orange and blue make a deep green, desirable for some special objects. By mixing crimson lake and Prussian blue almost any tone of purple may be obtained, predominance of crimson lake giving a warm purple, and more of the blue giving a purple in colder tones. Yellow and crimson lake judiciously mixed make a beautiful color like the sky at sunset, and may be used to advantage as the horizon tint previously described.

Slides may be tinted in monochrome,—a very desirable method for certain subjects. This is done by using plates specially prepared for monochrome, or by toning a slide with some chemical, such as uranium, etc.

One thing the colorist should bear in mind, and that is, to use soft colors, and in as simple washes as possible. Heavy, harsh coloring spoils the effect.

An artistically colored slide is a joy to the spectator, and the day will come when only such will be shown by that portrayer of the world's pageant,—the stereopticon.—E. F. W., in The Practical Photographer (London).

SUNDAY IN MONTREAL.

Fines aggregating $366 have been imposed on the moving picture managers who violated the Sunday law. The fines ranged from $10 to $40.

CHANGE IN MICHIGAN FILM COMPANY.

Harry D. Brackett and George W. Weeks have taken over the active management of the Michigan Film and Supply Company, 1106 Union Trust building. Mr. Brackett will be manager; Mr. Weeks, representative, while William F. Klatt will remain as president of the concern. The company controls about half the moving picture theaters of the city and about 40 per cent. in the State.

SYNAGOGUE TO RUN PICTURE SHOW.

Former Deputy Building Superintendent Lorenz F. J. Weiher has filed plans with Building Superintendent Murphy for equipping the ground floor of the three-story synagogue at 48 Avenue D, New York City, for moving picture exhibitions with a stage and asbestos curtain, the improvements being made for the Congregation Chevra Ahawath Abraham B'nai Koller, of which Paul Weiss is president.

MOVING PICTURES AGAINST SALOONS.

The moving picture shows are hailed by a Chicago sociologist as enemies to the saloons. All that they need to make their influence surely good is a reasonable censorship. This observer declares as to their adverse effect upon the saloon trade: "No one realizes this better than do the saloon keepers, and they are almost invariably opposed to the locating of a nickel theater in their neighborhood. In some instances a single 5-cent theater is said to have cut the buisness of several nearby saloons practically in half. . . . The man who after his day's work and supper would wander to the neighboring saloon . . . now takes the family to the nickel theater."

And yet we read of the churches opposing the m. p. show!

YIDDISH THEATER BECOMES PICTURE HOUSE.

As the result of a business arrangement completed last week, Marcus Loew and Adolph Zucker, representing the Bedford Theatrical Company, will take over Jacob P. Adler's Grand Theater, Grand and Chrystie streets, and conduct it hereafter as a moving picture playhouse. Admission, 10 cents. Mr. Adler, the former actor-manager, goes to Europe with his company.

PENNSYLVANIA EXHIBITORS PROSECUTED.

Harrisburg, Pa., September 3.—Chief Factory Inspector Delaney to-day ordered prosecutions against six moving picture men in Lackawanna County. Deputy Inspector George Nape reported that the owners of the theaters have refused to provide fireproof booths for their moving picture machines and that they have not provided the required aisle space.

BUSINESS FOR SALE.

STORE dealing in Moving Picture Machines, Parts, Supplies, Stereopticons, Slides, etc.

Doing a good steady paying business, oldest house in one of the leading cities in the Middle West; best of standing, condition, etc.

Owner has other business interests and would like to devote his time to them.

Rare chance for someone wanting a permanent and profitable business, or Eastern house wanting a Western branch.

Address "BUSINESS," care of Moving Picture World.

Comments on the Week's Films.

THE GALLEY SLAVE (Vitagraph).

An interpretation of a scene from "Les Miserables." It is the one where Jean Valjean is taken into his home by the Bishop, and rewards the good man by stealing his silver, and when the gendarmes arrest him and bring him back to the Bishop's home he is presented with the candlesticks and allowed to go, with the injunction that he must do good and not evil henceforth, for his soul has been bought for God. The principal character, Jean Valjean, is admirably acted and correctly follows the story even in the minute details, with the exception that Hugo sends him out of a window, while the film producer has him go out through a door. The general makeup, the acting and all the minor accessories proclaim the leading actor to be what his passport says he is, a galley slave and a dangerous man, and when he raises his iron bar over the head of the sleeping Bishop it seems highly probable that he will strike, if the slumberer is so unfortunate as to rouse from his sleep. The acting is all so vivid and follows the story so faithfully that Hugo's characters seem to be actually living their various lives before one. From the stealing of the loaf for which he was sentenced to the galleys for nineteen years, to the time when he leaves the Bishop's presence scarcely comprehending what has occurred, there is something about the character which appeals to one and which makes it seem real and sincere. It seems a correct interpretation of what Hugo meant, and it increases one's interest in the book itself. While there is always danger in reproducing anything of this kind that many in the audience have not read the book, there is, on the other hand, a possibility that interest will be aroused which will cause those who see the picture to read the book and thus become acquainted with one of the masterpieces of literature. In this particular picture the staging could not be better since it follows the book itself. The costuming is a feature worth attention, and unquestionably it is as accurate as it can be made. The acting is in harmony with the subject and follows the book closely. The picture is one of the best from the Vitagraph studio and is well worth seeing, not only by those who are fond of motion pictures, but those who are fond of good drama as well.

THE TEMPTATION (Edison).

Edison pictures hitherto have not, in our opinion, been of that strongly dramatic nature which occasionally hold an audience in suspense every instant of the time that the film is on the screen. It has rather seemed to us that the Edison producers have had a great tendency to spin out into five acts, as it were, what other film manufacturers might condense into two or even one. The Edison pictures indeed are usually crowded with characters and plenty of action and incident. They fill, they satisfy, they convince, but they do not excite.

The little picture under notice is, however, a radical departure from the usual Edison formula which we welcome, and which we think the public at large will welcome, for indeed, "The Temptation" is a short, sharp, incisive bit of drama which we hope is the precursor of many more similar efforts. A young man is entrusted with the cashing of the check for the pay-roll. Having got the money he arrives home in a blizzard, where he is greeted by his young wife. The money in a bag is deposited in a bureau in sight of the audience. Then the temptation occurs, and the young man gives way to it. So telling his young wife that he has business at the factory, he goes out into the stormy night. The girl is armed against possible intruders. In due course a tramp arrives and she succors him. Then later in the night a masked burglar appears and sets out to steal the money in the bag. Fortunately at this moment the befriended tramp intervenes and fells the burglar to the ground. Here occurs the most dramatic moment of the play. With the tramp out of the way, the young wife discovers that the masked burglar who attempted to steal the money, is none other than her own young husband. Of course, the foolish fellow repents, and the girl forgives him and so the story ends leaving a sufficiency of something to the imagination.

This is the kind of story that a moving picture audience likes. The Edison Company have worked out this particular one with wonderful naturalness and success. There are only three leading characters in the film—two men and a girl—the office staff, the bank staff shown in the first two scenes being mere accessories. But how finely dramatic it all is. We hope to see many more Edison plays treated with such simplicity and conviction. This one is photographically well done, and we count it amongst the Edison successes.

ETHEL'S LUNCHEON (Edison).

This production will go a long way toward dispelling the unjust criticism which is hurled at motion pictures by the unthinking and those who apparently know nothing about moving pictures. The comedy was written by Carolyn Wells especially for motion picture reproduction. The author and the actors have succeeded in making a picture which ranks as an achievement of importance in motion picture making. And well it might. It is the reproduction of a comedy enacted by a clubman and his fiancee and his friend, with the pranks of two madcap girls to supply spice. And the spirit which pervades the whole piece and adds zest to its progress is of the kind which amuses and puts everyone in a good humor. In some ways this seems a notable achievement in motion picture making. It demonstrates that a comedy above the rough house type will make a successful motion picture. And this is worth much to the motion picture world. The purely dramatic pictures have been lifted out of the merely melodramatic or dime novel class into pictures which tell good stories in a good way, but comedies have not been so satisfactory. The long, and often senseless, chase; the needless destruction of property, and other subjects with which all are familiar who have followed motion pictures, have constituted the bulk of those which have been produced to meet the requirement for something funny. This Edison picture is different in that the comedy is delicate and clean and leaves a pleasant impression. It is scarcely too much to say that this comedy has introduced a new type of motion picture and the producers deserve the heartiest encouragement in their laudable efforts to improve the character of purely amusement pictures. The photography is quite satisfactory with the exception of slight dimness here and there, but that doesn't injure the artistic qualities of the picture, while the staging has been effected with care and attention to details which combine to enhance the attractive qualities of the picture. The acting is so natural that it appears on the screen as though the operator had made his exposures unknown to the group who were chiefly interested.

CROSSING THE ENGLISH CHANNEL (Gaumont).

It is difficult for the untravelled American to realize the importance on many grounds which attaches to the fact that on July 25th last a French aviator succeeded in crossing the English Channel in a machine heavier than air. The untravelled American, be it said, seldom understands what the English Channel is or means. Let us briefly tell him. It is a streak of water, and very troubled water indeed, about twenty-one miles across at its narrowest, which divides the British Isles from the mainland of Europe. Nearly thirty years ago it was proposed to construct a tunnel under the Channel in order to abolish British insularity. British insularity objected, and so the tunnel was never made. Then there have been projects for building a bridge across what is playfully termed the "silver streak." We say playfully advisedly, for the English Channel is a very stormy and a very tempestuous little bit of water, indeed. Early last century, Napoleon talked about getting a great fleet together for the purpose of crossing the Channel and invading England. That is all he did. He just talked, and the fleet never reached its destination. It is said to be the design of many European powers to abolish English insularity, which they think would incidentally lead to the abolition of England's independence. So now the reader understands the almost hysterical outbreak of enthusiasm which has greeted the fact that a French aviator has succeeded in doing what so many have hitherto failed to do; namely, in bridging, as it were, the narrow streak of water which means so much to Britain. The outcome of this successful experiment must, at present, remain a matter of conjecture.

It will easily be understood how more than ordinary interest not only attaches to Bleriot's feat, but also to the photographic rendering of it. Probably the remarkable film, by the aid of this explanation, which Mr. Kleine is releasing this week, will awaken the deepest sensation wherever it is shown. It certainly deserves to. For it is intensely dramatic. It shows how an Englishman fails and a Frenchman succeeds. Could anything be more piquant than this? The Englishman tries to fly home from France, and fails, and along comes a Frenchman, and, as it were, beats his English rival and makes a peaceful descent on the shores of Albion.

We should like to congratulate Gaumonts on their enterprise and skill in having secured this record, which is in two parts. The first shows Latham mounting his aeroplane, rising into the empyrean, flying over the Channel for a number of miles, and then being conveyed into Calais on a French ship, accompanied by his dismantled aeroplane, defeated in his laudable attempt. Then we have a view of Bleriot preparing his aeroplane, soaring into the sky and skimming over the waters of the Channel for several miles, looking assured of victory, as indeed he was. Of course, it was impossible for the moving picture camera to follow him on the whole of his adventurous journey, and so it was dramatically fitting that he should be depicted, escorted back to France as a triumphant conqueror and photographed in the company of his wife, his child, and friends in a convenient automobile. When looking at this picture and seeing the aeroplane floating in the sky, a mere speck, we experienced much about the same sensation as when we saw Baldwin, the parachutist, make his first descent many years ago. This was a mixed feeling of wonderment and weird uncanniness at the extraordinary spectacle of man establishing his dominion over the air. This film will no doubt attract very great attention wherever it is shown, and we think Gaumonts are deserving of every congratulation in the skill and enterprise they showed in what must have been somewhat difficult circumstances in securing a unique record of a unique event.

AVIATION AT RHEIMS (Film Import).

Rheims is a celebrated place. Who has not read "The Jackdaw of Rheims," a piece of verse by the late Thomas Ingoldsby, which has given thousands of amateur reciters an opportunity for distinguishing themselves? Few persons know what Rheims really is, though. It is a French cathedral city. These last few days we have wondered whether the English poet, Lord Tennyson, could have had the events of the past few weeks in his mind when he wrote of the "airy navies grappling in the central blue." He clearly foresaw the time when the airship would become a practicability, as has just been demonstrated at Rheims, where a kind of tournament of aeroplanes has taken place. Over thirty of these machines were entered for the various contests and the picture which the Film Import and Trading Company is releasing this week shows scenes and incidents in the first great epoch-making sky contest that has ever been held. The picture is bound to have an almost phenomenal interest. It shows the arrival of visitors on the course; policemen clearing the way for the aviators, and views of the principal bi-planes, monoplanes, etc. Then the picture illustrates the racing over the grand stand upon the course and around the marking towers. There are crowds of people watching the flights of the aeroplanes. The scene is full of movement, interest and fascination. It is due to the enterprise of the Warwick Trading Company and the Film Import Company that these pictures should be available in America so soon after they were taken. The pictures will serve to convince the American public that aviation has become a practicable science. It would appear that the drivers of these machines have illimitable control over them in the air, and, in fact, they are as safe and as certain to handle as the automobile is on land. This is really a very remarkable picture and we congratulate the Film Import Company on their enterprise in being the first to show us a view of the Rheims races in the air. The picture is certain to be seen by hundreds of thousands of visitors to moving picture theaters.

HE TRIED ON HANDCUFFS (Vitagraph).

"The Fisherman," by the Vitagraph Company, which we saw the other day, did not please us a bit, but "He Tried on Handcuffs" did. "The Fisherman" made us sad, and we object to being made sad in moving picture theaters, as we have said before. The fisherman went out to fish; his boat turned turtle, and his boy nearly got drowned. However, they rescued the boy, revived him, and the fisherman and his wife and their fisher friends were all made happy. A lugubrious theme, well photographed, especially in respect of the rendering of some breaking waves. We look to the Vitagraph Company to amuse and not to depress us, and in the very next picture that followed "The Fisherman," namely, "He Tried on Handcuffs," the Vitagraph Company made us laugh very heartily, and they also made the crowded theater, where we saw the picture, also laugh very heartily indeed. "He Tried on Handcuffs" is, briefly, the story of an expectant bridegroom, who goes to get his marriage license; foolishly tries on a pair of handcuffs and allows the man who has the key to them to vanish into the unknown. Now, you can just imagine the excruciatingly comic adventures of the poor fellow. He is chased, hunted, derided; life becomes a burden to him, and when he appears to claim his bedecked and bejeweled bride, he looks more like a desperate criminal than a young fellow about to enter the marriage state. However, in due time, the man with the key of the handcuffs is found and the fond couple are united by the magistrate, before whom the manacled man has been brought to appear by a watchful guardian of the public peace. This brief description can only give a short idea of the plot and adventures of this highly diverting film. We single it out for special mention because it is a somewhat novel experience to see a 500 or 600-foot length film accompanied by laughter from a moving picture audience all through. At the end of it there was quite loud applause. The Vitagraph Company have great capacity for tickling the risible faculties of moving picture audiences, and we desire to encourage them in this policy. To our thinking a great deal more humor might be put into an average moving picture programme, and the Vitagraph Company may be assured that whenever they put on a laughable film they are almost certain to score a popular success, which they certainly have done in this instance.

"Backward, Turn Backward, O, Time in Your Flight."—A sentimental picture from the Edison studio which will revive tender memories in the minds of those who have passed middle life. The opening scene holds the attention. It is one of those beautiful home pictures where a couple are going down the silver side of life together. A basket of fruit is brought to them and a big red apple recalls memories of an escapade of apple stealing in which they figured when children, and the scene is reproduced while they rehearse the story. It is a simple picture, but its heart interest is strong and probably every man and woman who sees it recalls some similar experience in their own lives. Such pictures interest, not alone by what is actually seen, but perhaps even more by what they suggest, and unquestionably every one appreciates them and would like to see more of the same type.

"A Visit to Biskra."—Pathe Freres take one with this film on an altogether delightful visit to this picturesque, but little known town of Algeria, where life is so different from what it is here that ones seems transported to a different world. The coloring of the film is masterful and reproduces the lines of foliage and costume with fidelity. It affords an excellent idea of the city, the country surrounding it and the inhabitants.

"Show Your License."—A comedy from the Pathes which is based upon the requirement for a hunter's license in France. It introduces an apparently interminable chase, through rather picturesque scenery, and finally the warden is discomfited by the hunter producing his license. Such pictures are almost pointless in this country, though undoubtedly they are sources of amusement in the countries they represent.

"The Royal Outcast."—A Selig which tells an interesting story, something on the Moses order, of a royal child who was set adrift in an open boat to save him from the machinations of a relative who wanted his throne. Of course the setting is different, for it is not the king's daughter that finds this outcast. On the contrary, it is a peasant, but she is motherly and the little one is taken in and cared for until he is asked for by proclamation and goes back to his royal robes and rules with firmness and love ever after. The interest in this story is chiefly in the fact that the royal child undergoes numerous interesting experiences, which, perhaps, fit him for the life he is to lead in the future. It is sometimes worth while for rulers to understand the needs and desires of their people and here is an instance where this occurred. The melodramatic features of the picture are well worked out and there is a snap and go to the piece which adds to the interest and makes the audience look with favor upon it. One may not criticise this picture too severely. It is a well told story, though perhaps as improbable as such stories usually are. However, there is plenty in it to make the audience want more of the same sort. The acting is satisfactory and the technical quality of the film is quite up to Selig standard. Such stories are better than funerals and other lugubrious experiences, of which there are too many for the good of the silent stage and the enjoyment of its patrons.

"Fancy Soldier."—Whoever made this picture did not put his mark upon it and after watching it with some care one can scarcely blame him for not doing so. It is better for the reputation of the manufacturer that he should be nameless. The picture has neither sense nor humor, excepting a species of the coarse sort which could by a stretch of the risibilities be transformed into a laugh. No one can understand what it means to see a soldier constantly changing caps, though one is led to infer that the cap which he seeks to hide from officers has something to do with their prerogatives and therefore is dangerous for him to wear. At any rate, he is set upon and carried away for wearing it. Then appears upon the scene a woman, the same who had been disclosed writing a letter in the opening scene, and presents a soldier with two huge pieces of bologna sausage. If there is any sense in such a combination it must be confessed that it is difficult to discover it. The photography is poor and the film itself is not good. Consequently there seems to be no excuse for its exhibition.

"A Mexican Drama."—Here is a Lux which has all the snap and dash for which Mexicans are supposed to be noted, but the subject is scarcely to be commended. This constantly playing upon marital infidelity is a poor apology for a subject, yet foreign producers are very apt to include this in their lists more often than seems wise to Americans. While marital infidelity is common, it is the exception and not the rule; but in motion pictures it is a stock subject and the censor needs to get in his work vigorously here. The vigor with which the wronged husband goes after his wife's paramour is quite refreshing and the long ride through a very picturesque landscape is interesting, more so because the scenery is good than because of the ride, however. Finally the seducer is caught and killed and there the picture ends. The photography of this film is above reproach. There is a tonal quality to the picture which is satisfying and causes one to want to see more, though the subject may be a bit nauseating. It is well worth while, even with that objection admitted. The Lux people are turning out some excellent films recently and this is not the least of them.

"The Blacksmith's Daughter."—A Centaur which has all the qualities that have marked former releases from the same studio. The firm has a capable company of actors and in presenting "The Blacksmith's Daughter" these actors have developed the dramatic qualities of the piece as far as the play permitted. It is the old familiar story of the country girl led astray by a smooth tongued city man who is forced by her former lover to marry her at the pistol's muzzle, and who turns out to be a bigamist and a forger. In the opening scene there is a fist fight between two very vigorous men that is well worth seeing. It is so well acted that it seems almost real. Indeed, it is difficult at times to realize that it is only a picture, it seems so real and so much in earnest. There is an elopement, a forced wedding, which was no wedding at all, an attempted suicide, a thrilling rescue and a reconciliation which must be imagined, though most firms would have put that in, and what is presumably a wedding later that had more of happines for the girl and more for the man in the case. The firm is to be commended for the excellent technical work. In most instances the film is of an even tonal quality which mades the picture stand out sharp and clear and it runs steady on the screen, saving one's eyes from the blurring which is too common in some independent films. The acting, particularly of the principal character, is sufficiently vigorous to suit the most exacting critic. While the other characters are largely accessories, they perform their parts as well as they are allowed to do. The whole is a very satisfactory piece of dramatic work and all engaged in its production are to be heartily congratulated.

"By Love's Path."—A film without a manufacturer's mark and it is another of those pictures which one feels as though the maker did well to keep his name off. There is an abandon of free love in it which ends in murder that seems to be leading nowhere and developing no interesting plot. It is difficult to understand what the story is. The technical quality is fairly satisfactory and in one or two dramatic climaxes there is some good acting, but in the main the film is not attractive and seems to have no reason for existence.

"Blind Against His Will."—A Lux comedy which is an exhibition of the ways of the average mendicant, exposed by the prank of a school boy, who places the blind sign upon another man who fell asleep near. It is amusing in a degree, but lacks the conveying of much point in this country.

"In Hot Pursuit."—An Urban which is based upon the abduction of a blind man's daughter by a couple of young scamps. The tearing away of one of the young men's ties leads to the discovery of the identity of the abductors and the young woman is rescued. The film is interesting chiefly for its excellent technical quality. The story is commonplace, though in its way pathetic enough.

"Romantic Italy."—This picturesque Urban film is of more than usual attractive quality, presenting a series of views of the cities of Perugia and Gubbio, with their ancient walls and remains of Roman fortifications. The beautiful Marmore waterfall is shown and the wierd and fascinationg candle procession at Gubbio is reproduced. The technical quality of the film is almost perfect, the picturesque features and tonal qualities combining to make a superb educational picture.

"A Grave Disappointment."—A Pathe love story, representing the trials of a pretty millioner whose fiancee breaks the engagement because of the differences in their social positions, a feature which does not appeal to American audiences with any particular force because of the fact that no such distinctions exert any influence here, excepting in rare instances. Nevertheless the audience sympathizes with the milliner and is pleased that she is loved by a worthy young man who prevents her from committing suicide, and presumably marrics her.

"Launching the 'Voltaire.'"—A Pathe picture of the launching of a battleship, which is interesting in the same degree that such pictures are always interesting. Probably everyone would be glad to see a battleship launched, and failing that a motion picture reproducing a launching is a popular substitute. The photographer did his work well and the picture is satisfactory.

"Training Bulls for the Fight."—A picture from the Pathe studio which shows clearly how bulls are trained for fighting in Spain. While Americans have little use for bull fighting, this picture is not without interest here and the quality is so good that it excites interest, regardless of the unsavory sport it represents.

"Magic Cartons."—A Gaumont which affords much interest in the change from one picture to another, whereby a girl is finally transformed into a very vigorous fighting individual. Pictures like this are for amusement only, and are perfectly adapted to their purpose. And where any mystery attaches to what is seen on the screen the interest is largely increased. The Gaumont studio has sent out a number of excellent pictures of this character, of which the one shown this week was not the least.

"Sam Not Wanted in the Family."—A Pathe comedy, telling the story of a persistent but objectionable lover, who has not sense enough to accept the gentle admonitions to depart, but must needs wait until he is placed on a mattress and set afloat down the river.

"1776—Hessian Renegades."—The Biograph people have taken an incident in the American revolution which shows the worst side of the Hessian hirelings of England. A party of them follow an American dispatch bearer to his home and wantonly murder him before the eyes of his parents, and then laugh at their grief. The father, with the aid of his daughter, succeeds in slipping away unobserved, and rallying a posse, the entire party is killed in revenge. This is something the type of pictures which the Gaumonts produce, illustrating scenes in the Franco-Prussian War, and represents the Hessians at their worst.

"The Call of the Heart."—A Lubin love story which is interesting because it illustrates what everyone who understands human nature knows, that the affections cannot always be controlled. The widow in this picture shows her good sense and appreciation of this when she gives way to her daughter in an affair of the heart. In other words, the call of the heart, over which the couple most interested had no control, is heard and its dictates are heeded.

"Our Country in Arms."—A Lubin which appeals irresistibly to all lovers of military trappings and prowess, which means about everyone. From the children playing soldiers, to the cadets, the soldiers marching away to the front and finally the Grand Army men, there is a convincing air about it which thrills one and causes one to feel that patriotism is still an important element in national life.

"The Stampede."—A Selig picture which has all the vigor and action of the West, with the breezy plains, the rearing and plunging horses and a huge drove of cattle careering madly over the prairies, which is so well produced that involuntarily one listens to hear the thunder of the thousands of hoofs as they beat upon the sward. There is a thread of love story running through it. The rival for the young woman's affections undertakes to drive the stampeded cattle over the sleeping lover, but he is saved by the girl, and when the story is told the cowboys give the villain a sound spanking and kick him out of camp. His offense makes him appear so cowardly and mean that he is not considered worth hanging. Such films have little dramatic quality in them, but they are picturesque. The characters do something and they are, to that extent, interesting. In a way they are educational. They reproduce phases of American life which are fast passing away, and there is always the fascination for them which accompanies anything that has so much vigor and determination as were characteristic of the wild, free life on the plains.

"Versailles."—A Pathe picture representing scenes at Versailles during the reign of Louis XIV. It is a magnificent picture of a magnificent place. The costuming represents accurately the costuming of that period, and the outdoor activities of different members of the French court are reproduced with fidelity. When the marvelously beautiful fountains, with their glittering colors, appear on the screen the audience involuntarily breaks into applause.

"The Sealed Room."—A Biograph subject which is one of the best dramatically the house has ever sent out, and the technical quality of the picture also entitles it to high rank in that respect. It tells a story of love, love which poisoned because it led the lady and her unfortunate troubadour to a horrible death, sealed up in a room in a tower. The king, who suspected his favorite, planned a trap into which she and her lover fell, and then they were sealed up and left to die in the room which the king had prepared as a resting place for himself and his favorite. The horror of the situation grows upon the audience, and as the approach of the lingering death becomes more and more apparent, the acting of the unfortunate couple is fascinating in its intensity. One's nerves are strung almost to the breaking point under the strain. And when it is over and the picture disappears there is a relaxation which is difficult to describe, but is a great relief. One can sense the sufferings of the two until stupor overcomes them and they succumb to the inevitable. Outside the king stands and taunts them as the death shadows lengthen. It is all very real and very horrible, but none the less fascinating. In some respects this is probably the best film the Biograph people have ever sent out.

"The Little Darling."—A Biograph comedy which makes a humor out of a mistaken idea that one whom her mother called a little girl and who was prepared for with a load of toys and similar tokens of friendship, turns out to be a young lady of seventeen, who prefers garden gates and shady walks to dolls and toys. The discomfiture of the crowd of bachelors is amusing, to say the least. The fun in some instances becomes almost uproarious.

"The Woman Hater."—A Lubin which is a comedy, yet at the same time has many dramatic elements of strength. One partner is a woman hater and the other is not. The younger partner, while the older one is away on his vacation, engages a woman stenographer, which is against the wishes of the older partner. The older one returns and discovers what has been done, but accepts the inevitable, and eventually accepts the stenographer as his wife. There are many amusing touches in it that serve to give it life and increase its interest, and technically it is also good. The effect is that it is a pleasant enough film, telling a pleasant enough story.

"Mrs. Jones' Birthday."—A Selig which might well be called a chapter of errors. If all husbands have had similar experiences, it is too bad to harrow them up with the telling of this story. If they have not, perhaps it will be a warning to them to watch very carefully the birthdays and see that some appropriate gift is at home in time for the event. Not wait, as poor Jones did, until the fateful day arrives, and then have a series of unfortunate accidents overtake one and prevent him presenting the present he intended. It is a tale of woe, indeed, and the fact that Jones meant well, but was pursued by an unkind fate, is the interesting point of the story, and in the telling much dramatic ability is shown and much excellent acting is done. The technical qualities of the film serve to emphasize the picture, making it a pleasure to look at. There is too much truth in it to suit some men, but it is sometimes well to have such shortcomings illustrated, so that the man—the average man—can see what he does and take measures to overcome his characteristics.

"Winning a Widow."—A Selig picture which has much of interest in it because of its general mix-up, but offers little opportunity for dramatic ability. It is a mix-up with two men after one widow and a young man who wants a certain girl, to which her father objects. To square himself, the young man undertakes various things, and succeeds so well that he gets everyone into hot water. The result of it all is that the father consents to the match between the young people and makes one of his own. The piece is somewhat humorous, but is chiefly interesting because it is uncertain what is going to happen next.

"The Mason's Paradise."—If the Gaumonts, from whose studio this travesty upon labor unions emanated intended to poke fun at some of their methods they succeeded admirably, for, while this picture is manifestly a burlesque, it unquestionably comes dangerously near to the truth in some particulars. The studied indifference of the Mason's Club toward the gentleman who wants some work done, and the almost impossible conditions imposed are strikingly like the stories that have been told of some of the unreasonable demands of trade unionists. Probably the picture was intended to be funny, but it will appear serious to those who have suffered. Perhaps it will do more good because of this and will lead to the consideration of the unreasonable features of unrestrained unionism.

San Bernardino, Cal.—James Slipper, well known throughout the country as a scene painter, is erecting a moving picture and vaudeville show house on West Third street. It will have a seating capacity of about one thousand and will be elaborately decorated both outside and in.

Notes from Chicago.

In the Orpheum and Bijou Dream Theaters Chicago possesses what is perhaps the most unique theater group in the United States, if not in the entire world. These houses are side by side in the heart of the famous State street shopping district and it is no exaggeration to say that probably close to a million people pass their doors daily, including practically all the very large down town hotel population. The Orpheum occupies two stories of a brick building and the Bijou Dream three stories of a similar one, each house having a main floor and balcony. They are owned by the Jones, Linick, Schaefer Company, which controls twelve other moving picture or moving picture-vaudeville houses in Chicago, besides several park enterprises. The Orpheum opened September 9, 1907, as a moving picture-vaudeville house, ten cents admission, but after seven weeks the vaudeville sign came down and moving pictures and illustrated songs have constituted the entire bill ever since, admission remaining the same. The programme consists of three reels of film and two illustrated songs, lasting fifty minutes, and there is a five-minute intermission between shows. The house opens at 9 a. m. and runs continuously, except for the five-minute intermissions, until 11 p. m. The orchestra consists of eight pieces and the house employs thirty-five people in all. There are two shifts working from 9 to 4 and 4 to closing. On Saturdays the attendance often very nearly reaches the 10,000 mark. The Bijou dream opened May 1, 1907, with a five-cent moving picture show upstairs and a penny arcade below. The theater was reached by a glass stairway under which ran a cataract of water. This stairway proved an immense drawing card, adding thousands of dollars to the income account. Last Fall the arcade was transformed into a small ten-cent vaudeville-moving picture theater and recently the whole house was remodeled into one theater, 46 feet in the clear from floor to ceiling, playing a mixed bill of vaudeville and moving pictures, admission ten cents. The house opens at 10 a. m. and runs continuous, with five-minute intermissions between shows, until 11 p. m.

The two houses have a combined frontage of 65 feet, and the rental amounts to $6,000 per month, $4,000 of which is for the Orpheum and $2,000 goes to the Bijou expense account. The Orpheum cost, in round numbers, $160,000, while the Bijou as it now is set the company back to the tune of more than $50,000. It is from the financial standpoint these theaters are unique and remarkable and in this point of view the writer believes they stand practically alone. That a theater costing $160,000 and paying $48,000 annual rental can not only exist by moving pictures alone, but pay a handsome profit on so large an investment seems wellnigh incredible. And this, too, despite the fact that the Orpheum seats but 700, and the Bijou Dream, with a yearly rent expense of $24,000, seats but 342, and absolutely no one is allowed to stand during the performances. Both are beautiful houses inside and out. The operating rooms are models of their kind. The Orpheum operating room is in charge of Mr. F. H. Trude and Mr. W. P. Osinger, both of whom have been there practically since the house opened. The Bijou Dream operating room is in charge of Mr. F. H. Richardson and Mr. Albert Ropinske. The room is 8 x 18 with a 12-foot ceiling. It is iron lined with heavy cork matting on the floor, and a 36-inch vent pipe through to the roof. The machine peepholes are 12 x 24 inches and all holes are protected by sliding shutters made from No. 14 iron which work. They all close like clockwork by pulling one small ring off a nail, the ring being located near the floor on the door jamb. Also the shutters are held up by cotton lines which would burn through quickly and these lines have fuses inserted in them. It is a fact that a reel of film could burn in this room and the audience not have even a suspicion that there was a fire in the house. There are lockers of ample size for each operator and the whole room is painted with blackboard slating paint. There are two Viascope machines, a dissolver and spotlight. The machines set at a heavy angle, the drop being 25 feet in the 90-foot projection. I have set this forth at some length, since I planned this room myself and consider it a model. Mr. Samuel Levine is the able manager of the Orpheum and Mr. Sig. Faller handles the helm at the Bijou Dream.

* * *

November 2, 1907, Mr. D. L. Swartz opened a small moving picture-vaudeville house at 194-6 North Clark street. Mr. Swartz was new to the amusement business and many were the prophecies of failure, but the gentleman attended strictly to business, put on a good show and kept it good. Competition was heavy but soon, instead of failing, he was obliged to double the capacity of the house, which has ever since done a capacity business. I mention this case particularly from the fact that it proves that the novice may succeed against all odds, provided he is adapted to the business, as Mr. Swartz certainly was and is. Recently the gentleman has organized a company known as the Erie Amusement Company, which proposes to erect a string of houses, seating from 500 to 1,000, in various parts of the city. The first house is under the North Chicago landmark, Brand's Hall, North Clark and Erie streets. The cost of the new house is $11,000 and it will seat 550. The bill will be moving pictures and vaudeville. Admission ten cents.

* * *

The new office of the George K. Spoor Company is a beauty and no mistake. It is an immense room, probably 40 x 50 feet, with an 18-foot ceiling. The room is tastefully decorated and it is safe to say that no company in all Chicago has a more thoroughly excellent office room.

* * *

Incidentally it must be noted that there has been phenomenal improvement in the Essanay films within the past few weeks. Some of the subjects they are now putting out are simply magnificent in photography. No one could imagine a more beautiful and in every way excellent piece of photography than the S. & A. film, "The Wonders of Nature," recently released.

* * *

An operator writes us that he is running film from an independent exchange just now and notes that fully four-fifths of it is old subjects by so-called "trust" manufacturers which have for the most part been "refinished." Unfortunately the refinishing does not eliminate the patches nor does it replace the chunks cut out in making them.

* * *

The Standard Film Exchange reports heavy increase in sales of the "American" machine. The Standard now averages fifteen sales per month of this machine, mostly, however, without the automatic rewinding attachment.

* * *

WILL MAKE PICTURES IN MEXICO.

G. M. Anderson, of the Essanay Company, to Obtain More Stirring Western Subjects.

With a stock company of eight people, camera men and assistants, G. M. Anderson, of the firm of Essanay, left this week for the West and old Mexico to obtain another series of stirring Western tales. Anderson's trip to the West last year netted him enviable reputation among the moving picture men and established firmly the reputation of the Essanay firm. "The Indian Trailer," "A Tale of the West," "A Mexican's Gratitude" and other subjects, depicting the romance of the West, were greatly applauded by the picture-loving public. There is promise of even better records in this newly planned trip, as the party will be better equipped in every way and will cover more territory.

The party left Chicago for Denver, Colo., Wednesday, September 8. The company will spend a few weeks in this vicinity and will then continue further west. Stops will be made in Montana and Wyoming and the company will arrive in Portland, Ore., the first of October. Turning south and following the coast, the company will visit San Francisco, Los Angeles and other California cities. They will arrive in old Mexico about the first of November, where the serious business of making some big Western dramas will begin.

MR. G. M. ANDERSON.

"We have some good stories to put on out there," said Mr. Anderson, "stories written by authors whose Western stories are standard and of the best. Capable talent has been employed to interpret the stories and a score or more of real live cowboys are going to assist. We are going to take everything for production purposes with us and all interiors will be made in the West where we are operating. This will mean that our subjects will be released not later than two weeks after they arrive at our factory in Chicago. Some interesting scenic pictures will be issued from time to time, also a number of educational subjects showing in an interesting way the great Western industries, mining, cattle-raising, etc. Views in Yosemite Valley and other beauty spots of the West will also be made. The great success of our subject, 'Wonders of Nature,' leads us to believe that American scenic pictures meet with the approval of the nickel theatergoer and that he wants more subjects of this nature."

Jesse Robbins, the photographer, whose artistic treatment of the subject "Wonders of Nature" won so much applause, will accompany Anderson.

TRADE NOTES.

Sidney Wire has taken the management of the White City, Toledo, for the remainder of the season, the former manager, Sam H. Pickens, having resigned to take the management of a theatrical company.

Danbury, Conn.—The Lyceum Moving Picture Theater is to be reopened. Manager A. J. Rothstein is now engaged in renovating the interior of the theater, making what few repairs are needed and brightening up the appearance of the place generally.

Somerville, N. J.—Chas. F. Weldon and W. W. Tillyer, who are now running the open-air moving pictures, have leased the building at 145 West Main street and will open a cosy little playhouse with moving pictures. It is the intention to offer the people of Somerville an elegant little playhouse with the best of everything.

Sutton, Neb.—C. J. Bauer has bought out the interests of Soule & Patterson in the Lyric Theater and is conducting a show that outclasses many of those in the large cities. A traveling man reports that he saw the film "With Taft in Panama" in one of the large city theaters in the week of its release and thought it a very poor film, the pictures being very dim and fading away at the corners. He happened to see the same subject again in the Lyric and says that the picture was so clear that he could see the white of Mr. Taft's eye and the small bolts in the steam shovels. The service in the Lyric is 220 volts D. C., with a 50-foot throw and we can tell how the Suttonites appreciated the show when we are informed that the receipts for July eclipsed any month since January. We would hear less of hard times if every manager would do like Mr. Bauer and give their patrons the very best show that can be produced—it does not cost much more.

Toledo, Ohio.—All of the Toledo parks have closed excepting one. Business at the local outdoor resorts has been phenomenally bad this season, and all of the parks have lost money. The only remaining park open in Toledo is White City, which has discontinued all free acts and has substituted a mammoth free moving picture show in the grounds. An enormous screen is hung from the large trees and hundreds of benches are distributed around the bandstand. There are band concerts twice daily and free picture shows. This appears to draw the crowds and the park has been able to hold its own. The amusement concessions have done practically nothing, but the dance hall and swimming pool have brought in sufficient revenue to enable the management to keep the park open until the 18th of this month. The park is under the management of Sydney Wire, who was formerly assistant manager and press representative at Lake Erie Park here. Sydney is an energetic and hustling young showman and has created quite an interest in White City since he took the place in hand. During the past few weeks he has instituted baby shows, drill contests, swimming races and the free open-air pictures, and is now arranging a big week of athletic sports, with an interesting Marathon race for the championship of the State. The picture show at the park has been one of the most successful of the side shows and has been under the management of R. Calkins, who was formerly with the Superior Film Exchange of this city.

NOTES OF THE TRADE.

Alton, Ill.—W. M. Sauvage has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Muskegon, Mich.—Roy Cummings has sold the Amuse Vaudette to Carl Ray.

Emporia, Kans.—Scott Wilkie, of Hutchinson, will open a new nickelodeon here.

Urbana, Ill.—The Swanson Moving Picture Company will open a new theater here.

Auburn, Ind.—C. B. Schmuck is arranging to open a new moving picture theater here.

Streator, Ill.—The Lyric Amusement Company is preparing to open its theater here.

Ogden, Utah.—Sullivan & Considine are preparing to open a new vaudeville theater here.

Covington, Ky.—T. J. Edmonds will erect a moving picture theater at 170 Pike street.

Stockton, Cal.—Mr. Stebbins, of San Jose, is planning to open a moving picture theater here.

St. Joseph, Mo.—J. F. Bilz is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Seneca, Ill.—A new moving picture theater is to be opened up in the William Powers building.

Hot Springs, Ark.—Charles Bronson will erect a new moving picture and vaudeville theater here.

Shelby, Neb.—J. Q. Rathbun is making preparations to open a new moving picture theater here.

Fairview City, Ill.—A. C. Albright has leased the Simmons Nickelodeon here, and is now in charge.

Chicago, Ill.—Julius Birk will erect a one story moving picture theater at 1316 Fifty-fifth street.

Rockford, Wash.—Nels Olson is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Phoenix, Ariz.—M. Echlin is making preparations to open the Majestic Moving Picture Theater here.

Spencer, Ohio.—H. T. Blair has sold his interest in the Unique Theater to his partner, Mr. Teriney.

Washington, D. C.—Dr. G. C. Ober will erect a new moving picture theater here, at 505 Seventh street.

Columbus, Ohio.—The Sun-Murray Amusement Company has decided to erect an $85,000 vaudeville theater here.

Plymouth, N. H.—B. A. Crittenden and Walter Brown have leased the Gem Theater, and have taken possession.

Albia, Iowa.—The Comert Amusement Company is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

McAlester, Okla.—Samuel O. Small has awarded a contract to McEachim & Enloe for the erection of a moving picture theater.

Decatur, Ind.—C. B. Schmuck has sold his moving picture theater here to W. P. Biggs, who has already taken possession.

Boise, Idaho.—J. Herman Kaiser has purchased the Boise Theater, corner of Seventh and Main streets, and has taken possession.

Danville, Ill.—Giff Goben has sold the Varsity Nickel Theater here to Metz & Mahafey, who have already taken possession.

Farmington, N. H.—Frank Merrill, of Rochester, N. H., is fitting up quarters for a moving picture theater in the Small block.

Chicago, Ill.—Robert Pottinger will open a new vaudeville and moving picture theater in Irving Park. It will be known as the "Mabel."

Los Gatos, Cal.—H. M. Johnson, of Los Angeles, has leased the Kyle block here, and will convert it into a moving picture theater.

Davenport, Iowa.—The renovated Elite has been reopened Manager Berkell presents a high-class vaudeville and moving picture programme.

Manistee, Mich.—John Sharp has purchased the old Bijou Theater and has completely remodeled it. It will soon be opened for business.

Jacksonville, Fla.—H. W. Hancock and Frank G. Campbell have purchased the Phoenix Theater here, and will make extensive improvements.

Sharon, Ohio.—Architect E. E. Clepper is preparing plans for a new vaudeville theater to be erected by F. Daloa and John Herman. Cost, $10,000.

Ticonderoga, N. Y.—Alonzo Bailey has purchased the interest of one of the Dolbreck brothers, who owned the Casino. Good business is reported.

Cripple Creek, Ill.—Jack Ford and David Bragunier have purchased the Ideal Moving Picture Theater on Bennet avenue, and have taken possession.

Missoula, Mont.—R. C. Penny, late of Butte, has purchased the Bijou Moving Picture Theater here and is making extensive improvements and additions.

Springfield, Mo.—Horace Thomas has sold the Rex Moving Picture Theater at 306 South street to McRoberts & Jackson, who have taken possession.

North Tonawanda, N. Y.—W. A. Calkins has opened the Imperial Airdome Theater with the best moving picture entertainment ever seen in this section.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Co-operative Amusement Company, of which Dr. J. G. Jones is president, is taking figures for the erection of a moving picture theater at 523 William street.

Spencer, Mass.—The Park is a new moving picture theater on Mechanic street which will shortly open under the joint proprietorship of Richard M. Kane and Joseph Berthiaume.

Portland, Ore.—Articles of incorporation of the Motion Picture Advertising Company have been filed in the office of the County Clerk by A. L. Sutton, Oliver G. Walker and James Cole. Capital stock, $2,500.

Torrington, Conn.—G. D. Stevens has leased a building on Water street for a number of years and is converting it into a moving picture theater to be known as The Gem. He expects to be ready to open by the first of next month.

Harrisonburg, Va.—The Palace Moving Picture Parlor is now under new management and the new proprietors are William M. Shepherd and D. Clint Devier. The actual management of the parlor will be in the hands of J. F. O'Brien.

Greenville, S. C.—Generous Pisano, the original Jan Jacobs, the expansionist, and Mabel Valenteene Mooree, after closing their vaudeville season will open a vaudeville house in Greenville, S. C., Monday, September 6, known as the Valenteene Theater.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association is going into the moving picture show business. This was evidenced recently by the brewery company taking out a permit to erect a one-story odeon at 622-626 North Grand avenue, to cost $2,500.

Newburyport, Mass.—The Orpheum Theater has been reopened under the management of F. H. Wiswell, who intends to present the best pictures and vaudeville obtainable. The front has been improved and widened and the interior refitted so that it is exceedingly comfortable and attractive.

Sturgis, Mich.—R. J. Crosbie, of Montpelier, Ind., has purchased the only moving picture show in this town of 7,000 inhabitants. Ralph Johnson, who has been in charge of the Gem Theater, Montpelier, has gone to Sturgis to take up a similar position under Mr. Crosbie.

Wallingford, Conn.—Miss Mae McKiernan has been awarded the prize of $25 for a name for the new moving picture theater being erected at the corner of Center and South Orchard streets. Of the 309 names suggested, "Russotania" was selected by Paul Russe, the promoter of the enterprise.

Birmingham, Ala.—E. H. Colley has opened a handsome picture theater on Third avenue, between Nineteenth and Twentieth streets. The place has not yet been named and the lady patrons are competing for a prize for the best name. The show house will be conducted on a different plan from the usual thing. There will be no vaudeville; only the best selection of pictures and an orchestra which will interpret the pictures with appropriate music and sound effects.

Newburyport, Mass.—The Star Theater will from now on present high-class vaudeville and musical comedy instead of motion pictures.

Chicago, Ill.—A new theater, which is said to be a model of its kind, has opened in Irving Park. Robert Pottinger, a real estate man, named it after his only daughter, Mabel. The auditorium of the new house is 75 by 42 feet, with a seating capacity of 500. All the scenery is painted on sheet steel. Everything about the stage is fireproof. James Black has been engaged as manager. There will be two shows every night, one starting at 7:45 and the other at 9:15, with six vaudeville sketches and two reels of moving pictures. The entire programme will be changed twice a week. Admission will be 10 and 15 cents.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE WAGES OF OPERATORS.

Chicago, September 4, 1909.

Editors Moving Picture World:

Dear Sirs—In a letter I have been informed that the remarks of the "Man About Town" come so near the truth as regards the New York operators that "it hurts." I have made some inquiries and find that the average New York operator is paid from $12 to $15 for long hours, only the best men getting the latter figure, which is regarded as top notch pay. I believe my information is correct. Now what do you expect, Mr. New York Manager? Do you really imagine you can employ a man of experience and brains for such a sum as that? You invest from two to fifty thousand dollars in a house and then place the operating room, on which depends absolutely the income from your investment, in the hands of a $12 a week man. Is that common sense? You simply cannot have a first-class show without a first-class man in the operating-room. If your show is poor your crowds are likely to soon become slim. Is it good business to risk your entire investment income to save $10 a week in operator salary? I put it to you as a matter of common sense. Mind you I know nothing of New York operators save that a really good man cannot ordinarily be had at $12 a week even for an evening show. It takes a man of brains and ability to get the best results out of a moving picture machine at all times, and you may take it from me that brains coupled with ability are not to be had at $12 a week except in businesses which offer opportunities for advancement, and this is not the case with operating. Pay the price and get good men, gentlemen, or stop kicking. Please do not understand me as implying that the mere matter of high pay makes a good man. It might make the poor one somewhat better, but he will still be mediocre. What I mean is that by paying decent salaries you will be able to get good operators, which you cannot do for $12 per week, in New York or anywhere else.

F. H. RICHARDSON.

INDEPENDENT MANUFACTURERS ORGANIZE.

Joplin, Mo., September 4, 1909.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—I will thank you to kindly publish the following open letter in your columns, knowing that a clear statement of such an important movement will prove of vast interest to your readers:

"Since the formation of the Trust, the Independents have lacked the one necessary element of success—concentration of effort. It was justly to be expected.

"When the Trust was formed, it took in the important firms in every branch, leaving a number of firms in the field whose objects and interests differed so greatly as to make co-relationship almost impossible.

"The atmosphere has cleared since then, and the Independents have all learned through hard experience that to achieve the success which the cause deserves, a common purpose and a common goal must be in mind.

"This sentiment took root in the meetings held in Chicago and the Independent Film Service Protective Association was formed. The membership of this Association will include, beside the manufacturers of moving picture films and the film exchanges, also manufacturers of machines and accessories, and, in fact, all manufacturers and handlers of any commodity used in the exhibition of moving pictures.

"Since this movement has already the support of many of the best Independent concerns, there is no question but what it will be carried through to a successful issue. Its purposes will be fourfold:

"First: To cause to be created and to assist in creating an ample supply of high-class American film which will take first rank in artistic and photographic qualities, and to provide a ready market for the manufacturer who invests his money and efforts in the production of such film.

"Second: To assist the Independent film exchanges, through sound advice and necessary regulation, to gain the support of the exhibitor, so as to enable him to purchase new film and practically consign the junk to the furnace.

"Third: To instil into the mind of the exhibitor a confidence in the product of the independent manufacturer and in the business methods of the rental exchange, and to cause him to lend his moral and financial support to attain the permanent supremacy of the Independent films.

"Fourth: To provide a common fund to resist legal oppression which the Trust, by virtue of its power and wealth, would be enabled to impose upon individuals, whose weakness otherwise would be an easy prey for unjust attacks."

I am sure that the exhibitor will be glad to know that this movement is now being fostered by the entire Independent industry; that the plans will be worked out on clean, honest lines, and that the entire working out of the business end will be placed in charge of men whose ability and integrity is sure to gain for the Independents the recognition of high merit.

Very truly yours,

J. W. MORGAN,
Chairman Organization Committee.

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY
ILLUSTRATED SONG
ADVERTISING
ANNOUNCEMENT
SPECIAL
SLIDES
Special Slides Made to Order
58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614
CHICAGO

MARYLAND FILM COMPANY
400 Carroll Building : : Baltimore, Md.
BALTIMORE'S FOREMOST INDEPENDENT RENTERS
Write for our special money making proposition, it will pay you. Good clean films, and a square deal is what we offer you.

When you want a good slide, there are several—when you want the best, there is but one:
BRAYTON
Brayton Manufacturing Co.
122 E. Randolph Street, Chicago
Advertising——Announcement——Contest
SPECIAL UNTIL OCTOBER 1st 1909
A Slide of Your Singer, 75 cts., Postpaid

SOME TIME AGO I told you to watch us grow. Now we are releasing two reels a week instead of one. That's going some

Selig's Release Days, Mondays and Thursdays

The Freebooters

Released Monday, Sept. 13, 1909

Look for the Big Ones coming

Crooked Path

Released Thursday, Sept. 16, 1909

Every exhibitor should arrange to rent these films. Get in touch at once and order from your film exchange a SELIG—they always show big box office receipts. They are now known as a money-getter all over the world for the moving picture exhibitor. Ask anybody.

SELIG'S RECORD—ALWAYS A WINNER

Try one reel and you will never leave us. Nuf ced.—SELIG

Don't forget that we get out our own five-color one-sheet poster with every picture. Price Ten Cents. Write today.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO. 45 RANDOLPH STREET, CHICAGO

THEATRES FOR SALE.

Established, profitable nickel theater in New Jersey, about 25 miles from New York City; 180 chairs, piano and full equipment. Price, $1,000. Now running; full investigation courted. Lease if desired. Reason for selling, other business. Address CURWICK, care of Moving Picture World.

LENSES FOR SALE

FOR SALE—Large Heliar and Collinear lenses for portrait photography. Address PORTRAIT, Box 226, Madison Square, New York.

CALEHUFF

A Member of the FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk. MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES $5.00 per set

N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co. ASHLAND, OHIO

FILM TITLES FILM

Made in 5 ft. Lengths. Tinted any Color 10c. per foot.

THE FILM RENEWING CO.

744 ORLEANS STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

Latest Song Slides Moving Picture Supplies

First Class Independent Film Service

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL CO.

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Main Office: 214 Sixth Avenue near 14th Street - - NEW YORK

Branch Office: 118 Bower Street, Jersey City Heights. Tel. 4006 R Jersey.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe, Vitagraph, Edison, Essanay, Biograph, Kleine, Lubin, Kalem, Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York

'Phone 4267 Orchard.

Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand

FILMS FOR RENT

6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week

$2.00 per change all in good condition

Signs and Banners no extra charge

FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY

Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs

Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W.

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office, 44 Park Place

Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Western Office, Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.

Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

FIBRE, BRAINS AND HUSTLE

have made the Bal Fibre Trunks the lightest, strongest and most serviceable moving picture machine trunks on earth. If the best is not too good—Buy a Bal.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE—W

WILLIAM BAL, Incorporated - - 210 West 42d Street, New York

Stories of the Films.

(See Page 396 for Release Dates.)

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

THE BROKEN LOCKET.—A realistic story of man's weakness. George Peabody is a young man who has been giving free rein to his inclinations, the principal one being drink. One might have concluded he was lost, but there was the chance which the hand of Providence always bestows in the person of pretty little Ruth King, who had secretly loved George since their childhood days. She succeeds in persuading him from his reckless life, and he determines to cut off from his old loose companions by going out West and making a man of himself. Bidding Ruth and her mother good-bye, he realizes that he loves his little preserver and promises to return worthy of her love and confidence. They plight their troth with their first kiss and a heart shaped locket, which Ruth wears, she breaking it in two, giving George one side while she retains the other, which symbolized the reunion of their hearts with his return. George is fortunate to strike the West in the midst of a boom, and being an affable, bright chap, meets with success, and is soon a favorite with his employers. His life here up to this is without a blemish, but has he strength? We shall see, for as gold is tested by the fire, so a man is by temptation, and George's trial comes with the persuasion to take a drink. At first he holds out against it, but at last yields, and that drink was his undoing. Once more the craving for liquor is induced and his promise to his little sweetheart in the East is forgotten, he falls an easy victim of a Mexican girl, who pretends to love him, assuming him a rather good catch. Meanwhile, faithful little Ruth is counting the days as they drag on towards the time she imagines he will return. The Mexican girl, to secure him as her own, writes a letter to Ruth purporting to come from one of his male chums to the effect that he had been killed. The shock of this letter throws the poor girl into a delirium of fever, and for a time her life is despaired of. She recovers, however, but is hopelessly blind. What woe a man's weakness may work, but we find he is rewarded for his weakness, and some time later we see George a loathsome parasite—a dirty, ragged, drunken bum—a pariah among his former associates. Back East he wanders, ignorant of the misery he has caused, and what a sight greets him. There is the ever faithful little girl, accompanied by her mother, standing at the gate, the beauties of the world forever shut out from her. How dark is everything to her, but then how much darker would this world have been, had she viewed the awful condition of George as he stood there. No, of this, at least, she is blissfully ignorant, and with a subterfuge, George slinks away, she imagining that he will soon return—but, alas, the locket is forever broken. Length, 999 feet.

GETTING EVEN.—The most satisfying and pleasurable sensation experienced is "getting even"—especially where one has been held up to ridicule before a jeering mob. Such was the reguerdon of Bud, the Kid of the Mining Camp, after suffering gross humiliation at the hands of the other cowboys and miners. Miss Lucy, the belle of the camp, is introduced to the Kid, and makes an impression; the Kid becomes quite seriously inclined towards her. The boys, more in the spirit of jest than chagrin, poke fun at him; call him the baby, and end with Jim Blake spanking him. Needless to say the Kid is mortified and swears to get square. A masque ball is to be held that night, so Bud plans his revenge. All tog out in grotesque costumes, a high old time is imminent, for it is fair to assume that the society folk of the camp will be well represented. Bud, however, feigns a toothache and will not go. Dressed up in carnival duds, the gang leaves the shack for the pavilion. All gone, Bud jumps from his bunk, and dresses up in swell female attire, the effect being marvelous. He presents such a striking appearance that he is the belle of the ball. Jim Blake becomes deeply smitten, and after leading him on Bud soon has Jim on his knees, pouring out his soul's devotion, regardless of the snickerings of the motley mob around them. There Jim kneels, declaring his undying love for the fair charmer, as only a lion-hearted cowboy can, when Bud removes his hat and wig. "Holy Smoke!" Well it is safe to say that Mr. James Blake will not attend any more spanking bees where the Kid is a victim. Length, 587 feet.

THE CHILDREN'S FRIEND.—A party of children start on a little outing at the beach. A dog wagon, drawn by Rover, carries baby, and Gladys carries their little feathered friend, a dove. A children's quarrel ensues and the party is divided. Gladys, Pearl and baby go in one direction, the rest in the other. The trio sit on the edge of a sand pit playing with their dove when there is a cavein and all three go to the bottom. In vain they try to get out, but fail. Meanwhile their absence has been felt, and a searching party is scouring the neighborhood. Pearl conceives the idea of making a messenger of their bird, so tying a note to its neck, sends it off. It flies home; their whereabouts is discovered and they are soon rescued from their perilous situation. Length, 786 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

HOW THE LANDLORD COLLECTED HIS RENTS.—We are all prone to pride ourselves on our ability and to think how much more satisfactory results we could accomplish if we were to do the other fellow's work, but when put to a practical test we almost invariably find that either we have under-estimated the other fellow's task, or over-estimated our own ability, or both.

Grimes is positive that his agents are incompetent and that the collecting of rents is a ridiculously simple proposition. To demonstrate his convictions he takes the monthly receipt book and starts out on a tour of his properties. His experiences prove that Grimes is no exception to the general rule of the proposition, but it is possible that the demonstration would not be so complete and decisive were it not for the fact that Grimes is an entire stranger to his tenants.

His first call is made upon an able-bodied wash woman who receives him with a demonstration that is lacking in nothing except hospitality. It is amateurish, however, to that accorded him at the home of the prize fighter, who is assisted in receiving (?) by several strenuous friends.

His appearance after these two encounters is such that the groceryman and tailor may be pardoned for being skeptical of his assertions that he is the owner of the buildings in which they conduct business. His protests to that effect convince them that he is suffering from some mild form of insanity and they do not take him seriously.

He is unable to collect rents from them; on the contrary, he is obliged to expend money at the tailor's to replenish a much damaged wardrobe.

After this is done he is so satisfied with his personal appearance that when the coquettish daughter of his best tenant smiles on him and invites him to a seat on the porch beside her he flatters himself with the thought that she has a real personal interest in him, and departs without stating the object of his visit.

On his way to the next tenement Grimes awakens to the realization that so far he has accomplished nothing and determines that his last call shall not be fruitless; but when he enters the building and finds himself face to face with poverty and sickness his kindly nature asserts itself, and he voluntarily resigns his last chance of making a collection.

We then suddenly forget that his experiences up to this time have been productive of laughter, and tears unconsciously spring to our eyes as we see him slip a roll of bills into the hand of one of the poor woman's children and gently steal from the scene.

There is a deal of human nature in the incidents of this story, comedy and pathos being admirably blended; and in the acting and scenic environments the story runs true to life. Length, 460 feet.

'TIS NOW THE VERY WITCHING TIME OF NIGHT.—"'Tis now the very witching time of night, when churchyards yawn and graves give up their dead." It is the hour when ghosts come forth and prowl, when elves and spirits of the spirit world hold merry carnival in the realms of the living.

Imagine yourself at the midnight hour in an old house that has long had the reputation of being haunted—a house in which several people have attempted to sleep and have failed. You are impelled by a love of the mysterious to see if these reports are true, and have bolstered your courage up to the sticking point for the occasion.

Approaching the building you are impressed by the ominous silence and gloom that envelop it. The hoot of an owl and the sudden apparition of a myriad of bats send cold chills chasing one another up and down your spinal cord.

Entering a large room, your ears are assailed by unearthly noises and discordant sounds. You are about to seat yourself at a table when table and chair disappear as if by magic and you sprawl upon the floor.

You see strange shapes and weird, flitting figures; you are chased from one room to another by toothless hags and dried up witches; skeletons grin at you from every nook and cranny of the building, disappearing and reappearing in a most bewildering fashion; a pretty girl comes out of the frame of an old picture, and as you are about to kiss her hand you find a donkey's head nestling snugly in your fingers.

Would you be frightened? One young man about town certainly was when he saw all these strange happenings. The aforesaid young man had made a wager with some of his fellow club members that he would sleep in the old haunted house over night.

His friends, not doubting his bravery but thinking to have a little sport and at the same time make his evening interesting, engaged a professor of sleight-of-hand to take them to the haunted house and give an exhibition of his feats of magic for the benefit of the adventurous young club member.

Fortunately for the picture loving public the Edison Company had an operator and his camera in the house that evening and everything that happened is now reproduced in detail as a moving picture, even to the young man's return to his club and the discovery of the trick played on him.

This picture is extremely well staged and very amusing. It will appeal strongly to the innate love of the mysterious that is present in greater or less degree in the makeup of every one of us. Length, 500 feet.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

A CASE OF TOMATOES.—Two mischievous boys, after the fashion employed by the "Steinheimer Kids," make havoc in their community with a case of red-ripe tomatoes, which falls from the rear of a grocer's delivery wagon, unknown to the negligent driver. The boys happen along at this time, and gathering up the globular vegetables, proceed to eat their fill, after which they discuss means of diversion, other than epicurean, in which the tomatoes might be utilized.

There ambles peaceably into view a dignified old gentleman, under a tall shiny silk hat.

"O, Willie! Pipe de guy wid the silk sky-piece!" one of the lads whispers. "Watch me—Mordecai Brown—wid de original invisible twirler."

A splattering tomato strikes the old gentleman's sky-piece, removing it deftly from his head, and while the boys make a hurried retreat he pursues the tomato stained hat.

A well directed "love apple" hurled into a passing hansom is surprisingly received by the gentleman occupant, somewhere amidships, adding a touch of color to his immaculate white vest.

Passing an artist's studio, a few tomatoes are hurled through the window, causing indescribable havoc to the artist's attire and stampeding an old art connoisseur who was about to place an order for a few thousand dollars' worth of paintings.

The boys next wander into a park where a few young people are enjoying a game of tennis. The game is interrupted when one of the young fellows makes a pass at the ball and receives a tomato. After other adventures the boys finally meet their Waterloo and are dragged off to the police station, followed by a throng of irate, tomato stained citizens.

A few over-ripe tomatoes rubbed in the boys' faces secures the promise of "we'll never do it again." Length, 495 feet.

THREE REASONS FOR HASTE.—A homesick drummer, out on the road, while showing his line of goods to a couple of purchasers in his room at the hotel, receives a message from home that he is needed there quickly. There is evidently no death in the family, because our drummer friend gives one joyous whoop, jumps into his coat and hat, seizes his suitcase and beats it, while one of his open-mouthed customers turns to the telephone and informs the clerk below to beware of an excited traveling salesman who has suddenly gone dippy. The clerk stops our friend as he rushes up to the desk, but on being shown the telegram, slaps him on the back in a congratulatory manner and bids him he on his way.

"Haste makes waste" it is said and the salesman, puffing hurriedly up to the gate in the railroad station discovers the loss of his ticket. He is detained until he brings forth the telegram, when he receives further congratulations and is passed on. Aboard the train the magic telegram again comes into play, while a number of other salesmen friends who happen to be aboard the train drag him back to the buffet car, where he is told that the drinks "are on him."

Leaping from the train at his home station, he jumps into a waiting auto, but is refused accomodations by the waiting taximan until he brings forth the telegram, when the driver of the machine laughs and tells him the car is at his services.

They are interrupted on this last homeward stretch several times for breaking the speed limit, but the telegram always gets him out of his trouble.

Arriving home at last—

But what's the use, you've guessed it by this time. They are triplets, a girl and two boys—just and sufficient cause of "Three Reasons for Haste." Length, 485 feet.

KALEM MFG CO.

THE STORY OF A ROSE.—The principal characters are Guido, a poor Italian, and his crippled daughter, Rosa. Coming to this country when a young man, Guido soon saved enough money to send back home for his promised bride. But, alas, the climate of New York was too severe for his young wife, and after three short happy years she passed away, leaving to his care a little crippled daughter, Rosa. All the love in Guido's nature seemed to go out to this child.

Refusing the kindly offer of relatives to care for her, he and Rosa lived alone in their little cabin home. During the week he was away all day, but on Sunday how happy they were together. If the weather was bad they would spend the day fixing up their little home, but if it was fine, bright and early they would set out, a modest lunch in Guido's pocket, to wander out into the country they both loved so well. If Rosa grew tired Guido would carry her on his back until she was rested, and thus they would spend the happy day until darkness drove them back to their little home.

Scene I.—The Gardener Refuses Rosa a Rose.
Scene II.—Rosa Begs Papa For Roses.
Scene III.—No Roses For a Poor Italian.
Scene IV.—The Burglars.
Scene V.—Guido Mistaken For a Burglar.
Scene VI.—The Burglars Caught.
Scene VII.—Guido Tells His Story.
Scene VIII.—The Burglars Identified.
Scene IX.—Rosa Looking For Her Papa.
Scene X.—Guido Released and Rosa Has Her Roses.

Arriving at the little cabin, Rosa is too fright-

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.
(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)
1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

SAY! MR. EXHIBITOR
Do You Want to Improve Your Business!
If so, LET US make your SIGNS, BANNERS
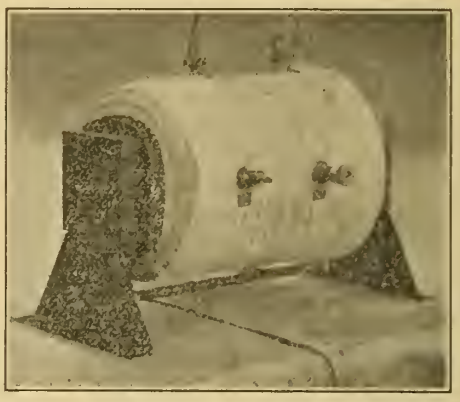
Etc.
ROYAL SIGN CO.
116 Third Ave., near 14th St., New York
Hello! 4171 Stuyvesant

FILM CEMENT—5c AN OZ.
Don't pay 25c for ½ oz. when you can make a Better Cement Yourself for 5c an oz. Unites perfectly, in neat, clear, strong manner, Both Non-Inflammable and Inflammable Films. Welds firmly. Satisfaction Positively Guaranteed. Complete Formula only $1.00. Or send 10c for sample and Test it.
H. E. Huffington, 8 S. Carey St., Baltimore, Md

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public
Send for our circular A. Write today.
THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

Choke Coil For Moving Picture Machines
USING ALTERNATING CURRENT



Guaranteed to save 60% Meter Bills for Current
Takes the place of the rheostat and its heat
Will pay for itself in from one to two month's running
Price, $18.50
Address, L. A. FREUDENBERGER
Newark, Delaware

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER
Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.
109 East 12th Street, New York

Feature Films for Traveling Show
For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.
ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

$7.00 a Day
$15.00 for THREE DAYS
$30.00 A WEEK
For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction free.
CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
Mossler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

OLD FILMS MADE NEW

Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

WRITE TO-DAY FOR TERM _____ WORK DONE PROMPTLY

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.
744 ORLEANS STREET - - - CHICAGO, ILL.

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.
THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.
Special Quotations for Large Quantities

cued at its stillness to enter, so she stands calling piteously for her papa. Up rushes Guido. He breaks away from the policeman and takes her in his arms kisses her. The lady is now convinced of the truth of Guido's story and she hands Rosa a large bunch of roses. But the policeman still insists he must arrest Guido and is starting away with him when the gardener rushes in and tells of the capture of the real burglars. The policeman goes. The man offers Guido some money for the trouble he has caused him, but Guido refuses it. Then the man gives it to Rosa telling her she can buy lots of pretty roses. After kissing Rosa, the lady leaves with her husband. The old gardener starts to follow, stops, rubs his eyes and returning offers his hand to Guido asking forgiveness for having refused the rose to Rosa. Guido takes it gladly and the gardener departs leaving Guido and Rosa both happy, one with his beloved Rosa, the other with her arms full of the beautiful roses she loves.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

HER FACE WAS HER FORTUNE.—A poverty stricken author tries to sell his manuscripts. He is in despair after a long period of hard luck, but accidentally meets a man whose niece has been a great admirer of his stories. After treating him to a meal they enter into a compact whereby the author is to receive a sum of money if he will consent to marry the niece. This would seem an agreeable task but the young lady's face is something to appall the bravest. Added to this she is a victim of St. Vitus' dance.

Nevertheless the wedding takes place and the couple depart meeting with a series of distressing incidents. She makes such violent love to the unwilling groom that he finally decides to vanish with the money and presses some telegraph linemen into his service, who render him the necessary aid. Length, 810 feet.

THE FORTUNE HUNTERS.—A seven dollar a week clerk and a shop girl are preparing for their week's vacation. He is looking for a rich wife and she is hunting for a wealthy husband. They meet at a Summer resort and soon tell one another sweet lies. Vacation time is at an end. He must go back "to Wall street" and she "to Europe." He thinks he is engaged to marry an heiress and she thinks she is to marry a millionaire. A last farewell, and they part. Imagine her surprise when she meets the millionaire behind the ribbon counter selling goods by the yard. And his surprise when he meets the heiress at Child's restaurant serving his breakfast. Length, 575 feet.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A LETTER.—On his way home the young husband finds a love letter. He enjoys the contents so much that he takes it along to show to his wife.

Incidentally he forgets about this letter. His wife, however, finds it and at once decides "that she is the unhappiest woman on earth." She prepares a dose of poison which she fully intends to take. Before doing so, however, she comes to bid her husband a last farewell. The husband takes the matter lightly, goes to the kitchen, takes a cup of milk and exchanges this milk for the poison. He then asks his wife to drink the poison. Seeing that her husband wants to get rid of her, she decides to live.

Now the husband wants to show that he is a hero and drinks the milk but acts as if he were poisoned. The wife immediately runs for doctors. The husband's stomach is pumped out notwithstanding his protests. Henceforth poison is tabooed in the house of the newlyweds. Length, 385 feet.

PATHE FRERES.

AMATEUR DETECTIVE.—A man strolling down the street casually notices that a suspicious-looking little fellow is following another man, and feeling an intuition that there is going to be a little excitement, the former keeps a close watch of the pair. Just as he expected, the sleek fellow, upon reaching a lonely spot, snatches a valise from his unsuspecting victim and rushes away. The charitable stranger, feeling a keen interest in the proceedings, starts after the thief, who manages to keep a fair distance ahead of his pursuer, and gives the latter an extremely exciting chase. After many narrow escapes from the clutches of the self-asserted detective, the thief seeks shelter in a furniture store, where he manages to conceal himself in a cabinet. Upon entering the place the amateur detective is met by the salesman, who, upon hearing the nature of his visit, assures the half-exhausted stranger that he must be mistaken, as no one has entered the place. The two men strike up an acquaintance, and soon the salesman is successful in inducing his newly made friend to purchase the cabinet, which the latter very much admires. The bargain is made, and immediately the men enter the place and proceed to move the piece of furniture to the home of the purchaser. Upon arriving at the house, the cabinet is put in place, and the good housewife, highly elated over the beautiful present, opens it up for inspection. She is horrified when out steps the thief, and the latter, realizing that there is no other way out of the difficulty, calms the frightened woman, and in his suave manner makes love to her. Soon her husband arrives, and there is a mad scramble for liberty, the thief being successful in making his escape, while the enraged husband remonstrates with his wife for her unbecoming conduct. Length, 390 feet.

THE CHILD'S PRAYER.—This sympathetic little story as revealed in this picture relates to a poverty-stricken home, where the good mother is lying dangerously ill, and the children are crying for food. The husband and father, who is a poor fisherman, is on the verge of desperation caused by his dire distress in not being able to procure the proper nourishment so essential to his wife's recovery. The poor man goes out and soon meets a companion who persuades him to go fishing in a little stream which runs through the private estate of a wealthy man, and where the public are strictly forbidden to cast their nets. The men are not long at their task when they are discovered by the officers, who, after a trying chase, catch the unfortunate man and arrest him.

When the sick woman hears of the fate of her husband, she seems to lose all courage, but her little girl, whose faith in the Heavenly Father is unyielding, tells her mother to place her faith in God and that all will be well. The little one, feeling that the Unseen Power will come to her assistance in this sad hour, writes a little note to God, beseeching Him to send her father home with food and nourishment to her sick mother. Taking the note, the child throws it out of the window, where it falls at the feet of a little boy, who hurries home and hands the missive to his father. The latter, who owns the estate where the fishermen were caught trapping, becomes touched by the tender plea of the child, and taking his little son, goes to the station, where he has the unfortunate man released, after which he hands him a sum of money with which to buy provisions. The little home is at last made happy, and doubly so when the poor man receives a note from his benefactor offering him a position as gamekeeper on his estate at a large salary. Length, 571 feet.

THE PRETTY GIRL OF NICE.—The opening scene of this richly colored picture shows a pretty country maiden as she meets her lover for the last time, when he informs her that as he is ambitious to marry a girl of wealth they must part forever. The cruel youth then goes to the girl of his choice, leaving the heartbroken little sweetheart to sadly ponder over her shattered hopes.

In the next picture we witness the ostentatious wedding procession leaving the church after the ceremony, but the happy young man is unconscious of the fact that the sad little country girl whom he so cruelly jilted is a witness to the proceedings, with tear-dimmed eyes.

Like the irony of fate, the old axiom, "money does not always bring happiness," soon becomes a stern reality in the life of the newly wed youth. One day upon returning from a little trip he is surprised to find his wife absent from the home, and upon investigating he happens to pick up a note which she carelessly left on her dresser. The burning words tell the unhappy man all: she has gone to keep an appointment with an old sweetheart at the crossroads. The enraged husband starts out to find his false wife, and near the spot where he expects to confront her, he accidentally drops the note, which is soon picked up by his former sweetheart, whom he does not see sitting under a tree close by.

The good girl shows her true charity, and hastens to warn the erring couple of their impending fate, and in order to shield the false wife, the girl takes her place by the side of the strange man, allowing the other woman to hide. When the infuriated husband comes upon the scene, he is positive that he is not wrong in judging the unusual proceedings as an intrigue, and after a short search he finds his guilty wife. Strongly denouncing the false couple, he orders them to leave his sight forever, after which the disillusioned youth turns to his old sweetheart and receives her promise that the future holds their mutual happiness in store. Length, 492 feet.

CITY OF NAPLES.—This superb educational picture shows some interesting places in the city of Naples, Italy, and gives some vivid ideas of the manners and customs of the thrifty Italians as they appear in their own beautiful country. In the first picture we see the flower market of the Chiaia, and realizing that sunny Italy is noted for its beautiful flowers, one can imagine in what profusion they are shown. Next a view of the people going to market is given, after which we see some unique Neapolitan types, showing the cobbler, the chair mender, basket workers, linen spinners and the manufacturing of twine. Lastly an amusing picture is given of the natives having a macaroni feast. Length, 449 feet.

THE MOUNTEBANK'S SON.—This picture is of the highest type of artistic and dramatic ingenuity, and tells an interesting story of a noble old mountebank, whose roving life has bred in him a strong desire to educate his son and thus give the latter an opportunity to become a man of standing in a respected profession. The young man returns to the group in high glee, for he has just received his diploma as a doctor, and the merry troopers gather around him extending their hearty congratulations. His father and mother are very proud of him, and shed tears of joy over the fact that they have lived to see the day when their boy has attained his chosen goal. There is a secret in the life of the young man which his parents know nothing of; the fact is that the young doctor is already married to Marie, the principal dancer with his father's troupe of strolling players. The good little wife is delighted to see him, and tells him to hurry home as their little baby will be so pleased to see his daddy.

As time goes on the young man is thrown into a class of society so wide apart from his own people, that the latter soon begin to pall upon him, and he loses himself in the whirlpool of merriment, attending many social functions and always being a welcome guest. In his travels he meets and falls in love with another woman, and one day he sends a little note to his own faithful wife telling her that he will see her no more, as he feels that his social position is such that he must marry another woman in his sphere. Upon receipt of the letter, the grief-stricken woman takes her baby and goes to the mountebank and his wife, to whom she pours out her sorrows. She finds a staunch friend in her father-in-law, who takes her with him to the home of his son's rich fiancee, where they arrive just in time to prevent the indiscreet young man from marrying another woman.

The young doctor is ejected from the place when the news of his double life is learned, and as time rolls on he sinks deeper and deeper, until he finally robs his own father of a large amount of money in order to pay a gambling debt. Finally, tired of his dissolute life, the repentant young man returns to his people, and when his father learns of his willingness to enter into the spirit of the show business, the old fellow gladly forgives the erring youth. His wife and child are again united to him and happiness once more reigns supreme among all the members of the mountebank's troupe. Length, 892 feet.

OH, WHAT A BEARD!—This sparkling comedy, which is full of merriment, opens with a scene in a public park where a young lady is seated on a bench. Soon a dashing fellow comes along, and, after a short flirtation, the happy couple become very good friends, so much so that when the youth is leaving he presents the charming maiden with his photograph. The girl's father then puts in his appearance, and when he sees the picture of the masher, he becomes wild with rage, and vows that he will find the trifler and give him a sound thrashing. Going down the street, the old fellow attacks every man whom he meets in his vain search for the offender. Finally the latter comes alone, and when the old fellow recognizes him from the likeness to the picture, there is a strenuous combat between the two men. The masher makes his escape and is closely followed by his adversary, but the former soon shakes off his pursuer by the aid of a false beard, which he puts on and conceals his identity. He then goes to the home of the young lady, where he enjoys the privilege of making love to her, until her father arrives, and again chases him from the place. This time the infuriated old father goes down the street seeking trouble, and attacks every man wearing a beard, until he is finally landed in jail for his disorderly conduct. Length, 335 feet.

THE FRESH KID.—Master Willie is a spoilt boy, and when his governess comes to awaken him in the morning, the young rascal resorts to trickery and declares he is not well. The doctor is summoned, and upon arriving, at once becomes aware that the young trickster is not sick at all. The wise old physician gives strict orders that the patient must abstain from candy, cake, pie and ice cream for one month, also take a couple of ounces of castor oil. This is too much for Willie, and he soon forgets all about his sickness, but plans to have revenge upon the old doctor.

A few days later the latter is called in to see Willie's grandfather, who is suffering with the gout. The youngster lies in wait to have a little fun at the old physician's expense, and after spreading a chair cover over a tub, he invites the guest to be seated. The old fellow squats into the tub, which rolls downstairs, followed by Willie and his dog, who are enjoying the droll situation immensely. The tub rolls into the room where the invalid is seated and scares the latter nearly to death. The old victim of the boy's joke finally extricates himself, and then the fresh kid comes in for his share of chastisement. Length, 295 feet.

CONSTRUCTION OF BALLOONS.—At the present time when so much interest is being taken in aerial navigation, a picture of this sort will adequately serve as an educational expedient, inasmuch as it gives some good pictures taken at close range of the manufacturing of balloons, showing them in the process of construction from the time the material arrives until the wonderful airship is completed and turned loose to soar beyond the clouds. Length, 361 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE ENGAGEMENT RING.—Our story opens in the general store of Si Dawson in a little prairie town way out in Iowa. Si has two daughters of a marriageable age, and as both are of great help in running the store, he is anxious to have them marry in the old home town. Esther, the elder girl, has other ideas, and when her hand is sought by Tommy Carson, the village schoolmaster, she demurs. Old Si favors Tommy's suit and suggests that he buy the engagement ring. "A nice big one, Tommy; gals is always won over with gewgaws." Tommy buys the ring, but Esther meets a drummer and Si's plan falls. Jim Ralston is a big fine looking chap, and like many a Knight of the Grip inclined to treat all womankind lightly. He makes violent love to Esther and pictures to her the beauties of far away Chicago, pleads for an elopement. "We can be married when we get to

NEXT Sand A FILM ISSUE

ORDER QUICK OUR

Big Dramatic Subject

GRATITUDE

(Length Approx 950 feet)

A great story—Beautifully interpreted—Capital photography.—

"Altogether Satisfactory"

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

For Sale

A completely wired electric board sign reading "Family Theatre" in raised lights. Length 26 feet, height 2½ feet, each letter 18 inches, cost $150. Will sell very cheap. Inquire

A. NEWMAN
715 Westchester Avenue - New York City

SLIDES

of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

I Wonder If I'll Ever Have a Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Was I a Fool?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do for a Girl Like You.
Good-bye, Girlie, and Remember Me.
After 'While.
Bushel o' Kisses.
On a Monkey Honeymoon. (Posed by live monkeys.)
If I Had My Choice of the World's Pretty Girls.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

WILL BUY

Moving Picture Theatre in city of ten thousand or over. Eastern New York or Massachussetts. Every detail, first letter.

Answer to THESPA, care of M. P. World

FILMS FOR SALE

50 Reels Film free from rain and scratches, titled and in good condition, $16.50.
20 Reels Film for sale at $12 50 per reel.

MAYER SILVERMAN
322 Puton Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample.

FORMULA $3.00

W. A. FORD, 309 N. Eutaw Street, Baltimore, Md.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500
OPERA CHAIRS
IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

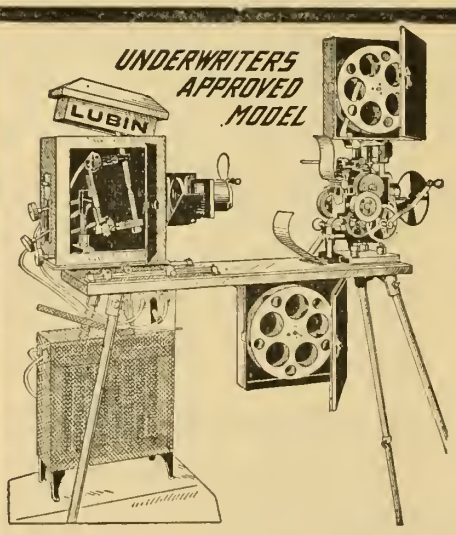
E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF!
NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!
NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.



LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL

equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

Released Monday September 13th

HER FACE WAS HER FORTUNE

A young starving poet is offered the hand of one of his admirers and $5,000 cash. The poet is willing to accept the cash, but oh! the face of the fair lady. He marries her, nevertheless, but there is something doing afterwards. LENGTH, 815 FEET.

Released Thursday, September 16th

THE FORTUNE HUNTERS

She is an heiress of millions and he is a millionaire of Wall Street. He spends at least 50 cents on her and then they part. She meets him selling goods in a dry goods store and he meets her waiting on him at Child's restaurant. LENGTH, 560 FEET.

ALL ON ACCOUNT OF A LETTER

Wifey's jealousies are aroused on account of a letter her husband found in the street. She threatens to take poison. He does likewise, but the joke is on him. LENGTH, 380 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA

the city," but Esther is a good Christian girl and will consent to no elopement without a proper wedding. "I'll go with you to Wayne Junction, the county seat—we can be married at the Commercial Hotel." Jim is disconcerted and about ready to give up the girl, when he meets a boon companion who travels for another firm engaged in the same trade—and over a quiet bottle Jim tells him of his conquest. "I meant to get her to Chicago and lose her, but she won't go without having the knot tied in her own town." "Well, that's easy; I'll be the minister. Just rent the clerical coat at a costumer's the next time you are in Chicago and bring it in a grip." "Yes, but how about the marriage license?" "Why, I'll borrow the saloon keeper's and doctor the top of it and make it read 'Marriage' instead of 'Liquor,' and only show her that much of it. See how easy it is?" "By George, I'll do it"—and so the plan to ruin a young girl's whole future is arranged. But as often happens, chance intervenes; Esther before leaving sends a note to Tommy (whom after all she really cares for), disclosing her intentions and asking him to tell her father she is to be married at Wayne Junction. Tommy rushes to Si with the note. Si gives Tommy his horse and buggy, while he goes to the sheriff and gets his assistance to stop the elopement. Tommy arrives at the hotel and is an unexpected and unseen witness to the faking of the marriage license. He soon opens Esther's eyes to Jim's real purpose and starts back home with the misguided girl. But Jim and his pal are not so easily balked. They follow in an auto and waylay Tommy as he crosses the bridge over the Des Moines River. Tommy is rendered insensible and Jim, fearing that the man is dead, throws him in the river. Esther is an expert swimmer, and as she sees the unconscious man sink from sight, she breaks from Jim's pal who is holding her, springs to the rail and dives fifty feet to the river below to rescue the man she now realizes she loves. The sheriff arrives, puts the rascals under arrest, Esther swims to shore with Tommy and falls sobbing for forgiveness into her father's arms.

One Week Later.—Tommy has about recovered from the blow Jim gave him and has decided to move away from the village, for he can't bear to remain now that Esther is lost to him; but that young lady arrives and makes him change his mind —wants to know "where that ring is, you were going to give me." Tommy fumbles in his vest pocket, brings it forth, slips it on Esther's finger, just as Si and Esther's young sister appear at the door. The tableau they witness proves plainly that their presence is needed.

FREEBOOTERS.—The Wells Fargo Company has just suffered a loss of twenty thousand dollars; one of the most daring robberies in the past eighteen years has just been perpetrated. The sheriff and his deputies hurry mysteriously hither and thither hunting for clues. As to the identity of the thieves, the little town near where the express was held up is restless with suspense.

Eventually the suspense is lifted by Jack Henderson, county sheriff, who finds a clue that points indisputably to Buck Raynor and his nephew Ralph, two well known freebooters, as the guilty parties. These two, unaware of this discovery, upon reaching a small settlement a few miles from their home, dismount from their horses to make a few purchases. As they leave the store they are encountered by a United States deputy marshal, who thrusts before their astonished eyes warrants for their arrest.

Buck Raynor has two nieces, one unfortunately a cripple; the other, Lizzie, a fair buxom lass, high spirited, with all the dash of her uncle and cousin but lacking the corruptness that has stamped them outlaws. The Raynors were half bad, half good. Lizzie loved the county sheriff with all the fervor bred of her outdoor life, and so he loved her. Naturally, therefore, he felt the awkwardness of the plight in which he was placed when called upon to arrest relatives of the girl he loved. The dominating influence of duty prevails, however, and Jack Henderson, although unmindful of his love for Lizzie accompanies the marshal to serve the warrants.

Needless to relate, Raynor and his nephew have determined to make a fight for the booty they have stolen, and as soon as they ascertain the intentions of the officials to take them into custody, a fight ensues in which the desperadoes prove victorious. Exultant, they mount their horses and ride pell mell for their cabin situated in a remote recess of the mountains. There they secure their stolen "swag," with a frenzy born of desperation, remount their now jaded horses and ride frantically through the fastnesses of the forest to a spot already established as a sort of hiding place for their ill-gotten gold.

Meanwhile the sheriff and marshal, far from being discouraged, secure a posse and reach the home of the freebooters, and after a thorough search are convinced that their quarry has escaped. Feeling sure that Buck and his nephew must continue up the mountain trail in order to make their escape, the posse determines to overtake them before they have an opportunity of concealing their plunder.

Ike Looney, a freckle-faced, bare-footed mountain boy, on returning home happens to see these two outlaws, and with the inquisitiveness of youth, notices that they are carrying heavy bags of metal. He stealthily follows them to the cave far in the recesses of the mountains, where they conceal their loot. He then wends his way back to the patch of timber where he has left an old mule, and starts for the settlement.

On his way he meets the posse, and upon being questioned by them guides them to the cave. There the gold is discovered, but Buck and his nephew have fled. On a projecting rock just over the cave the freebooters are resting, secure from gun shot and where every movement of the enemy can be plainly seen.

Finally, enraged at the loss of the treasure, which is now in the possession of the posse, Buck determines to "get even" with the sheriff, and acting upon the impulse of desperation hurls a huge stone down a declivity of the mountain. The rock, barely missing Henderson's head, bruises and dislocates his shoulder and collarbone, and he is rendered unconscious. This accomplished, the two desperadoes make their way to where they had tethered their horses, only to find that some of the sheriff's posse had anticipated their maneuver and had confiscated the animals. In desperation, and overcome with fatigue and anxiety, Raynor and his nephew start up the trail on foot.

In the meantime Henderson, the sheriff, has been placed in a wagon and carried to the home of the freebooters, where Raynor's nieces administer to his wants and do their best to relieve his suffering. Poor, silly Ike is left to assist the girls in their work of mercy, while the posse resumes their hunt.

Now, old Raynor and his nephew see the posse leave the cabin, and fully realizing the helplessness of their enemy lying indoors wounded, they enter the cabin, determined to finish their work of vengeance. The two girls plead for the life of the unconscious man, one prompted by love and the other urged by the law of humanity. Buck Raynor and Ralph neither know nor heed any law; the thirst for revenge is too strong. Rudely they thrust the women aside, with the threat of ending their lives should they interfere.

Then, as a lightning flash from a clear sky, the unexpected happens. A spy set by the posse to watch the cabin has reported the presence of the freebooters there, and the officers rush into the cabin just in time to prevent the murder of their chief. A brief struggle and the two ruffians are overcome, bound and led away.

After a few weeks the sheriff recovers from his injuries, and shortly afterwards he and Lizzie find a minister of the gospel who speaks the words they have both waited to hear.

The stolen money is duly returned to the Wells Fargo Express Company, and an ample reward paid to the sheriff, thereby enabling him to provide a comfortable little home for Mrs. Henderson and her sister.

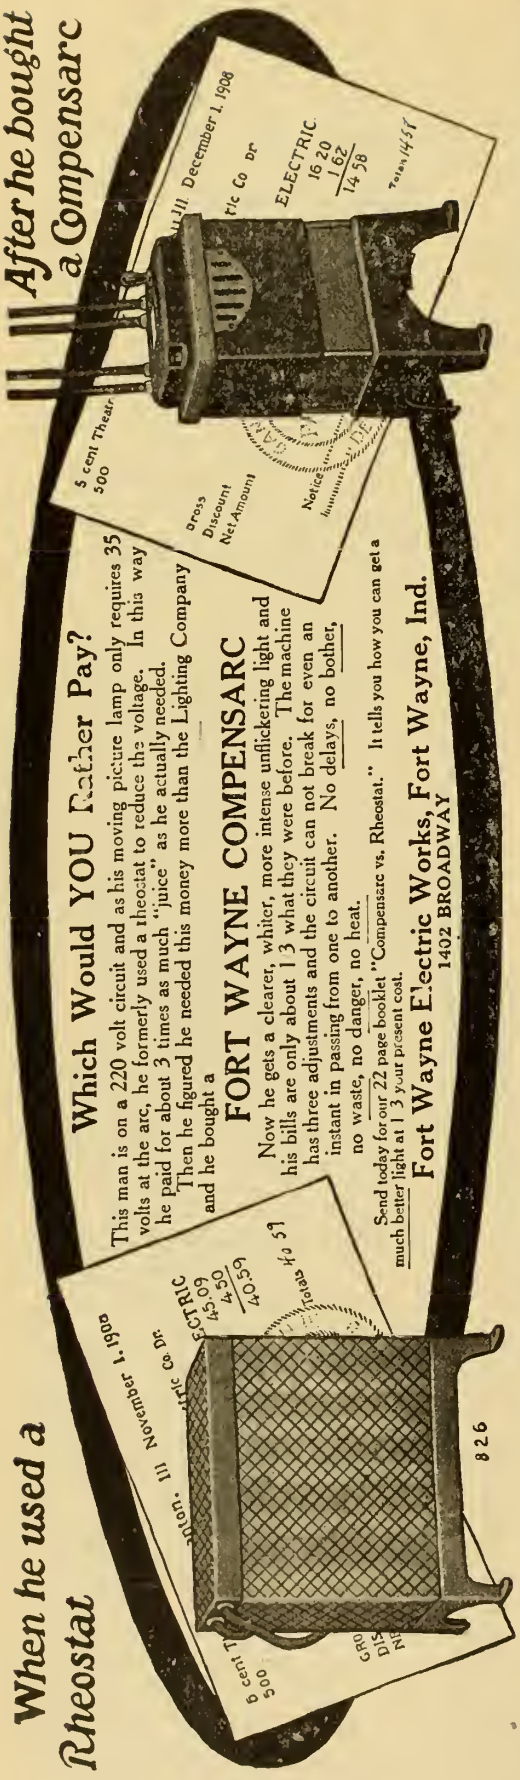
VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE GALLEY SLAVE.—This is the first of the five art reels to be released by the Vitagraph Company of America dealing with the incidents related in Victor Hugo's masterpiece, "Les Miserables." The present subject deals with the imprisonment of Jean Valjean and the incidents immediately following his release. He is first shown in his humble home, his family utterly destitute. Half-crazed by hunger and the sufferings of his wife and children, Jean breaks the window of a bake shop and steals a single loaf of bread, with which he hurries home to his little ones, who eagerly seize the crusty loaf as the gendarmes arrive to apprehend the thief. Condemned to serve in the galleys, his sentence is prolonged by his frequent efforts to escape, but at last the governor of the prison sends for him. He is given his passport, on which is entered the evil record of this law-made criminal, and with a few coins in his pocket he is given his liberty, clad in filthy rags, with matted hair and beard and without a friend in the world. The money avails him little, for the people will have naught to do with a jailbird, and they turn him from their doors. He at last arrives at the home of the good bishop, who makes him welcome at his own table and offers him a bed for the night, greatly to the alarm of the women of his household. The clock striking three rouses the ex-convict, and, stealing into the bishop's room, he robs the good man of the household silver. He escapes from the house without detection, but any passing police officer has the right to inspect his passport, and Jean's appearance makes him an object of suspicion to all. He seeks to escape by flight, but is caught and confronted with the bishop in the latter's home. The officers are proud of their capture, but the man of God denies the theft, well knowing what Jean's fate will be if he is returned to the galleys; and to make more convincing his denial of theft, he hands to Valjean his silver candlesticks. "I gave these too," he declares. "You must have forgotten them." The abashed officers retire with the bishop's blessing, and his fervent prayers affect the stony heart of the convict, who kneels in prayer beside his benefactor. It was this incident which gave inspiration to James K. Hackett when he made his vaudeville appearance last Spring, producing a sketch under the title of "The Bishop's Candlesticks," and it forms one of the most tense and thrilling situations in a world-famous work. This production has been done with the determination to make it one of the most notable presentations ever offered in picture form, and every resource of the Vitagraph Company's extensive studios has been taxed to make a noteworthy film, with the happiest success. Minute details, which might pardonably be overlooked, are made to add to the effect, the rehearsals have been unusually prolonged and careful, and the exterior pictures made only after careful location of the most picturesque and appropriate surroundings. The actors are imbued with the spirit of the story, and any one of the poses might be used as an illustration for the book. The scenic artist has excelled himself, the scenes in the bishop's home passing from one room to another in a triple set which avoids the interruption of the action, and technically the film is a most pretentious example of the best in photographic work. In every sense this subject deserves the title of "Film de luxe." Length, 885 feet.

AN ALPINE ECHO.—Antoine, a Swiss peasant boy, lives with his grandfather, his parents being dead, and is learning the wood carving that seems to be an inherited talent with the Alpine Swiss. They are startled while at their work by the roar of the avalanche and rush to the window in time to witness the destruction of the cottage of their nearest neighbor by the majestic rush of snow and rocks. It is with scant hope that they hurry to the scene of the disaster, but little Lena has been preserved by the massing of the heavy timbers of the roof above her frail body and she is taken out, senseless through fright but without bodily hurt. Her parents have been killed and the good old man makes Lena a member of his household. She is a merry playfellow for Antoine and a splendid housekeeper, but with the passage of the years a deeper sentiment develops between the two and it seems the most natural thing in the world that they should love each other. Antoine, a sturdy young fellow, acts as a guide in the tourist season, and while he is escorting a party up the mountains he becomes enamored of a pretty American girl, who jokingly encourages his dumb worship. She pretends to have sprained her ankle that she may have an excuse to leave the party, and Antoine carries her back to the hotel in his strong arms. Later he declares his passion, the scene being accidentally overlooked by Lena, and is promised his answer that night, for the heartless little coquette knows that her party is leaving and sends him a letter saying that she is returning to America and hopes that if he ever crosses the Atlantic he will come and see her. The invitation is merely a thoughtless effort to make the refusal seem less unkind, for the girl never dreams that he will follow her across the seas and she has forgotten even the note when it is brought her in her American home some months later. Her memory refreshed, she vigorously denounces Antoine for his presumption and orders him out of the house. The dying grandfather urges Lena to go to America to find her foster brother, and when she fails in her search and her money is all gone she decides to sell the music box with its exquisite carvings that is her sole remaining treasure. She takes it to the shop of a dealer in carvings where Antoine is employed. At the sound of the song he knows so well Antoine sees visions of his Alpine home with which the melody is so intimately associated. He rushes into the shop from the workroom to learn the source of the melody and in another moment Lena is in his arms. The kindly proprietor, who has paid handsomely for the music box, presents it to them as his wedding gift and makes their happiness complete. The subject is a well-balanced production in which the stage director, scenic artists and players unite in the presentation of a story of absorbing interest. The Alpine views are notably good and the avalanche is a new departure in picture making. Length, 990 feet.

THE FISHERMAN.—Those who go down to the sea in ships walk hand in hand with death, and their wives know no peace of mind while they are on the water. No one better appreciates this fact than the brave and loving Nettie Bourne, whose husband, Ben, is a fisherman and must face the elements in his tiny cockleshell of a boat even when danger threatens. He and little Ben, his son, are about to start on a fishing trip. The sun is shining, but there are signs of an approaching storm, and poor Nettie seems oppressed by a sense of impending danger as she accompanies her big, brave husband to the shore and aids him in launching the skiff with little Ben sitting in the stern to aid his father. Even little Lucy, their four-year-old daughter, seems to share her mother's dread as she stands upon the shingle and watches the boat put out to sea. Danger is forgotten in the excitement of a good catch, but a sudden gust of rain warns them to put back to safety. Bourne lays down the lines to grasp the oars, but he has waited too long; the storm is upon them, and presently the boat is seen to have been overturned. Bourne has clambered upon the keel, but in the fierce onslaught of the squall poor Bennie has been swept out of reach of his father's aid, and the horror of poor Bourne's situation is intensified by the thought of his loss. When night falls and the boat does not return, Nettie takes little Lucy and with a lantern seeks the shore. Here she finds an empty boat and in it she rows out to sea in search of her loved ones. She finds her husband alive, but weak from exhaustion and exposure. He barely is able to climb into her boat, where he collapses on the stern as she turns its stem toward the shore. There is no use looking for Benny in the vast expanse of cruel waters. But Benny has clung to a floating log and he is washed ashore, where he is found by two fishermen, who tenderly bear his body toward his home. Nettie and Ben, slowly toiling across the sands, spy the men with their inanimate burden, and with a cry the mother rushes toward them, Ben following as rapidly as his weakness will permit. She takes her son from the sympathetic

After he bought a Compensarc



When he used a Rheostat

Which Would YOU Rather Pay?

This man is on a 220 volt circuit and as his moving picture lamp only requires 35 volts at the arc, he formerly used a rheostat to reduce the voltage. In this way he paid for about 3 times as much "juice" as he actually needed.

Then he figured he needed this money more than the Lighting Company and he bought a

FORT WAYNE COMPENSARC

Now he gets a clearer, whiter, more intense unflickering light and his bills are only about 1/3 what they were before. The machine has three adjustments and the circuit can not break for even an instant in passing from one to another. No delays, no bother, no waste, no danger, no heat.

Send today for our 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat." It tells you how you can get a much better light at 1/3 your present cost.

Fort Wayne Electric Works, Fort Wayne, Ind.
1402 BROADWAY

MERCHANDISE.

For Rent—6,000 feet film, 3 sets song slides, $12 weekly, one shipment; 12,000 feet, $20. For Sale—Power's and Edison one-pin machine, $60. Slightly used film, 1 and 2 cents per foot. Will buy film, machines. H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wis.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

Is the One Dependable Motion Picture Machine

It gives the steadiest, clearest pictures of any machine made, is the simplest to operate and does not get out of order. That means that you are playing to a full house while the others are closed for repairs.

The Edison is the machine that will make your investment a permanent, solid business—not a fad or speculation.

Write to-day for booklet of full details and copy of the "Edison Kinetogram."

EDISON FILMS

Releases of September 14th and 17th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 14

LITTLE SISTER—Dramatic

A dramatic story of the underworld of New York City, especially written for Edison production by Edward W. Townsend, the author of "Chimmie Fadden," and interpreted by a special cast of talented artists.

A pictorial presentation of an absorbing tale of poverty, crime, love and reformation, whose central figures are an erring brother and a devoted little sister.

An ideal film in every respect.

No. 6515 Code, VERSALETES Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 17

HOW THE LANDLORD COLLECTED HIS RENTS—Comedy

A comedy with a delicate blending of pathos. Grimes, skeptical of his agent's ability, starts on a collecting tour of his properties. What was done to Grimes was a shame. He collected everything but experience and hard knocks. There are plenty of good laughs in this film.

No. 6516 Code, VERSALILLA Approx. Length, 460 feet

'TIS NOW THE VERY WITCHING TIME OF NIGHT—Comedy

A comedy film detailing the experiences of a fellow who, on a wager, attempted to sleep over night in a haunted house. A magician, secured by his friends, summoned for his entertainment witches, goblins, ghosts, etc., and did marvelous things with the furniture. An excellent trick picture.

No. 6517 Code, VERSALITA Approx. Length, 500 feet

Releases of September 2 st and 24th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 21

THE ORDEAL—Dramatic

No. 6518 Approx. Length, 950 feet
Code, VERSALLESA

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 24

A KNIGHT FOR A NIGHT—Comedy

No. 6519 Approx. Length, 370 feet
Code, VERSALZT

TRUE LOVE NEVER RUNS SMOOTHLY
Comedy

No. 6520 Approx. Length, 230 feet
Code, VERTEBROSO

LOVE AND WAR—Dramatic

No. 6521 Approx. Length, 408 feet
Code, VERTEDEROS

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

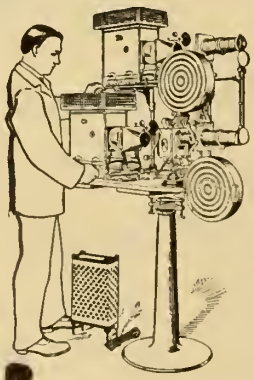
MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.

New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents

P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

men, who lend their aid to Ben, and the melancholy little procession winds over the sand to the Bourunes' cottage. Though there is no sign of life, the fishermen commence an effort to induce artificial respiration and presently the boy heaves a sigh and his eyes open to encounter the tender and grateful glance of his loving mother. The parents kneel to offer up a prayer of thanksgiving, while the old fishermen stand with bowed heads in reverent sympathy with the parents' feelings.

HE TRIED ON HANDCUFFS.—It is Fred Tyson's wedding day and his pretty bride-to-be writes to warn him not to forget the license. This is just what Fred has done, and he and his best man hurry to City Hall, where an obliging clerk makes out the important document. While he waits the Sheriff leaves his office, stopping at the license department to show the clerks an item relating to the escape of a handcuffed prisoner. His own handcuffs he lays upon the desk while he talks and he forgets them as he departs. Fred picks them up and has slipped them on his wrists when a question from the clerk distracts his attention and the catches slip closed.

THE LITTLE FATHER.—A delightful little tale, appealing most forcefully to ladies and children, and so simply told that the youngest child experiences no difficulty in following the plot. Mrs. Northfield has been left a widow with three children to support. Only the eldest, Robert, is old enough to aid her in her struggles for existence, and he makes precarious earnings delivering papers on a newspaper route and running errands. Mrs. Northfield is a dressmaker, and in an early scene sets out to deliver a dress to a fashionable patron. Some minor changes are required to be made and the tired seamstress works on the finishing touches in her patron's room. The latter, Mrs. Aldcorn, wife of a wealthy broker, hides her jewels and forgets that she has done so. That evening she is dressing for a theater party and cannot find the gems. She remembers that Mrs. Northfield was in the room alone for some time and her husband swears out a warrant for her arrest. On purely circumstantial evidence, poor Mrs. Northfield is sentenced to a prison term and is led to a cell weeping, but finding some comfort in Bobby's promise that he will look out for his little sister and the baby. It is a tremendous responsibility for a ten-year-old boy to face, but Bobby is a plucky lad. The newspaper route which he serves is for sale, together with the newsstand. Bobby sells most of the furniture to a second-hand dealer and with the proceeds becomes the proprietor of the business. With his childish enthusiasm and courtesy he builds up a large trade. Some time after Mrs. Aldcorn discovers her jewelry and she and her husband lose no time in obtaining Mrs. Northfield's release from the remainder of her sentence and with many abject apologies escort her to her home. On the way they pass the new and prosperous stand which Bobby has had built, and the mother's delight at the bravery and success of the Little Father are so great that Aldcorn induces her to let Bobby accept a substantial sum of money with which to still further enlarge his interests.

THE WEALTHY RIVAL.—Lord Gerald Herbert Charles James Fitzallan, younger son of a titled English family, comes to America. Unlike most younger sons, Lord Fitzallan is wealthy and able to follow his heart where inclination leads. That is in the direction of pretty Lillian Kendrick, who is pleased with the attention he pays her and amused by his eccentric ways. Lillian is also the object of Tom Dutton's affections, and she rather prefers the athletic and manly young American, but cannot resist the temptation to tease him. For this reason she flirts with the Englishman and completes his subjugation. Her small brother suggests a canoeing trip and Lord Fitzallan is invited to come along. His courage fails him when he perceives the instability of the craft and he watches from shore, as they paddle out upon the water, an odd figure with his Bond street clothes, his monocle, his camera and bulldog. Lillian and her brother paddle about for a while, and just as they are about to land the canoe overturns and they call to the Englishman for help. He is afraid to venture into the water and scrambles over the slippery rock in search of assistance until he comes upon Tom, who rushes to the rescue. He plunges into the water, but finds that Lillian has been quietly guying his rival, for even little Billy can keep his head above the water while standing on the bottom. As they scramble upon the shore they push his Lordship into the water and depart, laughing heartily at his discomfiture.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine)

THE TRICKY DUMMIES.—The play opens in front of a second-hand clothing store, where three models are exhibited among the many varieties of goods displayed.

The dealer's daughter and her sweetheart are in conversation when the father arrives from the interior of the store. He evidently does not approve of the young man, for after a short conversation the lovers are separated and the youth is sent on his way.

Now, in order to remain near his sweetheart, the youth soon returns and substitutes himself for one of the manikins.

He has hardly made himself comfortable when a sneak thief appears and commences filling his pockets with such articles as meet with his approval. When the robber becomes frightened at the approach of a passing policeman, instead of running, he takes the place of the second figure.

When the store owner notes the loss of various articles, he forthwith calls the policeman, who, in order to capture the thief, disguises himself as the third model.

In the final scene the three watchers fall asleep and the adventure finishes by the laughable tumble of the dozing men, the arrest of the robber and the marriage of the storekeeper's daughter and her lover.

HER BUSY DAY.—A woman peddler of vegetables is seen at work along the street. As she stops to wait upon her trade an officer orders her to move on.

After having lost a number of customers because of the police so often interfering, she becomes quarrelsome, then being threatened with arrest, she starts in retreat at full speed through the streets.

The closing scene of this hilarious comedy shows the heroine and a number of the following police leap headlong into the canal where they exhibit some interesting swimming and emerge to take the troublesome woman to the police court.

THE FIDDLE AND THE FAN.—Opens in the apartments of a noted 'cellist while he is preparing to leave for the theater, where he is to give an exhibition of his art.

During the preparations, which are very hurried, his servant breaks the end pin of his instrument. No time can be spared for careful repairs, so the end pin is bound with a piece of string, a part of which is left dangling from the instrument.

The next scene is the assembly room of the theater, showing the audience growing impatient because of the delayed artist. It becomes intensely warm and in response to many grumblings the management bring a large ventilator to the stage. The fan is immediately put into service, so that when the 'cello player finally arrives the crowd is again contented. As he steps to the footlights the long cord upon his 'cello becomes entangled in the arms of the fan. This causes the instrument to whirl. In a short time, to the great joy of the audience, the musician is whirling with his 'cello like a huge peg top.

At first the spectators applaud repeatedly, but when they realize the man's predicament they seek to assist him. By now he is whirling straight out from the 'cello, and because of the great speed he begins to elongate.

The manager tries to help but is swept from his feet, as are a number of firemen who have been called.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

THE FATAL LOVE.—The scenes are laid in a beautiful city of Italy, among the hot-blooded natives of the country. Not a moment's time is lost in the action of the play from the opening to the thrilling last scene.

An Italian handmaster, while giving an entertainment at a popular cafe, becomes interested in a handsome woman, one of the audience, who purposely attracts his attention. During the intermission he leaves his place upon the platform to come to her chair. They become well acquainted and before long their acquaintance ripens into so strong a love that the famous musician leaves his wife and son to go to an out of the way villa where they live for some little time together.

Then the woman tires of the genius. He tries to beguile her with pleasant conversation, he brings her gifts, and finally plays to her upon his violin, telling the same tone story which had brought him to her side, but all his efforts are of no avail. The woman decides she has done with him and the dream, for him, is dispelled.

During the time of his seclusion his son has worked his way into the position of leader, once held by his father as leader of an orchestra. Shortly after the separation, the old master is disconsolately wandering about among his old haunts where he meets his son, who is very happy to find his father and insists on the return to their home, saying the mother will gladly welcome him in spite of the unexplained desertion. The family is happily reunited and the young man retains the leadership of his group of musicians.

In not a great while the woman who had for a time ruined the joy of his father's life, attends one of the youth's concerts. He becomes enamoured by her, while she, not knowing his relation to her former lover, declares her love for him. They decide to be married and the young man takes her to his home, which is located on a high cliff overlooking the sea.

On their arrival at a time when both the father and mother are there, the old man recognizes the woman, and rather than have his son's life hurt, he denounces her. The mother, enraged that the same person should enter and harm the life of both her husband and her child, attacks the woman, who is hurled from the cliff to the rocks below.

PONTINE MARSHES, ITALY.—A vivid glimpse of many typical Italian personalities and characteristics; thoroughly graphic and completely convincing.

The peasants in their rustic homes and at work in the fields and among the swamps, the panorama of cottages, cloisters, monasteries, hills and streams delight the eye and instruct.

AEROPLANE CONTESTS AT RHEIMS.—Incidents of the race: Several times collisions in mid-air were narrowly averted, and whenever two machines passed both rocked perceptibly like ships in a sea in each other's wake.

The wind from Delagrange's propeller while passing below Latham seemed to create a vacuum and Latham's machine fell forward plunging down a hundred feet. Just as it reached the ground, however, it was righted, and, amid a burst of applause, rose again and sailed on.

Bleriot, in the morning, was soaring in his most powerful machine, when suddenly the motor stopped and the propeller ceased revolving. The machine fell and smashed the over-heated engine, which set fire to the escaping petroleum. Assistance was rushed to Bleriot, whose injuries, considering that he had fallen sixty feet, were slight.

Latham, with his monoplane, reached a height of four hundred feet in the altitude contest, while, with two passengers, he made the circuit of the course in ten minutes and thirty-nine seconds.

At times there were large numbers of machines in the air at the same time, soaring about like immense dragon flies.

THE FARMER'S TREASURE.—Old Farmer Giles, a financial power of the county in which he lives, objects to Frank Wheeler as a suitor for his daughter's hand because the young man is poor.

Undismayed by the farmer's objections the young people continue their love making at such times as they can do so without discovery by the old man.

This condition has prevailed for some time, when the old man becomes suspicious of his own family as regards their attitude toward his treasure, so decides to hide it in a place beyond their reach.

He takes his wealth from its hiding place in the room and makes his way along the highway and across the fields toward the orchard in which he has decided to bury the money.

He is observed by two thugs who follow him to gain knowledge of the hiding place.

It so happens that the old man, in his way across the fields, passes a scarecrow, which is being used as the trysting place of his daughter and young Wheeler. To avoid the unfriendly father the youth hides behind the scarecrow, while Farmer Giles stops for a moment to converse with his daughter. Frank observes the two thugs who are following the old man.

As the farmer goes on his way the youth watches the rascals and understands their plan.

Through his knowledge, both of the hiding place and of the fact that the tramps knows of its whereabouts, he is enabled to save the old man's wealth and through this aid is accepted into the family.

LICENSED FILM MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS.

Biograph Company, 11 East 14th St., New York City.
Edison Mfg. Co., Orange, N. J.
Essanay Film Mfg. Co., 62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.
Kalem Co., 235 West 23d St., New City.
George Kleine, 52 State St., Chicago, Ill.
Lubin Mfg. Co., 21 South 8th St., Philadelphia, Pa.
Pathe Freres, 41 West 25th St., New York City.
George Melies, 208 East 38th St., New York City.
Selig Polyscope Co., 45 Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.
Vitagraph Co., 116 Nassau St., New York City.

THE WEEK'S PROGRAM OF LICENSED FILMS.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 13.

BIOGRAPH—Getting Even (Comedy).
BIOGRAPH—The Children's Friend (Dramatic).
LUBIN—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dramatic).
SELIG—Freebooters (Dramatic).
PATHE—Amateur Detective (Comedy).
PATHE—The Child's Prayer (Dramatic).

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 14.

EDISON—Little Sister (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Her Busy Day (Comedy).
GAUMONT—The Tricky Dummies (Comedy).
GAUMONT—The Fiddle and the Fan (Comedy).
VITAGRAPH—The Little Father (Drama).
VITAGRAPH—The Wealthy Rival (Comedy).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15.

PATHE—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dramatic).
PATHE—City of Naples (Industrial).
URBAN—The Fatal Love (Dramatic).
URBAN—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Scenic).
ESSANAY—A Case of Tomatoes (Comedy).
ESSANAY—Three Reasons for Haste (Comedy).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 16.

BIOGRAPH—The Broken Locket (Dramatic).
LUBIN—The Fortune Hunters (Comedy).
LUBIN—All On Account of a Letter (Comedy).
SELIG—Crooked Path (Drama).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 17.

EDISON—How the Landlord Collected His Rents (Comedy).
EDISON—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Comedy).
KALEM—The Story of a Rose (Dramatic).
KALEM—Winning a Dinner (Comedy).
PATHE—Mountebank's Son (Dramatic).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 18.

PATHE—Oh, What a Beard! (Comedy).
PATHE—The Fresh Kid (Comedy).
PATHE—Construction of Balloons (Industrial).
URBAN—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Scenic).
URBAN—The Farmer's Treasure (Dramatic).
VITAGRAPH—The Marble Heart (Drama).

Kalem Films

Issue of September 17th, 1909

LENGTH 680 FEET

An absorbing drama of parental love and devotion depiciting the struggles of a poor Italian immigrant to obtain the roses his litt'e cripple daughter has begged him for. A novel production that cannot fail to please on account of its touching appeal to all hearts.

WINNING A DINNER

LENGTH 245 FEET

A lively little laugh producer showing how three jolly but impecunious comrades. succeeded in satisfying their appetites by the exercise of a little ingenuity and mother wit.

KALEM CO., Inc.
EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.
235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

SATISFACTION

In every slide or your money back

Announcement Slides

Prepaid

3 FOR $1.00

Original and Artistic Designs
Beautifully Colored

SEND FOR LISTS

Baby Show Slides, colored, at 50c. each
Postage 2c.

Illustrated Songs at $3.50 Set

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

Please mention The Moving Picture World when corresponding with advertisers.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 13, 1909.

Getting Even

The most satisfying and pleasurable sensation experienced by mortal is "getting even." To turn the tables on one who has victimized you is indeed heavenly. Bud, the kid of the mining camp, was subjected to gross humiliation at the hands of the other fellows before his sweetheart, and as there was a masque ball that night in the town, Bud attended in swell female attire and had all the boys madly in love with him. The ringleader went so far as to drop on his knees and declare his undying affection, when Bud throws off his wig and hat, disclosing his identity. Did he get even? Well, I guess.

LENGTH, 587 FEET.

The Children's Friend

This is a very pretty subject, showing a party of children on a little outing, carrying with them their pet dove. At some distance from the beach they fall into a sandpit. Failing, after many attempts, to get out, they write a note and fasten it to the dove, which carries the message to their parents, who rescue them.

LENGTH, 386 FEET.

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 16, 1909.

The Broken Locket

A REALISTIC STORY OF MAN'S WEAKNESS.

No matter to what depths a man may fall, there is always at least one awakening, and his future depends upon whether he hearkens to that call or not. The young hero of our story, having given free rein to his inclinations, the principal one being drink, is persuaded from his reckless life by his sweetheart. He goes West to make a man of himself. On leaving, the girl breaks her locket in two, giving him one half as a talisman against a lapse, while she keeps the other, hoping that some day the parts of the locket may be reunited, also their hearts. Out West he meets with fair success, and things look rosy, but he yields to the "one drink" invitation. That drink was his undoing. Down he sinks, deeper than before, making the acquaintance of a young woman, who writes to his ever-faithful sweetheart that he has been killed. This shock throws the poor girl into a delirium of fever, resulting in hopeless blindness. He, meanwhile, has become a dirty, ragged, drunken parasite. The locket is still broken.

LENGTH, 999 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK
GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

FOR SALE

Portable Booth, passed by Board of Fire Underwriters. 5½ square feet. Cost $130.00.

ROBERT GOLDEN
56 Waverly Ave., Rockaway Beach, L. I., N. Y.

BE INDEPENDENT

Don't be the Fall Guy for $2.
We have proven what we said

NO GUNC

It has increased our business.
New, Live stock at all times.
Not the kind that walks but
the kind that talks :: ::

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 E. 23rd St. near 2nd Ave., New York City
ONE OF THE OLD TIMERS

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY

110 West Thirty-fourth Street
New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.

FILMS FOR SALE. $10, $12, $15 per reel.

One New Dressler Machine, One Second-hand Power's Machine, One Edison Machine. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

A KENTUCKY PLANTER.—Clitie, daughter of old Jeh Taylor, a Kentucky tobacco planter, upon returning home, finds nailed to the door a warning posted there by the Night Riders to destroy crops or clear out. She tries to hide this from her father, but he demands it. They enter the house and prepare against the coming of the Night Riders. A knock is repeated several times at the door, and Jeb, fearing forced entrance, stands with leveled gun. The Night Riders, however, failing to gain admittance, gather twigs, placing them about the door and setting fire to them. The old man and Clitie, horrified at seeing the smoke, decide that the door must be opened. Jeb, after opening the door, wounds one Night Rider, the rest surrounding and binding Job. His daughter pleads for him, but he is led away. He is taken to a clearing in the woods, bound to a tree and lashed. The Night Riders after chastising him sufficiently ride off, and Clitie comes to her father's relief. She leads the tottering old man home, where he vows to be revenged. Jeh's daughter discovers the meeting place of the Night Riders and brings her father to the spot, where she leaves him. After disposing of the Night Rider guarding the barn, Jeb locks the others in and sets fire to their quarters. A detachment of the State guards is seen riding along, when Clitie stops them and tells them of the Night Riders. The officer lifts her to his horse and they all ride to the barn. When the guards release the Night Riders they are half overcome by the smoke and are taken prisoners without resistance. Old Jeb and his daughter appear in their doorway as the Night Riders are marched away by the mounted guards, and as they pass he shakes his fist at them, turns and throws one arm about the girl and raises the other to Heaven.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

THE RAILROAD WRECK.—A young minister is endeavoring to do something to relieve his colored housekeeper, who is suffering from a very bad toothache. His efforts prove futile, and he finally calls in a doctor.

While the doctor is examining the tooth, the hired man rushes in and notifies them that there has been a terrible railroad wreck nearby. Both the doctor and the minister forget the old colored woman, and rush off to aid the wreck victims, followed by the old woman, who forgets her toothache in the excitement. Arriving at the scene of the wreck, a horrible sight confronts them, and everything is a mass of twisted burning ruins.

While the many victims are being taken out dead and dying, the doctor and minister come upon a party of men carrying a poor woman and a young girl who are badly injured. The doctor examines the woman, says there is no hope, tells the minister she won't live ten minutes, attends to the young girl and rushes off to help others. The poor woman hearing the doctor's verdict, pleads with the minister to look after the girl, which he promises to do.

Three years later, the young girl, now budding into womanhood, is seen around the parsonage. The young minister is very attentive to her and it is quite evident that an attachment has sprung up between them. This condition is noticed by his congregation, and a committee is appointed to notify him that he must send the girl away, as they do not think it quite the proper thing for her to be there with him alone. Unfortunately the committee calls while the minister is out, and the girl overhears them express their views to the colored housekeeper. The girl realizing that her presence must cause trouble, decides to leave. She quickly gathers a few things together and leaves a note for the minister, who finds it upon his return. He is much overcome, and upon learning the cause, becomes very angry and decides to resign.

Some time later he is seen organizing a little mission in the city. The girl in the meantime has secured work in a factory. She becomes friendly with a young man, who later is injured in an accident, and while she is helping his mother to nurse him, the young minister from the mission calls. There is an immediate recognition between him and the girl. They are delighted to see one another again. Later they are married, and the picture closes with a very pretty scene, showing them at work in the mission.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

A WHITE LIE.—A drama of heart interest. Robert Jordan, a young lawyer, is the happy husband of a charming young wife, and the father of a beautiful little girl. Ralph Deland, a good-looking scoundrel, pretends friendship for the husband, although caring only for the wife. The child, playing in the garden with her father, runs back into the parlor for her Teddy bear. She sees the villain embracing her mother, and runs out into the garden to tell her father that the bad man is hurting her mother. The infuriated husband enters the room just as the wife is releasing herself from the embraces of Deland. Jordan restrains himself until Deland has left the room, then he demands an explanation. The wife protests her innocence and Jordan is convinced that she has been blameless. But one thought now possesses his mind: he must kill the scoundrel who so wronged his good wife. He takes a revolver from his desk, but his little girl comes in, and the sight of her sweet face makes him give up all thought of revenge. Later in the evening Deland calls, and by bribing the butler, secures an interview with the woman he has insulted. He assures her that he has only come to apologize. A door is heard to open. The husband has entered the house. The wife realizes that if Deland is found there, her husband will kill him. She persuades Deland to hide in the pantry. Jordan enters and sits at the desk, at work over legal papers. Hours pass. Jordan hears a noise in the adjoining room. Thinking it is a burglar, he takes his revolver and hides behind the portiere. Deland opens the pantry door slowly and goes toward the hall entrance. Jordan calls to him to stop, and as Deland starts to run, Jordan fires, killing him. Jordan telephones to police headquarters that he has shot a burglar. The police arrive and an ambulance surgeon finds in Deland's coat the note in which Jordan has threatened to kill Deland. Jordan is arrested and, taken away by the police, despite his protestations of innocence. We next see Jordan in a prison cell; a warden brings him a letter from his wife telling him that the Governor has commuted his death sentence to imprisonment. Twelve years pass. The child, now a beautiful woman of nineteen, is at the Convent of the Sacred Heart; accompanied by a nun, she walks out with her mother to the railway station. Convicts are repairing the road. The mother recognizes in one of the striped unfortunates her husband. The poor father bids the mother not to let their child know. The trio pass on. Jordan stands looking sadly after the two beings he loves so well. The convicts fight the guards and Jordan runs away. He is followed by two guards, and after thrilling fights and a unique ride, he climbs the wall of the very convent in which his daughter is a pupil. Father and child meet, and a pathetic scene is interrupted by one of the nuns. The guards are seen coming up. The father hides behind a shrine, and the daughter pleads with the nun to save her father, an innocent man. The guards question the nun. A pause. Will the good sister break her vow? She feels a despairing child's hand touch hers, and she tells a white lie, the lie that is sometimes more benevolent than truth. The guards pass on and Jordan is saved. After a few days, in the disguise of a gardener, Jordan, accompanied by his wife and child, sails for England. Our closing scene shows a happy, reunited family, as they sit down to their evening meal, and as they voice their gratitude to the Father of all, a vision of the nun is seen, her hands spread in benediction over the man whom she saved with a white lie.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

THEATERS FOR SALE OR LEASE.

Vaudeville and picture house for sale in Central Pennsylvania. Address J. W. F., care of Moving Picture World.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY.

For Sale—A newly equipped Moving Picture Theater in a booming town of 12,000, this State. The only place of its kind in town doing good business. Partners disagree. Will stand close investigation. Price, $3,00; no less. Address OPPORTUNITY, care of Moving Picture World.

HELP WANTED.

Operator wanted who can sing, or who has wife who can sing. Address G. P., Box 14, Oakley, Idaho.

WANTED—Man to handle moving picture house. Salary and commission. State qualifications fully. Permanent. BIJOU THEATER, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

WANTED—Combination Pianist and Singer. Address, with full particulars, BIJOU, Lakewood, N.J.

SITUATIONS WANTED,

Experienced operator desires situation. H. Herman, 260 Avenue B, New York City.

JACOB BESKINCE, 248 Second St., New York City, experienced operator; will go anywhere.

Licensed operator, lady piano player and lady drummer, with bells and traps, desire position together, in States; best references. G. L. PALMER, 158 Duke St., St. John, N. B.

GEORGE A. CORLISS, experienced moving picture operator, with Mass. license; wife A-1 pianist; go anywhere for reasonable salary. Address George A. Corliss, 21 Lunenburg St., Fitchburg, Mass.

Baritone Singer for illustrated songs desires position; salary agreeable, will go anywhere. Six months in last position. References. Address ROBERT P. FOURNIER, Room 414, 76 Dorrance St., Providence, R. I.

AT LIBERTY, experienced Moving Picture Operator, can also operate the Cameraphone; ready to go on the job at once. Chas. Lord, 59 E. 21st street, New York City.

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 300 W. 45th St., New York City.

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

Film Import and Trading Company.

May 29—Scrappy Bill	802 ft.
June 19—Love Wins	931 ft.
May 8—Cowboy's Sweetheart	854 ft.
May 1—Nevada Girl	936 ft.
May 22—Johnny and the Indians	877 ft.
May 14—The Temptations of John Gray	930 ft.
Aug. 18—The Lost Letter	965 ft.
Aug. 25—The Blacksmith's Daughter	985 ft.
Sept. 8—The Diamond Necklace	545 ft.
Sept. 8—The Wishing Charm	545 ft.
Sept. 15—A White Lie	About 1000 ft.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July 24—A Clever Nurse	450 ft.
July 24—Off the Coast of Norway	315 ft.
Aug. 14—The Spy	619 ft.
Aug. 14—Water Sports	214 ft.
Aug. 21—False Alarm	353 ft.
Aug. 21—Surroundings of Copenhagen	396 ft.
Aug. 28—The Shell	567 ft.
Aug. 28—Cowboys in Argentina	387 ft.
Aug. 26—A Strange Reunion	910 ft.
Sept. 3—His Two Children	1000 ft.
Sept. 11—The Gray Dame	975 ft.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

July 2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.)	935 ft.
July 9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.)	850 ft.
July 23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.)	1000 ft.
July 30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C)	800 ft.
Aug. 6—Sailor's Child (Dr.)	1000 ft.
Aug. 13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes	450 ft.
Aug. 13—The Yiddisher Cowboy	550 ft.
Aug. 20—Half Breed's Treachery	1000 ft.
Aug. 27—Secret Service Woman	1000 ft.
Sept. 10—The Paymaster	1000 ft.
Sept. 17—A Kentucky Planter	1000 ft.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Russian Romance (Drama)	850 ft.
Conspracy (Drama)	900 ft
Victim of a Crisis (Drama)	520 ft.
Salome Craze (Comedy)	435 ft.
Flirtation Collar (Comedy)	335 ft.
Brave Girl on the 15th Floor (Drama)	917 ft.
It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl (Comedy)	1010 ft.
Spanish Girl (Comedy Drama)	816 ft.
Her Favorite Tune (Drama)	892 ft.
How the Loser Won (Drama)	989 ft.
A Young Bachelor's Dream (Comedy)	826 ft.
A Strange Reunion	840 ft.
A Girl of the Woods	860 ft.
The Railroad Wreck	950 ft.

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

The following films are released this week by the Empire Film Co., 150 East 14th street, corner Third aveuue, New York.

For My Children (Eclair)	———
Pietro, the Candy Kid (Eclair)	———
The Paymaster (Bison)	880 ft.
A Henpecked Husband (Great Northern)	472 ft.
Norrkoping (Great Northern)	321 ft.
Cycle Rider and the Witch (Great Northern)	197 ft.
Girl of the Woods (Phoenix)	853 ft.
Meskal, the Smuggler (Eclair)	525 ft.
Man With the Sack in Society (Eclair)	374 ft.
The End of the Terror (Itala)	656 ft.
If at First You Don't Succeed (Warwick)	345 ft.
Pietro, the Mule Driver (Eclair)	584 ft.
Galiuo Objects to Work (Eclair)	367 ft.
A Broken Heart (Grose)	607 ft.
A Villaiu's Downfall (Hepworth)	725 ft.
Arab Life in Southern Algeria (Hepworth)	275 ft.
How Money Circulates (Cines)	846 ft.
Making of a Sailor (R. & R.)	370 ft.
Luck of the Cards (Hepworth)	475 ft.
A Tricky Convict (C. & M.)	400 ft.
A Dream of Paradise (Wrench)	325 ft.
German Spring Parade (D. B.)	493 ft.
The Arithmetic Lesson (Lux)	387 ft.
Runaway Model	246 ft.

INDEPENDENT FILM MANUFACTURERS AND IMPORTERS.

The Buck Film Co., 527 Clinton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
The Capitol Producing Co., Washington, D. C.
Centaur Film Co., 300 Broadway, Bayonne, N. J.
Columbia Film Co., 8th Ave., New York.
Columbia Photograph Co., Petersburg, Va.
Gem Film Mfg. Co., Gem Theater Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
Great Northern Film Co., 7 East 14th St., New York.
International P. & P. Co., Schiller Bldg., Chicago.
Carl Laemmle, Chicago and New York.
Lumiere N. A. Co., 31 E. 27th St., New York.
New York Motion Picture Co., 429 6th Ave., N. Y.
The Oklahoma Mutoscene Co., Oklahoma City, Okla.
Phoenix Film Co., 215 Wabash Ave., Chicago, Ill.
The Powers Co., 241st St. (Wakefield), New York.
U. S. Film Mfg. Co., Fedder Bldg., W. 5th St., Cincinnati, Ohio.
Western Multiscope Co., Salt Lake City, Utah.
World Film Mfg. Co., Portland, Ore.

For Ten Days We're Making This Offer

Our Broad and Open Policy, inaugurated when we began Equipping Theatres and Renting Films,--April 1st, 1909, insists on our treating Film users alike, without fear or favor. To that end, we herewith publish our Special Rates for Average Service so that Exhibitors everywhere may know just what Genuine and Authorized Independent Goods may be had for and just whose Products comprise the service quoted.

Following Rates In Force During Ten Days After Date Of This Issue

Number of Reels	Age of Subjects From Makers Date				Rate Per Week
	90 days	60 days	45 days	30 days	10 days
Six	$10.00	$12.00	$15.00	$20.00	$30.00
Nine	15.00	18.00	22.50	30.00	40.00
Twelve	20.00	24.00	30.00	40.00	60.00

TERMS FOR SERVICE—CASH IN ADVANCE OR C. O. D.

Rates quoted cover cost per week in full, shipments made to meet given change days

Song Slide Service Gratus to Customers

Complete Lists Covering Above Service Mailed on Request

Machine Repairs Free to Customers

Our repair shops are equipped to make quick repairs on all makes of machines, the cost of parts, less 20 per cent. discount, being the only charge made for this work.

WE SELL STANDARD MACHINES OF ALL MAKES NEXT TO COST

GET OUR FIGURES

Cut-Rate Supplies

Best Roll Tickets	$ .07
French Condensers	.70
Film Cement	.20
Novelpake	.20
"Curtainyline"	3.00
"Silverine"	3.00
"Smith" Slides	.50
M. P. Lenses	5.00
M. P. Jackets	3.00
Stereo Lenses	5.00

The Following Consolidated Rental Agencies Have Been Established

Richmond Service Co., Richmond, Va.
T. J. Gaddy, Manager.
U. S. Theater and Film Supply Co., Norfolk, Va.
Palmer & Baker, Managers.
Mason Film Service, Goldsboro, N. C.
H. R. Mason, Manager.
Liberty Film Service, Charleston, W. Va.
S. A. Skaff, Manager.
Eastern Film Exchange, Easton, Pa.
Bargain Mail Order Co., York, Pa.

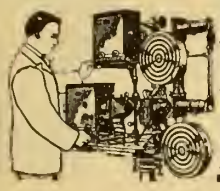
ADDITIONAL OFFICES WILL BE ANNOUNCED NEXT WEEK

CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO., Inc.

HARRY R. RAVER, Manager

28 WEST LEXINGTON STREET = = = BALTIMORE, MD.

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.

Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"

Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN

THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, September 17th

A KENTUCKY PLANTER

Dramatic | Code Word, Rebuild | Approx. Length 1,000 ft.

Another sensational production by the New York Motion Picture Co., based on the much talked of Night Riders. This film is most thrilling in situations, beautiful in photogaphy and cleverly acted.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

Film * * Talk

WE conduct the oldest aud largest establishment of the kind in the U. S.

WE have had fourteen years experience; why not profit by it.

WE buy, sell, rent and exchange motion picture machines, films and supplies.

WE import the latest and best made film from the foremost Continential makers. We release the best AMERICAN film.

Our * Special * Offer

Two reels of film, three times a week in one shipment, $12.00.

BUT

WE furnish high grade service.

Send for our list of 2000 films, to select from, and let us quote you.

OUR songs slides are the perfection of artistic coloring. SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

Harstn & Company
138 East 14th St., New York, N.Y.

WE HANDLE
ONLY
INDEPENDENT FILMS

WE MAKE ONLY ONE PRICE

WE GIVE ONLY
WHAT YOU WANT

TRY

Exhibitors' Film Exchange

PHONE 2775 STUYVESANT

138 Third Ave. Between 14th and 15th Sts.
NEW YORK

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 9—Jones' Burglar (Comedy).....388 ft.
Aug. 12—The Better Way (Drama).....990 ft.
Aug. 16—With Her Card (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 19—His Wife's Visitor (Dramatic).....526 ft.
Aug. 19—Mrs. Jones' Lover; or, I Want My Hat (C.)467 ft.
Aug. 23—The Indian Runner's Romance (Drama)..994 ft.
Aug. 26—The Seventh Day (Drama).....693 ft.
Aug. 26—Oh, Uncle! (Comedy).....292 ft.
Aug. 30—The Mills of the Gods (Dramatic).....672 ft.
Aug. 30—Pranks (Comedy).....328 ft.
Sept. 2—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).....779 ft.
Sept. 2—The Little Darling (Comedy).....211 ft.
Sept. 6—"1776," or the Hessian Renegades (Dr.)..965 ft.
Sept. 9—Comata, the Sioux (Dramatic).....963 ft.
Sept. 13—Getting Even (Comedy).....587 ft.
Sept. 13—The Children's Friend (Dramatic).....386 ft.
Sept. 16—The Broken Locket (Dramatic).....999 ft.

EDISON MFG. CO.

Aug. 13—The Price of a Soul (Dramatic).....560 ft.
Aug. 13—Furnished Rooms to Let (Comedy).....425 ft.
Aug. 17—A Simple House Dinner.....220 ft.
Aug. 17—Far from the Maddening Crowd.....780 ft.
Aug. 20—The Web of Fate.....385 ft.
Aug. 20—Wright Bros.' Aeroplane.....600 ft.
Aug. 24—A Child of the Forest.....970 ft.
Aug. 27—The Patience of Miss Job.....185 ft.
Aug. 27—A Dash to Death.....815 ft.
Aug. 31—Suffer Little Children . . . For of Such Is the Kingdom of Lahor.....1000 ft.
Sept. 3—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 3—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Dramatic) ———
Sept. 7—A Dangerous Pair (Comedy)..... ———
Sept. 7—The Temptation (Dramatic)..... ———
Sept. 10—The Making of Honey (Industrial).....190 ft.
Sept. 10—The Amateur William Tell (Comedy)....810 ft.
Sept. 14—Little Sister (Dramatic).....975 ft.
Sept. 17—How the Landlord Collected His Rents (C.).460 ft.
Sept. 17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Comedy).....500 ft.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Aug. 4—Much Ado About Nothing (Comedy).....510 ft.
Aug. 4—The Mustard Plaster (Comedy).....445 ft.
Aug. 11—A Maid of the Mountains.....1000 ft.
Aug. 18—The Wonders of Nature (Scenic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 25—On Another Man's Pass (Comedy).....950 ft.
Sept. 1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (Comedy).952 ft.
Sept. 8—Justified (Dramatic) .....970 ft.
Sept. 15—A Case of Tomatoes (Comedy).....495 ft.
Sept. 15—Three Reasons for Haste (Comedy).....485 ft.
Sept. 22—Gratitude (Drama).....950 ft.

GAUMONT.

(Gorge Kleine.)

Aug. 14—The Foxy Farmer (Com.).....397 ft.
Aug. 14—Peddling Shoes (Comedy) .....287 ft.
Aug. 14—Why She Didn't Marry (Com.)).....234 ft.
Aug. 17—The Little Drummer of 1792 (Dramatic)...497 ft.
Aug. 17—The Cobbler and the Millionaire (Drama).427 ft.
Aug. 24—Too Gentlemanly (Comedy).....510 ft.
Aug. 24—The Frock Coat (Drama).....500 ft.
Aug. 25—Broken Ties (Drama).....777 ft.
Aug. 25—Sevres Porcelain (Mystic).....194 ft.
Aug. 28—A Generous Emperor (Drama).....304 ft.
Aug. 28—The Horse and the Haystack.....297 ft.
Aug. 28—Great Event at Podunk.....357 ft.
Sept. 1—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).....627 ft.
Sept. 1—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).....340 ft.
Sept. 7—First Airships Crossing the English Channel (Scenic) .....510 ft.
Sept. 7—The Mason's Paradise (Comedy).....414 ft.
Sept. 8—The Stolen Gems (Dramatic).....464 ft.
Sept. 8—Glimpses of Paris (Scenic).....417 ft.
Sept. 11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dramatic).....940 ft.
Sept. 14—The Tricky Dummies (Comedy).....370 ft.
Sept. 14—Her Busy Day (Comedy).....250 ft.
Sept. 14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Comedy).....324 ft.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

Aug. 7—Baby Is King (Comedy).....334 ft.
Aug 7—The Hidden Treasure (Drama).....624 ft.
Aug. 18—The Strikers (Melodrama).....567 ft.
Aug. 18—Building Barrels (Industrial).....400 ft.
Aug. 21—The King's Protege (Drama).....647 ft.
Aug. 21—Up the Mountain from Hong Kong (Scenic)287 ft.
Aug. 31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).....404 ft.
Aug. 31—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).557 ft.
Sept. 4—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).....514 ft.
Sept. 4—Romantic Italy (Scenic).....437 ft.
Sept. 15—The Fatal Love (Dramatic).....584 ft.
Sept. 15—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Scenic).....367 ft.
Sept. 18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Topical)...480 ft.
Sept. 18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dramatic).....500 ft.

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug. 6—Traced by a Kodak (Dramatic).....980 ft.
Aug. 13—Out of Work (Dr.).....810 ft.
Aug. 20—The Queen of the Quarry.....690 ft.
Aug. 20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal.....170 ft.
Aug. 27—The Conspirators (Drama).....410 ft.
Aug. 27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Comedy)..575 ft.
Sept. 3—The Pay Car (Dramatic).....930 ft.
Sept. 10—Hiram's Bride (Dramatic).....—— ft.
Sept. 17—The Story of a Rose (Dramatic).....680 ft.
Sept. 17—Winning a Dinner (Comedy).....245 ft.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

Aug. 9—The Newest Woman (Com.).....215 ft.
Aug. 12—An Unexpected Guest (Dram.).....880 ft.
Aug. 16—How Brown Got Married.....680 ft.
Aug. 16—The Hungry Actor .....235 ft.
Aug. 19—Measure for Measure.....965 ft.
Aug. 23—Before the Dawn (Drama).....615 ft.
Aug. 23—Wifey Away, Hubby at Play.....320 ft.
Aug. 26—Nearsighted Mary (Comedy).....495 ft.
Aug. 26—Midnight Sons (Comedy).....385 ft.
Aug. 30—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).....580 ft.
Aug. 30—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).....305 ft.
Sept. 2—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).....810 ft.
Sept. 6—The Call of the Heart (Dramatic).....670 ft.
Sept. 6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic).....255 ft.
Sept. 9—A True Patriot (Patriotic).....735 ft.
Sept. 9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Scenic)....200 ft.
Sept. 13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dramatic)....810 ft.
Sept. 16—The Fortune Hunters (Comedy).....575 ft.
Sept. 16—All on Account of a Letter (Comedy).....385 ft.

PATHE FRERES.

Aug. 16—Cold Plunge in Moscow.....246 ft.
Aug. 18—Elastic Transformation .....295 ft.
Aug. 18—Two Lovers and a Coquette.....567 ft.
Aug. 20—Doomed (Dramatic) .....836 ft.
Aug. 21—Rover Turns Santa Claus.....417 ft.
Aug. 21—Getting Even with Everybody.....544 ft.
Aug. 23—Dances of Various Countries.....482 ft.
Aug. 23—The Hat Juggler.....377 ft.
Aug. 25—The Eternal Romance.....771 ft.
Aug. 25—Tennessee Guards .....207 ft.
Aug. 27—Manufacturing Bamboo Hats.....443 ft.
Aug. 27—A Billposter's Trials.....426 ft.
Aug. 28—The Professor's Dilemma.....423 ft.
Aug. 28—The Hypnotic Wife.....482 ft.
Aug. 30—Ralph Benefits by People's Curiosity (C.)..285 ft.
Aug. 30—The New Mail Carrier (Comedy).....672 ft.
Sept. 1—The Little Street Singer (Dramatic).....426 ft.
Sept. 1—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Dram.)..502 ft.
Sept. 3—A Visit to Biskra (Scenic).....443 ft.
Sept. 3—Show Your License (Comedy).....420 ft.
Sept. 4—A Grave Disappointment (Comedy).....361 ft.
Sept. 4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Scenic).....253 ft.
Sept. 4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Scenic).....331 ft.
Sept. 6—Versailles (Scenic) .....462 ft.
Sept. 6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (Comedy).456 ft.
Sept. 8—The Little Soldier (Dramatic).....394 ft.
Sept. 8—Sweden—Gotha Canal (Scenic) .....456 ft.
Sept. 10—Tom Thumb (Dramatic).....1016 ft.
Sept. 11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics (Sc.)..371 ft.
Sept. 11—Sports in Java (Scenic) .....298 ft.
Sept. 11—How to Tame a Mother-in-law (Comedy).351 ft.
Sept. 13—Amateur Detective (Comedy).....390 ft.
Sept. 13—The Child's Prayer (Dramatic).....571 ft.
Sept. 15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dramatic).....492 ft.
Sept. 15—City of Naples (Industrial).....449 ft.
Sept. 17—Mountebank's Son (Dramatic).....892 ft.
Sept. 18—Oh, What a Beard! (Comedy).....335 ft.
Sept. 18—The Fresh Kid (Comedy).....295 ft.
Sept. 18—Construction of Balloons (Industrial).....361 ft.

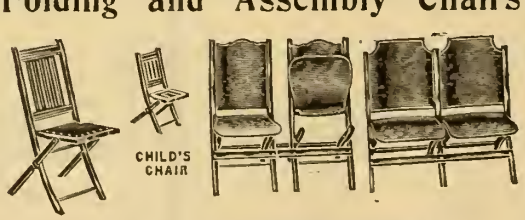
SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

July 29—The Heart of a Race Tout (Dramatic)....1000 ft.
Aug. 5—Before the Mast (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 12—The Leopard Queen .....1000 ft.
Aug. 19—The Yellow Jacket Mine.....1000 ft.
Aug. 26—The Royal Outcast (Drama).....1000 ft.
Aug. 30—Mrs. Jones' Birthday (Comedy).....540 ft.
Aug. 30—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).....450 ft.
Sept. 2—The Blight of Sin (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 9—The Engagement Ring (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 13—Freebooters (Dramatic).....995 ft.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 10—For Her Sweetheart's Sake.....570 ft.
Aug. 14—The Obdurate Father.....409 ft.
Aug. 14—The Gift of Youth.....535 ft.
Aug. 17—Liberty for an Hour (Drama).....355 ft.
Aug. 17—The Judge's Whiskers (Comedy).....591 ft.
Aug. 21—The Way of the Cross (Drama).....900 ft.
Aug. 24—Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged.....447 ft.
Aug. 24—Borrowed Clothes (Com.).....538 ft.
Aug. 28—The Evil That Men Do (Dram.).....925 ft.
Aug. 31—The Hunchback (Dramatic).....633 ft.
Aug. 31—Niagara in Winter Dress.....350 ft.
Sept. 4—The Galley Slave.....885 ft.
Sept. 7—The Fisherman (Dramatic).....430 ft.
Sept. 7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dramatic).....564 ft.
Sept. 11—An Alpine Echo (Dramatic).....990 ft.
Sept. 14—The Little Father (Dramatic).....610 ft.
Sept. 14—The Wealthy Rival (Comedy).....360 ft.
Sept. 18—The Marble Heart (Dramatic).....968 ft.

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use
Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue
PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
NORTH MANCHESTER, IND.

Latest Song Slides.

SCOTT & VAN ALTENA,
59 Pearl St., New York.

Wedding Bells.
Was I a Fool?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do for a Girl Like You.
Good-bye, Girlie, and Remember Me.
After 'While.
Bushel o' Kisses.
Alice (Still I Love Thee).
On a Monkey Honeymoon. (Posed by live monkeys.)
If I Had My Choice of the World's Pretty Girls.
My Wife's Gone to the Country, Hurrah! Hurrah!
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have a Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?

D. W. C. WHEELER, Inc.,
120 West 31st St., New York.

The Hat My Father Wore Upon St. Patrick's Day.
Highland Mary.
Monkey Doodle Dandy.
In Watermelon Time.
Carrie, or Carrie Marry Harry.
The Garden of Roses.
Who's Afraid?
Was I a Fool?
Papa, Please Buy Me an Airship.
Stingy Kid.
When the Primrose Comes Again.
Moon-Bird.
The Cook Book of Love.
Slip on Your Gingham Gown.
I'll Get You Yet, Little Girl.
Lady Love.
Can't You See?
Cheating.

A. L. SIMPSON,
113 W. 132d St., New York.

Cutey.
Be Mine To-day.
Ain't Alabama Good Enough for You, Sue?
I've Been Longing a Long Time for You.
Oh, You Loving Gal.
Arrah, Come In Out of the Rain, Barney McShane.
Schoolmates.
Rose Marie.
Under the Irish Moon.
Keep a Little Feeling in Your Heart for Me.
Somebody Loves You, Too.
Little Miss Golden Curls.
The Whitewash Man.
Heinie Waltzed Round on His Hickory Limb.
Always Pals.

LEVI COMPANY,
21 Union Sq., New York.

You've Got Me Going, Kid.
Get Yourself Used to Being Broke.
Oh! Miss Malinda.
If You Love Me, Love Me, Love Me.
Come With Me on a Joy Ride.
When the Little Robin Redbreast Builds Its Nest.
Opechee.
Longing.
Back to the Old Home.
Sunday, That's All.
In the Dear Old Summertime.
Take Me Down to Old Revere.
Dear Little Sweetheart Mine.
If I Had Eyes Like You.
Up Where the Airships Blow.
When the Band Plays at Night.
Sailing With My Honey-Girl.
Helen May (H-ll in May).
What's the Use of Moonlight When There's No One Round to Love?
Like This Ring My Love Is Endless.
My Rathskeller Fairy.
Lovely Lou.
I'm Sending a Message to Mamma.
Was I a Fool?
Just Take Me Down to the Ball.
Sweetheart, Why Don't You Write?
Girl o' Mine.

SOLAR SLIDE COMPANY.
Watertown, N. Y.

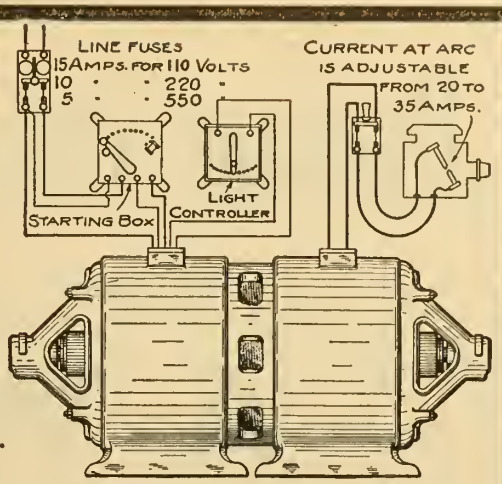
Under the Maples with Molly O.
I Ain't Afraid of the Policeman.
When You Wore Just a Plain Gingham Gown.
Toys for Sale.
When the Sun Goes Down to Rest Behind the Hill.
They Will Be Sorry Some Day.

ATTENTION

M. P. Men! Here is the

HALLBERG

Electric Economizer for Direct Current



HALLBERG-D. C. ECONOMIZER

Guaranteed to SAVE 50 to 85 per cent. on your bills for M. P. Lamp current. Here is another PROOF of satisfaction.

PICTURELAND
645 Penn Street
Finest Moving Picture House in the City

Reading Pa., July 8, 1909.

MR. J. H. HALLBERG,
30 Greenwich Ave., New York.

Dear Sir—It is now four months since we installed your direct current "HALLBERG ECONOMIZER," and machine has always given entire satisfaction.

It saves fully 50 per cent. on the current bill. The machine requires practically no attention whatever except occasional oiling and cleaning. Machine runs very quietly, current is very steady and machine does not heat up like a rheostat. I have the machine in the basement and the controlling apparatus is mounted in the operating booth. Thus I have perfect control over the light at all times.

The market is full of A. C. current savers, but M. P. managers having direct current have looked in vain for a current saver that could be used on D. C. Your D. C. "HALLBERG" Economizer will fill a long felt want, and I cannot recommend it too highly. Wishing you success, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM H. WAGNER.

Get in communication with me Mr. M. P. Man, I have many good things for you, among them Hallberg Economizers for all kinds of electric lighting—4,000 C. P. Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "Electra Pink Label" Carbons is complete. I also handle the best M. P. Machines, and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices they are interesting.

Write for FREE booklet No. 3W.

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Avenue, New York

GRAND PRIX

Awarded First Prize and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908

GREAT NORTHERN FILM CO. COPENHAGEN

Manufacturers of

Films of Quality

Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

NEXT ISSUE

Saturday, September 11th

THE GRAY DAME

(From Sherlock Holmes' Memoirs)

Feature Film Extraordinary

Length Approximate 975 feet.

Release, Saturday, September 18th

HOW DR. NICOLA PROCURED THE CHINESE CANE

Full Reel Feature Production of Merit

NOTICE TO EXHIBITORS:—Send in your name and address and get on our Mailing List at once.

All Exchanges Rent Great Northern Films.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN

7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

Centaur Releases For September

Shipped from New York Sept. 15, 1909

A White Lie

A Drama of Heart Interest

Shipped from New York Sept, 22, 1909

Dan Blake's Rival

The Biggest Hit This Year

Shipped from New York Sept. 29, 1909

A Close Call

An Exciting Drama

POSTERS FREE WITH CENTAUR FILMS

CONTROLLED EXCLUSIVELY BY

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23rd Street - - - - New York

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT

The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE

14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

PREVENTS TIRED EYES AND HEADACHES

The rapidity of our new shutter has been so perfected that 30 to 40 per cent. less non-exposure (which has heretofore caused the tremulous vibration producing so many tired eyes and headaches) is found in the Motiograph than in any other machine, making perfect brilliancy of picture and sharpness of outline. Together with the rocklike steadiness of the pedestal the flicker is thus entirely eliminated.

Five-cent Theatre and Vaudeville-House Managers increase their bank account with the Motiograph. Patrons who come once will always come again where they know they see the best pictures, positively rest their eyes instead of tiring them, and where all fire risks are removed.

The Motiograph 1909 Theatre Model, Especially Approved by the Underwriters Association

OTHER POINTS OF EXCELLENCE IN THE MOTIOGRAPH found in no other machines are: A special Film Rewind by which the film can be rewound with the main crank in two minutes without removing either reels or magazines, saving time between pictures and entertainments; perfected Fireproof Magazines, Fire Traps, with four rollers and with spring actuated flanged guides, preventing side movement and making it impossible for fire to pass them; never failing Automatic Fireproof Shutters; Perfect Framing Device; Flanged Sprocket Rollers to prevent film being torn or ruined by accidentally running off sprocket wheels; Enclosed Gears and working parts; Perfect Take-up with new form of belt adjuster; Lid Off Wide Open Lamp House making it easily accessible; Improved Arc Lamp with all Hand Wheel Adjustments; Slide Carrier Swing, saving one-third more illustration for the Motion Pictures.

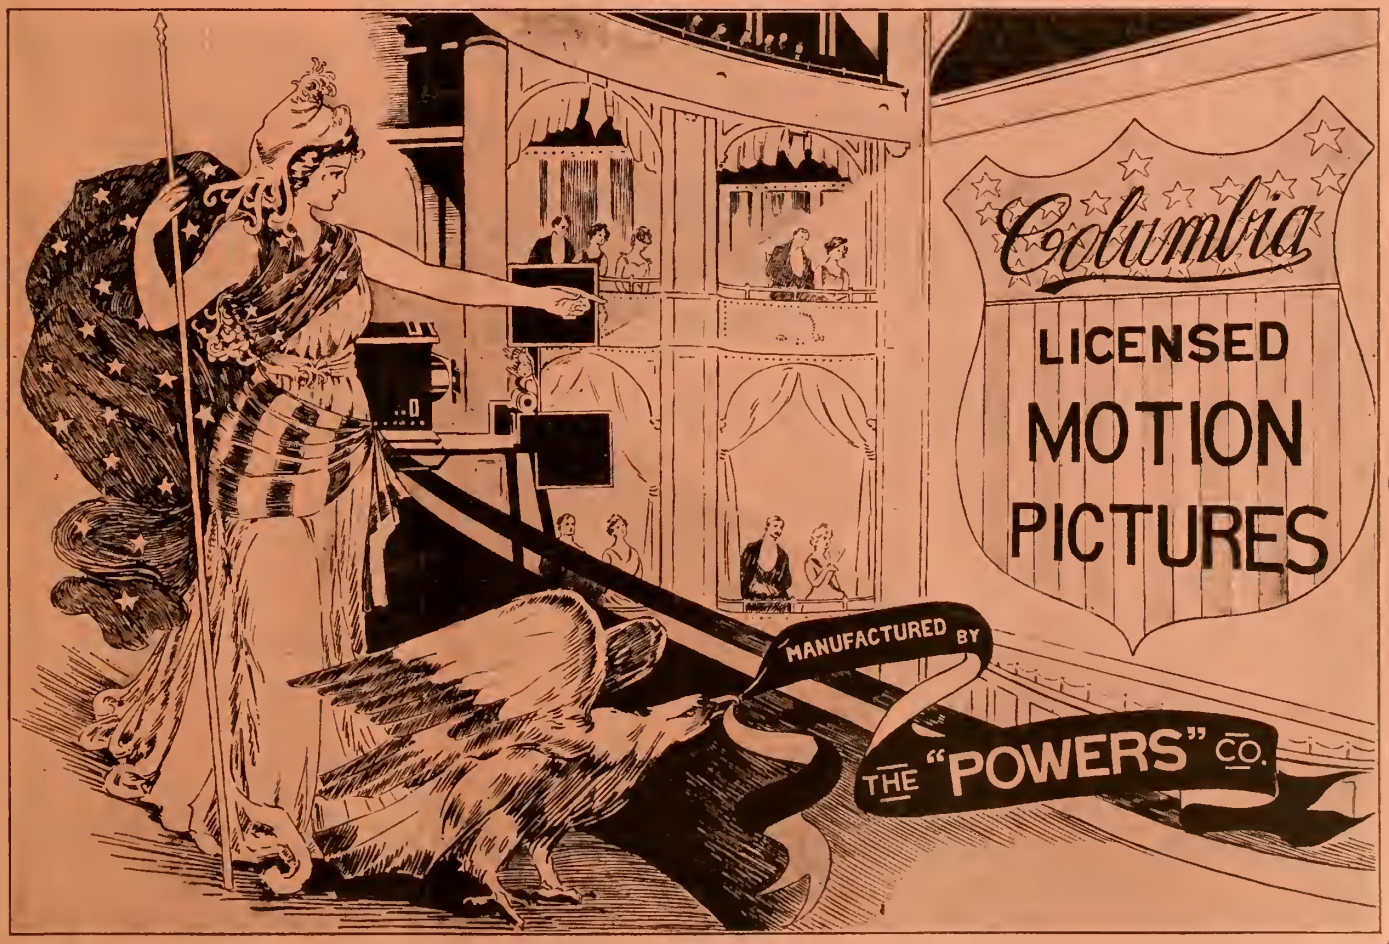
FILMS AND SLIDES

Headquarters for the finest, largest and most complete stock in the United States. The success of an entertainment depends on never allowing the interest of an audience to flag; patrons who have come once will come again when constgnt change of programme is made.

Send For NEW CATALOGUE of Entertainers Supplies explaining everything and showing how hig money can be made entertaining the public, sent free. Special literature describing the advantages of the Motiograph for professional entertainers and theatre managers.

CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., E. D. OTIS, Mgr., Supply Dept., 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

Will Start Releasing at an Early Date—Announcement Later



241st STREET and RICHARDSON AVE.—WAKEFIELD—NEW YORK CITY

ask about kosmik
economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

URBAN

Quality ECLIPSE Film

Aeroplane Contests at Rheims

Urban-Eclipse Release, September 18th 1909

Following closely the Gaumont release of September 7th (First Airships Crossing the English Channel), and before the public enthusiasm has had time to cool down, there now appears a truly remarkable film of the famous Urban-Eclipse make, entitled "Aeroplane Contests at Rheims," consisting of an aggregation of all the best and most important events which took place at Rheims, France, during an entire week. The subject is absolutely free from "padding," there being nothing but the most thrilling and attractive incidents shown from start to finish of the entire film.

The length of this picture is about half a reel—just enough and not too much of a good subject for a good show. All the world's champion aviators, including Curtiss, Bleriot, Latham, Renard, Farman, Tissandier, Lambert, Paulham, Rougier, and Banan-Varilla, are seen in this magnificent film and can be recognized easily. From start to finish this subject is a masterpiece of the photographic art.

George Kleine

Importer of Gaumont and Urban-Eclipse Films

52 State St., Chicago 19 E. 21st St., New York City, N. Y.

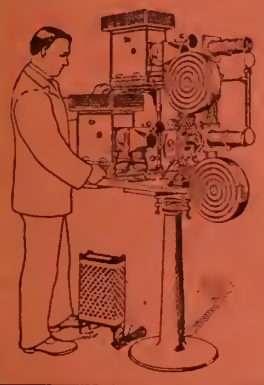
Vol. 5., No. 13. September 25, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WHICH IS INCORPORATED WITH THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.
F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."
F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes, but none to compare with Motiograph.—

PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light
Write for Catalog today

Calcium Gas Outfit

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

Eagle Film Exchange

One of the signs of the times, is the fact that business is drifting to the best houses, our independent service is unsurpassed.

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarc.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY COMPANY :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

HIGH CLASS INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

KICK if not satisfied

We want all our customers to kick if they are not satisfied with our goods and service. We admire kickers, because from them we learn to right the wrongs. Supplies at Special Prices. Get Price List.

CALL WRITE WIRE PHONE

Phone 1086 Stuyvesant GREAT EASTERN FILM COMPANY, 21 East 14th St. NEW YORK

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 5
POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year
POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current
POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current
POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK

The terrific demand for machines is proof enough that this is going to be one grand, slambang season of extravagant prosperity in the moving picture business. The offices of the Laemmle Film Service are taking on more business than ever before and nearly every customer is demanding "the best in the house." Gee, but that's a healthy sign. It shows that all exhibitors are wide awake to the public demand and that they are going to supply it if it breaks their necks. If you doubt that this film exchange can give you the perfect film service that you've simply got to have this season, write to my nearest office and tell all your troubles.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

CHICAGO OFFICE: 196-198 Lake St. NEW YORK OFFICE: 111 East 14th St.

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville, Ind. Omaha, Neb. Salt Lake City, Utah. Portland, Ore. Montreal, Can.

The Biggest and best film renter in the world.

KEEP YOUR EYE ON US

Hudson-Fulton Celebration Slides with lecture artistically colored. For Rent or Sale. Write, Phone, Wire, or Call

TELEPHONE 2314 STUYVESANT

American Film Brokers, German Savings Bank Bldg., 145-157 4th Ave., New York

For Two Years the Standard

"CURTAINYLINE"

The only absolutely fire-proof curtain paint on the market. When such exhibitors as the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, Geo. H. Hines' "Senate Theatre," Thompson's "Pastime" and all the high-class moving picture houses in Chicago and throughout the country use Curtainyline in preference to any other paint on their curtains, certainly this is proof sufficient that Curtainyline will do all we claim for it.

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE

Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $3.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock.

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

CURTAINYLINE CURTAIN AND PRODUCING COMPANY, Inc.
Room 405 Northwestern Building, 22 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles. We make all kinds of Special Announcement and Advertisement Slides.

Ladies Popularity and Baby Contest Slides, plain 50c. Colored 75c.

All accessories and plan for carrying out all contests furnished

WRITE FOR OUR LIST AND PRICES

NEW PROCESS FILM TITLE COMPANY

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

PATHÉ FRÈRES FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Aviation Contests at Rheims

THE REAL PICTURES of the FAMOUS AEROPLANE CONTESTS

September 20, 1909 A HEADLINER Length, 607 Feet

THE TOWER OF NESLE

FILM D'ART

Powerful Historical Drama from Alexandre Dumas' novel. Enacted by leading exponents of dramatic art.

September 22, 1909 Length, 1088 Feet

The Pathe Professional Machine

is giving excellent results wherever it is used. If you have a first-class house, and want to give a clear, steady picture, why not install the best machine on the market? Price, $225.00

For sale at all FILM exchanges in the United States

NEW YORK
41 W. 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken,
136 Eddy Street - - San Francisco, Cal.

Quality Always--Selig's Record Show Them "Nef Ced"

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 20, 1909

THE BACHELOR'S VISIT

A Rousing Comedy Length, 775 Feet--Code Word, Visit

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 20, 1909

FALSE ALARM

Length, 175 Feet--Code Word, Alarm

Seldom do we see so many laughs legitimately secured in so short a space of time as this brief Selig comedy offers A tramp enters the barn of one of Hicksville former residents and in his noisy slumbers caused a world of excitement by calling out the one-man fire department and creating ludicrous situations enough to keep the audience shrieking with laughter from start to finish. Just the sort of a film to give variety to your entertainment. It's funny. It is a Selig. It is a novel. There are good reasons why you will need this comedy. Order from your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's.

SELIG'S NEXT, COMING

STRICKEN BLIND

Will be Released Sept. 23, 1909

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21st:

THE UNSPOKEN GOODBYE

A sensational film presenting an intense tragedy with an unexpected and happy ending. Tom Jennings, a quarryman, is late in starting for work and has to hurry. His wife, Ruth, angered because he has not the time to perform some small household duty, refuses to kiss him good-bye. At the quarry there is a premature explosion of a big charge of dynamite, and Ruth is told that her husband is killed. She suffers an agony of remorse as she thinks of the refusal of the morning, but her grief is changed to joy by the little daughter's discovery that his coat, by which the body is identified, is worn by a chum of Tom's. He comes to assure Ruth that all is well, and a pretty domestic tableau ends a thrilling and absorbing story. For the explosion a blast of a quarter of a ton of dynamite was arranged for at one of the trap rock quarries along the Hudson, and this scene is realistic and convincing. It is subordinate, however, to a graphic narrative of a workman's life. Length, 425 feet.

THE SIREN'S NECKLACE

Susette, the belle of the little village of Kuban, disdains the simple presents of her fisherman sweetheart and pretends an anger she does not really feel when he serenades her. In despair he listens to the call of a siren, attracted from her home at the bottom of the sea by the melody, and plunges into the waves after her. Two men, hearing of Jean's experience, charm other sirens from the deeps, and only the prompt and concerted action of the housewives prevents the rest of the masculine population from following their example. Jean returns with a necklace of real pearls in place of the trumpery bauble, but he does not need it. Susette is only too glad to welcome his return, and he turns a deaf ear to the renewed entreaties of the siren. The subject is rich in comedy and trick effects, utilizing the Vitagraph private lake most advantageously. It is an unusual and most diverting film. Length, 530 feet.

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25th:

FANTINE

The second of the films de luxe based on complete incidents from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," yet dealing with the life of Jean Valjean, one of the most notable creations of the novelist. Jean, saved from his evil ways by the good bishop, has become the Mayor of the village and is known as M. Madeline. He befriends the unfortunate Fantine, who in her distress has disposed of her hair and even her teeth to find the money for the treacherous Thenardier, in whose care she has placed her child. M. Madeline's action antagonizes Javert, the Chief of Police, who has been forcing his attentions on Fantine. He recognizes in the honored Mayor the convict, Jean Valjean, and denounces Champmathier as the former convict in the hope of inducing the Mayor to betray himself. In this strategem he succeeds, for the Mayor will not permit another to suffer in his stead, and as he again comes within the grasp of the law, Fantine, deprived of her benefactor, falls lifeless at the feet of the officer. The same careful production that made "The Galley Slave" a widely discussed topic even in circles where motion pictures seldom are noticed, makes this second of the series an equally notable achievement. Length, 995 feet.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company,
125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative,
913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 SEPTEMBER 25, 1909 No. 13

Editorial.

The New Independent Alliance.

"The position of the Independents, or rather those who claim full liberty for the lawful exercise of their business, is hardly satisfactory. They are simply scattered units in the field, so full of Independence that their independence of each other while making for unity of object seem likely, we apprehend, to defeat that object. In other words, there is no union where there should be union. It is easy to realize that unless these various interests can harmonize and be made inter-independent one on the other, disunion and mutual destruction will be the ever present danger. Broadly speaking, there are three sets of interests to reconcile: (1) Manufacturers and importers; the interests of these are identical. (2) Film renters and exchanges. (3) Exhibitors. In our view of things the last class is perfectly well able to take care of itself. It is the most numerous; it makes the most money, and it can the more easily combine if action is demanded of it. Number one, the manufacturers, can also easily get in touch with each other and co-operate for mutual benefit. To some extent they have already done so, and it remains to be seen whether the future will bring them all into line, instead of, as at present, seeing them in hostile camps. Number two, the renters, presents, of course, the most difficult of the problems. The renter really holds the key to the situation. He is indispensable. It is a dream to suppose that in modern commerce a distributing agent is unnecessary. To talk of bringing manufacturer and consumer into direct contact without the interposition of a middle man, argues unfamiliarity with modern business requirements. So it is no more possible in the film business than it is in other branches of industrial production. That being the case, we must assume that the renter will always be a personal factor in the situation. Upon him, therefore, devolves the moral necessity of adjusting the perfect equilibrium which should exist between production and distribution. Consequently we look upon the renter as the most important factor in the film situation at the present time. It is he who should control the output, regulate prices, suppress duping, prevent price cutting, eliminate undesirable theaters, limit the number, look after the legislatures in their dealings with the moving picture industry, and generally take a constant and active interest in everything affecting the progress of the moving picture industry. These matters should be left neither to an extraneous company, a few manufacturers, or to widely scattered exhibitors. They should be in the hands of a strong and authoritative film service association representative of renters all over the country and officered by powerful and level-headed business men."—Moving Picture World, May 1, 1909.

The foregoing extract is taken from the second of the articles which we printed a few months ago, pointing out the need for a new representative film service association, with special reference to the wants of Independent manufacturers, renters and exhibitors. Since that time some sort of an association was formed in Chicago, but it did nothing in particular; it succumbed, the other day, after a very short existence indeed.

Now, however, there appears to have been a very serious attempt to take to heart the advice which the Moving Picture World alone amongst papers dealing with the moving picture industry has given the Independent manufacturers and renters. We ask any fair-minded reader whether the extract at the beginning of this article does not correctly represent the exact state of affairs that prevailed in the moving picture field prior to last Friday. We would also like to ask him whether he could point to any other article written on the situation which handles the matter as fully and as clearly in the interests of the Independents as we have done.

At the Chicago meeting, a report of which appears in another part of the paper, the Moving Picture World was assigned the character of partisanship. The people who did this were guilty of the grossest impertinence. They affected to know our business as well as, if not better, than ourselves. Let it be said, not for the first time, but once and for all, that the Moving Picture World is not a partisan publication. It is not a factional publication; it does not exist for the benefit of any one branch of the moving picture industry: it exists for the benefit of the whole of it. It is the leading trade journal in the world which is devoted to the moving picture industry, all sections of which, including the Independents, have just that amount of representation and advocacy in these pages which their cause entitles them to.

We look upon the new association that has been formed as the direct outcome of the interest taken in the Independent position by the Moving Picture World. The situation seems to have been handled in a broad and business-like way. It has been recognized that the renter or distributor holds, as we pointed out before, the key of the situation; consequently every endeavor is to be made to get all Independent exchange people in line in the new association. Then there appears to be a distinct resolution on the part of many of those who are taking a prominent part in the new society, to mend their ways; to give up duping; to pay their bills; to conduct their business in an honorable way. We do not wish to be too severe on anybody who enters upon the path of repentance and reform, but we are bound to say that the Independent movement could not be particularly advanced or favored by the peculiar commercial morality, or lack of it, which has characterized the policy of some of the Independent "stalwarts."

So far, so good. The policy of the new association is, we apprehend, one for the mutual help of its members. We presume they will work together in all action taken for the general good; they will loyally support each other and their own manufacturers and importers; that each will pay his dues; and the association will be financially strong and politically powerful. The field is certainly open for it. In our opinion, nothing but good can result to the industry, as a whole, by the formation of the new association. We are not authorized to say so, but we believe that "the powers that be" of the Patents Company would welcome, rather than otherwise, the formation of a strong and powerful Independent organization which contributes its quota towards the betterment of the business, which eliminates the undesirable renter or manufacturer, the undesirable exhibitor; which assures a high quality of pictures; which sees that the business of its members is conducted along proper lines. This is merely a conjecture of our own, but we believe we are right in the conjecture.

For these reasons, then, we think that the new society, if properly managed, will advantage the moving picture business as a whole, and so we welcome it and promise it our support. An experiment has been tried in the election of Mr. J. J. Murdock as president. Mr. Murdock is still new to the moving picture industry and has much to learn in it. He is a man of great power and ability and has a good opportunity for distinguishing himself in his new position. The other officers are no strangers in the field. Mr. Swanson is a man of great executive and organizing ability and should make good as secretary. Mr. Kessel is a successful business man and in the office of treasurer will, no doubt, succeed. The members of the committee are good representatives of the Independent movemnt.

The Chicago meeting seems to have been characterized by great unanimity of thought and action, so the new association starts on its career well equipped, so far as we can learn, in policy. We promise it the support of the Moving Picture World, as we have said before, exactly in the ratio of the beneficial influence which it is likely to exert on the business as a whole.

The Variety of Moving Picture Audiences.

Moving picture audiences constitute an interesting study in themselves. They vary with their environment. We have reached, in New York City, that stage of progress in the popularization of the moving picture as a source of entertainment when the various sections of society, if we may use the phrase in a professedly democratic country, are sorting themselves out under the banner of the moving picture. Class distinctions, in short, assert themselves here as in other affairs of life.

If you take the case of the ordinary theater, you will find that each leading actor or actress has his or her own following. For example, at the Empire Theater when either John Drew or Maude Adams is playing you will find people of a certain class preponderating in the audience. Maxine Elliott has her following; Leslie Carter hers, Mr. Belasco appeals to a big section of the public, Miss Anglin, Miss Frances Starr, Mr. Cohan all have their particular following drawn from distinct and separate sections of the public. It is going that way with the moving picture.

At one house that we have in mind you get quite an aristocratic clientele whose patronage is offered chiefly in the evening. Mixing with this particular audience as we do, we find that the people are drawn from quite cultured sections of society who look upon the moving picture from a very high standard, indeed. At this house children are seldom seen; at another house the audience generally consists of children of the better classes; yet another house is patronized all day and all night by business men and their womenkind. These constitute a very intelligent audience, quick to appreciate the points of a picture, its dramatic and photographic qualities, the individualities and idiosyncrasies of the performers in the pictures.

Incidentally, too, you have Biograph audiences, Pathe audiences, Selig audiences, Lubin, Vitagraph and Kalem audiences. In other words, the well-known brands of films have created for themselves large followings amongst the public, just as well-known actors and actresses and certain theaters have done in regard to the regular stage.

We are confining our observations to what we may term the upper strata of New York society: the better classes, for indeed it is a very powerful sign of the situation that the better classes are patronizing moving picture theaters in such large numbers. It is quite common for us to hear educated men and women say, as they have said to us during the past few weeks, that they find as much mental enjoyment and recreation in moving picture theaters as they did three months ago in the ordinary play. Many that we know pay regular visits to the moving picture theater where once those visits were paid to Broadway theaters.

Aviation Work.

Telephotographic Moving Pictures.

Several weeks ago we devoted a short article to pointing out the value of the telephotographic lens for taking certain classes of moving pictures. We instanced a case where an object might be situated at such a distance from the moving picture camera that, if it were photographed with the ordinary 2½-inch or 3-inch focal length lens on the camera, it would be so small when enlarged on the moving picture screen as not to present an image of sufficent size for purposes of clear recognition by the audience.

The problem may be expressed in another way. The object: let us suppose it to be a ball game, a distant crowd, a ship at sea, or the like: is so situated that it is impossible for the moving picture operator to overcome the difficulty in what may seem to be an obvious way, that is, by going nearer to it, when it would of course make a larger image on the film. The less obvious way of course is to employ a lens of increased focal length which will give you a larger image on the film that the lens of ordinary focal length.

Of course this question of utilizing lenses of varying focal length on the front of the moving picture camera, is one of no little difficulty. You must have the front of the camera especially made for the purpose, and then it might be desirable to have a movement which will allow of the focal plane being under control as regards its lateral or forward adjustment. But the mechanical end of matters, we think, does not present any insuperable difficulty. It is the principle that we desire to emphasize.

Let us pass from the abstract to a concrete example. At this moment numerous aeroplane and aviation pictures are being shown on the screen. At times the aeroplane in the sky becomes a mere speck and rarely are the machines seen on the screen so large as an audience wishes. Now here is a conspicuous instance where the use of a telephotographic lens would be of distinct advantage, for within certain limits you could get a photograph of a moving aeroplane, all other things being equal, of any desired size. Instead of the machine looking, when it is a mile or two from the camera, a mere speck, it could be shown, under favorable circumstances, of a very appreciable size. Indeed, generally, for aviation pictures and for outdoor moving picture work where the field of operations is situated a considerable distance from the camera, the use of a telephotographic or long focus lens system seems to us to be called for.

We commend this point to the attention of those interested in the progress of moving picture making. There are, as we pointed out in our first article, some difficulties of construction and the question of a reduction of working aperture to be faced, but those difficulties we again point out are not insuperable and can be, we think, overcome in practical work. Anyhow, speaking broadly, we regard the telephotographic moving picture as well within the bounds of practical accomplishment.

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

CHAPTER II.

Posters.

The poster may be looked upon in some respects as the advance agent of a moving picture theater. It precedes the show. It either attracts visitors to the theater or repels them. Its effect is positive and never negative in the strictest sense of the term. In other words, the poster literature outside a theater has an influence for good or bad either upon would-be patrons of the theater or the mere casual passerby. It will be seen, therefore, that the external literature of a theater is of vital importance in the general scheme of things.

We have made it a point for months past to study moving picture theater posters. It is surprising how few of them have the least approach to either accuracy or refinement. In plain English the majority of the posters outside these houses are bad enough to damn the entertainment within, absolutely, finally, irretrievably. Lurid designs of a multicolor scheme of chromatics; horrible in conception; horrible in execution, and horrible in effect, have been in too many instances the common stock in trade of the moving picture theater exhibitor at the poster end of matters. He seems to have thought that a vile specimen of crude color printing and design was good enough to indicate the nature of the entertainment he is giving inside. The effect of this almost universal display of lurid poster literature has been to repel and disgust large sections of the public, who might otherwise have been attracted into the theater. The posters have appealed to the worst and lowest passions of men and women, have frightened children, have disgusted persons of a refined mind. In this category of condemnation and criticism we also include, beside the posters, the abominably crude specimens of printing (save the mark) which many moving picture theater proprietors seem to think good enough for decorative and directional purposes. Any old piece of paper, any old brush, any old kind of ink seems to have supplied these people with the materials for their printing matter, which would disgrace a junk shop. Again we say the consequence has been of a repellent nature.

Now the common sense of the matter cannot be too plainly put. In the first place, in the present stage of lithographic and photographic printing, it is easy and cheap to obtain elegant posters of clear, good design and well printed which shall make an appeal to the better sympathies of possible patrons of moving picture theaters. The irrational daubs of lurid color should be suppressed, and good, clear pictures only should be shown. Moreover, we think they might be neatly framed and hung in the façade of the moving picture theater with a general eye to the total fitness of effect of the exterior. Then we think the paint brush printer and dirty paper should be killed right off and proper typographical matter chosen and judiciously displayed.

It is attributed to a noted English painter that in his opinion a good picture is seen at a glance. This we think should apply to the illustrative and typographical posters of the moving picture theater. Show the public something good, simple, refined and convincing and they will see at a glance what the moving picture theater man is driving at, namely, that he is directing their attention to the fact that inside his house he has a good display of high class motion pictures. In order to impress this upon the mind of his regular or transient patrons, he must choose some means such as we have indicated above.

We lay great stress on this poster and printing end of matters, because we think it of cardinal importance in regard to the business. We note signs in New York City that many moving picture theater exhibitors are in sympathy with us in this matter. To some of these we have personally protested against the exhibition of senseless, misleading, horrible abominations in the way of color printing. Our protests have been heeded and the offending posters abolished and better specimens substituted for them. Result: an appreciative response on the part of the public. This chapter of our subject would be incomplete without reference to the fact that the principal licensed and independent manufacturers now supply large half-tone posters of their subjects for display at moving picture theaters. Selig, Essanay and other houses are prominent in this respect. The manufacturers, therefore, show a laudable desire to assist the exhibitor in attracting the public by suitable posters. Some of the latter we have seen are very fine bits of work indeed. They are enlargements from the films illustrated.

We wonder if our American readers are familiar with the English term indicative of a low down place of entertainment called a "penny gaff." In London for a penny, that is two cents, the public in the poorer parts of the city can view an entertainment of the fat lady and living skeleton variety. Outside these places you see rough and ready posters and printing of the type we have described above and condemned. The moving picture theater as it is developing is a cut above the "penny gaff," therefore we think it deserves better treatment in respect of its poster literature and we hope it will get it.

(To be continued.)

"Esprit du Corps."

There is one thing in particular that leads us to believe in the new National Independent Alliance and which will do much to smooth its way to success. This is the spirit of brotherhood and good-fellowship which prevailed at their deliberations and which the members seem to have carried away with them, judging from the tone of several interviews that we have since had. Exchange men have shown a disposition to even make sacrifices to bring about a better understanding as to prices and quality of service. Independent manufacturers and manufacturers' agents have swallowed their pride of self-importance. New manufacturers, as they grow older in the game, begin to realize that the know-it-all does not exist in this business and that the enthusiasm of the beginner in his first attempts does not necessarily carry with it the seal of public approval, without which he cannot succeed. The feeling among the manufacturers which seems to have taken root, and which should prevail, is not who can sell the most prints, no matter of what kind, but who can turn out the best quality and thus give strength to their cause and impetus to the business as a whole. We hope that this sentiment will not wane as the date of the meeting recedes, and the Moving Picture World will keep a watchful eye and encourage every honest effort of the members of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance.

* * *

Now a word of warning to those exchanges who have not affiliated: Lose no time in joining, if you want to remain in the business. We will publish lists of the Patents Company licensed exchanges and the Independent Alliance exchanges. No other exchange will be able to buy a foot of new film, and the exhibitor will know that he can expect nothing but the oldest kind of junk from any exchange which is not affiliated with either party.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Motiograph is a radical departure from all other forms of machine construction with which the writer is familiar. Its mechanism is simple, once it is understood, but it is essential that the operator understand it thoroughly, since the machine is very finely built and like other finely built mechanisms it needs intelligent care and attention. Some of the operations described, such as removing the main shaft, may never become necessary, but then again it might be one of the first things an operator would have to do, and unless he knew exactly how to go about it he might experience much trouble.

The iron pedestal on which the machine rests should be fastened very firmly to the floor, else it will rock when one is rewinding rapidly. To remove the main shaft, take off the gear cover and you will see a sort of gridiron, called the "bridge." Remove this, carefully replacing the screws in their holes so they will not get lost. Incidentally you will notice in the bridge two bronze boxings in which the shafts of the flywheel and automatic governor run. These boxings may be readily renewed by loosening the set screws which hold them, slipping them out and the new ones in. Having removed the bridge, slip off the large gear wheel on end of crank-shaft. Now look at crank-shaft hub on other side of the machine and half way down on either side see a small hole in the casting. Remove the crank and looking into the hole where its shank was you will see a pin extending through the shaft and projecting on either side. This pin engages in the slot in end of crank-shank and drives the machine. You must now set this pin exactly opposite the small holes in the hub and with a small punch carefully drive it out. It is not a taper pin, but perfectly straight and drives either way. When you get the pin placed just right have someone grasp the opposite end of the shaft and hold it in place. Insert the shank of the crank a quarter of an inch or so, so as to divide the shock of the blows between the shaft and the cast hub. Tap the punch sharply (but not too hard) with a light hammer. A sharp, light blow is the thing for such a job. The pin removed, you may pull the shaft out at the gear end. To replace, just reverse the process. You will have to reset the shutter, however, since removing the bridge throws it out. The automatic shutter governor may be removed by loosening the two bushings in which the ends of its shaft run and slipping them out. They are held in place by set screws. In replacing same set the inner bushing just so that the shutter is completely closed when the shaft is against the bushing. Tighten bushing in place and set the outer bushing in against the hub of the governor and withdraw just the barest trifle, barely enough so that there will be neither lost motion endwise or binding. The star and cam are inclosed in a cast metal casing which may be removed in its entirety as follows: Open the film-gate. Remove the front plate which holds the lens. Inside the machine, to the left as you look in, you will see a flat bar extending up and down, which connects the frame-up lever with the intermittent casing before mentioned and which we are to remove. In the side of this bar is a thumb screw which goes through the bar and bears on the casting to hold the bar over in place, since it, the bar, is only attached to the intermittent casing by slipping on a pin. Loosen this thumb screw and press the bar to the left to detach from the pin. You will see, also to the left, a round, upright rod terminating in a thumb screw on top of the machine. This rod passes through two split lugs on the intermittent casing, and it is by tightening or loosening the screws in these lugs that the frame-up lever is made to work easy or hard. Loosen these screws and by the thumb screw on top of machine remove the rod entirely, which will leave the intermittent casing loose and ready to pull out, except for its connection with the tumbling rod. This tumbling rod connection is a loose connection and the whole intermittent casing may now be pulled out by a little manipulating, first setting the slot in tumbling rod so that it points directly toward you. To replace, set slot in tumbling rod hub so that it points toward you and enter tumbling rod in its place. Now enter the fork in casing casting on the upright rod directly behind tumbling rod hub, swinging casing into place, replacing upright rod at left, attaching the frameup bar, not forgetting to tighten thumb screw and leaving all as it was when you began. To install a new star or cam remove intermittent casing as above directed. Next remove the guard plate on casing (catalogued as "Stripper Plate") by removing the three screws which hold it in place. Next loosen the set screw in hub of tumbling rod connection hub. Inside the tumbling rod connection hub you will see the end of the cam shaft, which is held by the set screw just named, and it may now be driven out by tapping with a soft steel, or brass punch, or a piece of hardwood. Don't use a hard steel punch under any conditions. Having removed the cam and shaft the star is released by removing the two screws in hub of sprocket wheel. Just loosen them and pull out the star. The bushings in which the star shaft runs are removed by loosening the set screws holding them which are directly above them on top of casing casting. To adjust the star and cam to eliminate lost motion loosen the set screw in top of casing directly above cam wheel. In front, by the side of the tumbling rod connection will be seen the flange of the bronze bushing with a hole in it and a set screw bearing on each of its beveled sides. Loosen the bottom screw and tighten the top one until lost motion is eliminated, but don't get it tight enough to bind. Tighten all set screws tight when through. There is no need to pay any attention to the alignment of shafts, since manipulating the set screws takes care of everything. One point should be looked carefully to, and that is in replacing the cam shaft (if you have had it out) to get the set screw hole directly over the hole in the shaft. This is important, since the shaft is slightly tapered and a part of the office of the set screw is to draw it home. To remove balance wheel, take off the bridge and remove the set screws in hub of wheel. I say "remove" them for the reason that they go deeply into the shaft. The flywheel may then be pulled off. The flywheel shaft and inner bushing may be removed as follows: Remove the film gate and under where its back edge was, directly in line, up and down, with the flywheel shaft will be seen a set screw. Remove this and the shaft and bushing can be pulled out, first, however, removing first gear wheel above shaft, back of where flywheel was. The operator taking charge of a motiograph for the first time should examine the machine very closely and be very certain he finds all the oil holes. As has been stated, the machine is very closely built and if you overlook bearings when oiling you are likely to hear from it before long in a way you won't like. The shutter of this machine is set the same as before described, except that the crease in the wide blade is used as line A, Fig. 30, and the second shutter is set central with the first, being sure that the machine does not move at all until the second blade has been tightened in place. I believe the foregoing takes care of all the difficulties the operator is likely to run up against with the motiograph. And now I think this is all I shall say concerning machine heads. It is a hard subject to handle, under the circumstances, at best.

Song slides should be thoroughly cleaned before they are used. The mark of a dirty finger is not at all decorative. The audience is not at all interested in the "whorls" of your fingers. In using a single lamp it is essential that you handle the carrier gently when taking out and putting in slides. Somehow a brick house don't look exactly natural dancing up and down, or at least I never thought it did. The least movement of the carrier is magnified many times on the curtain. The stereo picture should be brilliant and should be clear all over. Many operators persistently allow their stereo pictures to have yellow corners. With a very long focus lens, or one of too small diameter, this is not always to be avoided. But aside from these circumstances there is no excuse for such a condition. An excellent colored flood to be used with the stereo may be made as follows: Take an old reel and remove the hub. Next drill three small holes equidistant from each other around the circumference of the two reel sides, making the holes match so that the two sides may be bolted together. Next cover all the holes but one in one of the sides with colored gelatin paper. Lay the other side on and clamp the two together with small stove-bolts. Now affix the hub to one side and attach the whole to a suitable standard so that it will revolve freely before, and close to, the stereo projection lens. One hole must be left open so that when it is before the lens the picture can be projected through or white light may be thrown. Another wheel like the one just described may be added, thus giving a considerable range of colors. Every operator should provide himself with plenty of spot slides made from ordinary tin or stovepipe metal. The easiest way to cut them out is to cut the spot pattern from paper and paste it on the metal. You can then cut out the pattern with a file accurately. Glass slides are not good for spots, since remaining so long in the heat quickly breaks them.

(To be continued.)

Observations by Our Man About Town.

In denying the application of Jack Binns, of wireless fame, for an injunction against the Vitagraph Company, Justice Brady, of the New York Supreme Court, added weight to what experts in the moving picture business have been trying to hammer into the minds of others for several years that "the demand for films of pictures of current events abates very soon after the event." Now that an opinion from one of the highest courts in the Empire State has been secured sustaining the contention, it will probably not be so difficult hereafter to convince the many who have held otherwise that such is the case. The week before this judicial determination was reached I made an argument in the same direction in speaking of the attitude of some exhibitors against film exchanges whom they had unsuccessfully tried to persuade to their way of thinking as to the value of local views. I feel flattered that since that time many exhibitors have changed their opinion and admit they did not see the situation as it really existed, and now that a Supreme Court Justice has virtually endorsed the stand I took I feel confident that the demand for local views on the part of exhibitors will not again assume the proportions it recently acquired. The standard productions may lack a peculiar enterprise that attaches to topical subjects, but they wear the best. The latter subjects are bound to force themselves to the front at times, but only when they are of a character that interests the country as a whole. Great interest will be manifested by the people in pictures of the Hudson-Fulton celebration in New York, but there are hundreds of subjects on the shelves of the film exchanges that will outstrip these pictures in drawing power within six weeks after the celebration takes place. That is why exhibitors are frequently required to pay additional rental prices for special subjects. The money-getting life is so much shorter than that of the regular productions that both manufacturer and renter must get the money quick. This may be emphasized by the statement that when interest in a topical subject dies out the subject becomes as dead as canned salmon. Even more so, for a good chef can make the canned fish as palatable as that which finds itself transplanted from river to dining table. Not so with the topical moving picture subject. When it dies it dies for good.

* * *

Speaking of the life of moving picture subjects brings to the foreground the discussions that prevail as to the non-inflammable film the licensed manufacturers recently put on the market. This film is the object of some very severe criticism on the part of exhibitors and renters, but most complaints come from the latter. The exhibitors complain of the frequent parting of the films at the joints and consequent frequent interruptions of the shows. This complaint does not, however, carry with it the weight that attaches to those made by the renters, some of whom have practically demanded that the use of the non-inflammable article be abandoned and a return made to the old style of film. It is claimed that the non-inflammable dries up and becomes so brittle and subject to wear and tear that an exchange does not have an opportunity to get the leasing price out of it, not to speak of a profit. A renter was overheard expressing to a manufacturer a belief that the new film was designedly made to wear out quick. This appears to be too radical. A peculiar feature of the situation is that there appears to be no complaint against some subjects, although made from the same kind of film, and the complaints are much more numerous against some manufacturers than others. It is the opinion of many that the trouble does not lie so much in the film itself as in the handling of it, or rather the treatment of it in the picture-making plants. It is reported that the persistency of the complaints has led to an important conference of the manufacturers, all of whom contend that the fault does not lie with them, but must be due to some defect in manufacture before it reaches their hands. Whichever way the evil wind may be blowing, something must be done. Scores of exchanges complain that they cannot afford to have the life of films cut to an extent that the new film has dwindled. If films cannot pay for themselves and bring a fair margin of profit, exchanges will be obliged to close. This is logical. A builder who cannot sell or lease the structures he has put up must eventually go to the wall. OLIVER.

There is just one way for the exhibitor to buy film service, and that is to have an agreement that no film shall be more than a certain number of days old, counting from day of release. By referring to the columns of this paper the exhibitor can then at any time ascertain the exact date of release of any film and check up his service so as to get what he pays for.

Notes of the Trade.

A timely subject, in view of the tour of the country on which the President has started, is "Taft in Chicago and Taft at the Ball Game," by Essanay. Issued on September 20, it will no doubt be in demand by exhibitors all over the country.

* * *

The Great Northern Film Company announce a film of unusual interest, "How Dr. Nicola Procured the Chinese Cane." An absorbing story, skillfully handled, it should be a headliner in independent houses.

* * *

A film de luxe to be issued by the Vitagraph Company of America within a few weeks is a "visualization" of Tennyson's Launcelot and Elaine. The subject has been in hand all Summer and will take rank with the famous "Les Miserables" series, the third film of which will be released October 16, under the title of "Cosette." The fourth reel, "Marius," will be released early in November.

* * *

Harry A. Spoor, of the Essanay Company, of Chicago, whose arrival in London we noted some weeks ago, has now settled down comfortably and reports excellent business. He has taken offices at 5 New Compton street. The Essanay films are well received and Spoor is quickly jumping to popularity.

* * *

Will Barker, who left the Warwick Company with such dramatic suddenness a fortnight ago, has opened out for himself. His first film is devoted to the arrival of Dr. Cook from the North Pole. No sooner did the first cable come through from Cook than Barker galloped off to meet him and got a fine set of views.

* * *

S. R. Prott, who has been in London buying films for Spencer's big Australian concern, has left for home. His place is taken by Roland G. Fisher, who has just arrived from the Antipodes.

* * *

The United States Military Tournament, a special three-reel subject, has proved to be a money-maker to every exhibitor who secured it. Showing military camp life, soldiers in action, in wall-scaling feats, gun practice and daring feats of horsemanship, the film is one of peculiar interest to American audiences. It is the first film of its kind made with the full co-operation of the United States Army forces. State rights for this film have been disposed of to a number of exchanges. There are still good openings, and exhibitors or exchanges will get full particulars by addressing the Motion Picture Department, United States Military Tournament, Toledo, Ohio.

* * *

The Elco Amusement Company, located in Suite 612, Ashland block, Chicago, is offering a proposition to owners and managers of moving picture theaters and vaudeville theaters to operate their houses with the point in view of increasing the business of the theaters.

The proposition of the Elco Amusement Company is a percentage one, and they will agree to take their chances on getting a percentage on whatever the increase over the business of the house may be when they take hold of same.

Messrs. Elkins and Cohen, managers of the new company, have several novelties and ideas for increasing business in theaters, and as both are experienced, they will no doubt be able to carry out with success the plan they have in view. They are also booking vaudeville acts of the better class and have also a special department for furnishing singers, pianists, operators, drummers and other help necessary in vaudeville or moving picture theaters. Managers would do well to get in touch with this new firm. The results might be beneficial to both.

GEO. MELIES' SCENARIO CONTEST.

All the scenarios that have been submitted for the Geo. Melies prize contest are still in the hands of the judges. No less than 489 scenarios have been submitted. It is expected that the names of the prize winners will be announced before the end of this month.

PICTURE SHOWS PLEASE ALL CLASSES.

"The pictures we have seen at the shows have been educational in the better way. They are quick in effect, and as it were, teach while you wait. The eye is the quickest avenue of knowledge and probably the most effective in the permanence of impression. The eye of the child can learn first. These shows, at a low price, and short attention and time, teach the untutored of all ages something of truth, and are suggestive and refreshing to the lettered, as well as the unlettered."—From an editorial in the Memphis Sentinel.

National Independent Moving Picture Alliance

Important Meeting at Chicago, September 18-19, 1909.

There have for a long time been attempts in the Independent movement to accomplish a concentration of Independent forces and establish an organization of strength—a united body—to carry the Independent cause to decided success, but the Independents have always heretofore lacked one necessary element of success—unity of purpose.

Indications of unusual activity have been very marked of late that there was something doing in the way of organization. The formation of the United Film Mfg. Co. and the meeting in Chicago August 26 was the embryo of an organization that began to assume a distinct character. Film men from every part of the country met here and exchanged ideas to decide what steps should be taken. A committee of by-laws, with Wm. H. Swanson, Maurice Fleckles and Luke H. Mithen as officers, was appointed. An organization committee was also appointed, with J. W. Morgan, Joplin, Mo., chairman; H. Fischtenberg, of Dixie Film Co., New Orleans, vice-chairman; J. Schuchat, of U. S. Film, Chicago, secretary, and G. F. Kearney, of Wolverine Film Exchange; R. G. Bachman, of 20th Century Opt. Co., Chicago; H. D. Brackett, Detroit, Mich.; Manager Pacific Film Exchange, Seattle, Wash.; C J. Sherer, of Bijou Amusement Co., Kansas City, Mo.; H. McMahon, of Cincinnati Film Exchange, Cincinnati, and A. S. Davis, of Independent Film Exchange, Pittsburg, members.

The meeting resolved to call a general convention in Chicago, at the Sherman House, 10:30 A. M., September 11, and for the committee to have plans of the new organization mapped out to be presented for the approval of the convention.

Invitations were issued by the entertainment committee, composed of Wm. H. Swanson, J. W. Morgan and R. G. Bachman. There was an earnest hope among the men that started this movement that everybody should come and September 11, when the convention assembled, there was a representation that spoke strongly for the Independent cause. The meeting assembled in one of the luxurious reception halls of the new La Salle Hotel. The Sherman House closed that very day for reconstruction. Few were notified of this alteration and everybody went first to the Sherman House from where they had to be directed to the new place of the meeting. This and other things took considerable time and it was after 2 o'clock before Chairman Swanson announced that the meeting was opened. Chairman Swanson called the meeting to order and requested everybody present, as the first step on the programme, to register, which took place in the following order:

LIST OF DELEGATES.

Motion Picture Supply Co., Rochester, N. Y.; Savannah Film Co., Savannah, Ga., Arthur Lucas; Empire Film Co., New York, A. Kessel, Jr.; Electric Film Ex., New York, Jas. L. McIntire; International Film Co., Chas. W. Bauman; Wolwercine Film Ex., Detroit, Mich., Geo. F. Kearney; World Film Mfg. Co., Portland, Ore., S. Atkinson; Chicago Film Ex., Chicago, Max Lewis; Cincinnati Film, Cincinnati, O., McMahon & Jackson; Michigan Film and Supply Co., Detroit, Mich., Louis C. Wurzer, Wm. J. Klatt; Consoldated iAm. Co., Baltimore, Md., H. A. Fitzgerald; Eureka Film Ex., Akron, O., P. D. Stratton; Bijou Film, Kansas City, Mo., C. J. Scherer; Toledo Film Ex., Toledo, O., H. E. Smith; Oklahoma Film Ex., Okla. City, Okla., M. C. G. Fearis; Independent Film Ex., Pittsburg, A. S. Davis; Ind. West & Ex., Portland, Ore., L. Truscott; Eldred Film Service, Chicago, A. I. Eldred; Acme Film Ex., Pittsburg, Pa., W. N. Barlow, J. Frank Hatch; Central Film Supply, Saginaw, Mich., W. S. Smith; U. S. Film Ex., Chicago, J. M. Hayes, J. Schuchat; Wm. H. Swanson, St. Louis Film Co., Jos. W. Engel; Wm. H. Swanson & Co., Chicago, Wm. H. Swanson; Swanson's Omaha Film Co., W. H. Swanson; Sprocketless Proj. Camera, A. F. Hamacek; Billboard, Chicago, Waterson R. Rothacker; Nickelodeon, Chicago, A. P. Cock; Nickelodeon, Chicago, Paul H. Woodruff; Nickelodeon, Chicago, R. M. Mock; Camera, Non-Tuf., New York, A. Meredith Jones; Peerless Kinetograph, Oshkosh, Wis., Geo. A. Knaak; Billboard, Chicago, A. W. Jackson; Board of Examination, M. P. Operators, Chicago, Wm. H. Havill, Pres.; Moving Picture News, New York, Alfred H. Saunders; Moving Picture World, Chicago, G. P. von Harleman; Moving Picture World, Chicago, I. A. Marcus; Show World, Chicago, Warren A. Patrick; Show World, Chicago, Claude R. Erby; Phoenix Film, Chicago, N. W. Rubel; Columbia Cinematograph Co., Petersburg, Va., Dr. R. A. Gamble; Jones Patent Camera, New York; Great Northern Film Co., New York, Trigvald E. Oes; Motiograph Picture Mach., New York; U. S. Film Mfg. Co., Reley Germanatte; New York Motion Picture Co., New York, E. O. Bauman; Columbia Film Mfg. Co., New York, I. W. Ullman; American Photo Motograph Co., New York, A. T. Moore; International P. P. Co., Chicago, J. J. Murdock; Geo. E. Knaak Co. (cameras), Milwaukee, Wis., W. E. Jones; Harstn & Co., New York, L. Harstn; New England Film Ex., Boston, L. Harstn; Keystone Film Co., Scranton, Pa.; Granite Film Co., Burlington, Vt.; Dixie Film Co., New Orleans, La., H. Fischtenberg; American Film Ex., Pittsburg, James L. Reilly; Southern Film Ex., Cincinnati, O., James L. Reilly; Laemmle Film Service, Chicago, M. Fleckles; Imp. Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, M. Fleckles; Golden Gate Film Ex., San Francisco, L. Lesser; Wagner Film Co., St. Louis, Mo., I. Wagner; J. W. Morgan, Joplin, Mo., J. W. Morgan; Anti-Trust Film Co., Chicago, C. R. Plough; Eugene Cline Co., Chicago, Eugene Cline; Luke H. Mitken, Chicago; Texas Film Ex., Dallas, Tex., E. W. Peters; Superior Film Ex., Toledo, O., Less; Unique Film Co., Chicago, Clinton; Film Import and Trading Co., C. M. Freeman; Lumiere, New York, Brulatour; 20th Cent. Opt., Chicago, R. G. Bachmann; 20th Cent. Opt., Kansas City, R. G. Bachmann; Western Film Mfg. Co., Baker; Indianapolis Cal. Light Co., W. M. Swain.

Several persons arrived during the course of the meeting and completed the list with a total number of 70 members present. The registration showed at the opening of the meeting a representation of 39 film exchanges, 10 manufacturers and importers, 5 camera and projecting machine manufacturers and 10 representatives of press and other interests. Seated at the table with the chairman was Maurice Fleckles, A. T. Moore, G. Schuchat, J. W. Morgan and Luke H. Mithen.

The chairman introduced Mr. J. J. Murdock, of the International P. P. Co., to the meeting with a few remarks as to the important part Mr. Murdock had taken in the Independent movement. The chairman also introduced Mr. Wm. H. Havill, president of the Board of Exam. Mov. Pic. Operators in Chicago. Mr. Havill made a brief address in regard to the purpose and work of the examining board and the value of efficient operators. Mr. Alfred Harstn was appointed sergeant-at-arms.

The chairman read the following, which had been drafted by the organization committee as the platform of the association:

Purpose of the Organization.

Section 1. The name of this Association shall be

National Independent Moving Picture Alliance.

Section 2. This Association is organized for the purpose of promoting and safeguarding the interests of the film manufacturers and film renters of the United States, of their customers, the exhibitors and that portion of the public who patronize the moving picture shows;

Of creating and fostering good-fellowship and friendly feeling among those engaged in the business and to acquaint each other with the advancement and progress made in the business so that all may work harmoniously in making the business a great educational and moral force;

Of improving the moral and artistic character as well as the photographic and pictorial quality of the films and other devices used for the renting business by offering approval and reward by notice and publication to its members and exhibitors at large through its proper officers;

By exerting its influence in preventing, in all lawful ways, the passage of oppressive local ordinances and State legislation and of furnishing funds by which to test the legality of such ordinances and State legislation as well as claims of others it may deem illegal;

Of checking and correcting those evils which at present threaten the stability and permanency of the business such as misrepresentations, copyrights, duplicating and renting obsolete and worn-out film, sub-renting by circumvention and fraud, and correcting such other evils and impositions as may appear from time to time and become public;

Of preventing the production, sale and renting of suggestive, obscene, immoral or highly sensational films so that all films exhibited shall be such as give improved character and dignity to the business and remove all the cause for harsh criticism which it has had in the public press;

Of giving legal protection to members in cases where their property may be in jeopardy or unjustly and illegally confiscated or retained or enjoined or in such other cases as may affect the interest of the trade as a whole;

Of using its influence to compel film manufacturers by reward and merit and by inducement to heighten the moral and artistic character as well as the photographic and pictorial qualities of their film used for renting business;

Of preventing the use by any film renting concern of any name similar to or liable to be mistaken for the name of any member of the Association irrespective of where they may be located, and in case of such conflicting names already existing, to endeavor to adjust the matter that only one concern will make use of and do business under any stated name.

Of preventing any manufacturer, film exchange or other person from advertising or holding out to the public that inferior film manufactured and put upon the market is duplicated or copied or renovated old film in order to heighten his own production, as such statements scandalize and discredit the legitimate film renting business;

Of preventing the duplication of film and of recognizing the right of the original manufacturer both foreign and American to have the benefit of his production;

Of promoting the use by exhibitors of such means and appliances as will furnish ample protection to their film as well as adequate protection to their audience against fire;

Of acquiring and distributing among members information as to any disreputable conduct on the part of schemers or impostors who may impose upon film exchanges or manufacturers and furnish such information as to the credit and reliability of their customers and as to the manner in which they use and treat rented film;

And of using all legitimate means to further the interests of the manufacturers of film and exchanges or renting concerns and the manufacture of such sundries and accessories as are incident to the business, and to further the interest of all members of this Association and improve general trade conditions.

The chairman then addressed the meeting with a desire that everybody lay aside personal feeling and work in harmony to make a stride this time that would bring success to the Independent movement; keeping before the eye the mistakes of the old association and trying to solve the problem now before them. The speaker expressed his desire to hear from everybody. With so many present certainly some good ideas would develop that should be to the benefit for us all.

The chairman then read a letter from the Moving Picture World which expressed the editor's regret not being able to attend but wishing the meeting all success and hoping the Independents this time would come together and accomplish something of benefit for themselves and the moving picture business.

The chairman then suggested dissolution of the old Independent Film Renters' Protective Association and establishing a new organization with the name of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance. Motion was carried. Next move was to elect Wm. H. Swanson as temporary chairman, Luke H. Mithen as temporary secretary and Maurice Fleckles as temporary treasurer.

A resolution was offered for an initiation fee of $100 and a fee of $25 quarterly. The chairman was requested by several to explain the reason and the purpose of these fees. The chairman referred to Mr. J. W. Morgan, president of the organization committee. Mr. Morgan emphasized the necessity of an operation fund if the Alliance desired to be able to carry out its plans and be able to make a strong organization of the Independent movement. The money would be used for the benefit and protection of them all.

The chairman requested the delegates to sign now because the fee might be raised in 30 days, and almost everybody signed.

The chairman introduced Mr. Herbert B. Boroughs, representing Stockwelth & Shippley, to the meeting and Mr. Boroughs presented for the assembly an insurance proposition for 5 cent theaters of the same character as issued by the Patents Co. and by the same insurance company. Mr. Boroughs offered the Alliance a commission of 5 per cent. on theaters turned in to the company without the restriction to number as with the Patents Co. The meeting did not take immediate action on this proposition.

The secretary read for the meeting the by-laws of the Alliance, which were voted upon by sections and all but a few adopted. Motion was made by Mr. C. G. Fearis to elect secretary by popular vote and under no salary. Motion was carried.

Motion that the officers of the Alliance be president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary and one extra member for an executive committee, making an executive board of five. Motion carried.

The chairman called for the report of the organization committee, and their first recommendation was a suggestion to divide the United States in districts, owing to the fact that each locality has different conditions to contend with. Each district would establish a local organization and appoint a delegate to confer with the executive committee in matters taken up by local meetings and to act as an advisory board to aid the executive committee in making rules that would not conflict with conditions in different parts of the country where conditions were different.

Amendment moved by Max Lewis there be a committee of three appointed to lay out the sub-divisions of the United States as well as the limitations of the districts. Motion was carried and a committee appointed: A. Kessel, L. Truscott, E. W. Peters, J. A. Reiley and J. W. Morgan.

Committee reported five divisions to be known as local or sub-organizations, and they to make such rules and regulations as will conform with the by-laws of the Alliance.

Resolution offered to engage demonstrators to demonstrate Independent pictures produced by American and importing companies for the purpose of enlarging the demand and familiarizing the trade. The chairman suggested employing demonstrators like the International P. & P. Co. and that the Alliance stand the expense. It was absolutely necessary to convince the trade that the Independent films were just as good if not better than those of the licensed manufacturers. The menace of the Independent movement had been the wild cat exchange, the junk shop that didn't have a new reel in the house, and that had disgusted the exhibitor so that it was now almost impossible to convince him that all Independent film was not alike. The cost of the demonstrator would not exceed $75 per week and transportation of machine or renting of exhibition place would not be necessary. There were always some Independent exhibitor willing to accommodate the demonstrator with his theater. Directing and supervising demonstrators and matters pertaining to this department should be left in hands of a publicity committee.

Mr. Ingvald C. Oes, of the Great Northern Film Company, offered to furnish reels for demonstrating purposes, so did all the other manufacturers including Mr. Murdock. The motion was carried and it was also decided to demonstrate Independent machines.

Next resolution suggested to the executive committee that they procure and employ proper persons for a publicity department in conjunction with the Alliance. I. W. Ullman suggested the appointment of a committee to map out the question. I. W. Ullman, J. J. Murdock and Dr. R. A. Gamble were appointed.

Resolution that the initiation fee for charter members of the Alliance be $100. Assessment to be $25 quarterly. Motion carried, also motion adopted that after November 1, 1909, initiation fee be $250. In this way, the chairman declared, people would get busy and join the Alliance as early as possible. Motion adopted that secretary send out notices to all not now members of the Alliance.

Suggestion of resolution of an assessment of weekly payment plan on each customer in order to create a reserve fund. Motion adopted of a resolution calling for a tribute of 25 cents per customer per week, to be paid by each exchange. Also an assessment on manufacturers of machines not less than $2.50 per machine, and assessment of film manufacturers, both local and foreign, as a tax for the maintenance of this Alliance.

Motion made that manufacturers pay $2 per reel and importer $1. This motion created lots of controversy among the manufacturers. The chairman requested the manufacturers and importers to consult the question together and make the executive committee a proposition. The motion was carried over.

Mr. Brulatour, of Lumiere Company, offered the Alliance the benefit of the Lumiere patents that were still in effect in this country and which antedated those of the M. P. P. Co., if the Alliance would fight all suits that might be brought against them.

The chairman read two letters from T. H. Blair offering several of his patents, including non-infringing camera and projecting machines.

Resolution that members of the Alliance shall only purchase films of such manufacturers and importers that are approved by the executive committee. Motion was carried.

Motion made that manufacturers could not enter the rental business under the same name and vice versa. Motion carried.

Motion made suggesting a purchasing department for commodities as carbons, tickets, condensers, etc. Buying in quantities of the manufacturers the Alliance would be in a position to secure its members an exceptional price, the benefit to be given to the members. Motion carried.

Resolution that a credit and information department be established. Motion carried.

The organization committee recommended a resolution that it be the purpose of this Alliance to work out a plan for the improvement of the conditions of the exhibitor and publish same. Committee of three appointed to take up matter of what to embody in the platform to take care of the exhibitor.

Motion made that every branch office should pay as individual exchanges. Mr. Fleckles suggested that main office pay full and branch office less, or, for instance, half.

Chairman suggested that if a man starts a film exchange where competition existed he ought to pay full, but where little or no competition only quarterly assessment. The question caused considerable excitement. Members that had no branch offices seemed very much in favor of making the man with many pay all that was coming to him. Also discussed the question if the man with the many branches was entitled to a corresponding number of votes. It was finally decided that only one initiation fee shall be paid for film exchanges running several branches under the same name, but each branch pays quarterly assessments. The film exchange is only entitled to one vote. If a film exchange is running several branches under different names, it will have to pay the initiation fee for all, and, of course, quarterly assessments, but is entitled to one vote for each branch. A manufacturer that rents films has to pay for the manufacturing part and the renting part of the business.

Decision was made that manufacturers and importers would give the Alliance a special price for quantity, below quotation to outsiders in less quantity. The final figures to be taken up later between the executive committee and the manufacturers.

The meeting was continued Sunday and opened at 1:30 P. M.

Report of committee of publicity was adopted. Report was given by Mr. Morgan on the committee of sub-division and adopted.

A committee of Morgan, Clinton, Freeman, Max Lewis and E. Wurger was appointed to take up the motion of a reel tax.

Committee reported and decided to leave question open and be taken up in detail later with executive committee and manufacturers.

Motion was made by J. J. Murdock to appoint a committee of three to find out what protection could be given exhibitors on law suits. Murdock, Peters and Wagner were appointed.

Motion made that committee of two be appointed to confer with the different sets of censor boards, with a view of eliminnating separate sets of censorship. Carried.

Discussion on how misrepresentation and fraud should be eliminated in film exchanges. Motion by Murdock to be left with the executive committee. Carried.

Motion by Mr. Murdock that the Alliance shall not be responsible for expense contracted by officers or members of the organization exceeding the amount in the treasury until the organization is properly incorporated. Motion was carried.

Motion made by Clinton that members must pay initiation fee in full or make other satisfactory arrangement, sanctioned by this body, before being entitled to vote. Motion was carried.

A roll call was made and parties not paid in full were requested to meet the requirements of the by-laws and settle before the election of officers. After everybody had paid up the chairman proceeded to the election and appointed Reilley, Bachman, Clinton, Rubel and Fichtenberg as tellers.

Forty votes were represented in the ballot. J. J. Murdock was unanimously elected president; J. W. Morgan, vice-president; A. Kessel, Jr., treasurer; Wm. H. Swanson, secretary, and Ingvald C. Oes filling out the executive committee of five, the officers being created by by-laws as members of the executive board. The chairman then, with a few complimentary words, turned the chair over to Mr. Murdock who, with a few words, thanked the meeting for the responsible position which had been entrusted upon him, expressed his sincere desire and hope of co-operation of all and everybody in this movement and new body they had now organized. As individuals we are weak, but as a united body strong; that strength lay in unity and harmony. Let us work together, let no personal feelings and any friction hamper our progress. The meeting continued until 7:30, when an enjoyable banquet was held in the grill room.

Wm. H. Swanson presided at the table and many toasts were made for the success of the new organization. It was decided that the next convention will be held in Cincinnati some time next May.

WEEKLY COMMENTS ON THE SHOWS.

By Our Own Critic.

Washington Heights is a section of New York City which exhibits a steady coming on tendency. By "coming on," I mean that residentially Washington Heights bids fair to be a nice place to live in. In the first place, the Heights are spacious, with lovely surroundings, and, from the building point of view, are capable of great development. At this moment large blocks of handsome apartments are in course of construction, and before many months have passed the district round about 181st street will be covered with fine residences. It is a favorite district of my own on the ground stated, and it was inevitable that sooner or later I should make my way to the local moving picture house, "The Audubon," which is situated conveniently to the Subway and Washington Bridge.

So the other night behold me an interested member of the Audubon audience. I liked the Audubon audience. It was a crowded audience, mainly consisting of young people of the better class, with a fair sprinkling of oldsters. The theater is extremely well kept, the attendants are courteous and good mannered, and the esteemed proprietor himself looks after things from the pay box end of matters. The entrance is neat and well kept, the posters and announcements are in good taste, and altogether the visitor to this theater must be impressed by an evident desire on the part of the manager to minister to his comfort and his pleasure.

The Audubon operator shows an extremely good picture, a bright, evenly illuminated one, without pauses or breaks. The pianoforte music is tasteful and well rendered, and the young lady who sang to the song slides on the fertile theme of "You Got Me Going, Kid," delighted her audience and me.

And the Audubon audience is a very applausive and a very appreciative one. I have never heard heartier applause in a moving picture theater than I heard at the Audubon. We had the Selig "Royal Outcast," the Edison "Fly Papers," the Vitagraph "Artist's Revenge," "The Adventures of Mr. Levinski and His Fire Insurance Policy," all of which constituted a bright, lively and exhilarating programme which everybody seemed to enjoy. Indeed, we were just one great family party from the Heights, assembled for an hour's innocent mirth and recreation.

And that was what particularly pleased me about the Audubon, namely, its pleasant, homelike touch. I should think that the theater must be locally very popular, and it deserves to be, for it is so well managed, so tastefully administered, that it merits the support of all good wishers of the moving picture. I would like to cite the Audubon as an instance of a well-managed moving picture house, and I think the proprietor is deserving of every encouragement in his efforts to popularize the moving picture amongst the better class residents of New York City. I wish him every success.

Among the Chicago Theatres.

Wednesday evening, September 8, I made a little round of some of the downtown Madison street houses. The Boston, 116 Madison, was first visited. This house is beautifully decorated inside, but I feel obliged to criticise the floor and chair-backs, which were, aside from the ordinary day's litter, decidedly dirty. The lineoleum, in particular, needed an introduction to soap and water. The interior of the house is tastefully finished in delicate colors, with two large panel paintings on either side. The writer saw no ushers, the crowd, at the time at least, being left to find seats for themselves. One feature was most excellent, and that was the ample room between rows of seats. The illustrated song was beautifully rendered by a young lady, and the slides were clean and well handled. The pictures, however, were put on very poorly. During the entire run of fifty minutes there was scarcely a time when the picture did not show a shadow at top, bottom or sides. During the intermission an electric piano made plenty of noise. It would seem that this feature might well be dispensed with. The pictures were well received, the Pathe colored subject, "Little Soldier." being especially appreciated, but one of the reels was in pretty bad condition. The house is well patronized and the writer would like to suggest, in the most friendly feeling, that the faults (for faults they are) he has pointed out be eliminated —as they easily can be.

My next call was at the Alcazar, just a few doors away. This house is plainly but tastefully decorated in light buff and is clean, except that the linoleum floor covering could be somewhat improved by water, soap and elbow grease. One feature of this house is unique: fully half (the rear end) of the room is so light that one can readily read ordinary newspaper print, yet the picture is not at all affected and stands out clear and brilliant. Uniformed ushers show one to his or her seat, and the house bears evidence of being well managed. A splendid pipe organ gave forth charming music as the pictures were run. It was exceptionally well played and added real pleasure to the excellent bill. The projection light was clear, white and brilliant and at no time was there a shadow on the curtain—indisputable evidence of a competent, careful operator. The illustrated song slides were clean and well handled. Mr. A. H. Talbot, the manager, assured me that since cutting out the vaudeville from his programme there has been no falling off of receipts. The "coon" song (illustrated) rendered was not nearly so pleasing as the ballad heard in the Boston. As a rule the writer believes a ballad is more pleasing to an audience than the average modern creation miscalled "coon song." More often than not the latter is poorly rendered and has but indifferent slide illustrations. A ballad, on the other hand, is always beautiful and as a rule is at least fairly well rendered.

Crossing Madison street, I entered the Pastime Theater, a charming little house managed by Mr. Edmund Barrett. The interior decorations of this house are unique and pleasing, though it impressed the writer as just a trifle gloomy through lack of sufficient illumination during intermission. The writer is of the opinion that Mr. Barrett could further improve on his house by adding more light and that it could be done without destroying the present very pleasing general effect. One oddity of this theater is that it has two three-foot aisles. Between the aisles are five chairs, with three more on either side. This is exceedingly convenient for the audience, but cuts out one row of chairs the full length of the house. Mr. Barrett has an exceptionally fine pianist who entertains the audience during intermission with well rendered selections. And right here let me say that at no one of these three houses did the pianist apparently pay the slightest attention to the action in the film. In one house she played a religious selection while an S. & A. rip-roaring farce was being enacted, and (this is fact) in another picture, while the father and son were parting in tears she set forth the strains of "Don't Take Me Home." Such work is bad—very bad. In my judgment, managers who do not make their pianist follow the film closely with their music commit a very serious error—assuming that they wish to product the best possible result as a whole. The song slides were clean and well handled here, but the announcement slides were decorated with some prominent finger marks which added nothing to their beauty. The light on the pictures was good, though Mr. Barrett informed me they were having considerable trouble with their current. Mr. Barrett also reported that there was absolutely no difference in receipts since the time some weeks since when he cut vaudeville from his bill.

Taunton, Mass.—The Taunton Theater opened on Labor Day, under the management of John H. McCarron, formerly with B. F. Keith. The theater is owned by Gordon Bros. and presents pictures and vaudeville.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

After eight months of purposeless wandering in the wilderness, the children of Israel seem to be making a determined attempt to reach the promised land—no, I mean that the Independents are getting together for purposes of mutual help and support. It is about time. Last January an Independent association of some kind was formed, but it never got beyond the paper stage. Then so recently as last June Chicago gave birth to another association which has also passed into the limbo of things attempted and never done. So, as I have just said, it was time that something really was done. The outcome of a very determined effort is that there has been formed an Alliance about which the Moving Picture World has something to say in the present number.

* * *

I have been in direct communication with several personal friends of good judgment and common sense who were present at the meeting and they assured me that considerable fervor characterized the proceedings and that the Alliance means business. The fact that such people as Laemmle, Lumiere, the Great Northern and other reputable firms are prominently supporting the Alliance is certainly an element of strength. The men at the head of affairs have been judiciously chosen and the fact that Murdock is the president, brings that gentleman into a position of prominence in the moving picture game, where he should find an opportunity of making good the character that was recently assigned to him by one of his admirers of being the Napoleon of the moving picture field. Napoleon, however, came to a premature end at St. Helena. The poor man died early, a fate which I hope Mr. Murdock may be spared.

* * *

The new Alliance starts out well, but it is already handicapped by the patronage of some people whose assistance, especially with the pen, is not likely to be of very great use to it. The wolf in sheep's clothing abounds, and he was present at the Chicago meeting. His proper name is Judas. The Independent movement has many friends on paper, whose friendliness, however, extends no deeper than their self interest. In other words they are only friends when they make something out of the Independents and batten and fatten on the fears of those whom it is their business to frighten by parading the bogey of the "trust."

* * *

The common sense of the position is that there is room for a large and remunerative Independent or uncombined section of the moving picture business. If anybody will turn to the pages of this paper for January last, they will see that the Motion Picture Patents Company never started out to create a monopoly. Moreover the policy that was outlined last December has been adhered to very closely. Any newspaper person who writes to the contrary is guilty of deliberate falsehood, and attempts to trade upon the needless fears of ignorant people. Ignorance has been a strong factor in the situation during the last eight months and the agitation of interested people who were present at Chicago (whose sole stock in trade is agitation) has created many bogeys for the purpose of frightening the Independents.

* * *

To my mind the best friends the new Alliance can have are those connected with this paper, who will frankly and candidly keep them wise to their exact position in the game. This paper has never hesitated to tell them that they were weak by reason of their disunion, that their only hope of continuing in business was by a combination upon broad common sense lines, and that they must purge themselves of many malpractices associated with the Independent name which is doing great harm to the business. It is regrettable that film duping, sub-renting and the wholesale marketing of junk has been associated with the Independent name these last eight months. It is regrettable also that certain prominent men in the Independent field have failed in their public and private engagements. There are many other things which can be regretted, but now it is to be hoped that all this sort of thing belongs to the past and that the new Alliance will make good the promises of its birth.

* * *

The net of membership seems widely cast and apparently the qualifications for admission to the Alliance are not very stringent. Of course in a new thing of this nature it is difficult to draw hard and fast lines. But frankly there are many associated with the new association whose support is hardly calculated to advantage any society. Time, however, will work wonders in this respect. By and by a business man may be proud to call himself a film renter, exhibitor or manufacturer. But at present, however, there is not much room for pride. He has to take things as he finds them in this industry, and though things are better to-day than they were twelve months ago, they are still susceptible of great improvement in many respects. No doubt the Alliance will ably second the effort of the Patents Company to exclude the undesirable, the dishonest, the trickster and the impostor from the ranks of the film world.

* * *

There is no reason why the Alliance should not supplement the work of the Patents Company at all points of the game. A battle of quality is in progress amongst the associated manufacturers. Will the Alliance manufacturers do the same? If they will, the public and the business will be the gainers. Then the Patents Company make their exchanges prompt in the performance of their obligations. Will the Alliance do the same? Then the Patents Company put their feet down on sub-renting, duping and the like. Will the Alliance do the same? There are already many points of resemblance between the two bodies. The Alliance exchanges are going to pay a per capita subscription of 25 cents on each of their customers into the funds of the Alliance. Of course they will use this money for the benefit of the business as a whole.

* * *

If the Alliance is administered along these lines it has all the elements of success. Much curiosity, of course, will be felt as to what the Independent manufacturers will do and how they will do it. If they go about their business in a rational way at this stage of the game, I hazard a guess that they won't be interfered with by the Patents Company. What everybody who has the best interests of the moving picture at heart wants to see just now is a healthy, well conducted, cleanly administered branch of trade, out of which everybody working in it, manufacturers, renters, exhibitors, can make money. There seems to be no reason why both Association and Independent could not work in harmony to that end.

* * *

I hope nobody will wilfully misconstrue these criticisms of the new Alliance which, if it is to advantage the business as a whole, I should like to see succeed. But I would warn the committee, I would warn the members, I would warn all those who were present at the Chicago meetings and banquet not to listen to the pleadings, the urgings, the utterances of the professional agitator. The man who simply lives by agitation and vituperation who has no knowledge of the business, either technical, commercial or scientific and who all through the piece has rested his sole claim to public notice and support on the fact that he has intruded where he is not wanted and agitated without reference to such abstract questions as truth, honor, justice or expedience. So, gentlemen of the Alliance, I bid you to beware of the traitor who is already in your midst! And now, good luck to you!

CHICAGO NOTES.

By F. H. Richardson.

The vaudeville actors in Chicago moving picture shows called a strike last week for an increase of pay.

* * *

Manager Hardin, of the Edison Chicago office, is back at his desk after his vacation looking fully equal to another year's grind.

* * *

Metropolitan audiences are a queer proposition. Seldom or never do they applaud a picture unless it be very strongly patriotic. They may laugh heartily, but it never seems to occur to them to applaud a picture as such.

* * *

The new twenty-story, palatial La Salle Hotel is open. It is said all visiting moving picture men will stop there. They can secure a roost on a pole on the roof at $5.00 per night.

* * *

"Man About Town" says that "every phase of the moving picture business has been tried." In the main, I thoroughly agree with his remarks concerning the "black tent art." Still he is not altogether correct. There is one phase of the black tent business which has, I believe, never been rightly tried out, and I believe it offers very decided inducements for making really good money the year round. So strongly am I convinced of this that I am seriously debating the matter of putting in some money myself, interesting additional capital and again taking to the road next Spring. It will cost fully $5,000 to fit out the show I have in mind, and the show will last two and one-half hours, at 25 and 50 cents admission. The original cost may be as high as $7,000. I have not got it all figured out yet. It will be all moving pictures and illustrated songs.

Comments on the Week's Films.

THE FATAL LOVE (Urban-Eclipse).

The story of this picture is one of the most original and dramatic that we have seen in connection with the moving picture. It is a common occurrence in the sunny lands of Italy, France and Spain for a musical performer to acquire such command over his instrument that foolish and emotional women fling themselves at his feet. In this connection we remember the case of the Princess De Chimay, an American girl, by the way, who sacrificed title, husband, child and position in the world for the love of a Hungarian guitar player. This story reminded us of the instance in real life which we are quoting. A handsome society woman falls in love with a musician, and the latter deserts his wife and child for his admirer, who, however, soon tires of him and sends him adrift. Fortunately his wife is of a forgiving nature, and happiness is restored, for a time at least. His son, it appears, is also a musician and the woman falls in love with him. The boy takes the woman home, and then it is discovered that she is none other than the woman who misled his father. Of course, there is nothing for the unfortunate creature to do but to commit suicide. This story is extremely well acted and it riveted the attention of the audience as it was being shown. We heard comments on the skill of the actors in the piece. Photographically it is up to the very high standard which the Eclipse people have set themselves, and, altogether, "The Fatal Love" is a conspicuous success.

THE PRETTY GIRL OF NICE (Pathe).

The coloring of this picture is in the usual Pathe style and the result is that there is a succession of quite natural looking pictures of French scenery against which a dramatic story of cross purposes in love is told. A young fellow forsakes a poor Nice beauty for riches. The female victim of the ill-starred union gives way to an illicit amour in which she is discovered by her husband. The country girl, never having quite given up hope of recovering her former sweetheart, warns the guilty couple of their probable fate, and when the deceived husband appears the gallant Lothario is found by the girl's side. And so the situation is saved. But the deceived husband is wise to the true position of affairs and so, casting off his wife, he reverts to the arms of the pretty girl of Nice, a re-arrangement of matters which rounds up the story and apparently deals out justice, although it is scarcely good morality. This story in the simplicity of its treatment resembles one already noticed ("The Fatal Love"). It is so clearly and plainly told that the illusion of reality is conveyed to the audience. We may instance the wedding procession as a beautiful part of this film, which has the highest artistic qualities throughout.

THE CITY OF NAPLES (Pathe).

"See Naples and die!" is the common observation often quoted by travelers or would-be travelers to Sunny Italy. The beauty and picturesqueness of this city are accompanied by many features of a less attractive character, and some of them are shown in this film, which illustrates the local industries such as shoe mending, chair mending, basket weaving and twine making. It winds up with the horrors and humor of a macaroni feast. The Neapolitans, if picturesque and industrious, are dirty. In one part of the picture a girl is seen searching for parasites in the hair of a small child. If we remember aright, Charles Dickens, in his "Pictures from Italy," describes this characteristic of female Italians. To non-Latins this is a very disgusting thing to look upon. The Pathe picture will no doubt be appreciated by many Italians in this country. To the ordinary Anglo-Saxon it is interesting by virtue of its picturesqueness, but in other respects, such as the one we have noticed, it is rather repellent

A CASE OF TOMATOES (Essanay).

This is a slight and improbable story, which serves, however, as a vehicle for rough humor and provokes an audience to hearty laughter. A case of tomatoes is dropped from a wagon and two small boys seize possession of the fruit and start to amuse themselves by pelting all sorts of people—tennis players, art connoisseurs, policemen and others are hit by these disagreeable missiles, and much of the fun in the picture consists in watching the facial contortions of those who have been hit. Finally, of course, the small boys pelt policemen, who are thereupon instrumental in arresting them. By way of punishment the faces of the culprits are smeared with tomatoes, after which, no doubt, the boys promise to be good. As we have said, this is a very slight story; in fact, there is no story at all. It is merely a series of funny incidents strung together. The photography of it is quite clever, for about the movements of the tomatoed victims there is a spontaneity which would lead one to suppose that the film was actually exposed at the instant when the faces of the victims were hit. "A Case of Tomatoes" serves to divert moving picture audiences, a line of work in which the Essanay Company are making many successes.

AN ALPINE ECHO (Vitagraph).

This is a picture story which lingers in the memory and which anyone would enjoy seeing over and over again. It is unfortunate that the system of daily change prevents so many people from seeing a notable film that may be highly spoken of by their friends, and such was the case with "An Alpine Echo." It is obvious that a master mind directed this production and that he appreciated the beauty and simplicity of the story and saw and grasped its possibilities. A producer will sometimes mutilate a good story, or more often fail to bring out all there is in it, through incapacity, undue haste or lack of facilities. For some reason the Vitagraph Company have failed to score as they might have in "The Little Father," a film of more recent release. But when so perfect a film as "An Alpine Echo" emanates from any studio as an ordinary release, without any special announcement from the makers, we gather that the work therein is only of their regular standard. And if that standard is high, it is only reasonable to expect to see it maintained throughout. Compared with some other Vitagraph releases, "An Alpine Echo" could have been announced as an "art film." It is distinctly a studio production, and, as such, the scenes presented many difficulties which would have made the film ridiculous if not skillfully handled. Indeed, great credit is due to everyone concerned in the production, which is one of the most convincing, best staged and best acted picture dramas of this epoch of progress in film making. Well done in this case means that it seemed to be most natural and real. As the highest mission of art is to conceal that it is art, the producer of this picture scored in that the details of the staging and the work of the actor are subservient to the pleasure derived in following the story. Exhibitors will do well to include this film in their programmes.

"The Broken Locket" is a Biograph picture that redeems their high standing in the producing field after the slip made in "The Children's Friend. This latter, while a good story and a novel idea, was so far below its predecessors in point of execution that we charitably suppose it was an old production taken from their shelves to complete a reel. But in "The Broken Locket" we are introduced to the finesse of acting and staging which within the year has created a world-wide demand for Biograph subjects. The sad story of a young man's downfall through yielding to temptation, the consequent blighting of the life of a trusting sweetheart, the repentance that came too late, are all presented in a manner so convincing that as a moral lesson "The Broken Locket" ranks with any of the sermons in pictures ever issued by this company, which is the highest praise that can be given. Photographic excellence also prevails throughout.

"Little Sister."—When the Edison studio sent out "Ethel's Luncheon," a delicious bit of comedy written especially for motion picture production by Carolyn Wells, it was remarked in this department that a new mark in comedy had been set. Perhaps it would be extravagant to say that "Little Sister," written by Edward W. Townsend, the famous author of "Chimmie Fadden," makes another record in the silent drama. It is scarcely a drama that Mr. Townsend has prepared. It is a transcript of real life in the great East Side of New York, the crowded tenement district, where thousands are yearly suffocated, mentally, morally and physically. The story is one of those little tales drawn from real life which grip the heart and bring the tears regardless of one's inclination or disposition. Dick, owing solely to his unfortunate environment, is gradually going from bad to worse, with the prison doors yawning to receive him, but "Little Sister" follows him like a guardian angel and is instrumental in saving him from the consequences of a burglary. Mr. St. Clair is so strongly impressed with her pleadings that he gives them both a start, far removed from former temptations.

The story is not great, unless one may accord it that distinction because of its simplicity, but one feels that it is a real story, something that has actually occurred. The various scenes, depicting the discomfort, or misery, inseparable from tenement house life in that congested district, will, or should exert a powerful influence upon those outside of New York who know nothing about such uncomfortable and dangerous environment. This picture should emphasize the benefits of living far removed from the demoralizing influence of such a mixture of race, blood and low ideals of life, or none at all. In this direction, at least, if in no other, it should exert a strongly educative influence. Technically the film is good, the various views in the East Side being so real as to appear even more than pictures. The Edison Company is to be congratulated upon producing such an excellent film. It should encourage a greater output of pictures of similar excellent quality.

"Making Honey."—An industrial picture from the Edison studio which starts well and is interesting as far as it goes, but stops too soon. To watch experts handle bees is interesting. Perhaps one might say it is a bit thrilling, when the usual experience of such an operation is considered. But there is a good deal more that could be added that would increase the interest and the educational value of the film. Why not improve this by adding to it reproductions of the methods of extracting, storing and handling honey, showing how it is sold, telling the whole story of the production and distribution of honey. It is not a great industry, yet it increases in importance each year, and if the making of maple sugar is worth a whole reel, or nearly a whole reel, honey is worth as much film space as maple sugar. The suggested additions, made perhaps in the Root apiary, in Ohio, would greatly improve this interesting picture.

"An Amateur William Tell."—A comedy from the Edison works which develops an amusing travesty upon the old story of William Tell. The fun in this particular picture lies in the boyish pranks, rather than in any dramatic features. To see a boy at his sport is always amusing. It brings back more or less vividly the pranks of one's own boyhood days, and to that extent contributes to the amusement of those who see. A small boy running wild with a bow and arrow emulating, or copying, William Tell is a reservoir of potential fun well worth investigating. Technically the film is good, the photography being clear and the tonal values of the picture good.

"Hiram's Bride."—A melodrama from the Kalem studio in which jealousy and the machinations of a designing and ugly woman are responsible for marital difficulties between a bride and groom which are finally settled by the deposing of the schemer and the return of the young wife to her own. The details of the story present many interesting pictures as they are worked out, not the least of which are the satisfying glimpses of farm house, the farmyard, with its sleek cattle and lively fowls. And there is an air of genuine country homeness about it all that attracts irresistibly and compels admiration. The farm house is very inviting, and as the characters in the drama come and go one's heart goes out to the poor little bride, the victim of an evil woman, who for some reason refuses to receive her. And there is a feeling of exultation when Hiram discovers what has been going on and sends the schemer away, taking the bride to her home which is now all hers. The producers of this picture have made a great advance in their photography. In place of the lack of gradation which sometimes has marred the Kalem films, here is a well lighted, correctly exposed and evenly developed film in which the tones and values are correctly rendered, and the picture is satisfying to look at. The film runs evenly and steadily, with no blurs or flashes. So far as the technical quality is concerned, the Kalem people never issued a better film. The piece admits of no purely dramatic work, but virtue is rewarded and evil is punished in a very vigorous way, and this feature makes the melodrama satisfactory.

"The Children's Friend."—A pretty little picture from the Biograph studio which represents a dove or a carrier pigeon as the star actor. The idea of using a carrier pigeon to inform the distracted parents of the whereabouts of some lost children is so unique and unexpected that it attracts and creates a favorable impression. Horses and dogs have appeared to good advantage in motion pictures previously, but never before, so far as the writer knows, has a carrier pigeon appeared, and one must be candid and admit that while the two appearances, one when it leaves the children, and the other when it arrives at the house, are quite successful. The picture is not dramatic, and excepting for the frightened parents and friends no opportunity is given for acting. It is best to give all the credit of an interesting picture to the dove. The tumble into the sand pit affords the pigeon his opportunity, and he makes the most of it, winning his laurels quite as ably as other actors win theirs by performing his part as correctly as he can. He is a success as the children's friend.

"Getting Even."—A Biograph subject which depicts a vigorous spanking bee in which a group of cowboys and the kid figure. But the kid turns the tables on his tormentors by appearing at a mask ball dressed as a belle and succeeds in getting his most troublesome opponent to making love. Upon his unmasking the ardent swain's consternation may be imagined. It can't be described. It is an amusing picture and the fun is based upon harmless jokes. Such acting as is required is in harmony with the subject and will commend itself to the most exacting critic. The film represents fun and such horseplay as men are disposed to show when a group are together.

"The Child's Prayer."—A pathetic picture from Pathe which emphasizes the trusting faith of a child, the faith that would remove mountains. One may agree that these Pathe pictures, full of sentiment of this type, are successful, but few like to think that such unpleasant episodes are common in the life of anyone. Unquestionably men are out of work and their families suffer. Sometimes they may get locked up for some infraction of the law, as the father did in this picture, but whether all have children who pray for them with an abiding and compelling faith that the prayers will be answered is not so certain. One's personal belief will color his views of this picture, and perhaps it is best to leave it there. The simple trustfulness of the child is a beautiful thing to see, and her air of knowing that her petition would be granted when the change for the better came is so assuring and certain that it is good to see. The picture is stronger in suggestion than in action. Perhaps nothing further need be said of it.

"The Amateur Detective."—A comedy from Pathe which may or may not be deemed funny. The humor is rather farfetched and American audiences may, perhaps, be pardoned if they need a diagram to make the fun apparent.

"The Freebooters."—A Selig which smacks very strongly of the Wild West, with its hold-ups, robbery, chase by marshals, the discovery of the booty in a cave, injury of the sheriff and the final capture of the robbers are all worked out with fidelity to detail and in harmony with the subject. The staging, which is done in the open outdoors, is interpretative of the subject and there is a convincing air of sincerity about the action which carries one along irresistibly. Such melo-dramatic pictures always interest, even though they do not always instruct. Where the scenic effects are picturesque and the technical qualities are correct there is very little left to be desired. The photographer should be commended for his faithful rendering of a waterfall. It is beautifully done and makes an attractive addition to the series of picturesque views. The action in these Selig pictures is certain to be pleasing, and even though robbery, long chases and frequently lively gun play are often prominent factors in Selig pictures they do not seem out of place, nor do they create unfavorable impressions. They seem proper and right.

"Her Face Her Fortune."—A Lubin which is intended for a comedy, but one feels that it is scarcely the correct thing to do to make fun of a plain face. While this particular face was made up to appear homely, the inference is plain and those whose faces are not beautiful may have their feelings hurt. This will be true if they are disposed to be sensitive. Couldn't some other subject have been chosen?

"Her Busy Day."—A Gaumont which introduces the old story of the long chase, with variations. This time it is a poor vegetable woman who is constantly moved on by the police until she becomes quarrelsome and has a number of policemen rushing after her. They all land in a canal, and when they emerge, go to the police court.

"The Tricky Dummies."—A Gaumont which introduces some humorous stunts with three figures used for display purposes before a clothing store. A love story is interwoven with the tale, which, ending happily, adds its portion to the pleasantries of the piece. The substitution of the dummies with three living men, each bent on a widely different purpose, develops a decidedly funny complication. The hearty laughter with which it is received testifies to the appreciation of the audience.

"The Fiddle and the Fan."—A species of trick comedy from the Gaumont which represents a cellist as being whirled with his instrument by a ventilating fan. It may be funny, but the writer is unable to discover whatever modicum of fun it may possess.

"The Little Father."—A Vitagraph which tells an interesting story of the misfortune of a poor widow who was wrongfully accused and imprisoned for theft, and the heroic determination of her ten-year-old son to care for his younger sister. Happily proof of her innocence is discovered and she is released to find that her boy has built up a prosperous business. Because of the injustice of the accusation and the boy's brave battle against adverse circumstances he is materially assisted in still further expansion. The technical quality is good.

"The Wealthy Rival."—A bit of comedy from the Vitagraph studio which puts a certain Englishman in a rather unfavorable and ludicrous light and gives an athletic young American a chance to perform a rescue, which proves to be a fake. It is amusing, but does not appear to arouse the risibilities of the audience to any considerable extent.

"Tom Thumb."—Every child who sees this pictorial adaptation of Perrault's fairy story will first believe implicitly that Tom Thumb was, or is, a real personage, and next he will feel like thanking the Pathes for producing such a faithful and satisfactory rendering of the story. From the time when Tom Thumb's father decides to lose all the numerous fingers and thumbs, or the seven boys in the wood, through the experience in the Ogre's castle, the appropriation of the magic boots and the reward from the fairy, there is a convincing quality about the character which will appeal to the children, and will not be refused by the older ones. The picture is beautifully tinted and the staging is a marvel of faithful reproduction of the story. It is a thoroughly satisfactory reproduction of a favorite fairy story and deserves long and enthusiastic patronage.

"The Paymaster."—Here is a Bison picture released by the New York Motion Picture Company which has all the dash and go of the usual melodrama and holds the attention of the audience from the opening until the close. There is an attempted murder, an attempted robbery, the capture of a band of outlaws, the rescue of a supposed murdered man by an Indian girl and all the furbelows which go with such a subject. The dramatic climaxes are punctuated with rapid fire gun play, in some of which the smoke actually obscures the combatants as it rolls up in clouds from the battlefields, but virtue emerges from the scathing fire uninjured and all is well. It cannot be said that a love story forms any considerable portion of the basis of the picture, unless the Indian girl's devotion to the young officer can be called love, yet that really resolves itself into gratitude which descends into a species of blind devotion because he helped her at one time. But however that may be, the picture is good and thrilling and will please a larger part of any audience because things actually occur in it. The photography is none too good and distinctly weak in some places, but it is true that the action is quite in harmony with the subject and offers little reasonable ground for criticism.

"The Railroad Wreck."—This Phoenix picture was made the headliner by one theater which runs only independent films during the past week. It was a sufficiently attractive title to make one walk in. If a railroad wreck could be successfully reproduced on the screen it might be well worth seeing, though of course there is the objection to mangled humanity and other unpleasant features which would be inseparably connected with a picture of this sort. But those who have weak nerves need not fear looking at this picture. A car or two is wrecked and a couple of bodies are brought out and deposited on the grass in the foreground, while an actress dies on a stretcher, presumably from wounds received when the aforesaid cars tip over. But there is nothing that will cause one's nerves to give way, unless the suggestion of a ditched car acts that way. The actress in dying gives her daughter to a young minister who is about administering consolation to the injured and dying, which exist largely in the imagination of the audience. Here is where the story of the film really begins and it is a love story pure and simple, in which a number of deaf elders and winsome (?) old maids of the church take part and declare that either the girl or the minister must go. They complicate the situation by both going, the girl to save the minister and the minister because he is angry at the unwarranted interference of outside parties. Finally they meet again in a mission which he establishes and she becomes his helpmate for the future. As an advertising proposition this film is quite satisfactory, but as a representation of a railroad wreck it exists principally in the imagination of the producer, though there are two or three smashed up cars and a number of men running about picking up bits of board and throwing them here and there. Photographically the first part of the picture is unsatisfactory, but the latter part, particularly the views about the picturesque church, are good, being clear and with the tonal gradations well maintained.

"Pietro, the Mule Driver."—An Eclair which is laid amid picturesque scenery and is well photographed, but without much interest as a story. A girl runs away and her brother, who is a mule driver, goes after her. He kills the man who enticed her away and hurls him over a cliff. Then he goes home and they all make up, excepting of course the unfortunate dead man. It is not even a love story, but a murder. It should be removed from the service. It teaches no useful lesson and it certainly does not amuse.

"The Unlucky Thief."—Here is a film without a manufacturer's mark which represents a second story man as getting shut up in an ash can and going through all sorts of vicissitudes before he is rescued by the police and taken away. This sort of thing has ceased to be novel.

"The Eccentric Barber."—No mark on this betrayed the maker's name and after one sees it one will agree that the producer can scarcely be blamed for desiring to keep his identity a secret. The attempt to enclose four men in a species of stocks made with a huge board which shuts together like a knife is scarcely funny. It is simply silly. The best feature of this film is its brevity.

"The Good Samaritan."—This picture carries no indication of who its maker may be, but it is a good film, well worked out, well photographed and adequately colored. It is the biblical story of the Good Samaritan and the scenes are reproduced with fidelity to the narrative and with apparent fidelity to the details of the story. The unfortunate individual certainly does fall among thieves and when they finish with him he is in fit condition to go to an inn or a hospital. The acting of the priest and Levite is good, quite in harmony with the description given by the story in the Bible. While the film is not so long as some biblical subjects have been, it is clearly explained by the sub-titles and is well worth including in any programme. It is an independent film and managers who are seeking for good pictures of this class will make no mistake in placing this one on their list.

"Mozart's Last Requiem."—A Gaumont which purports to be a reproduction of the last work of the great composer, a requiem. When asked to compose it he was unwell and the thought that it might be his own funeral requiem weighed so heavily upon his mind that when it is finally completed he falls dead as it is being sung. The pictorial quality of the film is good, perhaps better than some that come from this producer's studio. It tells a beautiful story in a melancholy way and arouses sentiments which would be hard to describe, yet which are none the less influential.

"How to Tame a Mother-in-Law."—A Pathe which seeks to furnish new light on this old and worn out misunderstanding. In this instance the troubled son-in-law has all sorts of difficulty, but finally tries flattery and escapes further molestation at the hand of his disagreeable enemy.

COMING HEADLINER.

THE TOWER OF NESLE.

It takes a French producer to properly produce a French play or historical novel in film form. The other night we saw a moving picture adaptation of one of Dumas novels. The producer was not a Frenchman. He had read Dumas through Anglo-Saxon spectacles. The story on the screen was crude, we might almost say ludicrous. How different is the case when Pathes lay themselves out for one of their films d'art! They bring all the resources of modern stage producing to bear in the work of the piece. The book is always written by a competent hand, familiar with the history of the period treated of. The best class of producing talent available, actors and actresses of world-wide fame, are engaged; the piece is accurately mounted and dressed, and, as we have said before many times, the photography is above reproach. Except in one or two special instances which need not be mentioned, it is seldom in the economics of modern film making that we find all these elements of success combined. What wonder, then, that Pathe pictures are uniformly so good?

"The Tower of Nesle," their latest film d'Art, will, we think, be not the least successful of the series on account of the variety and vigor of action which it contains. We are inclined to compare it with the famous "La Tosca," although perhaps the acting shown is not quite so powerful as was seen in that splendid film. But "The Tower of Nesle" on its merits is entitled to be regarded as a masterly piece of work. Wickedness on the stage, especially wickedness in a beautiful woman, is always attractive and fascinating, if scarcely commendable. Marguerite of Burgundy was a very bad lot, indeed. But she looks so strikingly handsome in her wickedness that we almost felt inclined to forgive her for her many misdeeds. Surprised by her father in dalliance with the parent of her illegitimate children, she persuades Buridan, the lover in question, to assassinate her father in her own presence. Then she gets rid of her illegitimate children by the agency of a servant and throws over Buridan preparatory to becoming Queen. Years pass, and, unknown to the Queen, her own son is one of her court favorites. Another son and Buridan are invited to the Queen's Tower of Nesle. Many things happen in this tower. Marguerite, the Queen, has innumerable lovers. Then when she is tired of them she just has them flung from the tower and killed below. Of course, one of her sons is killed, and Buridan is subsequently thrown into prison by the Queen, who endeavors to obtain from him the evidence which he holds of her murderous career. Buridan, of course, escapes, just at the time they discover that the Queen has murdered another son and his. And the curtain falls, if we may so explain ourselves, with the revelation to Marguerite of the fact that her assassins have killed the second remaining of her own children. The dead youth is recognized by a cross on his wrist.

This is not an agreeable story, but it is characteristic of French court life of the time of Louis X. It goes without saying that it was magnificently acted, the part of the Queen being played by a very accomplished actress, indeed, while the part of Buridan, the chief male villain, is played with equal strength and conviction. Indeed, the acting could not be improved upon.

SOUTHERN RENTERS

NOW THAT WE ARE buying only from Licensed makers, we are in position to serve you both courteously and well :: :: We can place a few first run renters and guarantee all others protection. We make no promises, but instead we protect you with contracts. Handling only the output of Biograph, Pathe, Vitagraph, Selig, etc. Can't you ask about it. :: :: ::

S. Nye Bass Film Exchange
823 UNION STREET :: NEW ORLEANS, LA.

OUR PREMIER FILM SERVICE

is the result of heavy purchases of the entire output of the Licensed Manufacturers—nothing about it is guess work. We sure have the Film Service that is THE BEST. :: :: How about an inquiry.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.
Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio. Omaha, Neb.

Box Ball Doubles the Profits of Your Theatre

$800 a Month With No Expense But Rent!

Moving picture shows pay out big money every week for employes, song slides and film rental. But Box Ball is a business that often brings in $200 in six days, yet has absolutely no expense but rent. One customer with four alleys took in $1,845.20 in 59 days.

Customers who spend only five cents in the theatre spend more than a dollar at Box Ball. Crowds are quickly fascinated with this new game. They never tire—the more they play the more they want to keep on playing. No one wants to quit loser, so he plays game after game—often spending hours when he first intended to spend a few minutes.

When the crowds are in your theatre give them free tickets for the first game. Every one will play at least once and many will become regular customers. Women and children play as well as men—they form teams and clubs and often spend a whole afternoon or evening.

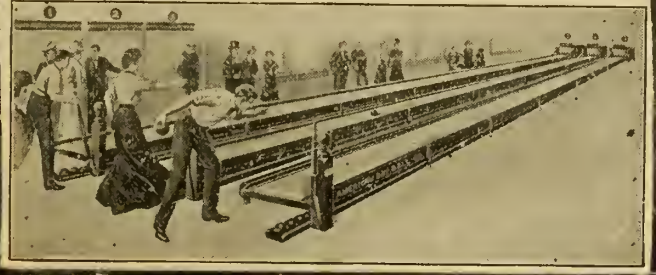
Install one of these money-making games in connection with your theatre. Rent the room above or get the store next door. Put in two or more alleys and you will be simply amazed at the wonderful profits.

Your only expense will be rent. Players set the pins with a lever and the balls are automatically returned. One man to collect the money is all you need, and he can care for as many as ten alleys.

One game usually lasts six minutes with two players. At 5 cents each that's $1.00 an hour from every alley—you can figure the profit yourself. With ten hours' play two alleys will bring you $20 a day, or $120 every six days.

Send for our free booklet and learn how you can own one of these great money-making games for only a few dollars down and the balance payable from your profits. Remember—you pay just a few dollars down, and your profits the very first month should more than pay the entire cost of the outfit. Write for booklet at once. Address

AMERICAN BOX BALL CO., 1912 Van Buren Street, Indianapolis, Ind.



NORTH POLE

Dr. Cook discovered the North Pole only recently, but a great many theater owners and managers have discovered an up-to-date Song Slide Exchange, many moons ago, and they don't hesitate in proclaiming

The Chicago Song Slide Exchange

9th Floor Masonic Temple :: Chicago, Ills.

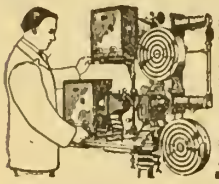
the only exchange where you get complete sets from title to chorus, two copies of music with each set, at the small rental of 50 cents per week, and your full week's supply shipped in one consignment.

NO FAKE

No faked-up sets from our house. Many times we have been asked to fake up a song; we will positively not do so; please do not ask us. We are in the game to uphold it, and not down it by dupe song slides. We furnish disc and cylinder records. Write us for particulars. All correspondence answered promptly. Any information asked for cheerfully given.

Write Us Try Us

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.

Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"

Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined? Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY? Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN

THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

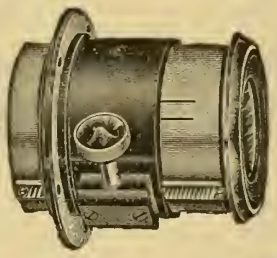
CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies.

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND —OHIO—



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

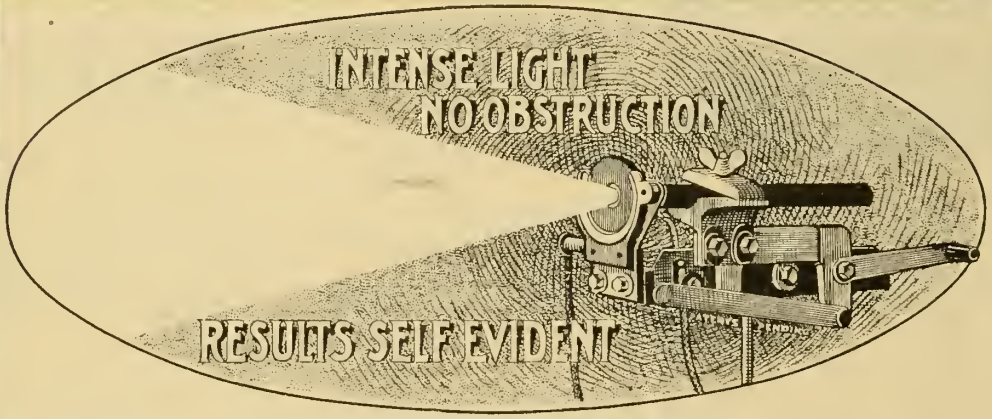
M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15 00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.



MR. EXHIBITOR!

We gave away $7,287.50 during the last ten days or have orders for 583 Burners, secured through personal letters and advertisements. Have you sent your order? If not, we advise sending at once, as nearly one-third of our introductory offer is exhausted.

Just think of the money you will be jingling—just think of the crowds you can secure by advertising the fact that your theater is equipped with the Funnel Arc Burner, which positively gives more light than any other burner on the market. Your extra profits the first night will more than pay for the small investment.

Take advantage of the curiosity of the public. We'll help you by furnishing free with your order a handsome bill poster in colors illustrating and explaining the Burner in an attractive manner, so that all who read will want to see the light you have.

Get in—you can make a reputation in a single night. It is up to you—now put it up to us. Remember, a TWO-YEAR GUARANTEE against imperfections in workmanship and material furnished with each machine.

PAY NO MONEY TO AGENTS and waste no time writing to jobbers, as our goods will not be handled by above parties until introductory offer is exhausted. Send your order direct at once.

Price of first 2,000 Burners, $12.50 each, with express charges prepaid to destination. Terms cash with order. Address $100.00 REWARD will be paid to anyone for evidence leading to the conviction of any infringer of our patent rights on Funnel Arc Burner.

THE DENISON MFG. CO., WARREN, OHIO, Box 25

Points of Superiority

1st. As the crater is directly on the point of pencil carbon and the light is thrown on screen through the hole in disc carbon, you receive all the light from crater. With all other burners fully 40% of the light is lost owing to the obstruction of carbons.

2d. There is absolutely no chance for short circuits, as all connections are made to solid parts. With all other burners this is an impossibility. In ease of operation, workmanship and quality of material our burner is unequalled.

Our Reliability

As to our reliability we refer you to Dun or Bradstreet's; also to any bank in Warren.

How to Order

When ordering burner, be sure to state name of machine and lamp house you are using. Price of disc carbons, 35c. per dozen. Disc carbons will last from three to four shows. A 5/8-inch cored pencil carbon is used.

FREE

A handsome two-color bill poster, one dozen disc carbons and one pencil carbon furnished free with each order.

"Be Sure You're Right
Then Go Ahead."

We will produce strictly American Subjects of High Class
STORIES—LUCID AND SIMPLY TOLD
SUBJECTS—CLEAN, MORAL and EDUCATIONAL
SCENERY—APPROPIATE IN EVERY DETAIL

We believe in the old saying
"THE MORE HASTE THE LESS SPEED"

It is not our intention to photograph a subject to-day and release it to-morrow.
Reputation will be as desirable to us as the Almighty Dollar.
Highest prices paid for good manuscripts.
241st ST., and RICHARDSON AVE., WAKEFIELD, N. Y. C.

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, September 24th

A SQUAW'S SACRIFICE

Dramatic Code Word, Replete Approx. Length 1,000 ft.

A heart interest, dramatic production, and a sequel to "A SQUAW'S REVENGE," the much talked of Indian picture, recently produced by this Company. This subject is in every particular up to the "Bison" standard of photographic and dramatic excellence.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

Special Offer!

If you want to have what your Exchange-WANTS, stay with him
BUT
If he WANTS to give you what you DO NOT want, quit him
AND
IF YOU WANT TO HAVE WHAT YOU WANT
come to us

Exhibitors' Film Exchange
PHONE 2775 STUYVESANT
138 Third Ave. Between 14th and 15th Sts.
NEW YORK

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY
ILLUSTRATED SONG ADVERTISING ANNOUNCEMENT SPECIAL
SLIDES
Special Slides Made to Order
58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614
CHICAGO

MARYLAND FILM COMPANY
400 Carroll Building : : Baltimore, Md.
BALTIMORE'S FOREMOST INDEPENDENT RENTERS
Write for our special money making proposition, it will pay you. Good clean films, and a square deal is what we offer you.

SLIDES
of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

I'd Rather Be With You On Old Broadway.
Oh! What I Know About You?
My Southern Rose.
I'm Going To Do What I Please.
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have A Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Was I A Fool?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do For A Girl Like You.
Good Bye Girlie And Remember Me.
After 'While.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

United Film Sales Company

Have a large stock of late INDEPENDENT FILM FOR SALE AT BARGAIN PRICES. Write or wire for list of subjects. Prices 1 to 5c per foot. We deal in good Film only and are not renters.

Phone Gramercy 2369 30 East 23rd Street, New York City

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY

110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.

FILMS FOR SALE. $10, $12, $15 per reel.

One New Dressler Machine, One Second-hand Power's Machine, One Edison Machine. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

SOUND EFFECTS FOR MOVING PICTURES

YERKES & CO.
53 West 28th Street - N. Y.
Phone 594 Madison Square

AT LIBERTY

First-class operator, 5 years' experience. Strictly sober and reliable, age 32, best of references. Massachusetts license; own outfit.

E. A. HALL
50 Columbia St., Swampscott, Mass.

FILM TITLES FILM

Made in 5 ft. Lengths. Tinted any Color 10c. per foot.

THE FILM RENEWING CO.
744 ORLEANS STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

Don't Miss Booking

The HUDSON-FULTON
SLIDES

The Biggest Attraction Out. We Furnish Slides with Lecturer, for Any Night You Wish :: ::

ORDER NOW

AMERICAN FILM BROKERS
147-157 4th Avenue N. Y. CITY

COMPENSARC

That's the device that saves Moving Picture men two-thirds on their electric lights bills, and yet gives better light. Did you see our ad last week? Well, don't look it up. Just write for our

Booklet 15018

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
1402 Broadway
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA. 733

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs
Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.
Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich
New York Office, 44 Park Place
Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.
Western Office,
Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

FILMS FOR RENT

6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week

$2.00 per change all in good condition

Signs and Banners no extra charge

FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.
Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

FIBRE, BRAINS AND HUSTLE

have made the Bal Fibre Trunks the lightest, strongest and most serviceable moving picture machine trunks on earth. If the best is not too good—Buy a Bal.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE—W

WILLIAM BAL, Incorporated - - 210 West 42d Street, New York

Stories of the Films.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

IN OLD KENTUCKY.—A stirring episode of the Civil War. At the beginning of the Civil War, Kentucky attempted to hold a neutral position between the belligerants, and her sons decided for themselves which side's cause to take up; hence it was that many a Kentucky home was divided. When President Lincoln issued his first call for troops, the Governor of Kentucky said the State would furnish no troops for the purpose of subduing her sister States, and the Legislature approved his attitude. However, as both Federal and Confederate forces occupied the State, active hostilities prevailed, making it the veritable hub of the conflict. The sentiment of the people seemed evenly balanced, and when old Mr. Wilkinson entered with the newspaper heralding the proclamation, "War Is Declared," George, his youngest son, took up the Union flag, declaring his intention to fight under its stripes, calling to his brother Robert to do likewise. But Bob's heart is with the Confederates, and he declines to listen to his brother's reasoning and so goes to enlist in the Southern army. The old Kentucky home is divided—it is brother against brother. Later, Robert is selected as the bearer of sealed orders, and as he will probably have to pass the Union lines, he is attired in Union uniform. Starting on his perilous journey, he is soon dangerously near the Union outposts, where George is seen posting sentries. Robert is discovered while climbing up the side of the mountain, and fired on by George, who is ignoraut of his identity. Fleeing for safety, he is followed and apprehended by the Union forces, when, for the first time, Robert and George meet. But the soldier knows no kindred, and George secures Rob's papers and places him under guard to be shot. While fording a stream, Robert by strategy manages to bolt, and outdistancing his pursuers, rushes into his old home for shelter. Here he is treated by his father as a fugitive and would have been turned out, but a mother's love knows not the laws of war and shields him. Rushing him upstairs to her room, she bids him get into her bed, while she lies alongside, armed with a pistol. George enters, and searching the house, comes to his mother's room. He at once discerns where Robert is, and would have dragged him from his hiding, but his mother, with the pistol at her head, threatens to fire if he advances one step. In the face of this, George falters in his duty and leaves. Robert, later, escapes. Finally, the war over, George returns home 'neath triumphant banners, promoted in rank, and with the whole village assembled to greet him. The old home is the scene of great rejoicing. But what a contrast is seen on the outside. There we see Robert, ragged and homeless for the "Lost Cause," staggering up to the house. Reaching the portals, he gets a glimpse of the festive scene on the inside, and sorrowfully starts away, but old Uncle Jasper sees him and drags him in. Here is shown the most impressive scene ever depicted in moving pictures. The mother folds her lost boy to her heart, and George, with the Union flag thrown over his arm, stretches forth his hand to his brother, who, with the old, tattered colors of the Confederacy held affectionately to his breast, receives the warm grasp, typifying the motto of Kentucky, "United we stand, divided we fall." Length, 983 feet.

A FAIR EXCHANGE.—Free adaptation of George Eliot's "Silas Marner." After all, God's most precious gift is the little child. Our darkest moments are brightened by the child's advent. Their presence dissipates all sorrow and sheds sunshine where clouds shaded, for the mantle of darkness that shadowed the world in the beginning was dispelled by the Child of Bethlehem. Such was the experience of old Silas Marner, to whom, when the world seemed the darkest, the little angel appeared. This Biograph adaptation makes Master Marner a cobbler instead of a linen weaver, but this change does not weaken, nor make less romantic, the story. Silas is first seen in the act of ministering to his dying friend, and while engaged in this act of mercy, William Dane enters stealthily and steals the dying man's money, leaving Marner's handkerchief alongside the dresser so as to throw the blame on him. The money is discovered missing, and, of course, circumstantial evidence points conclusively to Marner, who protests innocence, and is given a chance of vindicating himself through that old superstitious practice of visiting the church and in presence of the elders in the vestry kneels and prays and draws lots. Fate is against him, and he draws the black card which declares him guilty. This is final, and his friends shun him as they would a leper. He makes good the stolen money out of his own hard-earned savings, and leaves his native village for another section of the country. Here he pursues his vocation of shoemaking. His trouble has made him a misanthrope and miser, niggardly hoarding the gains of his toil, guarding it with a jealousy induced by despicable money lust. A confirmed recluse, he spurns the advances of all; beggars are driven away empty-handed, with vituperation; in fact, the strain of charity hitherto dominant in his nature is effaced. His one thought is his golden coins; his only pleasure is the musical clink as they fall from his hands in counting them, afterwards hiding them in the wall by removing a stone and placing them behind it. One day this is observed by a couple of thieves who peer through his window. Awaiting an opportunity, they enter during his absence and seize the money, making off with it. When Silas re-enters he sets about indulging in his only diversion—but what a revelation! The money is gone. Like a maniac he dashes out in search of the thieves, but without success, returning and dropping on his workbench in utter despair. Meanwhile, a poor, deserted mother of the parish, with her little child, wanders from her home in quest of her perfidious husband, only to die on the road. The child, alone, continues on the way, and entering Marner's hovel, sinks exhausted on the hearthstone. Silas arouses from his lethargy and is amazed to find the little baby, which toddles to his arms. What a change comes over him! Folding the little one to his breast, he exclaims, "This shall be my recompense." Indeed a fair exchange. That moment his flinty heart softens and he becomes benevolence personified. Length, 995 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

THE ORDEAL.—Dramatized from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." This film deals with the second chapter in the reformed life of Victor Hugo's hero, Jean Valjean, whom we first met in "The Price of a Soul."

It deals with the arrival of the convict, Valjean, at the factory which in later years he comes to own. After the prologue where this is shown the action proceeds after an interval of twenty years, showing the unfortunate Fantine and her child, Cosette, their arrival at the inn of the Thenardiers and her leaving Cosette in their keeping. Next comes her application for work in the factory which is now owned by the Mayor, the man whom we know as Jean Valjean, the convict. Of course his past record is unknown in the town where he has risen from the humble position of a workman to that of chief magistrate.

We see Fantine discharged later from the mill for some petty offense and, receiving a letter from the custodians of her child demanding money for a doctor for the little one, driven by desperation into the street. We see her attacking a citizen, who mistreats her, and then, in the Police Station, brought face to face with the Mayor. Believing that he is responsible for her discharge from the mill and her subsequent downfall, she thinks that he jests when he bids the officers release her, and, flying into a rage, she insults him. But his great heart is proof against such treatment and he makes her understand that she has misjudged him, and that henceforth she will be cared for.

Here another interesting figure enters the story—that of Javert, the inexorable Inspector of Police. He has a suspicion that the Mayor much resembles a certain convict, Jean Valjean, whom he saw in former years. Inquiry confirming the belief, he sends a letter of denunciation to the State authorities; but the arrest of a peasant for stealing apples and the testimony of three galley-slaves to the fact that he is Jean Valjean, lead Javert to apologize to the Mayor and acknowledge that the real Jean Valjean has been found.

Then follows the terrible struggle which Jean Valjean has with himself. Shall he let an innocent man suffer for his old convict record or shall he announce his own identity and thus sacrifice all his years of happiness and all of his present power and position? His promise to Fantine to bring her child to her makes his decision all the harder, but, remembering the good bishop who had taught him the better way and had bought his soul for good, he makes the sacrifice. In a powerfully dramatic scene he appears in the court room just as sentence is about to be pronounced on the other man, announces his own identity, and later, at the bedside of Fantine, submits to arrest at the hands of the relentless Javert.

A KNIGHT FOR A NIGHT.—The opening scene of the story discloses our "Knight," in company with a party of convivial spirits, worshipping at the Shrine of Bacchus.

At the close of the drinking bout, in which he displayed his superior capacity by putting his companions one after another under the table, we see him on his way home, considerably befuddled and a bit unsteady in his gait, but mellow and happy of mood.

Through the deserted streets of Edinburgh town he leisurely steers his uncertain course, scandalizing the watch by his boisterous good humor, and finally turns into a deserted coachyard.

There, seated upon the steps of a dilapidated old stage coach that is fast approaching the last stages of decay, he begins to moralize on the departed glories of its bygone days, and the effects of the night's potions beginning to work upon him, he falls asleep.

As the clock is striking two he finds to his astonishment that he is surrounded by quaintly dressed people, and that the decayed relic of other generations has been supplanted by a handsome new coach and a spanking pair of horses.

He sees a fair maiden struggling in the toils of two desperate villains who are forcing her into the coach, and, true "Knight" that he is, he resolves to champion her cause.

Forcing his way into the coach with her and her captors and foiling their attempts to dispose of him with their swords, he remains at her side until the coach pulls up before an old deserted house.

Following the party inside, he attacks and, after a brief but furious struggle, disarms the villains, and with the maiden's assistance pins them to the wall like jumping-jacks.

With the maiden safely inside the coach again, he mounts the driver's seat and lashes the horses into a furious gallop to escape from the villains' friends who are pursuing on horses.

Mile after mile, o'er hill and down dale, the pursuit continues, our brave "Knight" finally landing the lady in the coachyard safe from her pursuers.

She is on the point of rewarding with a kiss his chivalry and devotion, when he wakes up to find himself struggling half way in and half way out of the old coach!

TRUE LOVE NEVER RUNS SMOOTHLY.—A modern swain of the dapper variety invites a pink and white miss of sweet sixteen to an afternoon carriage drive. Love beams from every glance of their eyes as they drive along in the shade of the trees that overspread a pretty country lane. Lost in fond contemplation of each other, they are soon oblivious to their surroundings and allow the horse to become complete master of his own inclinations, the buggy zig-zagging along the road as his fancy is caught by a particularly tempting tuft of grass on either side.

A mischievous country lad who as yet had to feel the thrill that lurks in a maiden's eyes, seeing the opportunity to interrupt the spooning and extract some fun from the situation, cuts the traces just as the horse stops on the brow of the hill that surrounds the road. Backward goes the buggy down the road, slowly at first, but gaining momentum with every turn of the wheels, the love-sick couple locked in each other's arms still absorbed in their own affairs.

Here follow a number of screamingly funny mishaps. The buggy, horseless but not loverless, dashes over hill and down dale, clean through a peddler's wagon and its stock of tin pans, striking a clothes line which it carries with it in its flight. Faster and still faster it goes, clearing everything from its course, until it reaches the edge of a lake, where it rudely awakens a lone fisherman by utilizing his boat as a ferry and dumping him into the water.

Out into the lake it glides, Cupid still holding undisputed sway; and it is altogether probable that love's young dream would not yet be o'er did not a treacherous rock interrupt the course of the odd-looking craft and prove the efficacy of cold water as a first aid to the unconscious.

LOVE AND WAR.—An incident of the Battle of Waterloo. The story pictured is one of the many that might be told by the guests assembled at the great military ball in Brussels on the eve of that terrible struggle between Napoleon's forces and the allied armies on the memorable field of Waterloo. A beautiful young girl and her soldier-lover are shown as they are about to start for the ball. Happy in their mutual love, they are looking into the future with serene confidence, little dreaming of what the morrow is to bring forth. Next comes the ballroom scene, with its throng of merry dancers, the splendid uniforms of the men in pleasing contrast with the beautiful costumes of the ladies—an animated, happy crowd whose only thought is of the evening's pleasure.

There is a sudden buzz of excitement—a messenger has entered and is quietly summoning Wellington's aides from among the guests—the dancing ceases—enquiring looks give way to anxious, terrified expressions as the officers hastily take their leave, and the full portent of the interruption dawns upon the assemblage—the ball is ended.

Throughout this scene our interest and sympathy are claimed by the two lovers who are experiencing the shock of their first parting, and to whom the fateful booming of the cannon means a last and awful separation. The scene that follows is dramatic in the extreme and will not soon be forgotten. The young girl stands at a window gazing in the direction of the scene of conflict. Close to her bosom she clasps the roses her soldier lover had brought her and she had worn at the ball of the previous night. Just over her shoulder hands a large painting. While she smiles in contemplation of her lover's speedy and safe return the picture in the frame slowly changes, and we see what has actually occurred.

Before our eyes is stretched the desolate battlefield of Waterloo after the strife is ended, and in the foreground, among the groups of wounded and dying, lies the figure of her dead lover.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

GRATITUDE.—The scene is the prettily appointed boudoir of Mrs. Ralph Farson. A large French window swings outward on a verandah and commands a view of the Farson lawn in front of the house. The time is 11 o'clock at night.

Mrs. Farson is seated in a comfortable chair, nodding over a novel. She rises, turns to the clock and notes the time. She appears worried and drops, sighing, on the couch, waiting for her husband's return.

Farson is enjoying himself at the club, to the neglect of his wife. His evenings with her grow fewer and further between, leading to certain estrangement between them. The curse of drink also takes possession of him, and it is seldom he returns to his home, after his evenings at the club, in a sober condition.

Mrs. Farson drops back on the couch and goes to sleep. A moment later a black form moves across the porch to the window and peers stealthily in. The window opens, slowly, cautiously, and the thief steps into the room. He does not see the

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.

(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)

1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

Feature Films for Traveling Show

For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.

ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York
'Phone 4267 Orchard.
Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

LEARN TO MAKE MIRRORS

¶ We furnish complete instructions for making all kinds of Mirrors so simple that anyone can make a first-class Mirror as soon as they read over our copyrighted instructions. For $2.00 we send you the complete outfit. This price is good for a short time only. No machines used, all ingredients can be secured of your local druggist for a few cents.

The Butts Sign & Novelty Co.
228 Temple Court Building, Denver, Colo.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500
OPERA CHAIRS
IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

$7.00 a Day

$15.00 for THREE DAYS

$30.00 A WEEK

For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction, free.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
Mossler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

OLD FILMS MADE NEW

Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

WRITE TO-DAY FOR TERM WORK DONE PROMPTLY

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.
744 ORLEANS STREET - - - CHICAGO, ILL.

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities

sleeping woman, but moves across the room to the door into the hallway and listens intently. Then he slips quietly across the room to Mrs. Farson's dressing table and with his jimmy pries open the drawer. Mrs. Farson stirs in her sleep and the thief observes her. Bending close over her, he listens to her breathing, then turns down the light and tiptoes back to the dressing table.

The thief is a man, tall, straight and handsome, even in his shabby garments and stubble beard. He moves with grace and his eyes flash intelligence, so that we cease to look upon him as a thief, but as a man. There is no fumbling; he works with the adeptness of a craftsman who knows his work thoroughly.

In another part of the house a door slams and a heavy step is heard in the hallway. The thief hears, springs to his feet and darts for the hall door. He draws back and runs to the window. A hansom is drawn up at the curb in front of the house and a policeman is chatting with the cabby. There is no escape from the room. The window, draped with heavy damask curtains, offers a hiding place. He draws the curtains to as Ralph Farson opens the door and steps into the room.)

As usual, he is intoxicated. He shakes his wife from her slumbers and she rises a little frightened. Having lost heavily at bridge, Farson is angry at everything and everybody. He begins by abusing his wife. She endeavors to stay his hand when he reaches for the decanter of whiskey, and in a rage he turns on her.

The thief springs into the room, pulls the drunken husband away from his wife and with a stiff blow sends him crashing to the floor. This sobers Farson and he rises from the floor stunned and bewildered.

A moment later the thief, taken unawares, looks down in the barrel of a revolver in Farson's hand. Farson telephones for the police, and two patrolmen arrive a moment later. Farson points out his victim, but the wife intercedes for the thief and bids the officers go. They leave, and the little woman stretches out her hand to the thief.

Farson, crushed and repentant, is reformed and grasps the hand of the thief as he would a brother's. The thief returns the jewelry, and after clasping the hands of the man and wife together, quickly steals out through the window, leaving the happy husband and wife together. Length, 950 feet.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

SAVED FROM THE QUICKSANDS.—A poor image maker, traveling in Cornwall, is seen wending his way across the beach toward St. Michael's Mountain, of which the imposing outline is seen in the distance.

It is the end of day, and the tide is rapidly rising. For fear of the tide he hurries his journey toward the Abbey, only to find himself in greater danger from the quicksands. After a determined struggle he extricates himself, only to find he is now entirely surrounded by the waves. However, he finds a brief respite from his danger by seeking refuge upon a high rock. As the water is still rising, the monks at the Abbey observe his dangerous plight and soon reach him with one of their boats. They carry him to the monastery, where he is carefully cared for by them.

When he has recovered from his exposure and the effects of his journey he entertains by singing. His voice is of wonderful sweetness and affects them greatly. However, his little concert is interrupted by an attack of coughing, which on examination proves to be a forerunner of death.

In thanks for the care and friendship the monks have given him, he begins a picture for their abbey. He works diligently in order to finish the work before he is called away. Often his work is interrupted by spells of weakness, but he applies himself more closely and accompanies his work with prayers for strength.

As he is asleep before his easel an answer to his entreaty comes in the shape of an angel, who finishes the picture for him.

Content with his work, the wayfarer presents it to his friends of the abbey and expires. Length, 600 feet.

TAKING IN A REEF.—A workman, in adjusting his long woolen belt, has great difficulty in getting it tight enough. His neighbors and family both fail to give the desired aid.

Disgusted, he leaves the house to find a means of drawing the belt tight enough to please him. He ties it to a scaffold on which men are at work and brings them to the ground. A tree is uprooted by his efforts. A huge delivery wagon with large horses is pulled backward in his frantic trials at making his belt tight. All of the many objects to which he fastens one end of the belt in order to draw it closely about him are moved from their foundations, until he attaches it to the windless of a dray. On this occasion he is drawn up to the wheel and carried away. Length, 380 feet.

THE LEGEND OF THE LIGHTHOUSE.—The first scene represents the beach of the Gulf of Death in the early morning after a fearful tempest, which has wrecked a vessel and thrown the cargo and many bodies upon the sands. Moving about among them is shown a ghoul in the person of an old woman, who searches the pockets of the dead, strips the rings from their fingers and the jewelry from their clothing. This booty she carefully conceals in her dress and makes her way up the steep cliffs to her home, an artistic little place in the midst of a beautiful garden. Once within the little building she spreads her ill-gotten gains upon the table, while she secures from her closet a bag of similar wealth which she has obtained from other wrecks.

While she is gloating over the jewels, her son, a sturdy and clean-cut young fisherman, enters the room. At first he does not quite understand this suddenly acquired treasure, but after a moment's consideration he knows from whence it came.

He remonstrates with his mother, telling her that if she persists in her horrible way of gaining gold the fates will punish her.

In the next scene we are shown the streets of the village while the town crier reads this edict from the royal palace: "By order of the King, a signal light will be placed on a cross at the Cape of Death and trusted to the inhabitants' care. They must watch the light and never let it go out."

Again, a few days later, we are taken to the home of the miserly old lady as she bids her son farewell when he starts upon a fishing trip. In strange contrast to her depraved love of gold is her great love of her boy, for she exhibits all the tenderness of more womanly mothers.

Next, on the evening of the same day, we are taken to the Cape of Death, which juts out into the stormy sea, a dreary and beautiful view. The farthermost and highest point is surmounted by a huge wooden cross on which a primitive lamp is swung to mark by its light the dangerous portion of the rocky coast.

A storm is arising; as the clouds lower, darkening the waters and the cliffs, the old woman is seen making her way against the heavy gale, out along the cliffs to the light. Here she waits for a time in hopes that some of the passing boats will be wrecked and the waves will bring ashore more wreckage from which she can add to the store of somber belongings. But the light does its work faithfully. The ships pass in safety.

Soon the demon of greed so gains control of her mind that with her staff she shatters the lamp, and makes her way from the scene to await the certain spoils which the water will bring to the shore by the morning.

Then comes the morning, and we find the wrecker searching along the beach, following her old habit of robbing the bodies. Now, as if in direct answer to her son's warning, comes retribution to her awful wickedness, for among the salvage on the shore she finds the body of her only real treasure, her boy.

She calls the people of the village, who carry the young man to the cottage, where the mother is overcome with pain and remorse. She is so impressed with the great evil that she hastens with a lantern to the old location of the light, where her body disappears and she is transformed into a lighthouse, where until this day she may be seen. Length, 770 feet.

DROPPED FROM THE CLOUDS.—A knight in love with a lady fair comes bedecked in beautiful raiment to sing beneath her window, hoping thereby to gain great favor.

The gay Lothario is surprised at his serenade by the woman's husband, who calls him away to a secluded part of the grounds for combat.

The clandestine lover is wounded and immediately disappears.

Mysteriously a group of dandies appear upon the scene. They surround the angered husband and maltreat him.

Then, without warning, they are transformed into charming dancers, who place him in a beautiful car which carries him up into space and through numberless interesting adventures.

After these many experiences, fraught with wonder, he is thrown from the air boat and falls many feet, alighting before his wife's window, where a happy reunion is enjoyed. Length, 240 feet.

ON THE CREST OF THE WAVES.—The play opens in a picturesque Danish seacoast town, the scene depicting typical village life among the fishing population of Denmark. Both the hours of pleasure and of work are shown with great clearness.

One of the villagers, a seaman, is home for a few days from his usual occupation aboard a fishing boat. While strolling about among the shops he is suited with the appearance of a cap in one of the windows and buys it for his little son. The boy is greatly pleased with it.

In the evening, while enjoying the company of their friends at the village cafe, the fisherman gets orders to prepare for a trip to Iceland. He writes the date of his departure in the boy's new cap, as well as the youngster's name.

Then we are shown the departure of the father.

As the time draws near for the fisherman's return his wife and his son daily visit the pier to get news of the incoming boat. On one of these occasions the cap is blown into the ocean and is carried out by the waves.

Later, as the father is returning, he perceives the child's cap floating on the waves. He catches it as the boat passes and recognizes it as that of his boy. He is naturally greatly worried for fear the child has been drowned. His distress is increased by the fact that on his arrival home he is not met by his wife and when he goes to his own house he finds it closed and the doors locked. In despair he makes his way to the public square of the town, where he throws himself before the huge crucifix. Happily, as he prays, his beloved boy passes that way. From him the father learns that the mother is at the church with a new little brother that has arrived during his trip. Length, 554 feet.

ALL FOR A NICKEL.—After alighting from an automobile in front of a cafe, a millionaire, while paying the driver, drops a nickel to the pavement.

He searches very carefully for it, but is unable to find it. Because some bystanders laugh at his search he insists he will find it.

Sieves are brought and the sand is sifted. Nothing is found. Thinking it may have fallen into the sewer, he insists on all making a search there with him. He serves refreshments to the entire crowd, and as they sit about in front of the cafe a policeman notices the lost nickel attached by chance to the sole of the rich man's shoe.

Content, the millionaire pays his helpers and rewards the finder.—Length, 404 feet.

KALEM MFG. CO.

THE WINNING BOAT.—The scenes are all laid in and about a little New England coast town. From its earliest settlement the one industry of the village has been shipbuilding. During the days of sailing vessels its yards offered a busy sight. Here was a big merchant ship just sliding down into the water and destined to carry its shrewd Yankee master into many strange tropical ports. Over there the workmen were busy on the keel of a whaler, whose massive timbers will one day battle with the polar ice in some distant Northern sea. With the advent of steam the little town lost its air of industry until the settlement in the vicinity of many wealthy families attracted by its glorious climate gave boat building a new lease of life in the making of pleasure yachts and speedy power boats.

Scene I. Playmates.—Down on a little slip of deserted beach near the village where the shallow water rushes in and out amongst the mossy rocks, three inseparable companions, Jack, Ben and Gracie, are playing. Jack and Ben are sailing their little boats while Gracie watches them. A race is on. Gracie is clapping her small hands in excitement. Soon Jack's boat proves the winner and taking it from the water he gallantly presents it to Gracie. She accepts the gift and rewards the donor with a kiss. At this Ben's small face darkens with anger. Picking up his boat he shakes his fist at the loving couple and stalks majestically away. With arms about each other, Jack and Gracie watch him disappear, their eyes sparkling with mischief.

Scene II. Twenty Years Later—Rivals.

Scene III. Jack Wins Grace.

Scene IV. Jack Determines to Try For a Motor Boat Prize.

Scene V. Jack's Boat is Finished.

Scene VI. Grace Discovers Dynamite Cartridge Placed by Jack's Rival.

Scene VII. Race Day—Jack a Prisoner.—It is the day of the race. Jack and his assistant have gone over his boat for the last time. She is as fit for the race as human care can make her. Jack hands the flag with his race number to the boy and telling him he will meet him up the course starts back to land to find Grace and bring her to the race. Reaching the shore he pulls his boat up and taking his coat starts through the shipyard. Meanwhile Ben has watched his approach. The plan to dynamite Jack's boat having failed, Ben is desperate in his determination that Jack shall not win the race. He crouches down behind the small hoist shed and just as Jack passes him he leaps out and knocks him senseless with a boat pin. Dragging Jack inside the shed he locks the door securely.

Scene VIII. Grace Takes Jack's Place.—The race is starting. Grace is desperate. Must all Jack's hopes and his months of labor be lost? No. She will race Jack's boat herself. Jack has taught her how to run it. She tells the committee. They are delighted at her bravery and the crowd cheer her. Two of the race committee escort her to Jack's boat and see her safely headed for the starting point.

Scene IX. Jack Escapes.—Back in the little shed in the shipyard Jack has come to his senses. His head is throbbing with pain from Ben's savage blow. In vain he has hammered against the locked door and called for help. At the end of the shed is a small door and Jack has with his small pocket knife by infinite patience cut out the nails that held it shut. Now he forces it open a few inches. Next he pushes away the heavy beams that prevent it from opening wide. Finally he crawls out and staggering to his feet starts for the race course.

Scene X. Grace Has Saved the Race for Jack.

Scene XI. The Girl Gets the Prize and Jack Gets the Girl.—Back at the club grounds Grace's victory is a popular one. Unable to keep away Ben has crept up to the front and in sullen rage sees Jack's boat win in spite of his brutal attack on Jack. Grace returns accompanied by two of the race committee. Suddenly through the crowd that surrounds her pushes Jack. In a few hurried words he tells of the attack and catching sight of Ben points him out as his assailant. Ben is ordered from the club grounds. Now the committeeman writes a check for the prize and hands it to Grace. She turns to give it to Jack, but instead of taking it Jack folds her in his arms while the crowd offers cheer after cheer for the winning boat, the girl that won the prize, and the man that won the girl.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

WHEN WOMAN HATES.—Gertie and Ralph are engaged. Juanita, Gertie's friend, is in love with her intended and openly states so. When she cannot prevent the wedding she uses one of her admirers as a tool to destroy the happiness of her

NEXT
S and A
FILM ISSUE

SPECIAL FEATURE

Greatest Sensation of the Season

Taft in Chicago

And at the Ball Game

Many Close Up Views
ISSUE OF
September 20th

Big Dramatic Subject

GRATITUDE

(Length Approx 950 feet)

A great story—Beautifully interpreted—Capital photography.—

ISSUE OF
September 22nd

Another Dramatic Masterpiece!

"THE BROTHERS"

(Length Approx. 970 feet)

¶ This is the third of a great series of problem plays, which is making a tremendous hit all over the country. ¶ Advertise it with our beautiful six-color litho poster, 10 cents each. Write for it now, the supply is limited.

ISSUE OF Wednesday, Sept. 29th

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

Latest Song Slides Moving Picture Supplies

First Class Independent Film Service

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL CO.

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Main Office: 214 Sixth Avenue near 14th Street - - NEW YORK

Branch Office: 118 Bower Street, Jersey City Heights. Tel. 4006 R Jersey.

Mr. Exhibitor:

If you are not getting the money let us show you how. We will manage your house, build up the business and charge you a percentage only on the increase over present business.

We also book better class vaudeville acts, singers, piano players, operators and drummers—can equip your house complete—twelve years experience.

Call or write

ELCO AMUSEMENT COMPANY

612 Ashland Block CHICAGO

LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL

equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

Released Monday September 20th

When Woman Hates

The plot is based upon two girls loving the same man. Not being able to gain his love, the girl tries to destroy the happiness of her fortunate rival. She succeeds for a time, but truth wins out at last. LENGTH, 750 FEET.

Released Thursday, September 23rd

The Conquering Hero

The race has been won. The hero is invited for a great reception to be given in his honor. He is held up by a tramp, who in his place is honored, but the pleasure is of short duration. LENGTH, 730 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

former friend. She sends him a note to meet her at 11 o'clock at night in her room. She, however, gives the address of the young married couple in place of hers.

When Ralph accidentally enters and sees the stranger in his wife's room he knocks him down. He does not believe the assurance of his wife that the meeting was incidental. He drives her from home while the intruder is taken away. The knock has robbed him of his senses. Not being a dangerous lunatic he is allowed to go his own way.

Ralph's young wife worked for some time to make a living, but now on account of sickness she is on the verge of starvation. When the unfortunate victim once met Ralph's wife he was taken aback but is unable to connect her with his own life. But when he meets his former sweetheart he regains his senses. He attacks her on the street and only by the interference of the police she is saved from harm. In full power of his senses he explains to Ralph the true circumstances. Ralph at once begins a search for his wife's whereabouts. It is a strange incident that she is found in front of his house broken down from hunger. She is taken into the house, there recognized by Ralph and taken back never to leave again. Length, 750 feet.

THE CONQUERING HERO.—The boat races are over. Franklin is the hero of the day. He won the gold medal, which is presented to him by the judges. He is cheered all around and hero worshipping is soon at its height. Hardly has the fact been known and the hero has arrived at home when he receives an invitation from the "Athletic Club" of a little town, "asking the honor of his presence at their anniversary."

He accepts and is soon on his way to receive more honors. His automobile breaks down and he is compelled to walk six miles. On his way he is held up by a tramp, relieved of his clothes and incidentally of the gold medal and compelled to don the tramp's suit. A lonely horseback rider does not fare any better. He, too, is held up by the tramp's companion and relieved of his outer garments.

The two tramps are greatly surprised when reaching the town to be received with such honors. The hero in disguise makes love to the chairman's daughter. A banquet is given in his Honor, and while the second tramp acts as his valet, everything progresses smoothly.

When, however, the chairman, who is also the county judge, is called to his office to attend to two tramps who have just been arrested, the trouble begins. The two tramps are none others but the two gentlemen just held up. When the "pseudo-hero" enters the judge's office, his bride on his arm, the two prisoners recognize him as the tramp who held them up, and at once a chase begins after the fleeing hero. After many obstacles they are caught and put in prison. Length, 730 feet.

A FISH STORY.—Jack is going fishing notwithstanding the objections of his wife. Two friends decide to follow him. Jack throws out his line but whenever he catches a fish the friends exchange the same for an old shoe or other articles of equal value. At last he fishes a note out of the sea telling him, "there is only one sucker there today and that is the one fishing." Jack is furious and cannot see the joke. On the way home he buys fishes and shows them to his wife as the wonderful catch he made. The friends, however, work another joke on Jack. They throw a note through the window reading as follows: "Jack, old boy, come back and we will bite. Forgive our rudeness. Miss Fish."

The dark clouds on Jack's matrimonial sky caused by the jealousy of his wife are easily dispersed after explanations are made and the laughing friends are seen through the window. Length, 510 feet.

OLD LOVE LETTERS.—While the young wife is looking for something in her trunk she spies some old love letters which she reads over again. Just then the door bell rings and her lady friend calls. Hubby, who forgot something, returns. Going to the bedroom he finds the letters and is horrified to read letters containing dates with his wife. Furious, he denounces her, runs out of the house and straight away to his old time friends. He does not give them a chance to explain. In his jealousy he tries to lay hands on them but is roughly handled himself. When at last he returns and accuses his wife of perfidy, showing the letters as evidence, she bursts out laughing, pointing to the dates which are more than four years old. Hubby is cured of his jealousy, but the old love letters are burned so as not to make any more mischief. Length, 400 feet.

PATHE FRERES.

SUITORS' COMPETITION.—This wholesome comedy, which abounds in many original and amusing scenes, shows how a pretty and charming heiress puts her numerous admirers to a test, that she might be able to decide upon the one most fitted to become her husband, judging him from a physical, courageous and gallant point of view. In the first picture the young woman enters the room with her attentive father, and as the latter presents the young men who are desirous to marry her, the maiden carefully scrutinizes each one, picking out the few whom she thinks most fitted to enter the trying competition which will decide the fate of the victorious.

The first test is a foot race in which the young men participate, and as the signal to start is given, one fellow, the smallest of the lot, is late in getting away, but after a little encouragement he manages to tag on behind, but has little hope of winning the contest. The stoutest fellow of the lot is the victorious one. In the next contest, which is heavy-weight lifting, the same fellow wins with ease, and finally in the boxing contest he proves himself the most worthy one by knocking all the rest down as soon as they appear before him. Finally it is decided that the big fellow is the lucky one, and as he steps forward to receive his prize, in the person of the happy heiress, a fire breaks out in the house. The maiden calls for a volunteer to rescue her little dog, which is in the burning place, and at this request all the contestants lose their courage and will not dare enter the building. The little man who has been so unfortunate in every game, dashes into the place and comes out with the dog safely in his arms. The happy girl is so elated over the affair that she turns from her victorious suitor, who has shown himself to be a coward in the face of danger, and taking the young hero in her fond embrace, she promises to become his wife. Length, 518 feet.

CAUGHT IN HIS OWN TRAP.—This is a good comedy with a subject capable of imparting a little lesson to the egotist, who judges others by himself, and whose assumed righteous indignation wilts like a leaf without water when the trap which he sets for another catches himself and shows up his small character in its true aspect.

The man in question has a very pretty daughter, and his private secretary, who is a clever youth, is madly in love with the charming maiden. The young couple, although being warned many times that they must cease their attentions to one another, never miss the opportunity to have a little chat, and incidentally steal a few kisses when the harsh old man is not about. They have many narrow escapes in their love-making, but always manage to cover their tracks by being very busy with other matters when the old fellow puts in his appearance. The latter is contemplating an extended trip, but before leaving, he decides upon a scheme whereby he will be able to learn if there are any love scenes going on during his absence. He takes a camera, and after placing it on a shelf, conceals the bulb, which is attached to a long tube, in the folds on the couch. Everything is nicely prepared when the servant girl comes into the room, and forgetting all about the trap, the amorous old fellow embraces the girl, and the pair seat themselves on the dangerous spot, with the result that their picture is taken in a very loving attitude. Before the man has time to remove the negative, his daughter comes in, and discovering the camera, takes out the picture, which gives her the benefit of a good laugh at the expense of her enraged father. Length, 374 feet.

THE TOWER OF NESLE.—This historical drama is adapted from Alexander Dumas' famous novel of the same title, and the events which form the thread of the story take place during the latter part of the reign of Phillippe Le Bel, and the first part of the reign of his eldest son, Louis X., Kings of France. The different characters are portrayed by the following Parisian artists, whose names have become familiar through their clever delineations in some of our previous art films: M. Henri Krauss, of the Sarah Bernhardt Theater, as "Buridan"; M. Alexandre, of the Comedie Francaise, as "Gaultier d'Aulnay," and Mme. Andree Hegard, of the Antoine Theater, as "Marguerite of Burgundy, afterwards the Queen."

The first wife of Louis X. was Marguerite, the eldest of the three beautiful daughters of the Duke of Burgundy. Previous to her marriage to the King, illegitimate twin children were born to her, and in order to remove her father, who insists upon her entering a convent, Marguerite persuades Buridan, a page in the Duke's service and the father of the children, to assassinate the Duke in his sleep. After the first crime the heartless woman gives orders to her servant, Landry, to take the children away and kill them, in order that no suspicion as to the death of her father shall fall upon her. She also writes to Buridan, informing him of what she has done, and beseeching him to leave the country that she might never see him again, as she is about to marry the King, and become Queen of France.

The servant, Landry, less inhuman than the mother, takes the children from the palace and leaves them on the steps of the Cathedral of Notre Dame, but not until he has marked a cross in each of their wrists does he abandon the little outcasts. The children are rescued, however, and grow up to be two fine young noblemen, known by the names of Philippe and Gaultier d'Aulnay.

Buridan returns to Paris some years after and by chance meets his son Philippe in the tavern of Orisini, but fails to recognize the young man. The latter has come to seek his brother, Gaultier, a constant attendant at the court, and a favorite with the Queen. Both Philippe and Buridan are recipients of notes from a masked lady, requesting them to come to the tower of Nesle that night. Eager for adventure, the two men keep the appointment, in spite of the warning of Gaultier, who tells them of the bodies of strangers so often found in the Seine below the tower. That night Philippe is killed like so many others, but the servant, Landry, recognizing Buridan, allows him to escape by jumping from a window into the river beneath, where he swims to the opposite shore in safety.

The next day, disguised as a conjurer, Buridan obtains access to the Queen's palace, and in the presence of the latter he informs Gaultier of his brother's death. Gaultier demands justice of the Queen, who, in her usual cruel demeanor, designates Buridan as the assassin and has him thrown into prison, but not before she becomes aware of his identity. Realizing that her former lover holds it in his power to ruin her reputation, Marguerite feels impelled to visit him in his cell, where she begs him to return her letters. The imprisoned man agrees to the bargain upon condition that she will release him from prison, otherwise he threatens an exposure of her many crimes. The Queen is forced to obey, but determined to entrap Buridan if possible, she arranges a meeting with him in the tower, and the latter promises to keep the appointment. After receiving the casket which is supposed to contain the letters, she gives the prisoner the key to her apartment, and allows him to escape. Upon opening the case, the Queen is horrified to find it empty, and beaming with rage she leaves the place, vowing vengeance upon her deceiver.

Buridan, suspecting that the Queen is playing him false, gives the key to young Gaultier, who, jealous of what he thinks is a favor shown to another, sets out for the palace. He has barely left the tavern before Landry enters, and reiterates to the amazed Buridan the story of his two sons, telling him how the children were marked with a cross on the wrist. Buridan starts up in horror, for he well remembers that Philippe's wrist was so marked, and that Gaultier also bears the same insignia. With frantic haste he hurries off to the tower, but too late—Marguerite's assassins, waiting for Buridan, have killed young Gaultier instead. Over the young nobleman's dead body Buridan tells the frantic Queen that she has killed his and her son. Length, 1,088 feet.

CARELESS TRAMP.—One of the several tramps who are living in huts on the outskirts of a little village, wanders away from his companions, and going over to a haystack, he lies down to have a quiet little rest. In his happy idleness, the careless fellow lights his pipe, and some sparks set the hay on fire. The tramp barely escapes with his life, and rushes away down the country road. Some peasants working in the field see the fire, and while part of them rush off to give the alarm to the country fire department, the others start in pursuit of the fleeing incinerator. Soon the volunteer fire fighters are upon the scene, and, after a fierce fight, they finally extinguish the blaze, but not until it has destroyed the year's crop of hay. So incensed are the peasants that they form a posse and start in pursuit of the tramp who has caused such a loss through his dire carelessness. After a long and tiresome chase they finally overtake the fugitive, and, carrying him to a tree, they string him up, leaving him to his fate. A woman soon comes along and being touched with pity for the unfortunate man, she cuts the rope, releasing the exhausted fellow, who returns to his companions, vowing vengeance upon his chastisers. Length, 574 feet.

CAUCASIAN CUSTOMS.—This interesting picture, which is an excellent example of perfect photography, will be beneficial to the public on account of its rare educational qualities. The quaint customs of the Caucasian people are shown as they turn out in gala attire to welcome and entertain their much-beloved Governor-General, who arrives in their midst, accompanied by his staff, and all being very democratic, they make their presence happily felt among the simple people, who welcome them with open arms. After reviewing the troops, the old General listens to the complaints of the people and with his kind words cheers them up, making all feel the better for meeting him. Finally, after official business is attended to, he enters into the spirit of the festivities which have been prepared for him, and with every little mark of pleasure he shows his kind approval of their efforts. Length, 387 feet.

SERVANT'S GOOD JOKE.—This clever comedy will be welcomed by many of the old patrons, owing to the fact that the principal character is played by one of the best comedians who ever portrayed a comedy part in our pictures. This gentleman will be readily remembered by his excellent work in "The Unskillful Skater," which is only one of his many great successes that has left an indelible impression upon the mind of the public.

In the first picture the hero receives a letter from his intended father-in-law, stating that as everything is prepared for the reception at which his engagement is to be announced, it is hoped that he will not fail to put in his appearance. The fellow gets ready, but before leaving he takes a little bite to eat. The servant girl is in love with him, and, realizing that all hope of winning him has vanished, she plans a little joke, which might be the means of spoiling his chance of making a very great impression at the reception. The maid goes to the kitchen to make some salad, but instead of using olive oil, she puts in a large quantity of castor oil. When the fellow is eating the salad he has his suspicions that something is radically wrong, but in his great hurry, he partakes of a large portion of the insidious stuff, and starts on his way. Arriving at the party, he is shown in, and forced to meet all the guests, who are anxiously awaiting his arrival. He is enjoying himself immensely when he begins to feel the ill effects of the nauseous dose of oil, and in the subsequent events the whole place is thrown into an uproar on account of his wild actions. Finally unable to

Now Booking
Great Northern Film Mfg'r
Of New up-to-date Subject

Dr. Cook's Reception into Copenhagen

Write for prices for first five days of Release —

"The Independent Service"

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 E. 23rd St. near 2nd Ave., New York City

SLIDES SLIDES
LATEST AND BEST
REMICK & CO.

When I Fell in Love with You.
Moon Bird.
I Wish Someone Would Fall in Love with Me.
If I Had the World to Give You.
I Lost My Gal.
It Makes a Difference When You Are With the Girl You Love.
The Garden of Roses.
Honey On Our Honeymoon.
Lady Love.
Pretty Soft for Me (Shapiro).
Cherokee Maid (Rossiter).
What's the Matter with the Motorman? (Head, Westman).

DR. COOK
and the North Pole Region
Price $5.00 Per Set With Lecture
EXCELSIOR SLIDE CO.
A. L. HARSTN, Mgr.
Exclusive Slide Makers to JEROME H. REMICK & CO.
138 EAST 14th ST.
NEW YORK

HUDSON = FULTON CELEBRATION

A set of 18 Slides depicting the most important events in the life of Hudson and Fulton.
With lecture printed on Slides, thereby saving the cost of lecturer.
Pictorially and historically correct.
Price $5.00 Per Set

RENT 2 REELS, $6

A week, three changes; 10,000 Roll Tickets, 90c; Condensers, 50c; 50 Electric Carbons, $1.15, Electric Lamps, $2.00; Announcements Slides, 15c; Prepared Glass for writing or drawing, 10c; Stereopcons, $12.00; Portable Booth, $10.00. Free Catalogue of everything in the business.

$157.75 or will Rent for $5 a week.

L. HETZ, 302 E. 23d St., New York

MERCHANDISE.

For Rent—6,000 feet film, 3 sets song slides, $12 weekly, one shipment; 12,000 feet, $20. For Sale—Power's and Edison one-pin machine, $60. Slightly used film, 1 and 2 cents per foot. Will buy film, machines. H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wis.

START RIGHT WITH THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

and you're in the business to stay. The people want to go night after night, but their eyes can't stand it if the pictures are blurred and shaky.

For clear, steady pictures the Edison is the one machine you can depend on to bring back the same crowd every night—the home and family crowd. That's the kind of patronage that will put your business on its feet.

Write to-day for full particulars, booklet and a copy of the "Edison Kinetogram."

EDISON FILMS
Releases of September 21th and 24th

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 21

THE ORDEAL

Dramatized from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." The second chapter in the life of Jean Valjean, the reformed convict and hero of "The Price of a Soul." His past record unknown, through his many acts of benevolence he attains affluence and authority—all of which he voluntarily surrenders by declaring his true identity to save another from punishment. Dramatic in the extreme.

No. 6518 Code, VERSALLESA Approx. Length, 950 feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 24

A KNIGHT FOR A NIGHT

Comedy. The story of the midnight adventures of the bagman's uncle from Dickens' "Pickwick Papers." Asleep on the steps of an old stage coach, after a drinking bout, he finds himself in the midst of people of bygone days and becomes the hero of some exciting adventures. An unusually good film.

No. 6519 Code, VERSALZT Approx. Length, 370 feet

TRUE LOVE NEVER RUNS SMOOTHLY

Comedy. Two lovers seated in a buggy, with eyes for naught but each other, are noticed by a small boy, who cuts the traces and starts the buggy on a wild, eventful, backward course, finally winding up in a lake. This film is a scream from start to finish.

No. 6520 Code, VERTEBROSO Approx. Length, 230 feet

LOVE AND WAR

A dramatic incident of Waterloo. The great ball at Brussels on the eve of the battle shows two lovers enjoying its pleasures. A call to arms ends festivities. While standing at a window awaiting her lover's return, a large painting nearby dissolves into a scene of the battlefield showing her lover lying dead in the foreground.

No. 6521 Code, VERTEDEROS Approx. Length, 400 feet

Releases of September 28th and October 1st

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 28

Why Girls Leave Home—Comedy

No. 6522 Aprrox. Length, 1.000 feet
Code, VERTEDORA

RELEASED OCTOBER 1

The Wallace Jewels—Light Comedy

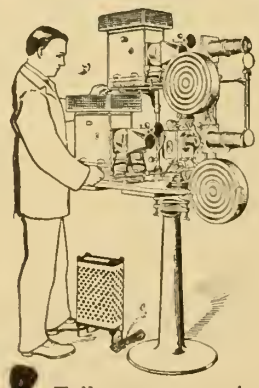
No. 6523 Approx. Length, 725 feet
Code, VERTEDOURO

Two Of A Kind—Comedy

No. 6524 Code, VERTELLES Approx. Length, 275 feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.
MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.
New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents
P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.
Dealers in All Principal Cities



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

stand the strain any longer, the poor fellow rushes from the house and hurries home. Soon he receives a note from the old man stating that the engagement is all off, on account of his unbecoming conduct. The servant admits her guilt, and confesses her love, with the result that she wins. Length, 548

TRAINED BIRDS.—This picture, which is a reproduction of a famous vaudeville act, is of a clean-cut, high-class type of entertainment, and is bound to meet with approval on account of the cleverness of the numerous birds who perform all sorts of amazing tricks. The ingenuity and patience of the persons responsible for this little entertainment can never be over-appreciated when one stops to consider the length of time it takes to teach a bird to do tricks with almost human intelligence. The photography is perfect and every detail of the performance is clearly reproduced upon the screen. Length, 397 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

CROOKED PATH.—Harold Grigsby, a clever and polished scoundrel, whose aristocratic connections have gained for him entree into fashionable society, succeeded so well in covering up his crooked dealings that no one even suspected him of being anything but a gentleman of honor and integrity.

Now Harold Grigsby, although a blood relation, was not a particular favorite of the old mayor's; but knowing that a will was being drawn up by the family notary, he determines to be present at the promised reading of the document to learn just how far he is remembered in the bequests.

In the library of the stately old home one evening, the important event takes place. The old lawyer, conscious of the solemnity of the occasion, is reading the will in his slow, methodical way. Around him are gathered the members of the household. In the background and aloof from the rest stands the sullen and morose Harold, evincing no sign of outward emotion, yet inwardly awaiting in eager anticipation the portioning of the property. A box containing the family jewels, worth thousands of dollars, is brought out, and the old man points with pride to the precious ornaments which were once the treasured keepsakes of his dear departed wife. Telling the girls that when he is laid at rest the jewels would pass to them and for them to cherish these heirlooms as they would their own honor, no one notices the look of avarice that shoots from the eyes of Harold. The reading of the will continues, and when Harold learns that his share is much less than that of his fair cousins, he mutters a biter oath under his breath and silently leaves the room.

He then hastens to the home of "Chug" Sloan, a crook, to whom he unfolds a scheme by which they might get possession of the Grigsby jewels. Chug's wife, a poor but honest woman, overhears something of the plot, but not enough to learn upon whom the crime was to be committed.

Returning to the house, Chug is sent around to the library window to keep close watch on the other members of the household, and when he finds the old mayor alone he is to go through the window and seize the box of jewels and pass them out through the door to Harold, who would be waiting to receive them; then return out through the window and meet Harold at an appointed spot, where his share of the swag will be given him.

The programme is carried out to the letter as far as getting the treasure is concerned. Chug enters the room and with one blow of a heavy cudgel smashes the lamp on the library table, leaving the room in darkness. Then quickly handing the box through the door to his confederate, he makes his escape through the window. But the crafty Harold has no intention of dividing the spoils. He will bury the jewels and then defy his ignorant confederate to force him to relinquish them. When Chug reaches the spot appointed for the meeting, Harold is nowhere to be seen. Then, realizing that he has been duped, he swears vengeance on his crooked partner, and starts away before the alarm of robbery can be given. He is making his way through the garden in the rear of the house, when his sharp eyes discern the form of a man running rapidly towards the stables. Recognizing his accomplice, he stealthily follows him and sees him procure a spade, and then strike out towards the woods nearby.

Still keeping him in sight, Chug trails him to a lonely spot, where he sees the crafty scoundrel remove the jewels from the box, wrap them up in his handkerchief, and bury them. Then disposing of his spade, he hastens away. "You will give me the sack, will you, Mr. Grigsby," growls the crook, as with his bare hands he uncovers the treasure and removing the jewels from the handkerchief thrusts them into his pocket, and chuckling over his shrewdness hurries away to his favorite grogshop.

Having procured enough drink to make him reckless, Chug repairs to his home and shows his wife the result of his night's work. The poor creature is grieved and frightened by the disclosure and begs him to in some manner return the jewels before they are traced to his door. Laughing at her fears, the brutal crook places them in an old sock, and hiding them in a large chest, declares his intention of going for more drink

The detective at the manor is just about to leave to start his men at work on the case, when a pale, frightened woman enters the room and asking for the master of the house delivers the stolen jewels into his hands. With a gasp of astonishment and chagrin Harold staggers back and all but betrays his guilt before he can regain his composure. "Where did you get possession of these jewels?" sharply demands the detective. "My husband brought them home, sir. He got them from that man," pointing to Harold. With the cry of an enraged beast, the guilty man springs forward as though he would crush the shrinking woman. Seizing him roughly, the detective holds him back and tells him that he must accompany him to the house of his suspected accomplice and there face him on the charge. Seeing that resistance is useless, Harold agrees to go. Seeing that he is trapped, the rascally nephew makes a break to escape, but a bullet from the officer's pistol wounds him in the leg and he surrenders. The two criminals are handcuffed together and taken before the old mayor, who identifies Chug as his assailant. The pair of crooks are then led away to prison, while the old mayor, overjoyed over the return of his precious jewels, rewards the poor wife by promising to take care of her and give her a home on his estate.

THE BACHELOR'S VISIT.—Old Batch is discovered sitting in front of his swell club trying to get a little fresh air, as the weather is extra warm. His old friend, Tom Breeze, calls on him and invites him to take a trip out in the country to his home, where everything is cool and pleasant. Batch consents on Breeze promising to be back in the city the next day.

The next scene shows Breeze and Batch just making the ferryboat after a hard run. If Batch was hot at the start, he is hotter now, and as he jumps on the boat he tells Breeze what he thinks of him. He is so mad that he walks off, forgetting to take his satchel. As he leaves, a sneak thief who has been standing at the side of the boat sees a chance to make a haul, and after finding out no one is looking, picks up the satchel and makes off. In the meantime, Batch has been standing on the upper deck, where Breeze has taken him to get the fresh air, when he suddenly discovers the loss of his satchel. Breeze tells him where he left it and together they start to find it. On reaching the lower deck Batch sees the thief with the satchel open, in the act of stealing his box of cigars. With a bound he is on him, but the thief escapes, while Batch blames Breeze for leaving the satchel behind. Next Batch is seen arriving at Breeze's home and being introduced to the family. There is a general family row, from which Breeze finally escapes and goes to find his friend. Breeze finds Batch looking over a time-table in order to find out what time the next train leaves.

The last picture shows Batch telling what he thinks of Breeze and his entire family.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE UNSPOKEN GOOD-BYE.—Tragic stories are best when possessing a happy ending, and in "The Unspoken Good-bye" this requirement is met through perfectly natural means. The reality of the story, its simplicity and directness are aided to by the art of the stage manager, and one of the scenes is truly sensational, involving the premature explosion of a quarter of a ton of dynamite in a mighty blast. Tom Jennings is a quarryman, sober, industrious and prosperous. He is happily married and little Lilla, their daughter, a child of six, makes complete their happiness, a happiness marred only at times by Ruth Jennings' impatience. The scene opens in Jennings' comfortable home, where he lingers over the breakfast table until the clock warns him that he must be starting for the quarry unless he would be late. Ruth asks him to get some coal before he goes, but her request has been too long delayed and Tom explains that he is late as it is. Piqued, she refuses him a good-bye kiss, but even as the door closes she repents her temper and sends little Lilla after him with her good-bye. Arrived at the quarry, just in time to escape a fine, the foreman details him to a new task and Tom gives his coat to Harry Sommers, who slips it on as the easiest way of carrying it to where Tom will spend the noon hour with him. But before Harry can rid himself of the garment there is a premature explosion of a huge blast and some of the workmen, fleeing from the danger, are caught under the mighty mass of rock. Willing hands quickly begin the task of freeing their companions, some of them with bodies so badly mangled that only the clothing permits identification. Among these is Tom Jennings, and word is sent to his home. Poor Ruth rushes to the scene, but is gently drawn away by sympathetic friends and is led back to the cottage, where she is tormented by the thoughts of that last farewell of the morning. But little Lilla has followed her mother to the quarry, and her sharp eyes discover the fact that while the coat is that of her father the other garments are not. She tells the foreman, who recalls having sent Tom to another part of the quarry, and Lilla runs to him, taking him home to assure the weeping Ruth that the unspoken good-bye was not the last farewell, the picture ending with a pretty tableau in which the happy Tom sits with his wife and daughter beside him, giving thanks that it was not he who was caught in the cruel grasp of the explosion. Length, 425 feet.

THE SIREN'S NECKLACE.—Jean Perthe, one of the best-looking young fishermen of the little village of Kuban, seeks to win the love of Susette, the belle of the community. With his scanty savings he purchases a necklace, cheap beads in imitation of pearls, but the best his purse affords. Joyously he comes to offer his gift to the pretty maiden, but she is not so easily to be won. She regards with disdain the shabby bauble, and poor Jean is distressed. He comes to serenade his charmer, but his music is no more potent than his pearls, for Susette pretends to be annoyed by his singing, though the strains of melody brings from her home at the bottom of the sea one of Neptune's daughters, who pleads with the fisherman to join her in the sea. Despairing of winning Susette's love, Jean heeds the appeal and plunges into the water after the disappearing siren. Some of the villagers are attracted by Susette's cries and two old men hastily procure musical instruments and continue the serenade, plunging after two sirens who are attracted by the music. Others hearing of their success join the concert until the entire village band is playing upon the shore, but they are driven away by their angry wives. Meanwhile Jean and the siren are having a pleasant time at the bottom of the sea. He tells of the rejection of the necklace and is given a handsome string of real pearls. Ikey Fromitz, one of the old men, does not fare so well, for Neptune catches sight of him endeavoring to carry to the surface two bags of gold, and he assists Ikey's progress toward the shore with the sharp tines of his trident. Jean soon follows, and now Susette is all smiles. Her coquetry is gone and she tenderly welcomes the lover she thought to be lost. Her joy is made complete by the gift of the necklace, and Jean turns a deaf ear to the renewed calls of the Siren. Length, 530 feet.

FANTINE.—This is the second in the series of the films de luxe, prepared by the Vitagraph from incidents in Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables," the first of which was "The Galley Slave." This second incident deals with the unfortunate Fantine and Jean Valjean, now a respectable member of society, thanks to the generous action of the good bishop, and Mayor of the town, is known as M. Madeline. Fantine, betrayed and deserted, is forced to leave her little girl, Cosette, with the evil Thenardier, who abuses the unfortunate child and persistently bleeds the mother with demands for money. She is unable to obtain work and is forced to sell her beautiful hair for ten francs to send Thenardier, who declares that Cosette needs warmer clothing. Later she is told that Cosette is ill and that money is needed for medical attendance. She cannot supply the sum, but encountering a traveling dentist, who is searching for sound teeth from which to construct false plates, she sells her teeth for the needed sum. She is exhausted by the shock of the extraction and Javert, the cruel Inspector of Police, jeers at her. She has refused his advances and he is determined to win her, persecuting her with his attentions. M. Madeline saves Fantine from his importunities and incurs the enmity of Javert. In exerting his prodigious strength to release the citizen Fauchelvant from beneath an overturned cart, he arouses the suspicions of Javert, who was a keeper in the galleys where Jean served his sentence. Javert recalls Jean's almost superhuman strength and, to test his theory, tells M. Madeline that he suspects Champmathier of being Jean Valjean. He arrests Champmathier and brings into court a number of convicts to testify to his identity, which they do readily enough. Jean, unwilling to see an innocent man suffer, discloses his identity, freeing himself but bringing upon himself the rigors of the law. His arrest is so great a shock to Fantine, now deprived of her benefactor, that she falls dead as Jean once more is held in the grasp of the law. Length, 997 feet.

LICENSED FILMS FOR THE WEEK.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 20.

BIOGRAPH—In Old Kentucky (Dramatic).
LUBIN—When Woman Hates (Dramatic).
SELIG—The Bachelor's Visit (Dramatic).
SELIG—False Alarm (Comedy).
PATHE—Suitor's Competition (Comedy).
PATHE—Caught in His Own Trap (Comedy).

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21.

EDISON—The Ordeal (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Saved from the Quicksands (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Taking in a Reef (Comedy).
VITAGRAPH—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dramatic).
VITAGRAPH—The Siren's Necklace (Dramatic).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 22.

GAUMONT—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dr.).
GAUMONT—Dropped From the Clouds (Comedy).
ESSANAY—Gratitude (Dramatic).
PATHE—The Tower of Nesle (Dramatic).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 23.

BIOGRAPH—A Fair Exchange (Dramatic).
LUBIN—The Conquering Hero (Comedy).
SELIG—Stricken Blind (Dramatic).

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 24.

EDISON—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (Com.).
EDISON—A Knight for a Night (Comedy).
EDISON—Love and War (Dramatic).
KALEM—The Winning Boat (Dramatic).
PATHE—Careless Tramp (Comedy).
PATHE—Caucasian Customs (Scenic).

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 25.

GAUMONT—On the Crest of the Waves (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—All for a Nickel (Comedy).
VITAGRAPH—Fantine (Dramatic).
PATHE—Servant's Good Joke (Comedy).
PATHE—Trained Birds (Scenic).

Kalem Films

Issue of September 17th, 1909

LENGTH 925 FEET

A splendid dramatic story of life, taken in a little New England coast village, exploiting the remarkably clever handling of her sweetheart's motor boat by a pretty young girl. Containing a race scene that is so intensely exciting it will thrill even the most blase moving picture audience.

Free Descriptive Lecture to all applicants.

Kalem Four Colored Posters can be obtained from A. B. Co., Cleveland, O.

KALEM CO., Inc.
Licenced of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.
235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

SATISFACTION
In every slide or your money back

AD-SLIDES
75c.
Prepaid
Our ad-Slides or Specials are each made from a special design; no stock blanks to fill in, but a special design to your order. Colored, of course

Our 50c Baby Show Slides are A-1, and our Announcement Slides at 3 for $1 are great

SONG SLIDES AT $3.50 A SET
Send for Lists

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

WILL BUY Moving Picture Theatre in city of ten thousand or over. Eastern New York or Massachussetts. Every detail, first letter.
Answer to THESPA, care of M. P. World

BIOGRAPH FILMS
TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 20, 1909.

IN OLD KENTUCKY
A STIRRING EPISODE OF THE CIVIL WAR.

At the beginning of the Civil War, Kentucky attempted to hold a neutral position between the belligerants, and her sons decided for themselves which side's cause to take up; hence it was that many a Kentucky home was divided. That condition afforded a story for this Biograph subject, showing two brothers enlisting against each other and afterwards meeting under most trying circumstances, where it became a struggle between duty and kindred love. No subject has ever been produced with such a succession of tense situations, concluding with the return of the brothers, one 'neath triumphant banner, while the other is shown ragged and homeless for the "Lost Cause." This final meeting is undoubtedly the most impressive ever witnessed—the brothers, each with his cherished flag, grasping hands, typifying the motto of Kentucky, "United we stand, divided we fall."

LENGTH, 983 FEET.

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 23, 1909.

A FAIR EXCHANGE
FREE ADAPTATION OF GEORGE ELIOT'S "SILAS MARNER."

The Biograph's adaptation of this popular novel makes Master Marner a cobbler instead of a linen weaver. This change, however, does not weaken, nor make less romantic, the story. Silas, while giving succor to a dying friend, is accused of robbing him. The circumstantial evidence is so strong that he is shunned by his former associates, so leaves his native village for another section of the country. Through this calumny he becomes a niggard and misanthrope, hoarding the pay for his labors in shoe-mending. He is robbed of all, and is in despair, when a waif wanders into his hovel. Arousing himself from the lethargy induced by his woe, he is amazed to see the child lying asleep on the very hearthstone that hid his gold. This is his recompense, for the advent of the little one changes his nature entirely.

LENGTH, 995 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK
GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

A NEW WAY TO PAINT SIGNS
WITH THE BUTTS SIGN WRITING OUTFITS

Anyone can paint all kind of signs and show cards in half the time required by the old way and much better. We furnish these Special Outfits complete with ten alphabets and three sets of figures of the most modern styles of the day, from 2 to 12 inches in height, not printed alphabets but the real letter, cut out of the most durable material. We also furnish with this outfit a complete book of instructions for painting all kinds of signs and cards and a selection of beautiful designs, and guarantee that anyone can do perfect lettering as soon as he receives the outfit.

Special Price For a Short Time Only $5.00. Send in your order to-day.
None sent C. O. D. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money refunded.

THE BUTTS SIGN & NOVELTY CO., 228 Temple Court Bldg. DENVER, COLORADO

INDEPENDENT FILMS

GREAT NORTHERN.

HOW DR. NICOLA PROCURED THE CHINESE CANE.—The Chinese cane with which this story deals is indicative of the highest clerical and scientific position in the superior monacnism in China.

Three such canes exist, and under normal circumstances the three elders in the Lamamonastary are in charge of these insignias, through which they can obtain the knowledge of the secrets of life and death.

One of the elders is dead, a substitute must be elected, and a wise and pious highpriest is chosen. The cane is sent to him as indication of his new dignity but is lost on the road; white hands get hold of it, and after a good many adventures it is by the beginning of this story in a sailor's possession, whose name is China Peat.

China Peat is going to die. He stays in an old dilapidated building in Whitechapel. He sends for his solicitor, Mr. Wilrey, who once saved his life. In return China Peat now offers him the Chinese cane. Mr. Wilrey does not pay much attention to his stories about the enormous power and value of the cane, but he takes it and keeps it as a curiosity.

As soon as China Peat has closed his eyes Dr. Nicola appears. He wants the cane and has already spent a fortune in looking for it. Nor does Dr. Nicola now lose his courage, but the next day he pays a visit to Mr. Wilrey, offering him a considerable sum of money for the cane. But Mr. Wilrey is in no need of money and does not want to sell the cane. However, the doctor will not give up his scheme and tells Mr. Wilrey that he will possess himself of it by fair means or foul.

Assisted by two clever but unscrupulous helpers, Dr. Nicola one evening carries off Mr. Wilrey's daughter from a ball. She is taken out on board Dr. Nicola's ship, and the father is in a letter advised to send the cane and a sum of money down to the jetty; if not, the young lady will never come back again. The old gentleman is in despair and consults with his daughter's sweetheart. The young man summons the police, and as soon as Dr. Nicola learns this Mr. Wilrey receives another letter informing him that his daughter has now been carried off and that he may advertise in the Sidney Gazette later on, if he should wish to come to terms.

An investigation gives Mr. Wilrey reason to believe that his daughter has been taken to a small island in the Southern Ocean. An expedition is equipped and the pursuit begins.

The island is found, but Mr. Wilrey, who is not so quick as his helpers, is separated from them and two men overpower him and take him prisoner. He is blindfolded and brought before Dr. Nicola, who quietly with an ironical smile takes the Chinese cane from his pocket and then politely takes leave of the astonished gentleman.

The rest of the members of the expedition have in the meantime succeeded in releasing Miss Wilrey. As they are all ready to go on board Mr. Wilrey is missing. At last they find him in the forest tied to a tree. Father and daughter are now once more united, and the circumstance that Dr. Nicola got hold of the Chinese cane does not diminish their happiness.

PHOENIX FILM COMPANY.

THE ACTOR BURGLAR.—Burglars break in and attempt to rob the home of a prominent actor. The house being situated in the suburbs and some distance from any other, they anticipate no difficulty in accomplishing their purpose.

They gain an entrance to the house, but in so doing arouse the actor, who has his sleeping apartment on the floor above. The actor peers down over the balustrade and sees the three burglars. Not caring to engage in a hand-to-hand conflict with them, and realizing that should he raise an alarm they would escape before help could come, he hits upon a plan. He decides to play burglar himself and get acquainted with his midnight callers. He quickly telephones for the police and then makes himself up. Pulling a complete burglar outfit from his wardrobe trunk, he is soon transformed into a fine-looking burglar. He then ties some sheets together and lets himself cautiously out of the window and descends to the ground. Quickly running around to the other side of the house, he discovers the window through which the burglars had gained entrance to the house and he also enters by the same way. He discovers the burglars busy in the dining room putting away the silverware.

They are startled by a slight noise and quickly put out the lights. The actor sneaks into the room and they quickly overpower him, and are most surprised when they turn up the lights and discover him to be a brother burglar. They all give him the laugh, and tell him he is too late, but he surprises them by disclosing a hidden wall-safe, which he proposes to crack. They are all anxious to get at it, but the leader, who fears they will wake up the owner above, objects. The actor then volunteers to go up and chloroform him, and he quickly ascends to his own room and after a few moments returns and announces that everything is all right.

They then start to get busy again, but the actor proposes that they have something to eat first, his object being to gain time. After the meal they again get busy and are just about to drill the safe, when the police arrive. The actor quickly throws off his disguise and they are all a surprised lot, to discover how they have been duped.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

A SQUAW'S SACRIFICE.—A wealthy merchant, who disapproves of his son's affection for one of his employees, makes him feel that he must go away, so after writing a note of farewell to his sweetheart, with a promise to return when his fortune is made, the boy travels to the Far West. He goes to the mining district, where he is one day taken ill. The men help him to his camp, but in a delirium he wanders away toward the mountains. A band of Indians pass him by, but the young squaw saves him from harm, and finally makes it possible to take him along. He rests comfortably among them, and teaches the little squaw about God. Three years later we find Bob, his little squaw and child very happy. A cowboy in passing gives him a paper, and he comes upon an announcement of the fact that the girl he left behind had inherited a fortune. For a minute his thoughts go back to her, but a small hand placed in his brings him back, and he embraces his child and squaw. Tourists are brought to town, and among them is Mabel, Bob's old sweetheart. She is seated before a tavern when he rides up. He recognizes her, and his greeting is an affectionate one. The squaw sees it, and when Bob turns to present Mabel, she refuses to take her hand, and leaves the two alone. Not all of Mabel's pleadings swerve him, however, and although the temptation to follow her into the tavern is great, he takes the path the squaw did. Late at night Mabel steals from the tavern; the squaw following closely after with knife in hand. Before Mabel takes the final step toward ending her life, she prays. This robs the squaw of all intent to kill, and she goes to embrace her rival, but finds she has jumped into the water. The squaw rescues her, and when Bob comes upon them the squaw is bending over Mabel. She tells him of all. By this time Mabel revives and puts her arms about Bob. The little squaw, feeling that his true happiness lies with Mabel, ends her life with a knife taken from Bob's belt. She places Mabel's hand in Bob's and dies in his arms. This picture teems with human feeling. It is a story very well told and charmingly portrayed. The scenery and acting demand particular commendation.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

DAN BLAKE'S RIVAL.—A thrilling western drama of love, revenge and luck. Dan and Ed, two cowboys, are in love with the beautiful daughter of their boss, George Martin. Ed is a persistent wooer, but Dan is the favored suitor, as is made clear in the opening scene, in which both men make love to the girl while all are on horseback. The boss sends Dan to pay a mortgage, due at Dallas, and gives Dan twelve thousand dollars in cash to pay the same. Dan starts on his journey and the girl rides part of the way with him. Ed, crazed with jealousy, follows the couple. He sees Dan kiss the girl, and the two separate. Ed follows Dan, catches up with him, strikes Dan with his whip and dares him to fight. Dan responds with a swift punch which lays Ed out on the ground. Ed draws his pistol and a terrific fight follows. Dan tries only to secure the pistol, but Ed tries to kill Dan. They fight to the edge of a cliff. A misstep and Dan goes down into the ravine. Horrified, Ed bends over, and believing Dan killed, he mounts his horse and dashes away. But Dan is not dead. His body, after rolling a hundred feet, catches on the projecting bush and he is left hanging in the air, though unconscious. A friendly Indian, passing along the edge of the cliff some hours later, sees Dan's horse, traces the footsteps to the end of the cliff, and, bending down, sees Dan's body caught on the bush. The Indian rides back to his camp nearby and brings with him several other Indians to the rescue of Dan. One of the Indians descends on the rope, ties it to Dan's body, and the other Indians pull both men up to the top of the cliff and to safety. The Indians carry Dan off to their camp and nurse him back to health. As a result of the shock, however, Dan is in a semi-conscious state, and it is made clear that he does not realize what has happened to him. Meanwhile the boss has received a letter from the land company to whom the mortgage was due, telling him that as they had not been paid the money they are sending a representative to demand same. Unless Martin can pay the twelve thousand dollars the land company will sell the property. Martin believes that Dan Blake has run away with the money entrusted to him to pay the mortgage, but the girl insists that Dan is incapable of such an action. A lawyer representing the land company, accompanied by the sheriff of the county, enters and demands the money due on the mortgage. Poor Martin says he cannot pay and breaks down completely at the thought of losing his home. The papers are about to be signed, which will take from Martin the ownership of the "Triple-X" Ranch, when a noise is heard. The girl runs to the door, looks out, and then runs back to her father, telling him that Dan is coming. Enter Dan Blake, supported by the two Indians. Dan produces the pocketbook and explains that an accident to him caused the delay. The mortgage is paid and Dan is left alone with the girl. The girl goes out into the kitchen to get some warm food for Dan. Ed enters. He sees Dan and almost collapses in terror, believing that he is looking at Dan Blake's ghost. Dan enjoys the situation for a moment and then the good-hearted fellow realizes that unrequited love had turned Ed's head, and, happy in the thought that he has won the girl, he indicates that he will never tell anyone of their flight. The girl enters, followed shortly thereafter by her father, who tiptoes out as he sees the lovers in each other's arms.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

MUTOSCOPE MACHINE for sale, made by American Mutoscope and Biograph Company. Address, T. J. Stewart Company, Erie corner of Fifth street, Jersey City, N. J.

FOR SALE—Cheap: 1 Power's machine, with 2 sets of lenses; 1 rheostat and re-winder; 58 non-breakable opera chairs; 1 double throw switch; 1 steel booth, 6 x 6 x 6; 1 electric fan, 15-inch; 1 graphaphone, large size. Correspond quick to ROTHERMEL BROS, Watsontown, Pa.

APPARATUS WANTED.

Moving picture outfit wanted by W. E. Smyth, 415 E. Jefferson street, Syracuse, N. Y.

A RARE OPPORTUNITY.

For Sale—A newly equipped Moving Picture Theater in a booming town of 12,000, this State. The only place of its kind in town doing good business. Partners disagree. Will stand close investigation. Price, $3,00; no less. Address OPPORTUNITY, care of Moving Picture World.

HELP WANTED.

Practical Slide Colorists can find employment at the Henry B. Ingram Company Studio, 42 West 28th street, New York.

WANTED—Producer for moving pictures. Must be able to deliver the goods and furnish references. Address A. B. X., care M. P. World.

Operator wanted who can sing, or who has wife who can sing. Address G. P., Box 14, Oakley, Idaho.

WANTED—Man to handle moving picture house. Salary and commission. State qualifications fully. Permanent. BIJOU THEATER, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

C. C. Duryea, Nunda, N. Y., desires quick position as operator; can do all, and will go anywhere; best of references.

AT LIBERTY—Operator, an electrician and machinist, can run calcium light. Best references; willing to go on the road; seven years' experience. Address Geo. Fisk, 133 West 127th street, New York City.

Experienced operator desires situation. H. Herman, 260 Avenue B, New York City.

JACOB BESKINCE, 248 Second St., New York City, experienced operator; will go anywhere.

Licensed operator, lady piano player and lady drummer, with bells and traps, desire position together, in States; best references. G. L. PALMER, 158 Duke St., St. John, N. B.

GEORGE A. CORLISS, experienced moving picture operator, with Mass. license; wife A-1 pianist; go anywhere for reasonable salary. Address George A. Corliss, 21 Lunenburg St., Fitchburg, Mass.

Baritone Singer for illustrated songs desires position; salary agreeable, will go anywhere. Six months in last position. References. Address ROBERT P. FOURNIER, Room 414, 76 Dorrance St., Providence, R. I.

AT LIBERTY, experienced Moving Picture Operator, can also operate the Cameraphone; ready to go on the job at once. Chas. Lord, 59 E. 21st street, New York City.

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 300 W. 45th St., New York City.

INFORMATION WANTED.

If Miss H. Cary, slide colorist, will call at this office she will learn something to her advantage.
Moving Picture World.

THEATRES FOR SALE.

Moving Picture Theater: fine location; good Pennsylvania city; doing good business; 219 chairs; other business reason for selling; this is a money maker. Address K. H. M., care of Moving Picture World.

Vaudeville and picture house for sale in Central Pennsylvania. Address J. W. F., care of Moving Picture World.

Established, profitable nickel theater in New Jersey, about 25 miles from New York City; 180 chairs, piano and full equipment. Price, $1,000. Now running; full investigation courted. Lease if desired. Reason for selling, other business. Address CURWICK, care of Moving Picture World.

LENSES FOR SALE

FOR SALE—Large Hellar and Collinear lenses for portrait photography. Address PORTRAIT, Box 226, Madison Square, New York.

For Ten Days We're Making This Offer

Our Broad and Open Policy, inaugurated when we began Equipping Theatres and Renting Films,--April 1st, 1909, insists on our treating Film users alike, without fear or favor. To that end, we herewith publish our Special Rates for Average Service so that Exhibitors everywhere may know just what Genuine and Authorized Independent Goods may be had for and just whose Products comprise the service quoted.

Following Rates In Force During Ten Days After Date Of This Issue

Number of Reels	Age of Subjects From Makers Date				Rate Per Week
	90 days	60 days	45 days	30 days	10 days
Six	$10.00	$12.00	$15.00	$20.00	$30.00
Nine	15.00	18.00	22.50	30.00	40.00
Twelve	20.00	24.00	30.00	40.00	60.00

TERMS FOR SERVICE—CASH IN ADVANCE OR C. O. D.

Rates quoted cover cost per week in full, shipments made to meet given change days

Song Slide Service Gratus to Customers

Complete Lists Covering Above Service Mailed on Request

Machine Repairs Free to Customers

Our repair shops are equipped to make quick repairs on all makes of machines, the cost of parts, less 20 per cent. discount, being the only charge made for this work.

WE SELL STANDARD MACHINES OF ALL MAKES NEXT TO COST

GET OUR FIGURES

Cut-Rate Supplies

Best Roll Tickets	$ .07
French Condensers	.70
Film Cement	.20
Novelpake	.20
"Curtainyline"	3.00
"Silverine"	3.00
"Smith" Slides	.50
M. P. Lenses	5.00
M. P. Jackets	3.00
Stereo Lenses	5.00

The Following Consolidated Rental Agencies Have Been Established

Richmond Service Co., Richmond, Va.
T. J. Gaddy, Manager.
U. S. Theater and Film Supply Co., Norfolk, Va.
Palmer & Baker, Managers.
Mason Film Service, Goldsboro, N. C.
H. R. Mason, Manager.
Liberty Film Service, Charleston, W. Va.
S. A. Skaff, Manager.
Eastern Film Exchange, Easton, Pa.
Bargain Mail Order Co., York, Pa.

ADDITIONAL OFFICES WILL BE ANNOUNCED NEXT WEEK

CONSOLIDATED AMUSEMENT CO., Inc.

HARRY R. RAVER, Manager

28 WEST LEXINGTON STREET = = = BALTIMORE, MD.

THE MARVEL OF THE XXTH CENTURY

The Acme of Simplicity

COMBINED WITH

The Limit of Perfection

ABSOLUTE SYNCHRONISM SECURED AT LAST

The Cinephone.

SOLE DISTRIBUTORS
FILM IMPORT & TRADING CO.

U. S. Patent Allowed
British Patent No. 23153/09

SYNCHRONISM is absolute every time. Perfectly independent of electricity. Complete when bought. No upkeep charges. So simple that any operator can work it. No batteries of any description to carry. No troublesome setting of film in the gate. Works equally well with any make of projector. No wiring whatever. Nothing to get out of order. Absolutely without attachments to the projector. Films are run like an ordinary picture from the spool. Rejoined breaks in the film do not affect the synchronism. Equally effective in the largest hall as in a small penny show. Can be unpacked and fitted up ready for running within three minutes. Talking machines can be run independently for selections during an interval.

THREE HUNDRED FILMS NOW READY TO RELEASE

The price for service is so very reasonable that the smallest exhibitor can afford it. For full particulars and the name of the nearest exhange that can supply you, write to us.

SOLE DISTRIBUTORS

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23rd Street NEW YORK

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 16—With Her Card (Dramatic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 19—His Wife's Visitor (Dramatic).....526 ft.
Aug. 19—Mrs. Jones' Lover; or, I Want My Hat (C.)467 ft.
Aug. 23—The Indian Runner's Romance (Drama)..994 ft.
Aug. 26—The Seventh Day (Drama).....693 ft.
Aug. 26—Oh, Uncle! (Comedy).....292 ft.
Aug. 30—The Mills of the Gods (Dramatic).....672 ft.
Aug. 30—Pranks (Comedy).....328 ft.
Sept. 2—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).....779 ft.
Sept. 2—The Little Darling (Comedy).....211 ft.
Sept. 6—"1776," or the Hessian Renegades (Dr.)..965 ft.
Sept. 9—Comata, the Sioux (Dramatic).....963 ft.
Sept. 13—Getting Even (Comedy).....587 ft.
Sept. 13—The Children's Friend (Dramatic).....386 ft.
Sept. 16—The Broken Locket (Dramatic).....999 ft.
Sept. 20—In Old Kentucky (Dramatic).....983 ft.
Sept. 23—A Fair Exchange (Dramatic).....995 ft.

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 20—Wright Bros.' Aeroplane.....600 ft.
Aug. 24—A Child of the Forest.....970 ft.
Aug. 27—The Patience of Miss Joh.....185 ft.
Aug. 27—A Dash to Death.....815 ft.
Aug. 31—Suffer Little Children . . . For of Such Is the Kingdom of Labor.....1000 ft.
Sept. 3—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy).....———
Sept. 3—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Dramatic) ———
Sept. 7—A Dangerous Pair (Comedy).....———
Sept. 7—The Temptation (Dramatic).....———
Sept. 10—The Making of Houey (Industrial).....190 ft.
Sept. 10—The Amateur William Tell (Comedy)....810 ft.
Sept. 14—Little Sister (Dramatic).....975 ft.
Sept. 17—How the Landlord Collected His Rents (C.).460 ft.
Sept. 17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Comedy).....500 ft.
Sept. 21—The Ordeal (Dramatic).....950 ft.
Sept. 24—A Knight for a Night (Comedy).....370 ft.
Sept. 24—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (Comedy).230 ft.
Sept. 24—Love and War (Dramatic).....400 ft.
Sept. 28—Why Girls Leave Home (Comedy).....1000 ft.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Aug. 4—The Mustard Plaster (Comedy).....445 ft.
Aug. 11—A Maid of the Mountains.....1000 ft.
Aug. 18—The Wonders of Nature (Scenic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 25—On Another Man's Pass (Comedy).....950 ft.
Sept. 1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (Comedy).952 ft.
Sept. 8—Justified (Dramatic) .....970 ft.
Sept. 15—A Case of Tomatoes (Comedy).....495 ft.
Sept. 15—Three Reasons for Haste (Comedy).....485 ft.
Sept. 22—Gratitude (Drama).....950 ft.
Sept. 29—The Brothers (Dramatic).....970 ft.

GAUMONT.

(Gorge Kleine.)

Aug. 24—The Frock Coat (Drama).....500 ft.
Aug. 25—Broken Ties (Drama).....777 ft.
Aug. 25—Sevres Porcelain (Mystic).....194 ft.
Aug. 28—A Generous Emperor (Drama).....304 ft.
Aug. 28—The Horse and the Haystack.....297 ft.
Aug. 28—Great Event at Podunk.....357 ft.
Sept. 1—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).....627 ft.
Sept. 1—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).....340 ft.
Sept. 7—First Airships Crossing the English Channel (Scenic) .....510 ft.
Sept. 7—The Mason's Paradise (Comedy).....414 ft.
Sept. 8—The Stolen Gems (Dramatic).....464 ft.
Sept. 8—Glimpses of Paris (Scenic).....417 ft.
Sept. 11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dramatic).....940 ft.
Sept. 14—The Tricky Dummies (Comedy).....370 ft.
Sept. 14—Her Busy Day (Comedy).....250 ft.
Sept. 14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Comedy).....324 ft.
Sept. 21—Saved From the Quicksands (Dramatic)....600 ft.
Sept. 21—Taking in a Reef (Comedy).....380 ft.
Sept. 22—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dramatic).770 ft.
Sept. 22—Dropped From the Clouds (Comedy).....240 ft.
Sept 25—On the Crest of the Waves (Dramatic).....554 ft.
Sept 25—All for a Nickel (Comedy).....404 ft.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

Aug. 7—Baby Is King (Comedy).....334 ft.
Aug. 7—The Hidden Treasure (Drama).....624 ft.
Aug. 18—The Strikers (Melodrama).....567 ft.
Aug. 18—Building Barrels (Industrial).....400 ft.
Aug. 21—The King's Protege (Drama).....647 ft.
Aug. 21—Up the Mountain from Hong Kong (Scenic)287 ft.
Aug. 31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).....404 ft.
Aug. 31—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).557 ft.
Sept. 4—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).....514 ft.
Sept. 4—Romantic Italy (Scenic) .....437 ft.
Sept. 15—The Fatal Love (Dramatic).....584 ft.
Sept. 15—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Scenic).....367 ft.
Sept. 18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Topical)...480 ft.
Sept. 18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dramatic).....500 ft.

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug. 13—Out of Work (Dr.).....810 ft.
Aug. 20—The Queen of the Quarry.....690 ft.
Aug. 20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal.....170 ft.
Aug. 27—The Conspirators (Drama).....410 ft.
Aug. 27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Comedy)..575 ft.
Sept. 3—The Pay Car (Dramatic).....930 ft.
Sept. 10—Hiram's Bride (Dramatic).....——— ft.
Sept. 17—The Story of a Rose (Dramatic).....680 ft.
Sept. 17—Winning a Dinner (Comedy).....245 ft.
Sept. 24—The Winning Boat (Dramatic).....925 ft.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 23—Before the Dawn (Drama).....615 ft.
Aug. 23—Wifey Away, Hubby at Play.....320 ft.
Aug. 26—Nearsighted Mary (Comedy).....495 ft.
Aug. 26—Midnight Sons (Comedy).....385 ft.
Aug. 30—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).....580 ft.
Aug. 30—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).....305 ft.
Sept. 2—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).....810 ft.
Sept. 6—The Call of the Heart (Dramatic).....670 ft.
Sept. 6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic).....255 ft.
Sept. 9—A True Patriot (Patriotic).....735 ft.
Sept. 9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Scenic)....200 ft.
Sept. 13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dramatic)....810 ft.
Sept. 16—The Fortune Hunters (Comedy).....575 ft.
Sept. 16—All on Account of a Letter (Comedy).....385 ft.
Sept. 20—When Woman Hates (Dramatic).....750 ft.
Sept. 23—The Conquering Hero (Comlet).....730 ft.
Sept. 27—A Fish Story (Comic).....510 ft.
Sept. 27—Old Love Letters (Comic).....400 ft.
Sept. 30—The Judge's Ward (Dramatic).....950 ft.

PATHE FRERES.

Aug. 23—The Hat Juggler.....377 ft.
Aug. 25—The Eternal Romance.....771 ft.
Aug. 25—Tennessee Guards .....207 ft.
Aug. 27—Manufacturing Bamboo Hats.....443 ft.
Aug. 27—A Billposter's Trials.....426 ft.
Aug. 28—The Professor's Dilemma.....423 ft.
Aug. 28—The Hypnotic Wife.....482 ft.
Aug. 30—Ralph Benefits by People's Curiosity (C.)..285 ft.
Aug. 30—The New Mail Carrier (Comedy).....672 ft.
Sept. 1—The Little Street Singer (Dramatic).....426 ft.
Sept. 1—Sam Not Wanted In the Family (Dram.)..502 ft.
Sept. 3—A Visit to Biskra (Scenic).....443 ft.
Sept. 3—Show Your License (Comedy).....420 ft.
Sept. 4—A Grave Disappointment (Comedy).....361 ft.
Sept. 4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Scenic).....253 ft.
Sept. 4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Scenic).....331 ft.
Sept. 6—Versailles (Scenic) .....462 ft.
Sept. 6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (Comedy).456 ft.
Sept. 8—The Little Soldier (Dramatic).....394 ft.
Sept. 8—Sweden—Gotha Canal (Scenic) .....456 ft.
Sept. 10—Tom Thumb (Dramatic).....1016 ft.
Sept. 11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics (Sc.)..371 ft.
Sept. 11—Sports in Java (Scenic) .....298 ft.
Sept. 11—How to Tame a Mother-in-law (Comedy)..351 ft.
Sept. 13—Amateur Detective (Comedy).....390 ft.
Sept. 13—The Child's Prayer (Dramatic).....571 ft.
Sept. 15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dramatic).....492 ft.
Sept. 15—City of Naples (Industrial).....449 ft.
Sept. 17—Mountebank's Son (Dramatic).....892 ft.
Sept. 18—Oh, What a Beard! (Comedy).....335 ft.
Sept. 18—The Fresh Kid (Comedy).....295 ft.
Sept. 18—Construction of Balloons (Industrial).....361 ft.
Sept. 20—Aviation Contests at Rheims.....607 ft.
Sept. 20—Caught in His Own Trap (Comedy).....374 ft.
Sept. 22—The Tower of Nesle (Dramatic).....1088 ft.
Sept. 24—Careless Tramp (Comedy).....574 ft.
Sept. 24—Caucasian Customs (Scenic).....587 ft.
Sept. 25—Servant's Good Joke (Comedy).....548 ft.
Sept. 25—Trained Birds (Scenic).....397 ft.

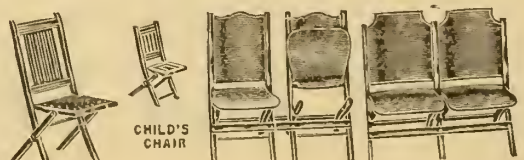
SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

Aug. 26—The Royal Outcast (Drama).....1000 ft.
Aug. 30—Mrs. Jones' Birthday (Comedy).....540 ft.
Aug. 30—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).....450 ft.
Sept. 2—The Blight of Sin (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 9—The Engagement Ring (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 13—Freebooters (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 16—Crooked Path (Dramatic).....990 ft.
Sept. 20—The Bachelor's Visit (Dramatic).....775 ft.
Sept. 20—False Alarm (Comedy).....175 ft.
Sept. 23—Stricken Blind (Dramatic).....———

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 17—Liberty for an Hour (Drama).....355 ft.
Aug. 17—The Judge's Whiskers (Comedy).....591 ft.
Aug. 21—The Way of the Cross (Drama).....900 ft.
Aug. 24—Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged.....447 ft.
Aug. 24—Borrowed Clothes (Com.).....538 ft.
Aug. 28—The Evil That Men Do (Dram.).....925 ft.
Aug. 31—The Hunchback (Dramatic).....633 ft.
Aug. 31—Niagara in Winter Dress.....350 ft.
Sept. 4—The Galley Slave.....885 ft.
Sept. 7—The Fisherman (Dramatic).....430 ft.
Sept. 7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dramatic).....564 ft.
Sept. 11—An Alpine Echo (Dramatic).....990 ft.
Sept. 14—The Little Father (Dramatic).....610 ft.
Sept. 14—The Wealthy Rival (Comedy).....360 ft.
Sept. 18—The Marble Heart (Dramatic).....968 ft.
Sept. 21—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dramatic).....425 ft.
Sept. 21—The Siren's Necklace (Dramatic).....530 ft.
Sept. 25—Fantine (Dramatic) .....997 ft.

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
NORTH MANCHESTER, IND.

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

Film Import and Trading Company.

May 1—Nevada Girl .....936 ft.
May 8—Cowboy's Sweetheart .....854 ft.
May 14—The Temptations of John Gray....930 ft.
May 22—Johnny and the Indians.....877 ft.
May 28—Crystal Ball .....Aprrox. 933 ft.
June 19—Love Wins .....931 ft.
June 24—Private Brown .....Approx. 904 ft.
July 7—Cowboy's Romance .....Aprrox. 871 ft.
July 14—Tale of Texas.....Approx. 945 ft.
July 28—Maryland, 1777 .....Approx. 956 ft.
Aug. 1 Power of Love.....Approx. 995 ft.
Aug. 18—The Lost Letter.....965 ft.
Aug. 25—The Blacksmith's Daughter .....985 ft.
Sept. 1—Peaceful Jones .....Approx 932 ft.
Sept. 8—The Diamond Necklace.....545 ft.
Sept. 8—The Wishing Charm.....545 ft.
Sept. 15—A White Lie.....About 1000 ft

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July 3—The Prince and the Actor.....712 ft.
July 10—Herring Fishing .....248 ft.
July 10—Persistent Lover .....445 ft.
July 17—A Shadow of the Past.....464 ft.
July 24—A Clever Nurse.....450 ft.
July 24—Off the Coast of Norway.....315 ft.
Aug. 14—The Spy .....619 ft.
Aug. 14—Water Sports .....214 ft.
Aug. 21—False Alarm .....353 ft.
Aug. 21—Surroundings of Copenhagen.....396 ft.
Aug. 28—The Shell .....567 ft.
Aug. 28—Cowboys in Argentina.....387 ft.
Aug. 26—A Strange Reunion.....910 ft.
Sept. 3—His Two Children.....1000 ft.
Sept. 11—The Gray Dame.....975 ft.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

May 21—Disinherited Son's Loyalty (Dr.)....887 ft.
May 28—A Fishermaid's Romance (Dr.).....806 ft.
June 4—Davy Crockett in Hearts United (D.).836 ft.
June 11—The Squaw's Revenge (Dr.).....990 ft.
June 18—A Terrible Attempt (Dr.).....575 ft.
June 18—Jones Gets Arrested (Com).....450 ft.
July 2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.).....935 ft.
July 9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.).....850 ft.
July 23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.) .....1000 ft.
July 30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C).800 ft.
Aug. 6—Sailor's Child (Dr.).....1000 ft.
Aug. 13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes..450 ft.
Aug. 13—The Yiddisher Cowboy.....550 ft.
Aug. 20—Half Breed's Treachery .....1000 ft.
Aug. 27—Secret Service Woman.....1000 ft.
Sept. 10—The Paymaster .....1000 ft.
Sept. 17—A Kentucky Planter.....1000 ft.
Sept. 24—The Squaw's Sacrifice.....1000 ft.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Russian Romance (Drama).....850 ft.
Conspracy (Drama).....900 ft
Victim of a Crisis (Drama).....520 ft.
Salome Craze (Comedy).....435 ft.
Flirtation Collar (Comedy).....335 ft.
Brave Girl on the 15th Floor (Drama).....917 ft.
It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl (Comedy)..1010 ft.
Spanish Girl (Comedy Drama).....816 ft.
Her Favorite Tune (Drama).....892 ft.
How the Loser Won (Drama).....989 ft.
A Young Bachelor's Dream (Comedy).....826 ft.
A Strange Reunion.....840 ft.
A Girl of the Woods.....860 ft.
The Railroad Wreck.....950 ft.
Sept. 16—The Actor Burglar.....950 ft.

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

The following films are released this week by the Empire Film Company, 150 East Fourteenth street, corner Third avenue, New York:

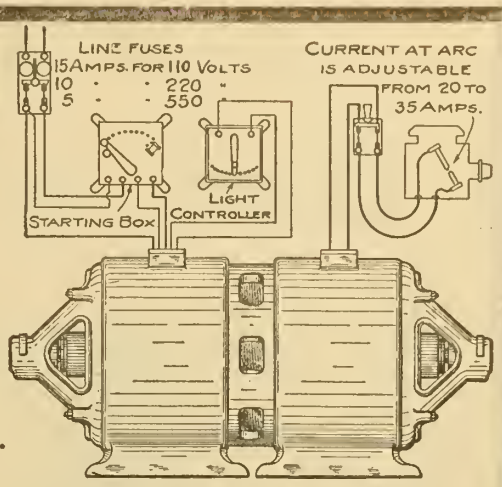
Phaedra (Pinesehi) .....978 ft.
The Justifier (Eclair) .....466 ft.
Uncle Rube's Visit (Warwick).....482 ft.
From Millionaire to Porter (Lion).....531 ft.
Love of Adventures (Eclair).....279 ft.
Don Carlos (Cines).....742 ft.
Importune Neighbor (Cines).....284 ft.
Daughter of an Anarchist (Lion).....420 ft.
The Story of a Bad Cigar (Ambrosio).....558 ft.
The Rivals (Hepworth).....427 ft.
A Mother's Love (Lion).....531 ft.
From Portofino to Nervi (Croce).....338 ft.
Towards Immortalidated (Lion).....600 ft.
Father's Beautiful Beard (Paul).....260 ft.
The Little Milliner and the Thief (Hepworth).325 ft.
Not Wanted on Voyage (R. & R.).....265 ft.
The Adopted Child (Lux).....531 ft.
Necessity Is the Mother of Invention (Hepworth) .....325 ft.
How Dr. Nicola Procured the Chinese Cane (Great Northern) .....970 ft.
The Gray Dame (Great Northern).....968 ft.
Theodora (Phoenix).....750 ft.
Railroad Wreck (Phoenix).....993 ft.
Kentucky Planter (Bison).....1000 ft.
A White Lie (Centaur).....———

ATTENTION

M. P. Men! Here is the

HALLBERG

Electric Economizer for Direct Current



HALLBERG-D. C. ECONOMIZER

Guaranteed to SAVE 50 to 85 per cent. on your bills for M. P. Lamp current. Here is another PROOF of satisfaction.

PICTURELAND
645 Penn Street
Finest Moving Picture House in the City

Reading Pa., July 8, 1909.

MR. J. H. HALLBERG,
30 Greenwich Ave., New York.

Dear Sir—It is now four months since we installed your direct current "HALLBERG ECONOMIZER," and machine has always given entire satisfaction.

It saves fully 50 per cent. on the current bill. The machine requires practically no attention whatever except occasional oiling and cleaning. Machine runs very quietly, current is very steady and machine does not heat up like a rheostat. I have the machine in the basement and the controlling apparatus is mounted in the operating booth. Thus I have perfect control over the light at all times.

The market is full of A. C. current savers, but M. P. managers having direct current have looked in vain for a current saver that could be used on D. C. Your D. C. "HALLBERG" Economizer will fill a long felt want, and I cannot recommend it too highly. Wishing you success, I am,

Yours very truly,
(Signed) WILLIAM H. WAGNER.

Get in communication with me Mr. M. P. Man. I have many good things for you, among them Hallberg Economizers for all kinds of electric lighting—4,000 C. P. Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "Electra Pink Label" Carbons is complete. I also handle the best M. P. Machines, and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices they are interesting.

Write for FREE booklet No. 3W.

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Avenue, New York

GRAND PRIX

Awarded First Prize and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Manufacturers of

Films of Quality

Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

NEXT ISSUE

Release, Saturday, September 18th

HOW DR. NICOLA PROCURED THE CHINESE CANE

Full Reel Feature Production of Merit

No Exhibitor Should Fail to Procure this Remarkable Film

Release, Saturday, September 25th

THE GREAT PRIZE

Screaming Comedy Subject

Length About 455 Feet

LIFE ON BOARD A TRAINING SHIP—A Subject of Unusual Interest

Lenght About 450 Feet

All Exchanges Rent Great Northern Films.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN

7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

CENTAUR RELEASES

Shipped from New York Sept. 22, 1909

Dan Blake's Rival

A Powerful Story of Love and Revenge.

Two men quarrel over a girl; one of them is apparently killed but is nursed back to life by a friendly Indian. He reappears at a very dramatic moment; and an exciting series of adventures ends with all round happiness.

SCENE FROM "DAN BLAKE'S RIVAL"

This is one of the most thrilling and effective stories that the Centaur Company has ever prodnced. It is fnll of exciting action and novel situations from start to finish. The scenic effects are superb and the photography has never been excelled in any motion picture.

Shipped from New York Sept. 29, 1909

A Close Call

A Thrilling Western Drama

This story tells how a ranchman's favorite child follows a drunken Indian into the woods and gets lost. Cowboys searching for the young one, come across the Indian lying in a drunken sleep, and when he denies the whereabouts of the child he is tortured, but before any real harm befalls him another cowboy rides up with the child, who had been found asleep, and returns him to the distracted parents. The Indian is set at liberty amid cheers and allowed to go his way.

Scenes of cowboy life are shown in the film which accurately portray western life. the costumes and effects being perfeetly reproduced.

Posters Free with Centaur Film

The Bull Fight

The release date of the highly exciting Mexican bull fight film has been postponed, and will be announced later in The Moving Picture World.

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23d Street - - New York

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF! NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS! NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

CALEHUFF
A Member of the
FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION
Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk.
MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.
LATEST SONG SLIDES
$5.00 per set
N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FOLDING CHAIRS
For Moving Picture Shows, Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.
Write for Catalog No. 2.
The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT
The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE
14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
10 E. 14th Street, New York City — 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

WHY—The Motiograph is the Best Motion Picture Machine

Because the Pictures are More Brilliant. The special patented Shutter is so arranged that it saves a lot of illumination otherwise lost.
Because Flicker is eliminated by the new patented Shutter.
Because the Pictures are Rock Steady when using a good film, and are restful to the eyes of your patrons. The result is because of accurate workmanship and excellence of design.
Because it has patented quick Rewind (one and one-half minutes) connected to main crank handle. No other similar.
Because it has the only perfect Fire-proof Shutter, automatic and absolutely reliable.
Because it has Enclosed Spiral Gears. They work smooth and wear longer.
Because it has a Perfect Take Up. Easy on the film and always reliable.
Because it has inclosed Framing Device. Wears longer, is quickly removed and patented.
Because it has "Wide Open" Lamp House, convenient for changing carbons, adjustment, etc.
Because it is absolutely Fireproof.
Because it has Double the Wearing Qualities possessed by other Machines.
Because it is almost Noiseless; runs more quiet than any other.
Because it has Heavy Pedestal Base, adjustable and patented.
Because it has more than 40 other points of special merit. Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco approved.

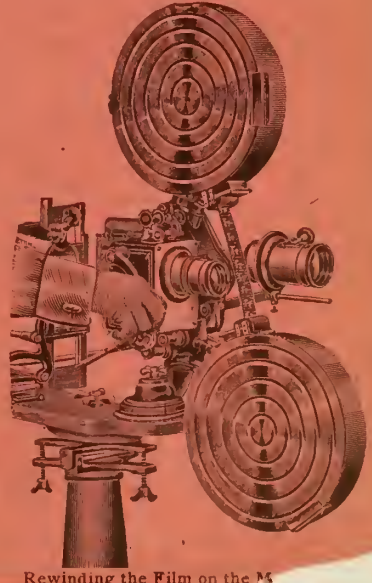
SEE WHAT USERS SAY:

ON MARCH 28TH, F. L. F., CHICAGO, ILL., SAYS:
"I purchased my Motiograph Machine latter part of August, and have not spent one penny for repairs since. To say that I am pleased can hardly express it."
D. F. E., DENVER, COLO., FEBRUARY 1ST, SAYS:
"I have not sold a Motiograph to anyone who is not delighted with it."
O. T., GREAT FALLS, MONT., JUNE 7TH, SAYS:
"It's running fine, and we get the picture and the 'Biz.' We cannot say enough for the Stereo Motiograph. A snap for any operator."
M. F. F., OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., MAY 18TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph is the talk of the town."
E. T. S. CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA., JUNE 2ND, SAYS:
"Machine at the Grand Opera House is a dandy, and is daily making Motiograph converts."
P. & K., ST. ANTHONY, IDAHO, APRIL 16TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph projects the best picture in the country. We show a much better picture than our competitors."

Hundreds of Others Say Similar Things

OUR CATALOG will tell you lots of interesting things about Motion Picture Machines. Write for it To-day

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.
4 5 7 2 West Randolph Street - - - Chicago, Ill.



Rewinding the Film on the M

ask about kosmik economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of tne following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

SIX SPECIAL SENSATIONAL SUBJECTS

Gaumont Films

Gaumont

Week Ending September 25th

Full of Fun--also Fine Features

EXCLUSIVELY GAUMONT

SAVED FROM THE QUICKSANDS

Great Drama. 600 feet. Released Sept. 21.

A well-mounted and strongly enacted drama of legendary origin, scenes from the region of St. Michael's Mount on the wild, rugged coast of Cornwall, England. Realistic and wonderful sea effects and terrible quicksands. Photographically perfect. A magnificent product of art.

TAKING IN A REEF

Roaring Comedy. Full of Laughter. 380 feet. Released Sept. 21.

LEGEND OF THE LIGHTHOUSE

A Thrilling Tragedy. 777 feet. Released Sept. 22.

This is the feature film of the week. No theater can afford to miss it. Audience held spellbound from start to finish. Subject sure to impress all. Shows how a mother's unscrupulous greed and heartless robbery of castaways washed ashore from wrecks led to her causing the death of her own son by obscuring the lighthouse light and thereby causing a wreck and his death by drowning. The consequence is that she spends the rest of her days tending the lighthouse lamp and saving others from shipwreck and death by drowning.

DROPPED FROM THE CLOUDS

Fine Comedy. (Richly Colored.) 240 feet. Released Sept. 22.

ON THE CREST OF THE WAVES

Drama of Denmark. 554 feet. Released Sept. 25.

ALL FOR A NICKEL

Comedy. 404 feet. Released Sept. 25.

Imported by

George Kleine

92 State Street, CHICAGO 19 East 21st Street, NEW YORK

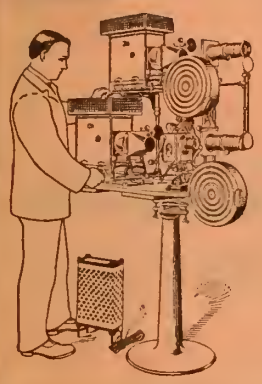
Vol. 5., No. 14. October 2, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WHICH IS INCORPORATED WITH THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."

F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes but none to compare with Motiograph.—PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

Calcium Gas Outfit

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light Write for Catalog to-day

Western Representatives { S. Lubin Geo. Melies FILM

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

Eagle Film Exchange

We handle the most up-to-date European goods, also the following makes:—Great Northern, New York Motion and the Centaur

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY :: :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

HIGH CLASS INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

KICK if not satisfied

We want all our customers to kick if they are not satisfied with our goods and service. We admire kickers, because from them we learn to right the wrongs. Supplies at Special Prices. Get Price List.

CALL, WRITE WIRE PHONE

Phone 1806 Stuyvesant GREAT EASTERN FILM COMPANY, 21 East 14th St. NEW YORK

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 5

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year

POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current

POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current

POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK

Believe me, the general public, the people who pay to see your show, are becoming more and more aware of the fact that the Independent moving picture men are putting it all over the Film Octopus nowadays. One of the quickest ways of appealing to the people is to stick a big sign in front of your theatre announcing that you are independent of the trust. Then show them the real, genuine independent pictures—not the faked stuff—and success is yours. To be dead certain that you are getting representative independent films, take the safe course by hooking up with any of the Laemmle offices. Slip me a note to-day and see what's going on.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

THE LAEMMLE FILM SERVICE

196-198 Lake St., CHICAGO 111 East 14th St., NEW YORK

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville, Ind. Omaha, Neb. Salt Lake City, Utah. Portland, Ore. Montreal, Can.

P. S.—I have ALL MAKES of machines ready to ship NOW

Another P. S.—I am the biggest and best film renter in the world

WE MAKE ALL KINDS OF

Special Announcement and Advertisement Slides

Ladies Popularity and Baby Contest Slides, plain 50c. Colored 75c.

All accessories and plan for carrying out all contests furnished

WRITE FOR OUR LIST AND PRICES

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles

NEW PROCESS FILM TITLE COMPANY

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

For Two Years the Standard "CURTAINYLINE"

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $5.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

CURTAINYLINE CURTAIN AND PRODUCING COMPANY, Inc.

Room 405 Northwestern Building, 22 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

PATHÉ FRÈRES FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

COMING HEADLINERS

		LENGTH
Oct. 4.	Story of a Banknote (Intense Drama)	981 feet
Oct. 6.	Female Sleuth (Drama)	604 feet
Oct. 8.	Sister Angelica (Colored Drama)	705 feet
Oct. 9.	Anti-Fat Sanitarium (Comedy)	653 feet
Oct. 11.	The Trappers (Colored Drama)	804 feet

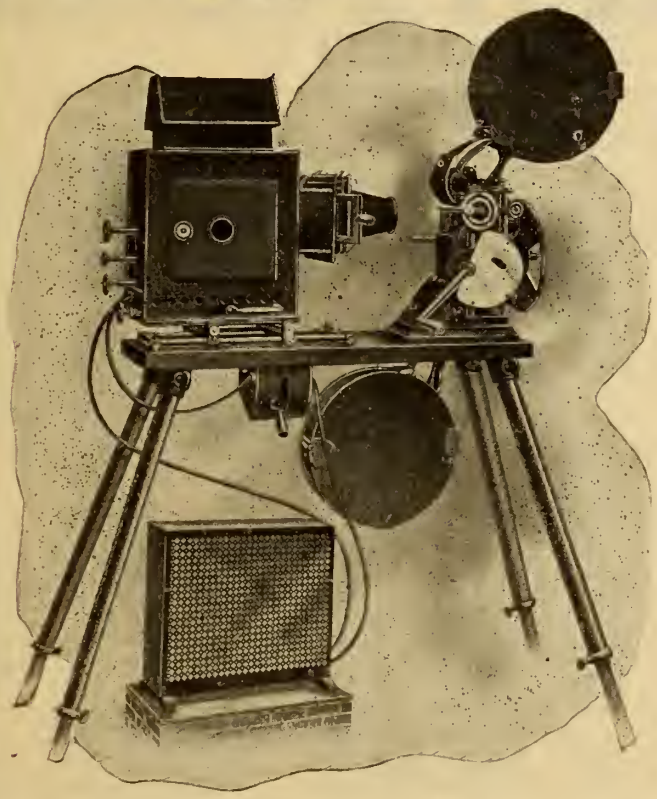
Every Release this month contains a headliner. The highest quality of moving picture art.



The Pathe Professional Machine

is giving excellent results wherever it is used. If you have a first-class house, and want to give a clear, steady picture, why not install the best machine on the market? Price, $225.00

For sale at all FILM exchanges in the United States

NEW YORK
41 W. 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken,
136 Eddy Street - - San Francisco, Cal

Quality Always--Selig's Record Show Them "Nef Ced"

LOOK OUT FOR SELIG'S GREAT MELODRAMA

STRICKEN BLIND

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 23, 1909

Code Word, Blind Length, 990 Feet.

Selig's Western Pictures—Everybody should show them

WATCH FOR THE NEXT

ACROSS THE DIVIDE

A Thrilling Western Drama in Selig's best form

Code Word, Divide Length 980 Feet

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 27, 1909

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. S 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28th

ONAWANDA

An Indian picture that is different from late releases in that it deals with colonial and not modern times. It is shortly after the founding of the settlement in Massachusetts and a group of settlers have made a home a little north of the present city of Boston. Onawanda, one of the members of the tribe which makes that part of the country its home, shares the resentment of his fellows at the intrusion of the whites, but when he is saved from death, from cold and starvation by the kindly preacher, his hatred disappears and he becomes a member of the minister's household in spite of the protests of the other settlers. The minister goes to Boston and Onawanda is out hunting when a hostile band of Indians attack the minister's home and carry off his two children, leaving the wife for dead in the burning hut. She escapes to tell of the attack and Onawanda stands face to face with death at the hands of the settlers, when the opportune arrival of the preacher prevents the execution of their plan. Onawanda sets out alone to rescue the children and accomplishes his object, but gives his own life for theirs, justifying the minister's confidence in his integrity and dying happy in the thought that he has been vindicated. Length, 545 feet.

THE ROMANCE OF AN UMBRELLA

Given a good looking young man and a beautiful girl working in offices separated only by a narrow airshaft, and they are bound to take an interest in each other. Bess Fairkirk is appreciative of Jimmie Conyer's good looks, but she is conservative and refuses to make his acquaintance without a formal introduction. Jimmie's chance comes one afternoon after office hours. Bess is lunching and Jimmie follows her in. When she leaves she carries off his umbrella. He follows her to claim his property, but is detained by being made to settle with the cashier, and is barely able to catch the same elevated train she takes. When she leaves the train he claims his property, but offers to share it with her, as it is raining. She refuses the offered protection, but an increase in the downpour compels her to accept and an acquaintance is formed that soon ripens into an engagement. The subject is a dainty little comedy of everyday business life and notable because the rain scenes were made in actual rainstorms and not under a sprinkler arrangement. The photographic work is excellent, the acting better still, and the scenes characteristic of New York in the business and residential sections. Length, 450 feet.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2nd

THE SCALES OF JUSTICE

In the olden times even theft was punishable by death, and in the little town of Lalsk the culprits were beheaded at the feet of the colossal statue of Justice. Gretchen, the servant in the household of the Burgomaster, is accused of the theft of one of his wife's rings. In spite of her denial she is thrown into prison and is solemnly sentenced to death. In prison she is visited by the confessor, who urges her to confess her guilt. Her protestations of innocence convince the old man, who is in despair that an innocent life must pay the forfeit for another's crime. As the girl is about to kneel before the block he passionately declares his belief in her innocence and calls upon Heaven for a miracle to prove his faith. As though in answer the scales fall from the hand of the statue and in one of the pans of the balances is found the lost signet ring. As the crowd stands awed by the manifestation, an idiot boy scrambles forward to claim his toy and in a flash all comprehend the situation. The lad is not able to realize the seriousness of the girl's situation and does not understand that her peril is connected with his theft of the ring which he has hidden in the scales of the statue, his favorite place of concealment. Her innocence is doubly proved and her accusers ask her pardon. Length, 983 feet.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company, 125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative, 913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill. Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 OCTOBER 2, 1909 No. 14

Editorial.

The Hudson-Fulton Celebration.

MOVING PICTURES FOR POSTERITY.

The Hudson-Fulton Celebrations which are in progress while this number of the Moving Picture World is being distributed are certainly attracting great attention throughout the world, because they commemorate two very notable events in the romantic history of the United States. There will, of course, be innumerable records made of the events, and certainly the photographers and others who will either photograph or sketch the scenes that take place both in the city and on the magnificent river, named after its discoverer, are to be congratulated on the fine scenic and other backgrounds against which the marine and land pageantry will move. Probably no other city in the world is so fortunate in this respect of being able fittingly to display pageantry on the scale of such grandeur and magnificence.

What will become of all the photographs that will be made next week? Many will be reproduced in the newspapers and magazines, others will simply remain in the possession of private individuals. The moving picture camera will follow the warships and the river and land pageantry wherever it takes place. It will be safe to conjecture that scores of thousands of feet of film will be used in taking the photographs and that moving picture audiences throughout the country will, for many a day and night to come, be looking upon the pictures made of the celebration.

So far so good. Public curiosity and love of pleasure will be gratified and in a short time the celebration will pass into history. What, however, will become of all these films when public interest in them no longer exists? It will be a pity if they pass out of existence. Consider for a moment what wonderful interest would be attached, to-day, to a moving picture of Hendric Hudson sailing up the river in the Half Moon or Robert Fulton on the Clermont! Precisely what those ships look like, we do not know. We have only contemporary drawings and sketches to rely upon, for remember that in those days there was no photography. Let us project our minds one hundred years ahead, when another centennial will be held. The student of 2009 will turn to the newspapers of the present year, if newspapers printed to-day are then in existence, which is open to doubt, for wood pulp is a notoriously perishable commodity, so that anything printed on it is not assured of permanence. But a skilfully prepared celluloid film, if carefully kept, may last for hundreds of years. What we would much like to see would be a series of moving pictures of the Hudson-Fulton celebration deposited in some State department at Washington, so that the future historian may have access to them. It will be a great thing to feel that a hundred years hence our descendants will be able to look upon moving pictures of what is taking place this week in New York.

The object of this article is to throw out the suggestion for the consideration of those most interested that if any good moving pictures of this week's celebration are made, they should be preserved and deposited in safe official custody for the purpose we have specified. This kind of thing is done in Europe, and there is therefore no reason why it should not be done in the United States.

Sound Effects: Good, Bad and Indifferent.

Is it best to undertake to reproduce the sounds to go with the pictures or not? Probably this question has presented itself more than once to managers, and probably it is no nearer a solution satisfactory to all parties than it was at the beginning. One will reach one conclusion, and one will reach another, reasoning from exactly the same data, and it would be a wise man indeed who would dare say positively that either was right.

It would seem, however, that one feature of the attempted imitations would appeal to every manager with irresistible force. The imitations should be fairly accurate or they shouldn't be attempted. Inaccuracy is worse than nothing. It creates wrong impressions and often it wrongly interprets the pictures. They must correspond or else they should be let alone.

One example will, perhaps, suffice to show what is meant. In almost all theaters some attempt is made to imitate the hoofbeats of running horses, but the noises are exactly the same whether the horse is running over hard or soft earth. The quick, sharp ring of a hoofbeat on a hard road is quite different from the hoofbeat on a sandy road or on grass ground, yet in practically all theaters they are made the same. Perhaps it is impossible to make a change. Maybe the instruments used do not admit of it. If they do not it would be wiser to omit the one which is not true. The impression is false and the picture is spoiled for those who are at all critical in their observations, and more and more the audiences are becoming critical. More care should be exercised in this particular if the noises are used at all.

Another of the same general observations can be made about automobiles and locomotives. In a good proportion of theaters the noises supposed to imitate these two are substantially the same, yet everybody knows they are different and the imitation should be different to correspond or else be omitted. The clang of the trolley car's warning bell sounds more like a cow bell, and so one might go on enumerating the different noises which fail to copy the original. There are many more that do not than there are that do.

One exhibitor has made a special study of this phase of motion picture shows, and has achieved a high degree of perfection. Reference is here made to Lyman H. Howe. His sounds imitate and to the mind of a great many who see his pictures they add to the attraction of the entertainment. Others do not care particularly, and wouldn't mind if they were omitted entirely. Many others would be better pleased if they were omitted. They prefer that the silent drama shall be truly silent.

The Alliance.

From all quarters, both near and far, there have come expressions of approval of the attitude of the Moving Picture World toward the newly formed Independent Alliance. It is recognized that our review of the Independent position expressed in the series of articles which we first began publishing in April last accurately reflects the exact position of the Independent movement. Moreover, in insisting on the need of union and unanimity as well as loyalty to the cause, we have, it seems, voiced the opinions of those who have the best interests of the Independent movement at heart, as well as those who, outside the Independent fold, are in the position of looking on at the game. It is an old saying that the onlooker sees most of the game, and in this case, whether the observer be disinterested or neutral, or has his stand on the association side, the weaknesses and difficulties of the Independent position are plainly obvious.

We have been at some pains to gather a variety of opinions on the prospects of the Alliance. Boiled down, these opinions, which come from many sources, amount to this: That if the men present at the Chicago meeting are loyal to themselves, loyal to their new found principles and loyal to the Alliance, then it will accomplish a great deal of good. But it is commonly urged that in the new Alliance there are many men who were by no means adornments of the old F. S. A., men who were not loyal to the Patents Company immediately after its formation, men who in the interim have scarcely advantaged the business of which they are representatives. And there is a natural apprehension that these men may not have entirely found salvation under the banner of the Alliance. The leopard, it is argued, cannot change its spots. In this case, however, we hope the animal will be able to achieve the feat and that in the interests of the Alliance and of themselves, the men under suspicion will be loyal to their leaders. For if they are not and if this Alliance falls through, through the faults of any of its members, then the Independent movement will deserve to peter out.

The better elements in the Alliance are working to avert such a catastrophe, and it is to be hoped they will be successful. There are two or three pieces of advice which we will give the Alliance in the early stages of its career. In the first place we strongly recommend the officers and committee not to seek the blindfolded support of any one particular newspaper. The Alliance will thereby be assured of impartial treatment all around, whereas by stringing the movement upon any one publication, either in New York or Chicago, they are seriously jeopardizing any claim to impartial treatment which the Alliance may have.

Again we tender the Alliance the advice to engage the services of a paid active or acting secretary for the purpose of carrying out the organizing and routine work. Let this man be unconnected with any film business or newspaper, and let it be his work, and his sole work, to promote and further the interests of the Alliance. We feel that these two bits of advice, the disassociation of the Alliance from any official connection with any existing newspaper, and the engagement of a competent secretary, will do much toward making the Alliance a success.

Already within a fortnight of its existence there are rumors of disunion and dissatisfaction in the ranks of the Alliance, but in the interests of that body, we will give no credence to these rumors or space to them in our pages. We are anxious to give the Alliance all the support it is possible for us to extend to it. As we said in January last when the Independent movement was crystallizing, we also recognize the right of the Inpendents to fair play and adequate representation in the press, and we will warmly encourage any progressive movement that they may make. (Moving Picture World, January 30, 1909.)

The Independent manufacturers have met in lengthy sessions during the past few days, but it appears that so far no definite programme for the future has been arrived at. Meanwhile it is reported that the president of the Alliance is in Europe. No doubt this journey has been undertaken in the interests of the Alliance.

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

CHAPTER III.

The Exterior.

There are many other ways besides the provision of attractive posters for appealing to possible patrons of a moving picture theater, and their enumeration here should convince the moving picture exhibitor that this end of matters is deserving of more consideration than he usually gives them. There is, first of all, the name of the theater which may either be a painted sign or an electrical sign or both in combination, for use either by day or by night. Too much attention cannot be given to the artistic side of the painted sign. It should be carried out boldly and in good taste so as to impress the public. Not only the top of the facade can be utilized for the name of the theater or the higher parts of the front, but the sides, which also offer scope for nicely colored artistic designs in the way of title. American impresarios need little or no counsel in the way of illuminated title sign making, for, in this respect, Americans are far and away ahead of all other people in the sigularly complete and ingenious way in which they press electricity into the service of advertising signs. It is rarely, indeed, that a moving picture house is weak in this respect. As a matter of fact, the American house of entertainment is the wonder of the rest of the world; so that it is unnecessary to insist specially upon the use of electricity for illuminating purposes.

It goes without saying that the exterior, that is to say, the entrance of a moving picture theater, should be scrupulously clean and kept free of rubbish and paraphernalia which would have a tendency to obstruct the egress of the public. If possible, a polite and uniformed attendant should always be present to usher people into the house and to keep order. A uniformed attendant such as Keith & Proctor and other up-to-date managers have, is found to have an impressive effect upon the public. Too often we have regretted to see that any derelict, hireable at a few dollars a week, has been considered good enough to undertake the delicate duties of doorman. For they are delicate duties. Your untidy derelict repels rather than attracts, whereas a courteous uniformed man will inspire confidence, keep order and attract women and children into the house.

The occupant of the pay box, it need hardly be said, is an important member of the staff. We invariably find these officials courteous and obliging, so that little recommendation is necessary on this score.

Some moving picture houses that we have seen and visited rely upon the provision of special features at the entrance for attracting people in. These features are generally of a musical nature. We have seen an enthusiastic piano player endeavoring to thump people in; we have heard the pipe organ at work; moreover, the phonograph has been pressed into service and even the raucous voiced barker has been put up as a bait for the public. Frankly, we think all these baits quite unnecessary and have a tendency to depress rather than heighten the dignity of the moving picture house. A barker is permissible at a fair or at a place like Coney Island or any other outdoor pleasure resort. So might the music be (if music it can be called), but in cities these adventitious advertising aids are in our opinion totally unnecessary. Again, we venture to think that they repel rather than attract. It must never be forgotten in this connection that the moving picture theater is just at that stage of its career when the support of the better classes is gradually being extended to it. That support will come surely and largely enough in due time if repellent influences are sternly suppressed. Amongst those repellent influences we consider badly played piano music, noisy pipe organs and raucous voiced barkers at the entrances. All this sort of thing jars the nerves of refined people. So much for the exterior which, in its negative and positive aspects as here discussed, has a great influence upon the public at large and therefore is an important factor in contributing to the pay box receipts. It must never be forgotten that the object of these articles is to assist a moving picture theater owner to swell those receipts and we think that if he will carefully study these articles and put them into practice he will find his receipts increase rather than decrease.

(To be continued.)

Acting and Action.

By Hans Leigh.

More than a year has passed since I wrote warning the manufacturers of motion pictures that a continuance of their methods meant the ruin of the moving picture industry—that a few more months of the gruesome, bloody, immoral, ill-conceived, badly executed pictures of that day would send the motion picture into oblivion with the bicycle, the ping-pong table and other fads which have made their little stir and then passed from public notice.

At that time President Clark, of the F. S. A., used up several columns of your valuable space in an effort to show that the criticisms were unfounded, and that, so to speak, "the mule was a-doin' his best."

Like many other men, Mr. Clark was ahead of his time. His letter, untrue at that period, in my humble opinion, stands justified to-day, and I feel happy to pay a deserved compliment now, which would have been a silly flattery eighteen months ago—the American manufacturer has arrived!

A year and a half ago I broke off affiliations with my renter because he would not provide me with a practically "all European" service. To-day I do not want European films when I can get American makes. At that period when an American film was put on, I felt it necessary to make a verbal explanation to my patrons, because otherwise it would be difficult to follow. Then I watched my films run off with shears in hand ready to cut out such parts as were immoral, indecent or gruesome, and those shears were much used. To-day explanations are rarely necessary, and the cutting of films is a forgotten art. In every respect the products of the American factory have improved. The scenarios are better conceived and better executed and the work of the actors is better. When I say "better," I mean much better, and I beg to offer my heartiest congratulations to the men who have effected these improvements. The mule certainly has done his best.

I have noticed that out of the crude, hodge-podge of eighteen months ago, there are in course of development two schools, which might be described as the School of Acting, and the School of Action. Of the first the Biograph is the chief exponent—it might be called the School of Drew, Willard and Coghlan. Of the second I am inclined to think Selig the most successful master, and to call it the School of Frank Mayo and McKee Rankin.

They are both excellent schools, but there is a tendency upon the part of the partizans to go to extremes—the one to depend too much on acting and the other to rely too entirely on action—and, so to speak, "tanks."

This is a pity, because perfection in moving pictures requires perfection in both these particulars.

The moving picture differs from the actual drama in this that it must appeal to small communities. There are plays that are little seen outside the larger cities, but the motion picture maker who catered only to New York, Chicago, Cleveland and Toledo would soon go into bankruptcy. The top layer of his profits comes from Podunk.

Now Podunk cannot afford to show pictures that please only a part of the people. Podunk must please all the people, and it has got to please them all the time. There are not enough people in Podunk to justify the ignoring of a single one of them.

The majority of our public insist on action in a picture. It must contain plenty of incident; there must be plenty of situations and very obvious ones. There must be "somethin' doin'" every minute.

On the other hand, there are large numbers of people who demand good acting, who like "delicate touches," who want to see the heroine LOOK as if her lover's life was in danger and not as though she were ordering a plate of "beef and" at Dolan's.

The truly successful motion picture is the one possessing both these qualities—the quality of acting and the quality of action.

These two essentials are realized by the Biograph in such pictures as "The Mended Lute," "A Convict's Sacrifice," and most of all in "A Strange Meeting." The last named I regard as a triumph. On the other hand, a good many of the Biograph pictures depend too much on the acting, as for instance "The Better Way." The acting in this play is admirable, but without acting the story would be nothing better than a bore. It must be remembered that a considerable proportion of the public have no appreciation for fine art. To them the acting of a Willard, a Drew, or a Coghlan has no meaning. They would prefer "Hear Dem Bells" by Len Spencer to "Celeste Aida" by Caruso. These people see nothing in a play but the action and such a performance as "The Better Way" is ashes in their mouths. Plays like "A Strange Meeting" are different. The story in them is sufficient for the common person, while the fine acting pleases the art lover, who is all the more interested because the story is a good one.

Among the best of these films d'art was a Biograph production called "The Eavesdropper," but to hundreds of young people and thoughtless adults, it was a "dead one." Had this play been garnished with a little gun play, a struggle, a pursuit and a precipice it would have delighted the mob, and the art lover would have thought none the less of it. In comedy the Biograph has a tendency to the same weakness. It plays to the intelligent, discriminating public, and is prone to forget the masses which are not discriminating.

There is certainly a big public call for Selig dramas, and it is a matter of surprise to me that Selig should not confine himself to the dramatic field, instead of venturing into comedy. To my mind here is no comparison between Selig comedy and Selig drama.

My remarks in this relation may be epitomized in these few words: "Acting is a delightful luxury; but action is a prime NECESSITY."

There is one other matter on which I would like to give a little advice to manufacturers and that is with regard to the descriptions in "The Stories of the Films." Such a description should state in the most concise way every point of the plot, and it should draw attention to the quality and character of the scenery, acting and costumes, and every word should be true.

It would pay all manufacturers to give more attention to these stories and to make them concise, complete and truthful; and if the exhibitor knew that the description was absolutely true he would be able to announce and advertise his shows a day or two before the film arrived.

THE POWERS COMPANY.

For the past six months the moving spirits of the Powers Company have been perfecting an organization which should result in placing that company well ahead amongst American film manufacturers. In the first place, a strong position has been taken up by the selection of the Bianchi camera as the instrument with which the negatives will be taken. The Bianchi camera, as most of our readers are aware, is non-infringing, inasmuch as it gives the film a continuous movement as opposed to an intermittent one with the ordinary type. The results obtained with the Bianchi camera so far are said to be entirely satisfactory.

The Powers Company have selected large premises at Wakefield, New York City, which are in process of being rapidly adapted for the production of studio pictures for the moving picture stage. But it will also be a feature of the company's operations that they will make outdoor pictures as occasion demands. The total area of floor space available is 15,000 feet, which gives room for the general offices, laboratory and studio under one roof, so that the various departments of the business will be continually in touch with one another. It is the intention of the company to release in a short time at least three subjects per week, and they are making every effort to release one subject per day. "Columbia Licensed Motion Pictures" is the title under which these subjects will be released. Already a number of negatives have been made, and it is expected that the first release will take place at an early date.

The officers of the company are taking the utmost pains to engage only the best technical and artistic talent for the work, in order that Powers pictures will compare favorably with the best of those now placed upon the market. Finally, as the capital of the company is $250,000 it will be seen that the Powers Company starts extremely well equipped for its work.

GEO. MELIES' SCENARIO CONTEST.

Closed September 5, 1909.

Prize winners unanimously selected by the following judges:

J. P. Chalmers, Moving Picture World; Ellis Cohen, The Morning Telegraph; John Collier, Board of Censors; J. F. Driscoll, Exhibitor; James L. Hoff, The Film Index; Gaston Melies, Film Manufacturer; Wm. Steiner, Imperial Film Exchange.

First Prize, $150.—"The Red Star Inn," by Evangeline Sicotte, New York City.

Second Prize, $75.—"Baseball—That's All," by David Reichgott, New Haven, Conn.

Third Prize, $50.—"The Fiend of the Castle," by Florence E. Turner, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Seven Prizes of $25 Each.—"Lucile's Lovers," by Tom P. Morgan, Rogers, Ark.; "For Sale—A Baby," by James Carol, New York City; "The Man in the Bucket," by Joseph Palica, Port Arthur, Texas; "Teddy, the Little Hero," by Mortimer Martini, New York City; "The Naughty Electric Fans," by J. B. Larric, New York City; "The Guide," by R. G. Kelly, Chicago, Ill.; "Pass the Razor," by John M. Bradlet, New York City.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

CHAPTER XIX.

The operator who has a dissolver may work out some very pretty spotlight effects by having a supply of various shapes and dissolving one into the other. He may also select certain blocked out flower song slides and by removing the emulsion for a spot produce nice effects, particularly on a singer. The man who has both a dissolver and spotlight may make some splendid effects by use of the colored flood before described in conjunction with the spot; also he may, in conjunction with the spot, produce some new and beautiful effects on certain vaudeville turns by using the spot small and with the dissolver at the same time throwing on slides of ground, moss and other glasses. The writer uses these effects all the time and so far as he knows is the only one to do so to date. By slow dissolving with some carefully selected glasses, using the small spot at the same time, some very beautiful effects are produced.

The Curtain.

The writer has viewed many different kinds of curtain and curtains covered with several kinds of patent coatings, but to date has seen nothing he thought was better, all things considered, than plain, white plaster. Such a curtain may be readily cleaned by sandpapering lightly with No. 0 or ½ sandpaper. Sheet metal may be used by nailing the joints down level and tight and covering them with a thin putty made from Spanish whiting and white lead in about equal proportions, thinned with boiled linseed oil to proper consistency. This putty should be smeared on with the fingers and carefully wiped until the nilheads and joint is covered and leveled up as much as possible. Coat the whole curtain with white lead mixed with about one-third boiled linseed oil and two-thirds turpentine, adding a little ultramarine blue (ground in oil) to the paint to whiten it. White calcimine may also be used with good effect, but it is likely to peel on metal. A little blue should be added to it as well as to paint. If the latter is used on metal be sure there is no grease or oil on the metal. If there is, remove it with soap and water. Use two or three coats of thin calcimine or paint rather than one heavy one.

If cloth is used stretch it perfectly tight so that there will be no wrinkles. The curtain should set as nearly as possible square with the machine—or, rather, the machine should set square with the curtain. It will be found that much brilliancy will be added to the picture by painting all the curtain except the space actually occupied by the picture a dead black made by mixing dry lampblack with boiled linseed oil and turpentine, in proportions of one-third and two-thirds. The objection to this is that the stereo picture is not the same size or shape as the moving picture, so that where both are used it is impossible thus to outline. A neat, heavy moulding around the curtain adds very much to the effect, but better yet is a "flare" from eighteen inches to two feet in depth such as one sees in the proscenium arch of a theater. The curtain should be of size to accommodate a picture in which the figures will be at least life size. Nine by twelve will do nicely for a small house, but for a house of ample dimensions the picture should be at least fifteen feet in width. It must be remembered, however, that every foot added to the picture size adds enormously to the necessary light intensity to produce equal brilliancy. A certain amount of light is projected to the curtain and is diffused over a given area, depending on the size of the picture. The 9 x 12 picture covers 108 square feet, while the 15 x 18 occupies 270 feet of curtain space—considerably more than twice as much. The writer has often been amused to hear operators discussing the matter of current and asserting that they never use more than twenty-five amperes, or thirty-five amperes, or whatever the individual's preference happened to be. Let me say right now that such talk is foolish. The light intensity, within certain limits, is governed (not altogether, but largely) by the amperage and the light intensity necessary to produce a given result will depend almost altogether on the size of the picture projected. In planning your house this matter should be given due consideration. Better have a good small picture than a bum large one. The writer is using forty-five amperes of direct current at the present time, but he throws a fifteen-foot picture in a house where there is lots of light, part of it being daylight which strikes the curtain badly in the forenoon. Under different conditions he could get better results with one-third less current.

(To be continued.)

THE ELEMENTS OF ACCURACY IN MOVING PICTURE MANUFACTURE.

By Arthur S. Newman.

CHAPTER VI. (Continced from page 374.)

Before treating of the projector, there is another point, not exactly mechanical, and not precisely to do with "accuracy," but one by which a certain pseudo-accuracy may be introduced into pictures which are really inaccurate, and which added to already fairly accurate pictures will lead to great improvement in their apparent steadiness. I refer to the "black-mask." When we look at a picture which is being projected, and pronounce it unsteady, we do so by comparing the non-moving parts of the picture—the ground, houses, trees, etc., with the image of the mask of the projector which is thrown on the screen and forms a frame to the subject. If the projector is properly fixed this frame will not move at all, and will be as steady as if painted on the screen. It is by comparison with this frame that we are enabled to judge of the amount of movement, and if we could place the frame a long way from the picture it is probable that an unsteady picture would at once seem less unsteady. If, when taking the negative, we decrease somewhat the size of the picture, by making the opening which admits the image formed by the lens, less than 1 x ¾ inch, we shall get a clear margin all round each picture on the negative. Suppose our camera to be working accurately, then each still point on our picture will be depicted at its own definite distance from the clear margin.

In our printing machine we must have a mask quite to full size—1 x ¾ inch—the clear margin round the positive will then print quite black and will form the "black-mask" of which I am writing. We will now look into the reason for its advantage. Suppose we start with a good, steady negative, having a clear margin surrounding each picture, the positive produced from it will have all its still points at correct distances from the margin in question, whether the printer be working accurately or not; and the positive, if projected by a machine with a large mask, similar to that of the printer, will appear on the screen with all its still points at their correct distances from the frame, and whether the projector be accurate or not, the still points of the picture will be thrown on the screen in their proper positions relative to the frame, which in this case will be formed by the images of the black margin and black spaces of the positive film instead of by the mask in the gate of the projector. As a consequence, when the "still points" of the picture move (rather Irish this, but I hope I make my meaning clear), the frame of the picture will move to the same extent, and it will not be possible to so easily estimate the amount of unsteadiness as if the picture were framed by the projector-mask. By working on this system one loses some small amount of area in each picture on the film, and the picture on the screen is consequently somewhat smaller, but the slight loss is well paid for by the apparently improved steadiness of the picture, and the frame is a sharply defined one, as it is exactly in the same plane as the picture itself, and so can be focused sharply by the lens; also the small hairs, pieces of film, dust, etc., which so quickly accumulate on the projector mask, and which often become unpleasantly obtrusive, seldom, if ever, show at all, being hidden by the opaque frame round each picture on the film.

I have spoken of this method, or dodge, as though it were particularly applicable to unsteady films; it is also a great improvement to the most steady films ever seen, and until we get pictures so perfect as to be mistaken for lantern slides (when there are no moving figures showing) it will still be of great utility in apparently eliminating just the last trace of movement in our most modern and excellent productions.

The final test of the whole series of operations takes place when the result is put on the screen, when, if any one of the processes has not been carefully and properly carried out, the fact becomes patent to all observers. Before the final test is reached the film must be dealt with by the projector, and to that instrument we will now turn our attention. To glance in the most cursory manner at all the different forms of projectors would take a very long time indeed, and the matter to be dealt with would be much too voluminous to be treated in this series of articles, so I shall confine myself to the two or three different forms of machines most in use at the present time.

The projector differs from the other machine of the series principally in the amount of obliteration due to the action of the shutter. The camera may have 50 per cent. obliteration, or it may have a much higher percentage. I have not come across a camera having less than 50 per cent. in general use, though for a special purpose I once used one having less than 25 per cent. obliteration.

The printer usually has the obliteration period about 50 per cent., sometimes less, though seldom much less. The projector alone has a short obliteration, 25 per cent., or somewhat less, being the usual amount. In saying this I wish to be understood to allude to the general run of machines which have been in vogue during the last five years. Quite recently—so recently as not yet to be generally known—some manufacturers are adding to the time of obliteration in their projectors. The reason for the obliteration in any of the machines is to allow of one portion of the film, which is equal to a picture space, being changed for the next portion, without coming under the influence of light, either in the camera, the printer, or the projector, so that during the movement of the film no effect takes place. In some of the most recent projectors an extra amount of obliteration is being introduced in the form of an extra blade, or in some cases two extra blades added to the shutter, the extra blade or blades in question being caused to pass in front of the film while it remains at rest. I have not yet made a definite test to see if the extra blades improve the effect, but am of opinion that given a good film and a fairly perfect machine, the omission of these extra blades would improve matters.

On the other hand, in the case of an unsteady film, the effect of the extra blades may be to make a more even appearance on the screen by introducing so many more extra alterations of light and dark, that the general effect of alteration becomes continuous, and as a great proportion of the film subjects on the market leave much to be desired in the way of steadiness, on the whole an improved effect may result. I cannot help thinking that in the projector of the future these extra blades will be discontinued, as soon as market films become perfect in this quality of steadiness.

It has always been the object of the manufacturers of projectors to reduce the size of the shutter—or, to speak more correctly, the period of obliteration—to the smallest practical amount, the idea being to allow as much light as possible to reach the screen, and also that the eyes of the audience might be so saturated with light during the exposure period as to carry the sensation of light over the obliteration. With a film that is steady this result is effected, but with an unsteady film the whole result is completely altered.

With a steady film the patches of light in the non-moving parts of the picture fall successively on the same portions of the retina of the eye, and saturate those parts thoroughly, while in the case of an imperfect film, the successive pictures of which do not fall into exact register, the retina is not subjected to a succession of impressions of light exactly in the same place, consequently parts of these patches of light fall from time to time on unsaturated portions of the retina.

(To be continued.)

Kewanee, Ill.—Ed. Funk has opened a new moving picture theater in the Merritt building. It is known as the Princess.

Pana, Ill.—Mr. Dickerson has sold his interest in the White Palace Moving Picture Theater here to William Higgins.

Chicago, Ill.—George Benson will erect a moving picture theater at 2109 North avenue.

Whittinsville, R. I.—Nelson Flebotta and associates will erect a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Domenico Saraci will erect a moving picture theater at 103 Dante place.

Dubuque, Ia.—Jake Rosenthal has opened a new moving picture theater at Fourteenth and Clay streets. It is known as the Royal.

Valentine, Neb.—George Hunter and L. L. Bivens have purchased the moving picture show of John Stetter and have taken possession.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Carl P. Berger has invited estimates on revised plans for a moving picture theater to be located at 515 Moyamensing avenue.

Jacksonville, Ill.—Decker & Salby have disposed of their interest in the Airdome Amusement Company to William H. Denton, of St. Louis.

Grove City, Pa.—John Guthrie, who has managed the Lyric for two years, is building a new picture and vaudeville house on Broad street, adjacent to the Grove City House. The new house will be up to date in every particular, being built to comply with the State laws. Seating capacity will be 500, with a stage 20 by 30. An electric plant is being installed in the basement to furnish direct current for the picture machine and outside illumination, which will consist of Excello Flaming Arcs and Tungsten Lamps. The arrangement for booking the house has not yet been completed, but the intention is to present a good class of vaudeville. The house will be open about November 1.

THE MISSING LINK.

By Van C. Lee.

The moving picture business is not thriving as it ought to. I do not mean in a financial manner, but more regarding its factor as an amusement enterprise. It has by radical jumps and by leaps and bounds reached its present stage, and there it has stopped. There is no question but that to-day it stands second to none, not only as a theater to amuse the public, but as a school of instruction, where, from an educational standpoint, appealing to not only one but to all classes of people, it has no equal.

At first people were slow to accept this latter fact, but of late they begin to realize the immense possibilities of the moving picture and now appreciate what was hard at first for them to fully comprehend.

Taking this into consideration and knowing that it has all been brought about by the large number of picture theaters now located in every town of any size, and cities all over the world, we might ask the question: Why does it now stand still instead of forging forward into a sphere where it properly belongs? There is no denying the fact but that there is a lack of interest, due from some cause or another, which is retarding the advancement of the business, not only as a money making project but as a factor in the world which should not be unfavorably compared with the greatest magazines, our daily papers, the pulpit and the schools, and certainly should be the object of comparison with all other classes of amusement.

Taking all in all and then to sum up everything to a standard, it is simply this: There is something lacking; there is a "something" missing that is needed to fill a great gap that certainly now exists. What is this something? That is the question to be answered, and when it is answered and that "something" produced and put into operation, we will see the moving picture business, or theaters, I should say, patronized as they have never been before.

For some time past managers all over the world have realized that something else was needed beside the silent pictures to hold the interest of the patrons. A great many and various schemes have been devised and tried out. First came the addition of music: At first a piano was sufficient. Then it was the addition of an orchestra. The illustrated song followed, and lastly, all these having failed to hold the interest of those who had been regular and enthusiastic patrons of the theaters, the vaudeville was injected as a stimulant.

Here I take exception to what some may say who claim that vaudeville was the result of opposition and that to meet the advances of the competitor it was necessary to do something or go out of business. There are always two ways to answer an argument. Looking at it in one way, this may appear so, yet, in another light, it is not so. Vaudeville was not the result of opposition, and it is safe to say that more have been forced out of business on account of putting in this so-called vaudeville, than would have suffered had they left well enough alone.

The addition of vaudeville was due directly to a cause, and the same cause that brought about the injection of other ideas in order to hold the interest of the public after they had once entered the theater.

But with the addition of vaudeville, we are simply going backward instead of forward. Vaudeville alone will draw without the pictures—that, if it will do so with the pictures—just as it did during the days of the variety theater, as they were called before the days of moving pictures. Vaudeville died. It succumbed to a natural death, and it is safe to say that some of the so-called vaudeville acts should have been buried so that there was no chance to be resurrected, for surely some acts are only hurting instead of uplifting the business and placing the picture show on the level of the old-time variety shows that were never patronized by the better class of people. I mean by that, people of refinement.

By all signs this vaudeville in conjunction with the moving picture show will die again, and let us hope that this time they will not forget to bury it. But there is one thing certain: It will not die until something else takes its place.

Now for that "something else" which is needed. There is yet one great fault with the pictures. While as natural as life, yet they are as flat as the sheet upon which they are projected. It is safe to look a little into the future. The time is coming, and not far distant, when this flatness must and will be overcome. When this has been accomplished, and the stereoscopic effect has been produced, then the moving picture will be revolutionized. Nothing of its former self will remain except its fidelity to the original. The public will show an interest which has never before been attained. Ushers will not need to go down the aisle and awaken someone who has fallen asleep.

Inventors have been working on this scheme for some time past. At first it was but a dream, but they now assure us that after ceaseless efforts it is only a question of time when they will be crowned with success and that the moving picture of the future will not only be shown in length and breadth but with all the wealth of detail before obtainable only by the use of the stereoscope. If these people who are working toward this result are crowned with success and eventually give to the world the result of their efforts, the addition of vaudeville, or any other foreign subjects, will no longer be necessary.

SOME IMPRESSIONS OF THE MOVING PICTURE IN ST. LOUIS, DETROIT AND BUFFALO.

By Fred Marriott.

I have a very unpleasant recollection of my experience at Forest Park, Highlands, St. Louis. In a hall capable of holding some 4,000 people I took a reserved seat and awaited the moving picture appearance on the screen. Behind me were sitting two men, noisy in their talk and thirsty withal, for they repeatedly disturbed the audience with the loudness and vulgarity of their remarks and their peregrinations towards the refreshment exit. When the moving picture show was to commence the lights disappeared and so did my brand new mackintosh. The nuisances behind had also vanished into thin air and the fat, cute, facetious policeman failed to find any trace of my missing mac. Now, none of your readers I know would be guilty of such a larcenical piece of impudence, but if any of them should happen to see a man about 5 feet 6 inches high wearing a fawn colored mackintosh made by Anderson, Anderson & Anderson, of London, they might politely inquire how, when and where the wearer became possessed thereof, and failing a satisfactory reply inform such wearer that it formerly belonged to a slight young man who left it behind on account of the fact that he had just received it from a friend to whom it had been lent and who was then virulently attacked by smallpox. It will console that impudent thief—he is quite welcome to it, however, and I hope he won't be much pitted about the face when he gets better, that is, if he survives at all, which is doubtful, as I have just had a telephone message to say that my late friend alas! has just died and that his own mother would not have recognized him so terribly was he disfigured.

The moving picture entertainment might well have been prolonged, for the hall is a magnificent one, the seats being raised in such a way as to afford a good view from all parts of the theater. Curiously enough when the orchestra (for there was one and a good one, too) started, little twittering birds flew to and fro without, for the sides are open to the air and the atmosphere was delightfully cool. Would that I could say the same of the houses I visited at other places; your editorial remarks on the open air scheme, if acted upon in this hot clime would be as the advertisement says of a noted pen, "A boon alike to women and men," especially the latter, for the women can wear pneumonia blouses and no sleeves, but the men cannot quite sit in the almost "altogether."

Passing on from St. Louis, where I am informed there are upwards of 40 moving picture shows, I visited Detroit where there are almost as many, some of them gorgeous internally and externally—one in particular more representing a small Opera House, with its gilded boxes, than a "Nickelodeon." In England this gorgeous electrically lighted display is rather regarded as an indication of the "penny gaff," than of the more refined class of entertainment, such as one usually finds in your moving picture resorts." The Majestic, at Detroit, is a comfortable house, not on the theater or opera house principle, but the seating accommodation is ample and the pictures excellent. It is spoilt, however, by the introduction of the most commonplace vaudeville entertainment (as is the Hippodrome show, at Buffalo). Stale jokes, "chestnuts" we call them, in the worst taste were told to the vast amusement of the audience, whose applause, I was surprised to hear, was invoked by the merest jest that would not even appeal to the most vulgar of our London East End pleasure seekers Why is this thus? Many women and well-dressed women, too, were present and their laughter was loudest and longest, and their applause greatest. I thought the American women were more practical and their husbands' sense of humor more subtle than ours, but surely to applaud an obviously stale old joke that I heard my father tell to my mother over my cradle in the days of my sucklehood argues a deterioration in the appreciation of nice subtle humor. Although it is not strictly within the province of this paper or this article to notice the vulgarities of the vaudeville, yet the two entertainments seem to be inseparably connected in many places and it would be to the advantage of your readers visiting these places if the objectionable parts were eliminated from the performances. As, for instance, the man who sang a comic (?) song, wiped his painted proboscis on the back of his hand and deposited the olfactory mucus on the seat of his pants. You Americans who read this will doubtless agree that this is neither funny nor nice, but the very acme of disgusting nastiness. I refer also to jokes (?) in bad taste. Here is an example:

First Low (very low) Comedian to second ditto—Say, sonny, if New York State fought China, who would win?

Second Comedian—How many would each of 'em 'ave?

First Comedian—Well, say New York had 25,000 men and China 25,000 men.

Second Comedian—Why, China, of course.

First Comedian—Nonsense; before going into battle, the New Yorkers would pray for victory.

Second Comedian—Yes, but so would the Chinese.

First Comedian—Of course they would, but then the Almighty could never understand what they said.

Do you not agree that this is both profane and in bad taste?

I miss the privilege, too, to smoke at these entertainments which is permissible at nearly all similar shows in London; in fact, I recollect no exception to this rule. At Forest Park, Highlands, it was permitted and freely taken advantage of, and why not elsewhere? But you must severely penalize expectoration. Your buildings are practically fireproof; your exits excellent; the inflammable film far removed from the audience; why, therefore, is smoking proscribed by your authorities, I wonder? It is true I have noticed a dearth of safety matches in this country, but the lady sitting next you is not of such a hot construction even in your warmest season, that she would cause you to catch fire, surely? As compared with the exhibitions I saw in New York City, I do not think the other cities equal them. Perhaps New York being to you like London is to us, the greatest city in the empire, they get the best there first and then gradually filter them through the provincial cities. Be that as it may, many of the films I saw were old, flickering, worn-out, inferior ones, and only fit to light a gigantic bonfire flame (and I guess they would flare, too) on a Fourth of July celebration. I notice in these country cities a similarity between their audiences and London ones. Perhaps it may be remembered in my former "impressions," that I pointed out that the New York visitants to the moving picture theater were obvious "business men." Now here in the provinces (is that your correct term?) there is a preponderance of women; children, too, are brought by their sisters and their cousins and their aunts in considerable numbers. Surely this is more in accordance with the fitness of things during the hours of the business day

Ah! I know what you are thinking: "What am I doing at all these places in the proscribed hours?" I will take you into my confidence. I am here, gentle reader (for I assume you are gentle) trying to pass my time as best I can in consequence of your bad service of trains. Your travel is luxurious, I admit, but to land in Buffalo, where I write this, at 8 o'clock in the morning and when you go to catch the 8 o'clock Pullman to Albany, and you find that it is already 9 o'clock (time table says 8) you vigorously anathematise when you find there is no other train except one that will land you at Albany, en route to New York, at midnight. I have to wait until the 9:05 P. M., with nothing in the world to do except spend my heard-earned money in your city stores here and pass the time otherwise as best I may, and then travel over night. In order to catch the boat, via Hudson River (I like your rivers by the way), to New York in order that I may see your beautiful scenery. Now I strongly object: the distance is not great between the city of Buffalo and that of Albany; why, therefore, in the name of your great American flag and of "having a good time" (got you there), do you not follow the world famous example of the British Railway Companies (got you again) and put on more trains for comparatively short distances. Brother Jonathan, I demand an answer. I want "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." (Kiss the book, please.) Kiss the book, please, if you don't know it, that is the form of our English oath, and again I repeat if you don't know it, it is time you did for it is the form used even in the Divorce Court, where lies are unknown. They don't even know what a lie is; they are all George Washingtons or Mrs. George Washingtons, and as I suppose as she and her husband were, according to ecclesiastical law, one, practically neither of 'em ever told a lie.

Baltimore, Md.—Chas. W. Demmitt and William Emrich will erect an up-to-date moving picture theater at 1715 Harford avenue.

Notes of the Trade.

The fourth and fifth of the "Les Miserables" series, released by the Vitagraph Company, are announced for November 6th and 27th. The first is "Maurius," and deals with the love of Maurius for Cosette, and the last "Jean Valjean" will take the story to the death of the former galley slave.

* * *

From The Berlin Anilin Works, 213 Water street, New York, we have received a booklet telling all about their photographic specialties. Film makers and slide makers should write for a copy, as it contains much of interest if not value to the progressive photographer. The Agfa products have become famous on their merits, and Agfa metol is acknowledged to be the developer par excellence for negatives.

* * *

The Vitagraph Company of America makes the interesting announcement that preparations are being made to supply suitable music for their "films de luxe" and certain other releases where the use of appropriate music will enhance the value of the film. This music will not be merely a compilation of various melodies, but will be written by a well-known composer to fit the immediate situation, just as the music is written to suit the action in the production of pantomime proper. The music will be written during rchearsals and will be played as the negative of the film is made, ensuring absolute timing, since the pianist has only to play the music at the proper tempo to suit the melody to the action. A copy of the score will accompany each reel of film sent out on these subjects, and this departure, if found successful, will be extended to the general films. The Vitagraph Company has been paying much attention to the musical feature and experiments have been in progress since last Spring looking to some method of meeting the demand for music that would fit well into the situation. Popular airs and standard composition were found not to answer the requirements of the swiftly changing action, and the adoption of the special music idea followed. Since June their efforts have been bent in this direction, and now they are able to announce the pending release of their first musical "film de luxe."

* * *

Mr. F. J. Marion, of the Kalem Company, is back again at his desk after a vacation among the Thousand Islands and an observation tour over the Canadian Pacific Railway to the far northwest, returning by way of Seattle, Portland, Minneapolis and Chicago. Throughout all this territory of the great northwest Mr. Marion was impressed with the general prosperity, the vastness and fullness of the crops and the spirit of progress and refinement which he noticed everywhere. He travelled leisurely, stopping off at every town of any size, and visited scores of moving picture theaters and many of the exchanges. Mr. Marion's account of the status of the moving picture theater in the west is indeed most encouraging. He remarked that the proprietors of these places were generally men of far higher standing in the community than in the East. Also the patrons included the best class of people in the town—and they were interested in the pictures and in the actors and were quick to show appreciation of any fine bit of acting by applause. Mr. Marion was also agreeably impressed with the architecture of the show houses. Getting away from the arched front of white plaster which studs every eastern city, the western architects designed fronts which were more dignified and substantial. A favorite style was hardwood panels and columns with tasteful color decorations which showed up very attractive under the electric lights. The exhibitors whom he conversed with were loud in their praise of the great advancement that had been made in the quality of American films. Some makes were in greater demand than others, but all had a fair show and the cry among exhibitors seemed to be for more variety and more subjects. Mr. Marion said that four times the present output would be needed to appease the demand for first runs and different subjects, and the exhibitors said they were willing to pay more money, if necessary, to get the service. Of course, every sane man knows that such a plethora of food would kill the goose, but we asked Mr. Marion if the Kalem Company proposed to take advantage of the demand and follow the lead of other licensed manufacturers who were increasing their output. Such a step had not been decided upon, he said, but they were increasing their facilities and preparing to supply the goods if the exchanges called for them. He said that they had in preparation a series of comedies on original lines that would enable them to put out another reel a week if called for, and they were not losing sight of any opportunity to expand. He found a very healthy demand for Kalem films, which had resulted in a steady increase of standing orders. Altogether, Mr. Marion was very well satisfied as to the present conditions and highly optimistic as to the future.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

"What are you going to do about it?" I am told that my last week's comments on the new Alliance have won the appreciation of innumerable licensed and non-licensed readers. You know what I mean. I mean people in both of the camps in which, at present, the moving picture field is split. Communications, both direct and indirect, have been made to me whereby it seems that I have correctly sized up the situation and that I have dotted the i's and crossed the t's so clearly that he who runs may read and understand.

* * *

This pleases me very much indeed, for I have no motive to serve but that of making clear to a lot of people, who do not know their own minds, what lies before them in the establishment of this Alliance. The name "Alliance" has been very aptly chosen. An alliance means the association of a number of people pledged to carry out a definite programme for mutual advantage. If there is true alliance in this Alliance, they will achieve their objects: that is, the Independents will do better business than they have done before, which is the reason to be of the formation of this Alliance. Either that or nothing at all.

* * *

But in order to achieve success the members of the Alliance must be loyal to the cause; loyal to themselves and loyal to one another. Are they? No, they are not—yet. The cry of "treason" has been raised, and there are any number of guesses as to the identity of the Judas whom I have said is already in the midst of the Alliance. At the proper time I will tell you who this Judas is, but that time is not yet.

* * *

One of the first things that the executive committee of the Alliance should do is to revise, condense and codify the document printed last week and called the "platform" of the association. This is vague and unspecific to a degree. My readers will more readily understand my meaning when I compare it with the Patents Company's programme, published on December 28 last, which crystallized into very few words a business-like policy that so far has been rigidly adhered to.

* * *

So—"What are you going to do about it?" It is certainly something to have got the constituent elements of the Alliance together. That in itself is a distinct achievement. It is something more to have got a list of officers; to have got money; to have got publicity. But what is needed now is a clear, definite policy which the members themselves will understand and which the public will understand. For the public is a very powerful factor in this case. All these eight months the public have been in some doubt as to what the Independents were doing and how they were doing it. There has been much talk of the exhibition of Independent pictures, but it is not generally known where they could be seen. Perhaps the Alliance will publish a list of Independent theaters throughout the United States. There is always sympathy for the independent side, no matter what the contest be. At present, however, the public have had no opportunity of showing their sympathy here in the most tangible way: that is, by the payment of their dimes and nickels at the doors of Independent moving picture theaters.

* * *

In all this I don't want to be, or appear to be, carping and captious. Rather am I a "damned good-natured friend." I want to help the Alliance, if the Alliance will allow me to help them by suggestions and criticisms. I do not ask the Alliance or the Independents to send me their advertisements, "because I have fought their cause for the last two years." For I have not. And nobody else has that I can discover. Nobody, that is, who has not had a money-making object in view. But I have watched the growth of independent movements in other directions, and I have seen them fail by reason of disunion and disloyalty and the inability of their members to recognize the plain facts of a situation.

* * *

The plain facts of this situation are these: The members of the Alliance must be united, the manufacturers on the Independent side must be united and they must give the public through the Independent moving picture theater, wherever it exists, pictures just as good as the other side are giving, and then success will come. Let it be granted that the first two conditions are in process of accomplishment. The third also remains to be achieved. Broadly speaking, Independent pictures are not the equal in quality of those which older firms have been making for years past. To this there are one or two exceptions which I need not specify, but which are obvious to any intelligent student of moving pictures.

* * *

So the first thing to be done is for the Independent manufacturers to grapple with the problem of quality, as the associated manufacturers have done and are doing. In the last seven or eight months the average quality of the pictures made by the associated manufacturers has enormously advanced. The Independent manufacturers must solve their problem in exactly the same way. Then they will have substantial grounds to stand on. Their exchanges will have their position strengthened and the Independent movement will present a better front to the public.

* * *

It is useless, in my opinion, to rely too much upon imported film, though there is indeed room for a fair quantity of this of the right sort. The Independent manufacturers must get up to the recognized standard in the work—and that is the Pathe standard. Lord sakes! how many of them have I heard say that before long their pictures will be as good as Pathe pictures; or better. And yet how few of them are! So, gentlemen of the Alliance, the battle before you all around is the battle of quality, quality, quality. Quality of commercial and business dealings, quality of picture. Let us hope that this lesson has been laid well to heart at the commencement of the game and that the moving spirits of the Alliance are determined to carry it into effect.

MR. J. W. MORGAN.

A man in whom the newly formed Independent Alliance places much confidence is the vice-president, Mr. J. W. Morgan, of Joplin, Mo., whose portrait is reproduced above. Mr. Morgan conducts a successful film exchange, for which he is well fitted by a long theatrical experience. He was exhibitor for three years with the Whitney Carnival Co., Parker Amusement Co., Patterson Carnival Co., U. S. Amusement Co. and other attractions; general manager for three years, Brownie Balloon o. and the Morgan Brownie Carnival Co., and for the past three years Mr. Morgan has been proprietor of numerous moving picture shows and half-owner of the Morgan-Fearis Film Exchanges, located at Kansas City, Mo.; Joplin, Mo.; Oklahoma City, Okla., and Dallas, Texas. Mr. Morgan has a large acquaintance with all the leading circuses and carnival companies and throughout this country.

WEEKLY VISITS TO THE SHOWS.

By Our Own Critic.

The opening of Mr. Gane's new moving picture theater on West Thirtieth street, New York City, is an event of very considerable significance, for it shows that we have reached that stage, so long looked forward to, when an especially built moving picture house should take its place amongst the other Broadway theaters. Time after time in the Moving Picture World it has been suggested that this was an inevitable development of the progress of the moving picture in the Empire City.

The design and construction of the new house are all that can be desired, and certainly it is a creditable addition to Broadway pleasure places. The seating capacity on the floor, and the balcony which runs round the house, is fully equal to 1,200, but under local building restrictions only 299 seats can be offered to the public. It is to be hoped that in time the full seating capacity of this pleasing house will be availed of.

Since its opening two weeks ago the house has been crowded at ten cents admission, and evidently the new Manhattan is likely to be as popular as was the old. The programme is a mixture of moving pictures and vaudeville. As to the latter, we think that Mr. Gane is rather timid in his policy. We think, as we have thought all along, that Broadway is ripe for a moving picture house per se—a house which shall show the newest moving pictures in the best possible style, maybe interspersed with a good song and some well-illustrated slides, and possibly a short lecture, a la Keith & Proctor. Also, as we have made clear over and over again, good music by way of accompaniment to the pictures. Probably this policy will commend itself to Mr. Gane in due course. Meanwhile, it is satisfactory to note that his experiment is a success. The pictures are shown on a bordered screen which enhances their effect, and projected by a Pathe machine, which ensures their steadiness. We have no doubt that the new Manhattan will be extremely successful. It is a bold and costly experiment, and the more likely, we think, to result in financial esteem and the patronage of the public if everything possible is done to exalt the moving picture and exclude vaudeville. Moving picture audiences don't want vaudeville, and if it is forced upon them they will go elsewhere. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

Among the Exhibitors.

Ocean Springs, Miss.—E. W. Illing has purchased the Vaudette and has taken possession.

Pueblo, Col.—H. L. Holmes, of Seattle, has purchased the Pantages Theater here and has taken possession.

South Bend, Ind.—The Western Amusement Company will open a new picture theater on South Michigan street.

Richmond, Ind.—The People's Theater Company has been organized and will open a moving picture theater here.

St. Charles, Ill.—J. S. Shisler has purchased the Parquette Theater on West Main street and has taken possession.

Hannibal, Mo.—P. E. Goodwin has purchased the Nickelodeon at 205 North Main street and has taken possession.

Waterloo, Ia.—C. J. Rugg has purchased the Jewel Moving Picture Theater from Mr. West and has taken possession.

Duluth, Minn.—A. E. Nelson is making arrangements to erect a new vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

St. Paul, Minn.—A. H. Miller, of Milwaukee, has purchased the interest of Thomas McCready in the Star Theater here.

Wilmington, Del.—N. D. Cloward has purchased the motion picture theater at 411 Market street and has taken possession.

Waukegan, Ill.—William Watts and William Kastner are making arrangements to open a new vaudeville and moving picture show here.

Tawas City. Mich.—M. E. Friedman is making arrangements to open a new moving picture show in the Hoard Building.

Forestville, Wis.—Peter Hageman will start a moving picture show here.

Granite Falls, Minn.—The Granite Falls Bank has opened a new moving picture theater.

Union, Ia.—Flyod Lane has purchased the interest of Leo Dorland in the Electric Theater.

Grand Rapids, Minn.—Comer & Hagen, of Duluth, have leased the old Bijou Theater in the Odd Fellows building and will open a new electric theater with an entirely new outfit. They will name the place the Gem Theater. They will remodel the place in several ways, among which will be an inclined floor, and instal the 1909 model Motiograph.

Delaware, Ohio.—The Ashley "Dreamland" moving picture theater here was damaged by fire.

Marengo, Ill.—F. Wayland Patrick has sold his interest in the New Theater to Clarence St. Clair.

Parsons, Kans.—Billy McCormick has leased the Lyric and Elks theaters here, and is now in charge.

Boonville, Mo.—E. R. Rippeto is making arrangements to start a new moving picture theater here.

Evansville, Ind.—J. C. Weber is completing arrangements for the opening of a new vaudeville theater.

Tomah, Wis.—G. A. Bronson, Jr., has purchased the interest of Dud Cheney in the Unique Theater.

Raleigh, N. C.—John C. Drewry and associates will erect a new vaudeville theater on Fayetteville street.

South Kingston, R. I.—Peter E. Murphy will open a new moving picture theater in the Grand Army Hall.

New Sharon, Ia.—C. W. Kramer has purchased the Electric Theater from Leslie Schwiser and has taken possession.

Wimore, Neb.—T. E. Crawford has leased the Opera House, and will install a vaudeville and moving picture theater.

Raleigh, N. C.—The Grand Theater Company will erect a large vaudeville and moving picture theater on Fayetteville street.

Biloxi, Miss.—The Vaudette Amusement Company has purchased the Dukates Theater here, and has taken possession.

Chicago, Ill.—A. P. Cody has secured a permit for the erection of a moving picture theater at 5613 South Boulevard.

Helena, Mont.—T. O. Peterson has purchased the Lyric Theater here from Hugo Underling, and has taken possession.

Eugene, Ore.—Harris & Walker have begun to remodel their enterprise, "The Aloha," and will increase the seating capacity to 350.

Franklin, N. H.—The Hub Amusement Company has closed its moving picture theater, which was located in the Judkins & Wallace Building.

Carrollton, Mo.—S. Waterson, of Kansas City, is making arrangements to open a new moving picture show in the Armory building here.

Newburyport, Mass.—The Orpheum Theater opened on August 23 with pictures, vaudeville and ladies' orchestra and is playing to packed houses.

Moline, Ill.—George Deihl, of Muscatine, has purchased the Grand Theater here at the corner of Grand and Fifteenth streets, and has taken possession.

Baltimore, Md.—Plans have been drawn for a moving picture theater at 1115 West Saratoga street, to seat 400. Alfred H. Pitts and Charles H. Jones are the owners.

Trinidad, Colo.—A. R. Wilson, of Coffeyville, Kans., has leased the Packer block on Norther Commercial street, and will convert it into a moving picture theater.

Trinidad, Colo.—The firm of Wilson & Scurr, Coffeyville, Kan., has been dissolved, Mr. Scurr retiring from the moving picture business. A. R. Wilson continues to run the show in Trinidad.

Marietta, Ohio.—The Grand Theater, on Putnam street, was sold to-day by the owners, H. C. Miller and O. K. Wigner, to E. E. Eisenbarth. The former owners will open up a film exchange in this city in the near future.

Chelsea, Mass.—Mr. Chenoworth is the new manager at the Scenic Temple. Mr. Chenoworth, though a young man, has had quite an extensive experience in the show business, making him very appreciative of the public needs.

Eugene, Ore.—Mrs. M. E. Watson, proprietor of the Electric Theater, has installed a talking moving picture machine in her enterprise and is reported to be doing an immense business. She also operates the Dreamland Theater of the same city.

Tyler, Texas.—The Plaza Theater, this city, has changed hands, J. F. Bevill having sold out his interest to N. L. Devine, who has assumed full control. The place has been thoroughly renovated and fixed up-to-date. Nothing but the latest licensed pictures are shown, and the house is coming in for its full share of patronage, business having picked up wonderfully within the past several weeks. A big bunch of business is looked forward to as soon as this extremely hot weather has given way to our milder Southern Winter.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Colonial Amusement Co., which was incorporated on August 14 with a capital of $50,000 and has offices at 620 Century building, are doing things in theater promotion. Work has been started on a new theater at Delmar and Euclid avenues, seating 1,500, to be known as the Colonial. Others under way are the Princess, Grand and Olive streets, and the Germania, Delmar avenue, near Grand. Their theaters are built on modern lines and fireproof. Several more are being planned to complete a chain of ten.

Comments on the Week's Films.

IN OLD KENTUCKY (Biograph).

In this week of all weeks the film maker who issues a direct appeal to the patriotic susceptibilities of the great American public, will surely make a great success. Between this picture and the Hudson-Fulton celebrations there is, it is true, no direct connection, except that both arouse a display of emotion at love of country; the primitive instinct of patriotism. The Hudson-Fulton celebrations deal with the beginning of things as they are in the United States. This film of "In Old Kentucky" treats of the always fertile theme of the attempt to destroy the fabric of the Union and the successful defeat of that attempt. Though nearly half a century has elapsed since the end of the war, neither the novelist, the story writer, nor the historian, seems to tire of the subject, nor, presumably, does the public, and it is natural, therefore, such a demand existing, that film makers should play their part of supplying it. It is the same in France, as a study of the silent stage in New York City will tell any observant critic. It is 38 years since the conclusion of the Franco-Prussian war, and yet French authors, painters, illustrators seem never tired of dealing with that terrible time.

The story which the Biograph Company unfolds in this film is of an impressive nature. It shows a house divided against itself. One son is in the Union army, another fights under the Confederate flag. The Confederate officer is captured by his Union brother, but he escapes, returns home and is saved by his mother, is a singularly dramatic scene. The war over, the Union son, who has been promoted, returns home with all the honors of victory, while his Confederate brother falls into abject poverty with the lost cause. He is about to leave the festivities organized in honor of his brother, but is prevented doing so by an affectionate old uncle, who insists upon him remaining. The Union brother welcomes him to the feast, and the picture ends with them clasping hands to the accompaniment of a reproduction of Kentucky's arms—two men under the inscription: "United We Stand; Divided We Fall."

The Biograph Company tell this fine story with such dramatic simplicity of effect that during the past week wherever the picture has been shown it has not failed to elicit loud applause. The acting of the principal characters is strong and convincing to a degree. Indeed, as we sat and watched the picture we were impressed by the zeal and earnestness with which the varions characters seemed to enter into the spirit of their parts. But this is a characteristic of the famous Fourteenth Street players. As we have said many times before, they act their parts and, above all things, they think their parts, and the result is that moving picture audiences have grown so accustomed to the thorough manner in which the acting end of matters is looked after at Fourteenth street that they expect, as a matter of course, something good in the way of dramatic production whenever a Biograph film commences to unfold itself on the screen. The photography of the picture is, of course, of a high-class order, and altogether the film breathes a spirit of patriotism which will find an echo in every American mind at this great juncture in the history of the United States.

DR. COOK (Great Northern).

When Dr. Cook landed at Copenhagen, the Great Northern Company, quick to seize an opportunity, went in pursuit of the hero of the hour with a moving picture camera, with the result that they secured some remarkably good photographs of the incidents attendant upon the landing of the explorer in the Danish capital. Readers of the newspapers for the past few weeks have been regaled with verbal accounts of the wildly enthusiastic reception which the warm hearted Danes accorded Dr. Cook. But it needed some such pictures as those under notice to convey a truer idea of the warmth of the reception. First of all we are shown views of the ship which carried Dr. Cook into Copenhagen. More exquisite photographs in respect of tone qualities we have not seen than in this part of the film, the remainder of which is simply an excellent record of Dr. Cook's triumphant progress in Copenhagen. The operator was fortunate enough to get Dr. Cook by himself, and so there are two or three series of good photographs of him on shipboard and elsewhere. Royalty, society and the populace greeted Dr. Cook, who is shown publicly addressing the people from the window of one of the Copenhagen public buildings. There are pictures of the Eskimos who accompanied him, views on his ship and many other incidents that took place in Copenhagen. As we have said the photographic quality of this picture is superb. Its topical interest at this moment should insure it a great success in the American moving picture theater. We understand that all copies have been disposed of. It only remains for us to congratulate the Great Northern Film Company on the celerity with which this picture was obtained and put on the American market.

AEROPLANE CONTESTS AT RHEIMS (Urban-Eclipse).

This picture may be looked upon in some sense as a sequel to the Gaumont release of September 7, "First Airships Crossing the English Channel," and the Urban-Eclipse operators have been equally as successful as the Gaumont photographers. This picture is sure to be popular in virtue of the fact that several very excellent sky pictures of the aeroplane have been secured. The film was exposed when the machines were comparatively near the camera and the result is that the aeroplane on the screen looks so large that you could pick out the details of their construction and see the aviators at work. The principal aviators of the world are shown in their flight and the picture concludes with a fine view of Bleriot's smashed aeroplane, the accident to which nearly cost his life. All the incidents of the preparation, ascension and actual flight are shown in this interesting picture, which, as we have already said, is a photographic success in virtue of the fact that the audience obtains a very good view of the machine in flight with the image of the principal object of a good size. In many of these pictures the principal object is photographed too far from the lens to render the picture sufficiently large on the film. But this is not the fault of the present film, which is certain to please and interest all who see it.

A TRUE PATRIOT (Lubin).

A picture purporting to reproduce a scene from the Revolutionary War. Misunderstanding of one's position is well illustrated in this film. The father, believing the young man false to his vows in accepting British money to guide them through the woods and into a trap, strikes him down with an axe, when, as a matter of fact, the young man has seen the American general and is acting under orders in accepting the money and performing the service. And as the son's inanimate form lies on the floor, apparently lifeless from the father's blow, the American officers arrive to praise him for his patriotic service. Fortunately the blow is not fatal and the young man revives to receive the officers' congratulations and to see the decoration which is pinned on his coat. No great dramatic possibilities are developed in this story, but it is wholesome in its influence and the scenery is picturesque and interesting. The costuming seems to have been attended to with care, and the staging has more of the real Revolutionary spirit than a good many of these pictures do. Lubin has been successful in this direction. His Revolutionary pictures are probably as faithful reproductions of Revolutionary scenes and incidents as can be produced now, and while they are more or less melodramatic, they give a reasonably accurate impression of what actually occurred during that struggle. The photography in this one is not as good as it should have been. Some of the outdoor scenes are marred by halation and there is some blurring in the moving figures, partly because they are permitted to walk straight into the camera. The march of the British soldiers through the woods is an excellent scene, however, and deserves special mention.

COMATA, THE SIOUX (Biograph).

A drama purporting to represent the constancy of the Indian, but the title might be extended and say that it represents, too, the inconstancy of the white man. The story is simple. A white man takes an Indian maiden for his wife, but tires of her within a short time and makes ardent love to a white girl who promises to marry him. The Indian woman's former Sioux lover discovers this and by producing the child convinces the white girl that the story is true. She sends for the man and confronts him with the evidence of his perfidy and her father drives him away. The wronged wife takes her baby and flees to the mountains, sinking exhausted among the rocks where she is found by her Sioux lover who takes her away with him. While this picture is a good piece of dramatic work, it is not as good as some of the Biograph Indian dramas which have been produced before. Perhaps the character of the drama is partially responsible for this impression since the acting does not require the dash and spirit which have characterized former Indian dramas. There is, however, something forceful in the quiet dignity of the Sioux brave which cannot be easily set aside, but apart from this one character the dramatic possibilities are not great. It is a reasonably interesting story, told with fidelity as to details, with one possible exception. Were not the Sioux plains Indians, and were not the instances when they went to the mountains rare? Of course it is understood that no hard and fast rule of conduct governed them, but it has been established that plains Indians rarely sought the mountains, nor did the mountain Indians go to the plains. It is true that the Sioux were driven into the mountains by the white man, and perhaps it is only reasonable to accept the scenario of this drama as representing that stage in the national life of the Sioux, and maybe this view is strengthened by the fact that white people appear in the play. The photography of the picture could scarcely be improved and most of the scenes are picturesque and attractive. The costuming of the Indians appears to be reasonably accurate and the picture is pleasing.

"The Unspoken Good-Bye."—A Vitagraph rendition of one of those little domestic tragedies which frequently mean much to the negligent parties, but affecting no one else. One of the scenes in this picture is extremely realistic, involving the premature explosion of a quarter of a ton of dynamite. The subsequent discovery that a number have been killed adds to the sense of excitement. Fortunately, the foreman had sent one workman to another part of the quarry, otherwise the refusal to bid him good-bye in the morning would have haunted one wife all her days. The essential features of the story are told, and the re-union, one of those happy endings which invariably leave the audience in good humor, is well worth seeing. The picture is a good one, containing several thrills and ending happily in true melodramatic style. Technically it is good, though occasionally there appear dim spots. The ambulance scene is marred by the man in the foreground who persistently looks at the camera and poses in a stiff, formal manner for his photograph. Altogether it is rather a nice story and well told, but could have been made more clear by showing another scene with the supposed dead man away at his work and being discovered by someone, instead of the sudden apparition.

"The Bachelor's Visit."—A comedy from Selig based upon the always perennial commuter joke. Whether or not it is true that visitors to the country have as much difficulty as is illustrated in this film is a question which may well be doubted; but it serves to supply amusement while the picture is running and may be accepted as true enough for that at least. The run for the train is true to life. The loss of the satchel on the ferry boat is not improbable, but the family row may be considered questionable. The search of the time table for the next train to the city is a convincing ending for a film which will appeal, with its grim humor, to a great many people. Technically it is a reasonably good picture and it makes the audience laugh.

"Suitors' Competition."—Here is a Pathe which develops some original and humorous situations. A handsome heiress has numerous suitors, as might be expected, and devises ingenious ways to put them to a test. There are various contests of physical prowess, won by one burly fellow who routs all his competitors. But when the test of moral courage is applied, a little man who was behind in everything else proved his worth and is awarded the heiress' hand. The story, while not of especial strength, is well told and the technical quality helps to make it interesting. At least it is not gloomy.

"Caught in His Own Trap."—A graphic demonstration of the fact that one must be extremely careful in setting traps not to go near them. When one attempts to discover when there is love making during his absence he should stimulate his memory. Otherwise he may bring trouble upon himself. The Pathes have produced an amusing and well acted film, certain to provoke laughter in any audience.

"The Rivals."—A Hepwix which involves a policeman, a sergeant, a girl and a traveling mesmerist. Pictures like this, the love affairs of a policeman and some servant girl, are not particularly interesting to American audiences. They may be applicable to certain phases of foreign life, but it is doubtful if they illustrate any considerable proportion of either policemen or servant girls in this country. The acting in this is fair, but the photography is poor in many places and needs improvement.

"The Justifier."—An Eclair which seeks to teach the lesson that justice will be meted out to those in power who are abusive. The overlord in this picture is very oberbearing, and orders away to punishment one for whom all plead. His chaplain takes up the side of the oppressed people, leads a mob to the place and kills the cruel master. He in turn is followed and killed. It is not quite clear how or why the picture exists. It is technically good, but the story it tells, and the way it is worked out are hardly satisfactory. It is a pity that such good technical work could not be joined with some subject worth while.

"From Millionaire to Porter."—A melodrama from Le Lion which reverses the usual order and sends a millionaire to work carrying heavy timbers in what was formerly his own shipyards. Suddenly a brother who ruined him returns with money and it is all off with work. Then there is a love story interwoven, and some attractive domestic scenes which add to the dramatic interest. But the whole picture is spoiled by the poor photography. The writer does not recall seeing any worse in any film sent out within a year. Until the firm can improve its photography it is a hopeless task to undertake to popularize its films.

"Oh, What a Beard!"—A comedy from Pathes which represents a father objecting to attentions paid his daughter and chasing the young man off the place. He manages to escape and the old man runs amuck, attacking every man he meets until his outrageous conduct lands him in jail.

"The Fresh Kid."—A Pathe illustrating some pranks of a mischievous small boy. Such pictures please to some extent, but one wonders sometimes if boys actually do such things in real life. The pranks in this instance seem far fetched and rather point toward invention for the occasion It is lively and to that extent amuses.

"Construction of Balloons."—A Pathe which graphically illustrates a new industry. The great interest in balloons and flying machines makes this picture particularly interesting. It shows the construction of the balloon from the delivery of the raw material to the finished balloon. The pictures are made at such close range that every process and operation is clearly visible. Such pictures afford the double purpose of instructing and amusing, and this combination means interesting.

"The Farmer's Treasure."—An Urban into which is woven a love story of considerable interest, since it involves opposition on the part of the girl's father to the young man of her choice. The miserly disposition of the father leads him to bury his wealth in an orchard. Two thieves follow him and but for the intervention of the young man to whom the father raised objections, they would have made way with his hoard. For this service the young man is joyfully received into the family and everybody is happy except the thieves, who arrived a bit too late. Technically the film is satisfactory and there is snap enough to the action to hold the interest.

"A Kentucky Planter."—A release of the New York Motion picture Company which is a bit misleading in its title. It is really a graphic story of the Night Riders who have terrorized that State for the past few years in the tobacco difficulties. Here is a night visitation, setting a house on fire, the taking of a planter from his home to the woods, where he is tied to a tree and lashed, and his retaliation by setting the barn in which the Night Riders were meeting on fire, and the capture of the Riders by the State constabulary. If much more excitement could be crowded into 1,000 feet of film it would require close packing. A very pretty girl appears, but one is spared the repetition of a love story. Undoubtedly this picture illustrates many occurrences in Kentucky during the past few years, and even though it is sensational it becomes, because of its instructive features, educational. Public sentiment would unquestionably force the cessation of such occurrences if the people were informed, or if a sufficiently vivid impression could be gained to make them understand. Motion pictures of this type will be influential in creating a sentiment against such horrors. The motion picture will drive out the Night Rider, just as light does more to prevent burglary than all the police ever appointed.

"A White Lie."—A Centaur picture ranking with the excellent work this company has produced of late. Filled with dramatic moments, the actors develop them to the utmost, though always naturally and to the best advantage of the picture. The murder scene is thrilling, but the one which holds the audience in suspense is when the sister is deliberating whether she shall turn the escaped convict over to the officers or deny his presence. It is a relief when she says he is not there and the officers leave without taking him. The entire film is well done. The acting is easy and vigorous enough to interpret the emotions represented, and the photographer accompanied the acting with equally good technical work. The film is well worth a long run.

"The Broken Locket."—A Biograph picture which preaches a very powerful temperance sermon. Like many of recent Biograph films, this is a beautiful picture, acted with sufficient fidelity to facts to make it seem real, yet there is a sense of disappointment about it, a feeling of unsatisfied longing which causes one to almost wish he had never seen the picture. Of course this, in a way, is a tribute to the picture and the actors who made it, but one must admit that there is a feeling following one of these pictures which is likely to linger and continue the depressing influence long after the picture was seen. One must pay tribute to the actors and acknowledge their ability in interpreting their various parts, but to have the story left with the girl blind, the man still a drunkard and a tramp and the parts of the broken locket still separated is a violation of the expectations of most who see it. Here lies the secret of the disappointment. Most who see it are trained in melodramtic methods and forget that the drama knows nothing of this method unless it harmonizes with the conception of the author. The piece is strongly dramatic.

"The Fortune Hunters."—A Lubin travesty upon courtships at Summer resorts which is funny, as all of Lubin's comedies are funny, with a subtle humor which often makes them philosophical rather than merely amusing. He is a millionaire and she is an heiress. He leaves her to go back to "The Street." She leaves him to go to Europe. He finds her in Child's restaurant, she finds him selling ribbons in a department store. It is needless to make any further explanation. The imagination can supply all the details required to make the picture complete.

"All On Account of a Letter."—A melodramatic comedy from Lubin which has a misplaced love letter, a wife determined to kill herself with poison and a pseudo brave husband who attempts to impress his wife with a fake bravery as the principal features in a series of animated scenes. The application of the stomach pump when it is not really needed is sufficiently funny to create a roar of laughter.

"How the Landlord Collected His Rents."—An Edison picture in which boisterous fun and tenderest sympathy are blended, and to that extent it is a transcript of human nature. When this landlord escapes from the attention of the first tenants he visits he looks as though he had made the acquaintance of a threshing machine. In the last place he finds poverty and illness and there, instead of collecting money he leaves some, a tender touch which makes one feel that the world is not so bad after all. Fun and pathos. Common enough in real life, but seldom so pleasantly united in a motion picture.

"'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night."—A mystery picture from the Edison studio the motif of which is the attempt of a young man, on a wager, to stay all night in a house reported to be haunted. It is haunted indeed, as he discovers before very long, and the ghostly appearances which appear to him and upset his poise are amusing and afford basis for considerable guessing as to just how they were done. The film should be popular and ought to enjoy a long run.

"The Story of a Rose."—A pathetic story of Italian life from Kalem which brings a poor Italian who attempted to obtain some roses for his crippled daughter through trying vicissitudes safe out at last, when he gets the roses and makes a number of powerful friends. It is one of those moving picture tales of real life among the lowly which most people can duplicate or very closely approach, consequently it should be, and probably will be, popular.

"The Mountebank's Son."—A Pathe story of strolling players, artistically beautiful and dramatically perfect, but conveying little meaning to American audiences, because strolling players, mountebanks, are unknown in this country. The double life of the young man, his plunge into all sorts of dissipation, his desertion of his wife and his subsequent return are all important dramatic features which add materially to the attraction of the play. It is a good picture and will please with its technical excellence if in no other way.

"The Engagement Ring."—A Selig melodrama which has in it the spirit and dash which characterize most of the Selig pictures. The storekeeper's daughter rejects the schoolmaster who has been her devoted lover, and runs away with a drummer, who plans to deceive her with a fake marriage ceremony. There is the accompaniment of a sheriff's posse in pursuit, an attempted drowning of the schoolmaster by the drummer with a real melodramatic plunge of the girl from a bridge to rescue him, and finally an acceptance of an engagement ring from the schoolmaster with a wedding to follow, presumably. It is a very lively and interesting story, with sufficient melodrama to keep the audience keyed up. Like all vigorous melodramas the picture rewards virtue and punishes wickedness, an important consideration in dramas for the masses. Photographically the film is a good one. The values of the picture are nearly all correctly rendered, and the maker of the positive has done his work well. It is a satisfactory picture and should be popular.

"Glimpses of the Yellowstone Park."—A Lubin interpretation of a few scenes in the Yellowstone. The scenic features of that marvelous region will always interest and those shown in this film are different from the others, hence the interest is maintained. One is bound to see, however, that while the red tones given the scenes in the Devil's Hole make it a striking picture, the rendering of the Yellowstone Falls is not so successful. It conveys almost no impression of its majesty and even though it is more than three hundred feet high it is dwarfed in the photographing and appears like only a small fall.

"Quicksands" (Gaumont).—Another sombre story, which is deserving of more than passing notice on account of its artistic treatment. The action is also convincing. Note the fine acting of the youth on the treacherous sands, also of the priests as they kneel one by one. Particularly to be noted is the rescue from the rock as it is fast being submerged by the tide, and the manner in which the fainting boy is being carried down the stone steps. This scene forms a charming composition. There are some scenes that have evidently been inserted to length out the film, but they weaken rather than strengthen the picture. For example, the anti-climax of the death of the leading character could have well been omitted, as well as the miraculous painting on the easel and the vision of St. Michael and the two angels. We might also suggest that the interest in scenes of this kind would be greater if they represented modern times, judging from the opinions expressed by the spectators.

"Dropped from the Clouds."—A Gaumont which affords opportunity for some clever trick photography, basing it upon the rage of a husband who discovers a knight singing under his wife's window. What he does to the knight may never be known, because the knight disappears mysteriously, and the adventures which befall the husband after that are sufficient to cause him to forget that he was pursuing a Lothario who sought to make love to his wife. Interesting journeys and surprising adventures are the husband's lot, finally ending with a tumble from the clouds to his wife's window, where they make up and forget that anything ever came between them.

"Gratitude."—A satire or comedy from the Essanay studio which leaves one more or less mixed and undecided regarding the quality of the picture or the strength and purpose of the acting. To see a thief clasp the hands of an estranged husband and wife and then disappear in the darkness, is enough of a novelty to arouse interest, and to see this same thief interceded for by the wife after he had knocked down her husband for abusing her is another novelty in motion pictures. The drunkard's reformation is determined upon with almost lightning swiftness, but perhaps is none the less genuine. One must allow the producer a little latitude in pictures, and perhaps this is intended only to typify a reformation which required a considerable time to perfect. However, the audience is led to infer that the couple live happily afterward and apparently all because a thief entered the room where the woman was sleeping and succeeded in securing considerable booty before the husband returned. The film must interest because it is different. One is not required to accept the assertions of the film as evidence of any facts in such a case.

"Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics."—A Pathe which illustrates very graphically the chase and killing of a sea lion in the Arctic regions. The reproduction is perfect and the scenery is correctly interpretative of the Arctic cold and snows.

"Sports in Java."—A Pathe illustrating some of the popular sports of the Island of Java. The sports are different from those which are commonly accepted as sports here, but are none the less interesting.

"Taking in a Reef."—A Gaumont film, illustrating the results of the efforts of a gentleman to have his belt drawn tight enough to suit him. All sorts of unpleasant consequences follow his request of this or that one to help, and numerous funny situations are developed. Finally he himself disappears when he attaches it to a windlass, which draws him up and carries him away. Technically the film is good.

Sterling, Ill.—Hatch & Mouck, of Rock Falls, have been awarded the contract for the erection of a new airdome here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—George Hogg has plans for the erection of a moving picture theater at 515 Moyamensing avenue.

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

Do You Notice

How I Put The Word Economizer In Small Type? — You Notice That The Word HALLBERG stands out strong and solid. There's a reason. Ever since I put the first Automatic Electric Economizer on the market, there have been so many thingamabobs dubbed "Economizer" that I wanted to save the unwary from getting something they didn't think they were. Wherever there is a moving picture theatre or a film exchange the word "HALLBERG" means merit, honest value and efficiency.

READ THIS

(Extracts from letters written by Jas. A. McCurry, owner Gem Theatre, Rocky Ford, Colo. Note the dates)

August 4 1908

"Now in regard to the "Economizer." I will wait this month and see how a CHEAPER CURRENT Saver does, which I have on trial."

November 11 1908

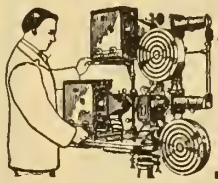
I am tired of trying NO GOOD Current Savers. Ship me yours by freight at once. I am willing to pay your price for it. NOTHING IN THESE CHEAP ONES.

Now the simplest thing to do is to write Mr. McCurry. Ask him if the "HALLBERG" isn't the one real and only vital machine on the market. I carry a full line of 4000 c.p. Flaming Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "ELECTRA" Pink Label Carbons is complete. I also handle the best Moving Picture Machines and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices, they are interesting.

Write for FREE Booklet No. 4-W

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Ave., New York

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.

Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"

Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined? Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY? Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN

THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

SOUTHERN RENTERS

NOW THAT WE ARE buying only from Licensed makers, we are in position to serve you both courteously and well :: :: We can place a few first run renters and guarantee all others protection. We make no promises, but instead we protect you with contracts. Handling only the output of Biograph, Pathe, Vitagraph, Selig, etc. Can't you ask about it. :: :: ::

S. Nye Bass Film Exchange

823 UNION STREET :: NEW ORLEANS, LA.

OUR PREMIER FILM SERVICE

is the result of heavy purchases of the entire output of the Licensed Manufacturers—nothing about it is guess work. We sure have the Film Service that is THE BEST. :: :: How about an inquiry.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio. Omaha, Neb

HUDSON-FULTON CELEBRATION SLIDES

BEAUTIFULLY COLORED

Price, 40c Each

POSTAGE PAID

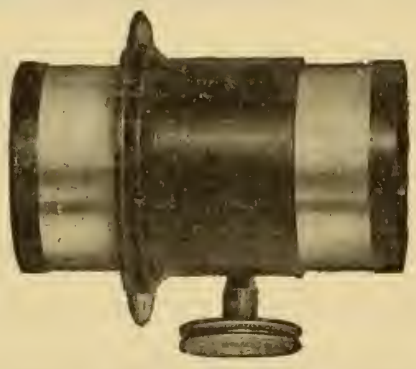
Henry Hudson — Robert Fulton
The Half Moon — The Claremont

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY
221 East 53d St. NEW YORK CITY

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
33-137 West 23rd Street, New York



FACTS YOU CAN'T AFFORD TO OVERLOOK

WE manufacture lenses for all purposes—from the great telescope objectives to those no larger than a pin head. We are the largest makers of lenses in the world, and our lenses for all purposes are regarded as standard.

¶ When you buy an equipment, insist upon having it fitted with the

BAUSCH & LOMB PROJECTION LENS

which is superior to any other. The dealer doesn't make quite as much profit on them as on others, but you can get a result impossible to the less scientific and less perfect lenses.

¶ Send for Projection Lens Booklet.

¶ PRISM is our little lens expositor. Send for Copy D free upon request.

Our Name on a Photographic Lens, Microscope, Field Glass, Laboratory Apparatus, Engineering or any other Scientific Instrument is our Guarantee.

Bausch & Lomb Optical Co.

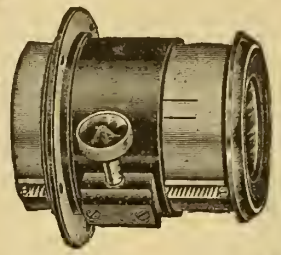
NEW YORK WASHINGTON CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO
LONDON ROCHESTER, N.Y. FRANKFORT

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies. : : : :

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND OHIO



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

A Wonderful Achievement in the History of a Renter

DID you ever tell your exchange that you are satisfied with his service? Well, we receive letters every single day from our customers from all over the United States stating that all our imported films are money-making.

Don't you think it's a great discovery to have found at last the secret to satisfy a customer?

Nobody could give you what you want but

Exhibitors' Film Exchange

PHONE 7257 STUYVESANT

138 Third Ave. Between 14th and 15th Sts.

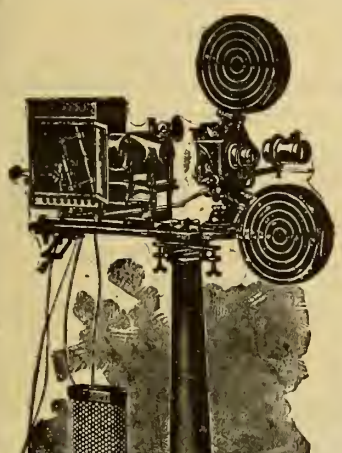
NEW YORK

All works of taste must bear a price in proportion to the skill, taste, time, expense and risk attending ther manufacture. Those things called dear are, when justly estimated, the cheapest; they are attended with much less profit to the artist than those which everybody calls cheap. Beautiful slides are not made by chance, nor can they ever in any material be made at small expense.

BRAYTON
Best
Slides
50c. EACH
Like Cuts
Beautifully Colored

Let us mail you our complete list free

BRAYTON MANUFACTURING CO., - 122 E. Randolph St., Chicago
BABY AND YOUNG LADY CONTEST—ADVERTISING—ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES



PREVENTS TIRED EYES AND HEADACHES

The rapidity of our new shutter has been so perfected that 30 to 40 per cent. less non-exposure (which has heretofore caused the tremulous vibration producing so many tired eyes and headaches) is found in the Motiograph than in any other machine, making perfect brilliancy of picture and sharpness of outline. Together with the rocklike steadiness of the pedestal the flicker is thus entirely eliminated.

Five-cent Theatre and Vaudeville-House Managers increase their bank account with the Motiograph. Patrons who come once will always come again where they know they see the best pictures, positively rest their eyes instead of tiring them, and where all fire risks are removed.

The Motiograph

1909 Theatre Model, Especially Approved by the Underwriters Association

OTHER POINTS OF EXCELLENCE IN THE MOTIOGRAPH found in no other machines are: A special Film Rewind by which the film can be rewound with the main crank in two minutes without removing either reels or magazines, saving time between pictures and entertainments; perfected Fireproof Magazines, Fire Traps, with four rollers and with spring actuated flanged guides, preventing side movement and making it impossible for fire to pass them; never failing Automatic Fireproof Shutters; Perfect Framing Device; Flanged Sprocket Rollers to prevent film being torn or ruined by accidentally running off sprocket wheels; Enclosed Gears and working parts; Perfect Take-up with new form of belt adjuster; Lid Off Wide Open Lamp House making it easily accessible; Improved Arc Lamp with all Hand Wheel Adjustments; Slide Carrier Swing, saving one-third more illustration for the Motion Pictures.

FILMS AND SLIDES

Headquarters for the finest, largest and most complete stock in the United States. The success of an entertainment depends on never allowing the interest of an audience to flag; patrons who have come once will come again when constgnt change of programme is made.

Send For NEW CATALOGUE of Entertainers Supplies explaining everything and showing how big money can be made entertaining the public, sent free. Special literature describing the advantages of the Motiograph for professional entertainers and theatre managers.

CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., E. D. OTIS, Mgr., Supply Dept., 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

For Sale
100 PLUSH OPERA CHAIRS
FOR $100
Cost $7.00 each
BUFFALO FILM EXCHANGE
272 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y.

For Rent—6,000 feet film, 3 sets song slides, $12 weekly, one shipment; 12,000 feet, $20. For Sale—Power's and Edison one-pin machine, $60. Slightly used film, 1 and 2 cents per foot. Will buy film, machines. H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wis.

FOLDING CHAIRS

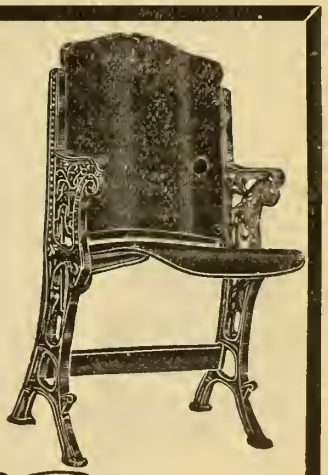
For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands. Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLEY, OHIO

A BETTER SHOW A BETTER CHAIR

And 10 Cents Admission



That is what the live ones are bringing about.

Throw out your old chairs and put in stronger and neater ones—not necessarily expensive.

We carry good chairs in stock for prompt shipments. Write for Booklet T 13 and prices.

American Seating Company

CHICAGO
215 Wabash Avenue
NEW YORK
19 W. 18th Street
BOSTON
70 Franklin Street
PHILADELPHIA
1235 Arch Street
CINCINNATI, Mitchell Building

BRANCHES IN EVERY PRINCIPAL CITY IN THE UNITED STATES

SLIDES
of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

Someone Else
Hello, Angel Face
I'd Rather Be With You On Old Broadway.
Oh! What I Know About You?
My Southern Rose.
I'm Going To Do What I Please.
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have A Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Twilight.
Oh! What I'd Do For A Girl Like You.
Good-Bye Girlie And Remember Me.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

United Film Sales Company

Have a large stock of late INDEPENDENT FILM FOR SALE AT BARGAIN PRICES. Write or wire for list of subjects. Prices 1 to 5c per foot. We deal in good Film only and are not renters.

Phone Gramercy 2369 30 East 23rd Street, New York City

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY
110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.

FILMS FOR SALE. $10, $12, $15 per reel.

One New Dressler Machine, One Second-hand Power's Machine, One Edison Machine. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

FILMS FOR RENT
6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week
$2.00 per change all in good condition

Signs and Banners no extra charge

FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel

LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

FILM TITLES FILM

Made in 5 ft. Lengths. Tinted any Color 10c. per foot.

THE FILM RENEWING CO.
744 ORLEANS STREET CHICAGO, ILL.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.

Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample. FORMULA, $3.00.

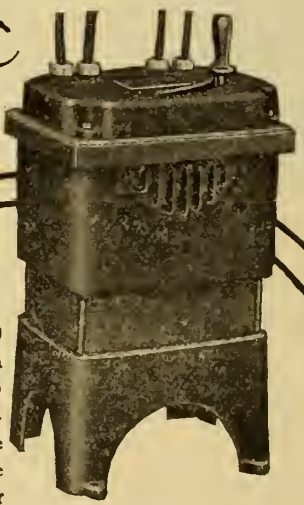
H. E. HUFFINGTON
8 So. Carey Street, Baltimore, Md.

CHEAP
Steel Frame Theatre Chairs
ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs
Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.
Address Dept. W,
STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York Office, 44 Park Place
Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.
Western Office,
Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

COMPENSARC
This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills



Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
1402 Broadway
Fort Wayne, Indiana

Send TODAY for our FREE descriptive booklet

Stories of the Films.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

LEATHER STOCKING.—Freely adapted from the tales of James Fenimore Cooper. What person has not been enthralled by the beautiful and thrilling pen pictures of that greatest of novelists, James Feuimore Cooper? Living, as he did, almost associated with that tribe of the Algonquin stock, the Mohicans, his characters were real, living people, and while we have made no attempt to follow closely his story, we present a vivid appreciation of his work, the result, we may truthfully assert, being one of the most thrilliug and picturesque subjects ever produced. Our story starts with the Colonel and his two nieces starting out to make a short cut to Fort George, accompanied by a scout and piloted by a trusted Indian guide, who was none other than Big Serpent. This traitorous redskin is elated at the opportunity to perpetrate a long cherished revenge. To this effect he has notified his followers and they stand in readiness to act at his call. Proceeding on their journey, they come to a mountain stream, where the party rest and take water, Big Serpent and the scout leading the horses into the shade of the wood. Just prior to the party's arrival, Leather Stocking and Uncas meet, and when they learn Big Serpent is guiding the party, they express their misgivings, being sure of his sinister intention, and truely, for while they are indicating their fears, the scout rushes on and tells that he had been assaulted and the horses killed. Leather Stocking and Uncas volunteer to see the party through their danger, if possible, but they have not proceeded far when the woods seem alive with Indians and the party is almost surrounded. Taking the only avenue of retreat, they manage to reach the stockade just ahead of the bloodthirsty Indians. Here a spirited battle ensues, which is not destined to last long, as ammunition is low. It is hoping against hope, for we now find there are but two charges left, and after that they will be at the mercy of the foe. Leather Stocking, however, feels that there is but one chance, hazardous though it he, of getting to the fort for aid. His plan is subtle in the extreme. Donning an auimal's skin, he plunges into the swirly, tortuous river at the back of the stockade, knowing that the crafty Indians would waste no ammunition on game, but save it for the enemy—ammuuition being a scarce and precious commodity. Iu this manner he succeeds in reaching the soldiers' quarters, where he falls exhausted, after telling them of the danger of the party. The soldiers start off at once, and are none too soon, for in the meantime the Indians have effected an entrance into the stockade with battering rams and have the party tied up to trees, piling brush to incinerate them. The torch is already applied to the brush about Uncas, and only the timely arrival of the soldiers and annihilation of the redskins saves his life. Uncas then accompanies the party on their way to the brow of the hill, where we leave him standing alone—the last of the Mohicans. Length, 996 feet.

THE AWAKENING.—Leave it to Cupid. He is the boy who knows how to make his point. You can as easily escape the hot stinger of the infuriated hornet, into whose habitation you have ill-advisedly poked your cane, as that unclothed little rascal's dart when he gets after you. Here we show one of his pranks, in which he brings together, in spite of themselves, affinities who, though stubbornly resistant, finally succumb to the influence of his dart's dulcitude. The young Major is, in his own mind, a confirmed bachelor, but the fates oppose. His uncle has made his will conditional, knowing his reckless nature. He must marry within a stated time or lose his inheritance. The Major is apprised by the lawyer that the time limit draws near, and unless he marries at once, he is dished. To tell the truth, he feels that one condiion is as odious as the other, particularly as his warning comes while he is enjoying himself with convivial chums at the club. "Marry—good heavens! But where's the bride?" Surely he must obtain a wife to order. Well, a search is made, but the astute attorney has anticipated the affair and interviewed a Spanish widow lady, whose daughter, still at convent school, is fair to look upon and of marriagcable age. The wedding takes place, and woe is stamped upon the face of the hapless bridegroom as he comes up the aisle of the church. The girl, however, seems to be overjoycd as she gazes up at the handsome officer, now her huhby. Arriving at the house, the Major hids his wife make herself perfectly at bome, while he goes to enjoy the companionship of his club friends. Here's where Cupid chuckles "We shall see." The sweet face of the little girl is ever before him, and his indifferent heart is beginning to experience new emotions as he pictures her alone in their home. He thinks, "Can this be love? Nonsense!" Returning home, he saunters out into the garden, where the little one had climbed the trellis to pluck a rose for him. She loses her equilibrium just as he appears, and falls into his arms. It is the awakening, and Cupid laughs. Length, 691 feet.

WANTED: A CHILD.—"There was an old woman who lived in a shoe. She had so many children she didn't know what to do." Yet would the aforesaid old lady part with any of those youngsters? Nary a kid. The same with the parents of the brood our picture shows. The father is a laborer, and times being dull, the family strongbox is in an emaciated condition; hence he finds the struggle to feed the eight mouths—a wife and seven—pretty tough. But the worst comes when he finds his work shut down, for the time being, at least. The mother and father are in deep despair, when a letter arrives from the bachelor brother, as follows: "My Dear Friends—As I grow old and lonely, I sometimes think I would like to have a child that would be like a son or daughter. You are always complainiug that you have so many. Well, send one to me, and I will repay you with a fair sum of money. Your brother, Mark." Here is a splendid chance to lighten their burden, and so they make a round of the little cots on which the young ones are sleeping, with the view of selecting which one they will send. Well, the result is the following note: "Dear Brother—Me and my wife have thought over your kind letter. At first we were going to send you all our children, but we find we are too poor to spare one. John." Length, 296 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

THE JUDGE'S WARD.—Robert, the judge's son, is a vacillating young man. Helen, his father's ward, is devoted to him and he sincerely desires to make her his wife. An old flame, Dorothy Deane, an actress, writes him asking him to call and say good-bye, prior to his nuptials. She is playing with a great success at a city theater and he calls on her in her dressing room, where he meets a merry company and all repair to a roof garden.

The judge and Helen happen to attend the performance and drop in at the roof garden for refreshment. Revelry is high when Helen detects her iutended in the actress' compauy. His father, a very stern man, reproaches him for his conduct and upon arriving home drives him from the house.

Three years have passed. Robert has married the actress and a child has blessed them. His father's help being gone, the little family suffers terrible privation. Oue day his wife departs leaving a note saying she will return to the stage.

Iu desperation, seeing his child hungry, he resolves to go to his father and ask his help. When he calls the judge is counting a sum of money and refuses to listen to him. He departs but shortly returns to rob the desk. Helen, by a clever ruse, surprises the son in his work and, broken by shame and remorse, he kneels at her feet. The woman's love cannot be stifled and she resolves to help him. She calls at his squalid home and eventually reconciles the judge to his repentant son. Length, 960 feet.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME.—The opening scene of the film is the study of a minister who has received in his mail a lurid annouucement of the production at a local theater that evening of the melodrama, "Why Girls Leave Home."

In holy horror he relegates it to the wastebasket, from which it finds its way into the hands of three female members of his household, each of whom is surprised while perusing it by her best fellow; and in each instance a trip to the theater is planned for that evening. Stealings out of the house by different avenues of exit from the hall, where the reverend gentleman sits asleep, three girls, each without the knowledge of the others, leaves her home to find out "Why Girls Leave Home!"

After reaching the theater we see them seated. one couple in the orchestra circle, another in the first balcony, while the generously proportioned and aggressive cook with the smaller but equally warlike gardener occupy the front row of the "pit." After the usual preliminary expostulations against the removal of hats, and one or two serious outbreaks on the part of the cook, the curtaiu raises, the play is on.

Act 1. Scene, interior of house. Young girl heroine expectant—false lover enters—ascetic (also anemic and decrepit) father ejects him—girl in convulsions—father obligingly somnolent—villainous lover with cigarette at window—girl in acute attack of emotion—father still slumhering—exit girl through window—villain sardonically puffs cigarette. Curtain descent emphatic.

Effect: On circle, grief, silent hut sincere; halcony, same but more accentuated; gallery, vociferous. with cook alternately iu tears and fighting with her neighbors.

Act 2. Scene, street; snow falling spasmodically and in spots. Enter heroine with chee-i-uld—enter villain with cigarette and straw hat—villain chokes heroine hy harshly seizing her shoulders—ditto chee-i-uld—villain lights fresh cigarette—exit villain—snowfall now more violent and concentrated—enter policeman—discovery—curtain descent nervous.

Effect: On circle, indignation, restrained hut intense; halcony, ditto, hut more pronounced; gallery in uproar, cook trying to climb over rail to reach stage and, hecause restrained, gets into anotber fight.

Act 3. Scene, hridge. Enter heroine, despondent—dark waters luring—heroine prays while splash is prepared—splash now ready—ditto heroine—splash anticipates—heroine leaps. Enter hero, wall-eyed with grief—cry of distress, hero removes hat—another cry, removes coat—splash now ready—splash uncontrollahle—hero leaps—wall of hridge falls, disclosing hero, heroine, two stage-hands and several buckets of "splash" rescued.

Effect: Curtain intoxicated with joy; ditto circle and halcony; gallery in pandemonium with cook in two fights.

Act 4. Home of heroine. Heroine at table, chee-i-uld on knee—enter villain with a dozen assistants—villain steals chee-i-uld from mother's lap—enter hero—one blow fells thirteen villains—dramatic dissolutiou of chief villain.

Effect: Curtaiu hilarious; whole house in thunderous applause; cook now on good terms with everybody; exit audience.

Reaching home simultaneously, the three girls discover each other's secret after the minister's appearance has interrupted three simultaneous goodnight kisscs, but they succeed in getting past him and go to hed satisfied iu their knowledge of "Why Girls Leave Home."

THE WALLACE JEWELS.—In this picture Miss Carolyn Wells has contributed a story that contaius not only good light comedy, but also one or two bits of stirring dramatic action, the story lending itself as well to the most charming scenic environment.

We see the distinguished naturalist start on his morning's exploration, accompanied by his daughter, who, we fear, is not so enthusiastic as her father in the search for rare plants, insects and specimens of rock. The professor starts to climb a precipitous cliff in quest of a particularly desirable specimen, leaving his daughter seated on the mountain side to await his return.

Rather tired from the exertion of climbing, she listlessly picks up her field glass and with it sweeps the surrounding country, her gaze finally becoming riveted upon a rough-looking man who is engaged in hurying a box in a secluded spot on a neighboring mountain. It impresses her at the time as a strange and mysterious occurrence, especially so as the man's actions indicate an evident desire to escape observation.

Reaching home with her father, she is banded a newspaper just received by mail, and reads in staring headlines that the celebrated Wallace jewels have been stolen, that the robber is supposed to be biding in the very mountains which she and her father have been exploring and that a reward of $5,000 will he paid for the recovery of the gems.

Instantly it flashes through her mind that the robber is the man whom she saw burying the box on the mountaiu that morning, and, like the venturesome girl that she is, it takes her but a very short time to start out on her sure-footed pony in quest of the buried treasure.

Her search for the hox, her success in finding it, the discovery of its removal hy the man who buried it, the seusational flight and pursuit of the girl down the steep mountainside, her fatigue and the loss of her horse which results in her capture, her rescue hy the villagers whom her agonized screams have brought to her aid, and finally the discovery that the hox contains the remains of a pet dog—all combine to make a picture of unusual dramatic interest and comedy value. Approx. length, 720 feet.

TWO OF A KIND.—"Did I attend a dance at a lunatic asylum the other evening? Well, I should say I did, and had a rather exciting time of it, too. You see, my friend Rogers, who is the superintendent of the Allen Asylum, invited me to attend a dance given the inmates, which I accepted. I arrived rather early, in order to have a chat with him, but unfortunately he was called out of the room just as he was telling me to humor any of the patients I might meet. I had been up rather late every night for the week previous, and, the chair in which I was sitting before the fireplace being very comfortable, went to sleep, only to awaken and find myself confronted by a young woman whom I thougbt to he one of the inmates. I immediately started to humor her, and was having a rather exciting time of it when Rogers and his wife came in.

"What? Did they put her in a straight jacket? No, indeed. You see, she was Miss Marston, a guest of Mrs. Rogers, invited to attend the dance, and when she saw me she thought I was crazy and was trying to humor me. Well, so-long, old chap! I have an appoiutment to take Miss Marston to the opera this evening."

The above one-sided conversation, overheard in a New York hotel one evening, was used as a basis for a moving picture story hy the Edison Company, which proved to he very amusing. The efforts of each of the principals to humor the other and prevent an escape from the room (both praying for the return of the superintendent to relieve the situation), are laughable in the extreme. Approx. length, 280 feet.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

THE BROTHERS.—Two brothers, Ralph and Frank Davis, fall in love with Ethel Daily, a winsome, lovahle little woman and a long time friend of the Davis family. The hoys have both known her since childhood, and, although she has never really loved either, she is more inclined to favor Ralph, hecause of his more manly principles and unquestioned sincerity. Frank, on the other hand, had been an incorrigible lad, untrustworthy and unprincipled; hut these traits he had cleverly concealed.

Both brothers are employed hy Martin & Mathews, a hrokerage firm, and are held in high esteem by their employers. Martin is Miss Daily's uncle, and, being a bachelor with no nearer relative than his niece, it is generally understood that the young lady will inherit the hulk of his fortune.

Both young men call on Ethel alternately and

NEXT
S and A
FILM ISSUE

Two Jolly Little Comedies.

"The Kind That Make 'em Laugh."

"A Birthday Affair"
(Length Approx. 550 feet)

"The Magic Melody"
(Length Approx. 431 feet)

If you are not getting Essanay comedy subjects you ought to. They always have been and always will be

"Altogether Satisfactory"

READY
Wednesday, October 6, 1909

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.
62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

WANTED—Up-to-date independent films, never exhibited in southern California. Nothing except good, clean. A 1 films considered. Send list, give titles, make lowest cash prices. Must be bargains.
UP-TO-DATE FILM EXCHANGE
438 San Fernando Building
LOS ANGELES - - CALIFORNIA

WANTED
Combination singer and piano player for moving picture parlor. Must guarantee to make good Good salary offered. Apply,
F. FREENBERGER, Third Avenue Theatre
566 Third Ave. (near 15th St.) Brooklyn, N. Y.

Penny Arcade Outfit For Sale
Consisting of 50 coin operated phonographs, illustrated song, mutoscopes, etc. Good condition. Will sell in part or whole outfit at about one-fourth of cost. Family Theatre, Williamsport, Pa.

AT LIBERTY
First-class operator, 5 years' experience. Strictly sober and reliable, age 32, best of references. Massachusetts license; own outfit.
E. A. HALL
50 Columbia St., Swampscott, Mass.

Latest Song Slides OUR MOTTO Accessories
BIG SALES AND SMALL PROFITS
Latest Films of European Makers. Best American Films. Artistically hand colored Hudson-Fulton Celebration Slides with Lectures.
NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL COMPANY
F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442
214 Sixth Avenue - - - NEW YORK
We give you what we promise and a little bit more. That is why we are the fastest growing film exchange in New York. Drop us a line.

Mr. Exhibitor:
If you are not getting the money let us show you how. We will manage your house, build up the business and charge you a percentage only on the increase over present business.

We also book better class vaudeville acts, singers, piano players, operators and drummers—can equip your house complete—twelve years experience.

Call or write
ELCO AMUSEMENT COMPANY
612 Ashland Block CHICAGO

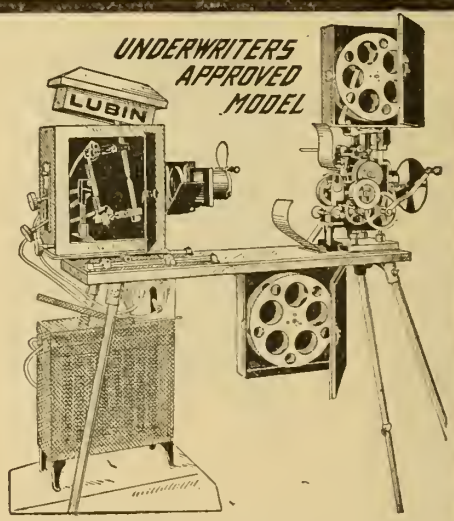
LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL



equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

RELEASED MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.
A FISH STORY
Instead of attending to the house, the young husband goes fishing. As usual, he catches nothing, but comes home to tell a great fish story. He is quickly hooked, but all ends well. LENGTH, 510 FEET.

OLD LOVE LETTERS
Some old love letters fall into the hands of Mr. Newlywed. He does not look at the date, and at once starts after the writers of the love letters, but he meets his Waterloo and returns badly battered. Explanations follow, and love again reigns supreme. LENGTH, 400 FEET.

RELEASED THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.
THE JUDGE'S WARD
The judge wishes his son to marry his ward. The son, however, falls in love with an actress, with whom he runs away. Reverses follow. When in dire poverty, it is the judge's ward who reconciles the father to his son. LENGTH, 955 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

both are heartily welcomed, although she looks with more favor upon Ralph's suit. The boys finally decide to end the suspense of guessing who is to be the winner of the girl, and write letters of proposal to her. She answers them immediately, accepting Ralph, and declining Frank's proposal, explaining that she cannot be other than a good friend to him.

Frank arrives home before his brother and finds the notes. Hurriedly he opens the note addressed to him and reads defeat. Tempted by his curiosity to know how his brother fared, he opens the other note carefully, and drops into a chair in despair when he reads the acceptance. Frank suddenly gets an idea, and changing the initials on the notes and envelopes, exchanges the letters. When his brother arrives, Frank laughs boisterously, exhibiting the forged note, and jokingly teases his brother over his defeat. Ralph, overcome and in despair, hurries out of the room.

Frank now plans another scheme to make doubly sure of his brother's defeat. The next morning he goes to the office ahead of his brother and the other employees and rifles the safe. Ralph arrives, late, pale and haggard, carrying a suitcase, intending to leave for the West. Martin discovers the robbery and accuses Ralph. Ralph is about to declare his innocence, when a look of appeal from his brother silences him, and, now entirely diffident as to what becomes of him, he decides to shield his brother by taking the blame himself.

"Yes, it was I who robbed the safe!"

Ralph is sent to prison, and Frank pays court to Ethel. It is her uncle's wish that she wed Frank, and although she does not care for him, she finally consents.

Five years have elapsed, and on the morning after Frank's betrothal to Ethel, Ralph is released. Knowing that it was through his sacrific that Frank was saved, Ralph is confident that his brother will now assist him in retrieving his lost honor, and hurries immediately to Frank's office. As he enters, Frank is speaking to Ethel over the telephone.

So dumbfounded is he by his brother's unexpected return, he lays the receiver on the desk and turning in his chair, orders Ralph from the room. Ralph is astounded. He endeavors to refreshen his brother's memory, concerning his sacrifice, or at least to awaken his conscience.

"But who will believe you, Ralph?" he laughs, utterly unmindful of the girl at the other end of the 'phone, who hears every word. "Who will believe a jailbird? It's no use to try. No one will believe it was I who robbed the safe; your own words condemned you. Oh, this brotherly love is all right in theory, but——"

Ralph Davis leaps across the room, crushing his brother in his chair, and seizes the telephone. There is a struggle, and Frank succeeds in retaining the receiver. Ralph quietly speaks to the unknown party at the other end of the wire.

"I don't know who you are, but listen to me! I am Ralph Davis, sent to prison for my brother's crime. He sought to ruin me to win a girl. Listen! It was he who robbed the safe——" A struggle ensues in which the 'phone is dashed to the floor and the connection broken.

The scene alternates between the two brothers in the office and Ethel Daily at the other end of the wire. It is only too evident by her facial expression that she has heard Frank's confession and Ralph's corroboration of it. Hurriedly she dons her wraps and rushes to her uncle's office.

She arrives in the midst of the melee, when Frank has overpowered his brother and is about to strike him with a heavy office seal. The girl intercepts the blow and accuses Frank of his crime. The mystery is soon cleared up when the notes of proposal are again produced, the girl accusing Frank of this other perfidy.

Ralph and Ethel leave the office and Frank drops into a chair, taking a revolver from the drawer, resolved that self-destruction is his only escape.

The story is a clever one and intensely interesting. It should create a sensation in every theater where it is exhibited.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

WIFE OR CHILD.—A story dealing with a child's instinctive aversion to its proposed stepmother who has plotted to usurp the position, and upon whom the youngster dramatically turns the tables.

A wealthy peasant with one young son is left a widower and finds it necessary to secure a serving maid to care for his home and serve meals to the many hands that work upon his large farm.

From an educational, as well as a dramatic standpoint, the servants' fair or market is very interesting. Here the widower hires a buxom and good-looking maid whom he immediately places at the head of his household.

Before long she gains the knowledge that he is very wealthy and forthwith lays her plans to marry him if possible. She employs all the coquetry of her sex to win him and in a short time has him very anxious to hasten arrangements for the wedding.

But on every occasion in which she attempts to become friendly with the little boy she is repulsed. The youngster seems to feel instinctively that she does not like him and will employ his love only to gain her own ends.

The incidents of her various advances and final defeat by the boy's power over the father is shown clearly and interestingly.

BREACH OF PROMISE.—A young lady while reading the morning paper finds an announcement of the wedding of her sweetheart to another at 12 o'clock that day.

She goes directly to his apartments where she accuses him of infidelity and after administering severe physical punishment, as well as vocal, she locks him in his room and leaves.

He experiences great difficulty in getting out of the room, finding it necessary to lower himself from the window by means of the bedclothes. After getting free it becomes necessary to secure suitable clothes in which to appear at the ceremony. Great trouble is again experienced and the delay results in his holding the wedding party.

Of course, great anxiety is evinced by the bride and friends assembled. Soon the men of the party start in search for him.

They finally come upon him just as he is adjusting some second-hand clothing he has been able to obtain. They hurry him to the scene of the festivities, upbraiding him seriously as they go, with the result that when the party is reached the tired and disgusted man refuses to be joined in wedlock.

LOVE, THE CONQUEROR.—Staged in England, among beautiful gardens and with modern costumes.

The first scene is the exterior of an English private school giving an excellent and true to life picture of a village street, with its shops in the England of to-day. In this scene we are introduced to the old schoolmaster and his beautiful daughter with whom we are chiefly interested for the remainder of the play. The combining with the fiction of the drama, some actually true to life school children at play as well as a section showing shops, adds materially to the film. It is the educational factor, combined with the amusement feature, which builds so strongly the widespread hold of the "silent stage" upon the public.

This introduction to the teacher and his daughter in their very common little home is in marked contrast to the second scene in which we are taken to the mansion home of one of the young lady's schoolmates, where a dainty little lawn party is in progress at which the poor teacher's daughter is evidently a much honored guest.

During the serving of refreshments the brother of the hostess is introduced to her friends and becomes interested at once in the old teacher's daughter, but because of the crewd he does not press his friendship.

Later in the day, when the guests have separated to stroll about the beautiful grounds, he, by chance, meets her in a secluded path. After a few moments' conversation, presuming upon his high social position, he makes advances which, of course, are rebuffed. The girl, very much hurt by his presumption, hurries to her home seeking her father's comfort and companionship.

Some months later we are again taken to the garden of the rich girl's home where we find her convalescent after a very serious illness. She expresses a wish to see the old teacher's daughter. Her mother forthwith drives to the cottage of the schoolmaster with the message and insists on the young lady accompanying her back to the mansion.

In spite of the fact that she feels a great aversion to going to the home of the imprudent youth, she accompanies the mother because her friend is ill. Arrived at the home she does all in her power to while away the time for the sick girl—talking with her and reading to her.

The sick girl's brother sees in the visitor the girl whom he once insulted and who has been continually in his mind since that time. Indeed, he has thought so much of her and her way of rebuffing him, as well as the kindness she has shown to his sister, that he has decided he really loves her.

He awaits the time of her departure and as she is making her way homeward he contrives a meeting. He apologizes for his former boldness and offers his love which is happily accepted.

CHASING THE BALL.—Mysterious and unaccountable behavior of a bowling ball which, missing its mark, refuses to stop even within a reasonable distance, and leads the amazed players on a long and merry chase before its recapture is effected. An abundance of comic incident and exciting adventure from beginning to end. The ball magically climbs walls and buildings, runs along open country roads and through city streets, crosses bridges and fields, and finally, in a most picturesque portion of a huge woods it falls into a wonderfully beautiful stream, in which it is captured and taken in triumph to the village club, where it is chained to avoid future flight.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine).

THE MASTERPIECE.—The play opens in the well-appointed art studios of Raphael. Sanzio Venenti, Van Dyck and his pupils are admiring Raphael's work. The scene is historically accurate, while the costuming and acting are very convincing. The especially rich clothing of the period makes excellent material for a strong stage setting.

Venenti and Van Dyck leave the studio together for a stroll through some of the beautiful streets of the city. In the course of their walk they chance to pass two beautiful ladies, one of whom immediately wins Venenti's love. He is so infatuated that he persuades his friend, Van Dyck, to watch with him the movements of the two ladies until they make their way homeward that he may see the dwelling-place of this most fair of women.

On the next night he secures the services of two of his companions who are musicians. Together they make their way through a wonderful garden to the lady's home and from beneath her balcony they sing to her. She is charmed by Venenti's voice and words. She expresses her pleasure and gratitude, telling him that it actually pains her to be forced to say a final farewell to him, for she is already the wife of another.

Venenti is heartbroken. Though of so short duration, his love for the lady is so deep that he decides to give up his career of art and to enter a monastery, where there will be no chance of his again meeting her and he will devote his life to the service of mankind.

He bids his jovial student friends farewell and changes his brilliant clothing for the somber robe of a monk.

Here again the photographer has found some remarkably interesting places about the grounds and within the walls of a medieval abbey.

As his chief share in the work of the brotherhood he is allotted his old employment of painting. Besides devoting himself to the regular work of making small pictures for the market, he commences a larger work upon which he uses all the time he can spare. When it is finally completed, the Superior is so pleased with it that he orders it placed in the chapel.

Some months later, when Fra Venenti has become quite content with his life, visitors come to the chapel. He is appointed to usher them through the buildings and grounds.

It so happens that one member of the party is the lady for whom he has changed his entire life. Fortunately, because of his garb and shaven head, she does not recognize him.

In their tour of inspection he would have led them by the work he had made at the expense of much time and difficulty, but the lady sees it and inquires the name of the artist, then notices the signature and asks if the artist is there. Deeply grieved because of his isolation from the world, he is forced to evade answering the question.

On another occasion Raphael visits the chapel, sees and admires the masterpiece, and attempts to find the man who did the work.

To help Fra Venenti to live his life peacefully, undisturbed by these outside influences, the Superior orders him to efface the signature at the bottom of the picture. The drama is a remarkably convincing portrayal of life among men who consecrate themselves to divine service.

PAPA'S HAT.—A beautifully charming series of child life pictures. Excellent quality and detail. Entering the drawing room, a little girl notices her papa's new hat, which proves to be an opera hat. She picks up the hat and becomes greatly excited when she unconsciously opens it. Shyly she approaches the hat for a second time and the performance is repeated. In order to accentuate the tremendous consternation of the girl she dissolves into an interrogation point while the mystifying hat opens and closes itself.

PATHE FRERES.

HE LEARNS THE TRICK OF MESMERISM.—Jones, a pale little weakling, is the butt of all his fellow clerks' jokes, and at home is a poor, henpecked, down-trodden little man who is afraid to open his mouth to express the slightest wish. But his day comes when he stumbles upon the much-talked-of Professor of Hypnotism, who teaches him the trick of winding everyone he meets around his little finger, making them do just as he wishes, while he exercises over them his wonderful hypnotic power. He begins with the clerks in the office, who have lorded it over him for such a length of time, and it is most amusing to see the pompous-looking fellows answering to every beck and call of the now elated Jones, as he sits at his desk and has them dancing around and obeying him like puppets.

His muscular mother-in-law, playing a quiet game of bridge at home with his ill-tempered wife, on seeing him come in, starts up to pitch him out of the room, but with a wave of his hand he has her completely under his control, while his wife stands back stupefied, and when she, too, tries to remonstrate with him he makes a few passes and she collapses as if made of dough. Throwing out his chest, Jones orders them about, and soon has them running here and there preparing a most tempting lunch, to which he sits down and enjoys as he never enjoyed a meal during his days of meek submission to the women folk of his household. Thanks to the wonderful Professor, his days of slavery are now over and he can lord it over everybody by a mere wave of the hand.

SUITORS' COMPETITION.—This wholesome comedy, which abounds in many original and amusing scenes, shows how a pretty and charming heiress puts her numerous admirers to a test, that she might be able to decide upon the one most fitted to become her husband, judging him from a physical, courageous and gallant point of view. In the first picture the young woman enters the room with her attentive father, and as the latter presents the young men who are desirous to marry

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.

(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)

1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York

'Phone 4267 Orchard.

Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public.

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

LEARN TO MAKE MIRRORS

¶ We furnish complete instructions for making all kinds of Mirrors so simple that anyone can make a first-class Mirror as soon as they read over our copyrighted instructions. For $2.00 we send you the complete outfit. This price is good for a short time only. No machines used, all ingredients can be secured of your local druggist for a few cents.

The Butts Sign & Novelty Co.
228 Temple Court Building, Denver, Colo.

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF!
NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!
NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500
OPERA CHAIRS
IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

$7.00 a Day

$15.00 for THREE DAYS

$30.00 A WEEK

For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction, free.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
Mossler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

OLD FILMS MADE NEW

Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

WRITE TO-DAY FOR TERMS _____ WORK DONE PROMPTLY

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.

744 ORLEANS STREET - - - CHICAGO, ILL.

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities

her, the maiden carefully scrutinizes each one, picking out the few whom she thinks most fitted to enter the trying competition which will decide the fate of the victorious.

The first test is a foot race in which the young men participate, and as the signal to start is given, one fellow, the smallest of the lot, is late in getting away, but after a little encouragement he manages to tag on behind, but has little hope of winning the contest. The stoutest fellow of the lot is the victorious one. In the next contest, which is heavy-weight lifting, the same fellow wins with ease, and finally in the boxing contest he proves himself as the most worthy one by knocking all the rest down as soon as they appear before him. Finally it is decided that the big fellow is the lucky one, and as he steps forward to receive his prize, in the person of the happy heiress, a fire breaks out in the house. The maiden calls for a volunteer to rescue her little dog, which is in the burning place, and at this request all the contestants lose their courage and will not dare enter the building. The little man who has been so unfortunate in every game, dashes into the place and comes out with the dog safely in his arms. The happy girl is so elated over the affair that she turns from her victorious suitor, who has shown himself to be a coward in the face of danger, and taking the young hero in her fond embrace, she promises to become his wife.

PIERROT, THE FUDDLER.—Pierrot and Harlequin are rivals, both being in love with the same dainty maiden, of whom we catch a glimpse in the first picture as she sits in her home busily stitching away on a part of some fine lady's gown—the gown itself adorning a wooden figure which stands beside the little dressmaker. Pierrot soon appears and, seeing his adored one, begins at once to make serious love to her, but the latter has no time for such nonsense and casts him from her and goes back to her work with a pout on her pretty mouth. Pierrot, miserable and dejected, starts down the street, but has not gone far before he meets his rival, Harlequin, who invites him to partake of a little refreshment. The disappointed lover feels that he is in need of cheering, so accepts. We soon see, however, why the wily Harlequin was so anxious to entertain his rival, for before many minutes have elapsed Pierrot seems not quite himself, having taken a little too much of the refreshing beverage ordered by Harlequin. On leaving the cafe we see Pierrot zigzagging down the street—Harlequin having left him to get home the best way he could and only hoping that the pretty dressmaker, with whom they are both in love, would see him in his woeful condition and become disgusted with her admirer. Notwithstanding the confusion in his brain Pierrot still thinks of his sweetheart and determines to see her and soon gains her home, where she has fallen asleep over her work. When Pierrot makes his appearance she awakens with a start and seeing that he is not himself becomes terrified and flees. Poor Pierrot drops on the chair she has vacated and he also falls asleep and dreams that he is pleading with his dear one, but she repulses him, so, becoming enraged, the mild little clown draws a dagger and stabs the girl (the spectator understands, however, that in his nightmare he has risen and mistaking the dressmaker's wooden model for his sweetheart has thrust the knife into her senseless body, throwing it down with a crash). Poor Pierrot, still dreaming, is terrified to think he is actually a murderer, and a vision of the High Court, with the three sombre judges pronouncing the death sentence on him looms up before his distorted brain. But when the gallows makes its appearance this is too much for the terrified clown, who wakes with a scream that brings in the frightened little dressmaker in a hurry who, seeing her adorer suffering, rushes over to him. When Pierrot sees her he thinks naturally that it is her ghost and trembles all over with horror and fear. She reassures him, however, and they are soon clasped in each other's arms while Pierrot recounts his terrible dream.

JANE IS UNWILLING TO WORK.—Poor Jane is happy at home, doing just as she pleases and following her own sweet will, when a letter comes to her father announcing that there is an opening for her as domestic in a family nearby. The father, only too glad that the family's meagre income can now be augmented, hurries his daughter off to get her hat, while he gets ready himself to accompany her to her new employer's. The girl starts out with very bad grace, but on arriving at the home of her new mistress the father speaks in his daughter's behalf, with the result that the lady of the house tells Jane to take off her hat and start in. After giving the new maid instructions, the mistress goes out to do the marketing, leaving the girl alone in the house; the latter, angry to find that she now has to work whether she wills it or not, catches sight of the lady's pet parrot, which she immediately begins to tease and torment until the infuriated bird takes a nip out of her finger. The girl, only too glad of an excuse to find fault with the place, goes screaming to her mistress, who just then returns from her errand. The woman, seeing the poor bird stretched on the floor almost senseless from the girl's harsh treatment, chases the new maid out of the place, calling to her never to come back. As she rushes down the street she meets her father, but he has no sympathy for the wounded finger, but hurries her off to a milliner and tries to get her a job there, which he succeeds in doing, but here, too, misfortune awaits her, for hardly has she made a dozen stitches in a "Paris creation" before she pricks her finger and arouses the whole establishment with her cries of pain. The milliner, disgusted, takes the work out of her hands and tells her to get her hat and leave. Her next position is in a cafe, to which place she is literally dragged by her worn-out parent. Here she loads down the first beggar that comes in with all sorts of expensive dainties and after breaking several dollars' worth of crockery the proprietor hustles her off the premises. The father, not to be daunted by all these mishaps, puts her to work in a laundry and the "rough house" she causes there cannot be expressed in mere words, one must see the picture showing the head laundress (who is rather inclined to embonpoint) being pitched headlong into a tub of suds, to appreciate the situation.

A GAME OF CHESS.—James Palmerson and Willy Sanders, both devoted to the game of chess, decide to play for a stake of $1,000. Frowning, as if the weight of nations rested on their shoulders, they start cautiously to make the first moves, and after a while they become so absorbed in the play that they are oblivious to everything that passes around them, feeling neither hunger nor thirst, nor even stopping to devote a few hours to sleep. After they have been playing several hours the waiter serves some refreshments, placing the table near them so they will not have to change seats to eat their lunch, but it is the big St. Bernard that enjoys that dainty repast, licking the plates until they shine, right at the players' elbows, but never once disturbing them. Finally as two whole days and nights have gone by, the servants decide that the cleaning cannot be delayed any longer, so beg them to move into another apartment, which they do, carefully bearing the chess board between them as if it were some priceless treasure.

When they are settled to their play again two burglars enter and stealthily approach the two men, pointing loaded revolvers at their heads, but the latter never budge, so intent are they upon the game, and one of the burglars, emboldened by their immobility, goes so far as to take the cigar out of Willy Sanders' very mouth and, after enjoying a quiet smoke, throws the butt away and flees.

Soon the curtains catch fire from the cigar butt which the burglar had carelessly thrown away and the players, irritated because they have been disturbed, quietly move out, never heeding the fire engines, but comfortably ensconce themselves upon a rock and continue the game. One, however, soon loses his balance and tumbles into the water and the other just lifts up the board and tells him not to move, that he will join him, and the game is continued while they stand knee deep in the rushing tide until finally James Palmerson makes a lucky move and the $1,000 is his.

AN EVENTFUL TRIP.—In this unusual trick picture the spectator witnesses a number of vicissitudes that take place on a very improbable journey.

Three travelers, an Englishman, his wife and their man servant, are comfortably settled in their compartment, each with his favorite paper spread out before him and contentedly reading the news. All at once strange things begin to happen; the edges of their papers curl up and disappear, leaving in each one's hand only a huge paper doll, which seems to have been fashioned by fairy fingers. The three travelers look at each other in dumb amazement, but another surprise awaits them for when the servant gets out the lunch basket and proceeds to set out the lunch, lo and behold the bread and meat disappear, bit by bit, as if consumed by invisible imps of another world. But the worst is to come, for soon the train itself seems to be possessed and just as they are crossing a bridge the train wriggles and squirms like a snake, and then tumbles over the bridge for all the world like a toy train of cars and plunges into the deep water below. We see our now frantic travelers flopping around among the fish, crabs and other inhabitants of the deep, paralyzed with fear and wondering what will come next. Without further ado, however, the train gathers itself together and regains the track over the bridge and goes whistling along, little caring that the stupefied passengers are being thrown around in a most unceremonious way in their different compartments. Hardly have the latter taken a breath of relief, however, before the bewitched train dashes into a tunnel and becomes derailed, never stopping once, though, but bounding along like some wounded infuriated monster until it reaches the station, where our friends make a hasty and not very dignified exit.

THE GARBAGE OF PARIS.—Here we see the Parisian housewife getting rid of her refuse just as our housewives do here in our own country, by collecting all the scraps, etc., together and placing them into a large can provided for that purpose which is left outside of each dwelling to await the arrival of the garbage man. Before the latter makes his rounds, however, the dogs and ragpickers are seen peering into each can on the lookout for dainty tidbits, or in the case of the latter, for something valuable to be converted into money. The huge garbage wagons soon loom up and the man quickly empties each can and replaces it as he goes on his way. The wagons containing the refuse, when they are filled to their utmost capacity, go on to the factories, where the refuse is sorted, the garbage going in one pile, the paper in another, and the pieces of metal in a third. The garbage proper is reduced to ashes; the paper, after going through a cleansing process, is taken to paper factories and goes to make other paper. The refuse which can be used for fertilizing purposes is shipped to the farmers. Sometimes articles of value are found among the refuse—pocketbooks, ornaments, silverware, etc.—but not often, for the French housewife is a careful, economical little body who knows how to look after her property.

VENDETTA.—In a little village in Spain a dance is given by some pretty girls, and everybody seems to be in good spirits. A young man appears and is making love to one of the girls who violently opposes him. As he does not stop annoying her, her sweetheart engages him in a duel, which results in the death of the young man. But his friends inform the police, and the lover escapes through the window.

He is followed, however, and the gendarmes arrive at his parents' home, who try to hide him. He is discovered and chased by the policemen until he reaches the house of his girl. Here she assists in loading his rifle, but finally his ammunition gives out and he is killed by a bullet of his enemies. One day his younger brother will call for vengeance, which his father makes him swear on sight of the dead body.

The scenery which is shown to us in this picture is absolutely new, as this film has been taken near the sea. We follow our hero through rocky mountains and see him dash through rivers and wild waters.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

STRICKEN BLIND.—On one of the by-streets of New York City, a young, enterprising Italian sculptor has his workshop. Sylvester is his name, and on this particular day he is much fatigued from continuous modeling. Upon glancing at the clock, he notes the lateness of the hour and just begins to fondle his pet violin, when Paolo, a prosperous Italian, much interested in the sculptor's young wife, enters. Sylvester suspects nothing, and as the two men converse, Elenora, the wife, returns home only to tell her husband of the futility of her attempt to sell his wares.

This news causes much disappointment to Sylvester and his feeble old father-in-law because of the poverty-stricken condition of the family. They are thoroughly discouraged until Paolo, seizing this opportunity, offers assistance. Sylvester, innocent as to the object of the loan, gladly accepts it, and leaves his home to purchase food for his wife and her father.

In a short while Paolo and Elenora are left alone, and the former takes advantage of this crisis in the condition of affairs, by making violent love to Elenora; but just as he clasps her in his arms, her father enters unexpectedly. He stands aghast, dumbfounded, but is too weak to resent this insult to the family honor. About this time Sylvester returns, happy and exuberant in the purchases he has made. Rather than hurt his son-in-law's sensitive nature, he is kept ignorant of what has just happened. Finally the three depart to an adjoining room, leaving Paolo alone, until the young wife returns. An excited and hurried conversation ensues, and just as Paolo starts to kiss the infatuated woman, her husband enters. He is aware of their confusion, but fails to comprehend the cause.

A few nights later, as the old man lies asleep in his chair, his daughter creeps stealthily into the room. Undecided herself as to whether the promptings of her heart are the instincts of true woman's nature, she hesitates for a moment, then slowly kneeling beside the enfeebled figure, she kisses the wrinkled hand. He partially awakens at the touch; she crouches beside him, and as he relapses in slumber she quickly leaves the room.

From there she goes to the workshop where she meets Paolo. Sylvester, dishevelled, and roused to fury by the sight that meets his astonished eyes, with a cry of a soul tortured to desperation, springs at Paolo's throat. A furious struggle follows, during which the old man, startled by the unusual and unseemly noise, seizes an antiquated pistol and enters the workshop. In the excitement that is going on, and in the dimness of the room, he fires a shot. With a groan Sylvester throws his hands to his face and falls heavily to the floor, as Paolo and Elenora rush from the house. The old man lights the candle and is grief-stricken at what he has done, for though the bullet missed, the powder striking full into Sylvester's eyes, renders him completely blind.

Sylvester, now grown gray, wearing glasses, and carrying his violin, is being led by his father-in-law. A young society girl, accompanied by her father, passes by. She stops, delighted with the music, and asks her father to have Sylvester play at her wedding, soon to occur. Her father acquiescing, she engages the musician's services for the occasion.

Elenora hears a knock on the door and is handed a letter, which reads:

"Elenora:

"Enclosed find decree of divorce that I have obtained from you; also a check for £2,000. I am beginning a new life in America. Let this be final between us.

Paolo."

Acting upon an impulse, she leaves London at once for America.

Now Booking
Great Northern Film Mfg'r
01 New up-to-date Subject

Dr. Cook's Reception into Copenhagen

Write for prices for first five days of Release —

"The Independent Service"

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 E. 23rd St. near 2nd Ave., New York City

RENT 2 REELS, $6

A week, three changes; 10 000 Roll Tickets, 90c; Condensers, 50c; 50 Electric Carbons, $1.15, Electric Lamps, $2 00; Announcements Slides, 15c; Prepared Glass for writing or drawing, 10c; Stereopcons, $12 00; Portable Booth, $10.00. Free Catalogue of everything in the business.

$157 75 or will Rent for $5 a week.

L. HETZ, 302 E. 23d St., New York

DR. COOK AT THE NORTH POLE REGION

SLIDES WITH LECTURE

$5.00 per set

Hudson-Fulton Celebration

A set of slides depending the most important events in the life of Hudson and Fulton—with lectures printed on slides—thereby saving the cost of lecturer :: :: :: ::

5.00 per set

EXCELSIOR SLIDE COMPANY
138 East 14th Street NEW YORK, N. Y

CALEHUFF

A Member of the FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk.
MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES
$5.00 per set

N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

IS THE ONE DEPENDABLE MOTION PICTURE MACHINE

It gives the steadiest, clearest pictures of any machine made, is the simplest to operate and does not get out of order. That means that you are playing to a full house while the others are closed for repairs.

The Edison is the machine that will make your investment a permanent, solid business—not a fad or speculation.

Write to-day for booklet of full details and copy of the "Edison Kinetogram."

EDISON FILMS

Releases of September 28th and October 1st

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 28.

WHY GIRLS LEAVE HOME

Hilarious comedy. A burlesque on the "ten-twent-and-thirt" melodrama. The effect a theatrical handbill has on a clergyman's household forms the thread of the story which displays in the most laughable manner the inconsistencies of acting and stage setting of the popular drama, and the varying effects on the audience. Don't miss this—it's simply great.
No. 6522 Code, VERTEDORA App. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 1.

THE WALLACE JEWELS

Comedy, especially written by Miss Carolyn Wells, the popular author. The discovery by a girl of the secret burial of a box on a lonely mountain, coincident with the announcement of the theft of rare jewels, results in a sensational search, flight and capture and a startling climax of real comedy strength. A splendid story. Unusually fine photographic effects.
No. 6523 Code, VERTEDOURO App. Length, 725 feet

TWO OF A KIND

Comedy. Young fellow accepts invitation to a dance at a lunatic asylum. In the parlor of the superintendent he falls asleep. Young lady guest's entrance into room awakens him. He thinks her a lunatic, she reciprocates. One tries to detain the other. Result—a screamingly funny short film.
No. 6524 Code, VERTELLES App. Length, 275 feet

Releases of October 5th and 8th

RELEASED OCTOBER 5.

LADDIE—Dramatic
No. 6525 App. Length, 1,000 feet
Code, VERTELLING

RELEASED OCTOBER 8.

THE MINISTER'S DAUGHTER
A Story of Power and Strength
No. 6526 App. Length, 830 feet
Code, VERTELLO

EXPERT GLASS BLOWING—Industrial
No. 6527 Code, VERTELSEL App. Length, 170 feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.
New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents
P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special coudensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

Feature Films for Traveling Show

For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.

ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT

The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE
14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

Dora's wedding day has arrived. Sylvester and the old man are in the park. Elenora passes; at the sound of the music she turns and is startled as she recognizes the pair. She follows them until, spent with fatigue, she staggers and falls fainting to the ground. At this juncture, Dora and her father pass in their automobile. Seeing the woman lying prostrate, they lift and place her beside them, and drive to their home, where they revive her and make her comfortable in the guest chamber.

It is now evening, and Dora, gowned in her wedding dress, enters the room, and Elenora, with tears of gratitude, thanks her for her kindness and hospitality. As Dora leaves, Elenora, in gazing out of the window, recognizes Paolo, who is speaking to the best man on the veranda. It is then she realizes that the opportunity and time for her revenge have unexpectedly arrived.

Suddenly she hears the strains of the wedding march, and rushing among the astonished guests, she faces Paolo and the startled minister, crying out, "Stop this marriage, I command you!" She then denounces Paolo, and, overcome with emotion, swoons in her father's arms. Paolo attempts to deny the charges, but is suddenly confronted by Sylvester, who discards the spectacles that have thus far hidden his identity. Paolo's demeanor bespeaks his guilt, and Dora's father orders him from the house.

A few month's later, Sylvester, happy and content, seeing all the beauties of nature through his wife's eyes, while seated in his little garden, together with Elenora and her father, is joined by Dora, who, thoroughly recovered from her imagined love, is a constant visitor at the little home provided by the savings of the one-time unfortunate and erring Elenora.

ACROSS THE DIVIDE.—Not many years ago, in a little California town, there lived a miner, who, with the combined energy of hard labor and perseverance, had proved successful in his endeavor and eventually accumulated quite a bit of "gold dust."

The time arrives for him to repair to the settlement, many miles distant, in order to obtain provisions for the Winter. Wherefore, he bids goodbye to his wife and sister and starts down the trail with his pack train of burrows, accompanied by an Indian guide who has been his companion and friend for years. After covering many weary miles of travel, John Barton, our miner friend, reaches his destination, and forthwith exchanges his gold dust for coin.

Now, in this very settlement, a gambler named Bob Mason holds absolute sway at the "Red Light," its principal gambling resort. He employs "coppers" to seek out just such characters as Barton, who is accosted by one of them as an old acquaintance, and is induced to enter the gambling den.

Now, the Indian, well aware of the miner's love for the game, and feeling assured that his friend's customary recklessness will result in the loss of his hard-earned money, attempts to dissuade him from playing. It is of no avail; the fever of the game is upon him, and his better judgment is crushed in his longing to chance his luck. He plays. The result is a complete loss for him. Frantic in the realization of all that this loss means for him, he attacks the faro dealer, charging him with unfair methods, and 'tis only by the intervention of the latter's numerous friends that the miner is dragged from him and thrust into the street.

Alone, with the exception of his faithful guide, Barton faces the future. In despair he sees a severe Winter before him, coupled with almost complete poverty. There is but one thing to do in order to procure the bare necessities of life for his wife and sister. He disposes of his pack train, all but one burrow, and with the proceeds of this sale he purchases flour and bacon, loads same on his weary mule, and, footsore and faint at heart, begins his long march homeward.

Arriving there, he confesses everything to his wife, who, true to her woman's instinct, forgives his recklessness, while he, with the promptings of her great love and hearty encouragement, takes up the burden of more hard labor for the regaining of what he has lost.

Summer has come to an end, and Fall has set in, when a deputy sheriff arrives at the miner's cabin and posts a notice of reward amounting to $2,000 for the capture of Bob Mason, the gambler, charged with having killed the sheriff of Inyo County.

Now, as fate would have it, Mason, in effecting his escape, has been seriously wounded by a posse in pursuit, and eventually finds himself, weak with loss of blood and faint from hunger, at the very door of the man he had robbed. Barton is away prospecting, but his wife and sister take the almost unconscious man into the shelter of their cabin. They use every means in their power to alleviate his suffering and restore him to strength, but without avail, for his wounds are fatal. Meanwhile, the Indian, recognizing the gambler, hastens to Barton and acquaints him of what is transpiring at his home. Upon hearing the news, his smouldering desire for revenge leaps aflame, and determining to deliver his enemy to justice and claim the reward, he hurries homeward. On his way he encounters the posse, tells them of the whereabouts of their quarry, and all repair to the cabin just after Mason has expired.

Now, let us return to a scene which occurs just prior to the gambler's death. The tortured soul, tortured not only with bodily pain but because of the realization of his many misdeeds, relents as the end draws near. He calls his two faithful nurses to him, and urged by a nature part good and part bad, makes restitution to the man he had defrauded by delivering to the wife a large wallet well filled with currency. He then entreats the women to pray for him, and as they comply with his request, his soul passes on to the great, unfathomable unknown, while they utter the words: "There is more joy in Heaven over one sinner that repenteth, more than over ninety and nine just persons which need no repentance."

Thereupon the miner and the posse enter and stand with uncovered heads in the presence of a law, not of man's making, but a law and a destiny enacted and controlled by the great Law Maker above.

John Barton's rough heart is touched at his wife's recital of what has transpired, and he dismisses the posse, assuring them that he will take charge of the burial.

This is done, and as the months pass on, fortune once more favors him; he makes a rich strike and is soon beyond the clutches of poverty or want. But, in the contentment and happiness of his home life, he never forgets the lonely little grave on the hillside, which he covers with the simple wild flowers, perhaps emblematic of the wild, untamed, roving life of the man that lies beneath.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

ONAWANDA.—One of the always popular Indian subjects, but novel in that the scene is laid in the colony of Massachusetts, shortly after the landing of the Pilgrims, instead of the Western plains in the modern day.

Onawanda was a member of a small tribe, who regarded as their own the territory north and east of Boston and who resented the intrusion of the white settlers. His own attitude is changed when one bitter night he staggers to the door of the Rev. John Elkins and implores food and shelter. These are given unquestioningly by the man of God, and the grateful Onawanda attaches himself to the household, where he makes deerskin garments for the little ones and keeps the family supplied with game.

The neighbors protest at the presence of an Indian in the little village, believing him to be no better than a spy, but the minister has faith in his protege, and his only reply to their excited charges is to take the Indian by the hand and declare his disbelief of the stories.

Some little time later he gives an even greater proof of his confidence. He is called to Boston and Onawanda is left to take care of the house. He is away on a hunt when a sortie is made by a little band of Indians from a strange tribe. The preacher's house is despoiled and set on fire. The children—a boy and girl—are carried off, but the wife is left for dead amid the blazing ruins of the home. Slowly she revives and makes her way to the church, where the neighbors have gathered to unite in defense of their lives, but the Indians are content with their spoils and have retired. To the pitying mothers and relentless fathers she tells her sad story, and as she finishes Onawanda arrives upon the scene. Mrs. Elkins is too upset to appreciate what is transpiring and it would have gone badly with Onawanda but for the opportune arrival of the preacher, who again asserts his belief in the Indian's innocence and demands that he be set free. This is done and Onawanda takes the trail after the retreating band.

He comes upon their camp and is given shelter for the night. When all is quiet he goes to the children and hurries them away, but his departure is soon noticed and the braves start in pursuit. Rapidly they gain upon the little trio, for the children cannot move rapidly, and the fleetest of the hostiles is almost upon them. Onawanda creates a diversion by hurrying the children on and remaining behind to give attack. He kills his pursuer and rejoins the children. A precious ten minutes has been gained.

They reach the settlement, but the Indians are again at their heels. Capture appears to be inevitable, but the alarm has been raised and the settlers hurry to Onawanda's aid. He is a hero now in the eyes of all, but he has paid dearly for his justification and he falls dead at the feet of his benefactor, happy at having proven his good faith.

THE ROMANCE OF AN UMBRELLA.—Just a leaf from the diary of a business girl, a little romance of everyday life. Jimmie Conyers works in a big New York office building, where even air and light are precious and the air shafts are narrow and deep. Just across the shaft on which his window opens Bess Fairkirk presides over the typewriter in a lawyer's office. She is no acquainted with Jimmie, but that does not prevent her from appreciating the fact that he is manly and handsome and—well, appreciative of her own good points. They leave the office about the same hour and Jimmie follows Bess into a quick lunch place, where she has a cup of tea to take the place of the lunch omitted because of the pressure of work. When she goes out she takes Jimmie's umbrella instead of her own and Jimmie welcomes the chance to speak to her. He jumps up to follow her, but before he can rush out the watchful cashier calls to her aid a couple of the waitresses and Jimmie has to pay his check. With this handicap he is barely able to board the same elevated train that she takes.

As she leaves the station it commences to rain. Jimmie claims his property, but offers her a share of the umbrella's protection. This she refuses, but it rains harder than ever and she takes shelter in a doorway. Jimmie induces her to share his covering and it leads to an acquaintance that ends in her promise to share his home and fortune, even though both are as small as his heart is big.

This is a charming and delightful little romance of New York with the action actually placed in the streets of that city. A novelty is the taking of the rain scene during an actual shower. The raindrops spatter upon the pavement in a manner that convinces the most skeptical that this is no trick effect. It adds vastly to the realism of the picture. Length, 450 feet.

THE SCALES OF JUSTICE.—In the public square of the little German town of Lalsk there stands a huge statue of Justice, her eyes blindfolded and the balances in her upraised hand. Years ago criminals expiated their crimes at the feet of the statue, for here the headman's block was placed and the well-worn stones of the square were often stained with blood, for in those days even trivial thefts were punishable by decapitation.

In those bloody times the statue was the favorite resort of little Heinrich, whose feeble mind comprehended only the most elemental things of life. With an almost superstitious awe of the idiotic, the villagers bore with the half-witted child, though now and then his pranks grew almost unbearable. As the scene opens, the child annoys the Burgomaster, who orders him to be thrown into jail, but Gretchen, the little servant in his household, pleads for the lad and the good priest adds his solicitation. The Burgomaster gives in to public opinion and departs in no good humor.

Heinrich follows Gretchen to the Burgomaster's house, but he is soon ordered from the kitchen by the Burgomaster's wife, who has company. The visitor greatly admires the other's handsome rings, particularly a valuable signet. The visit is short and the rings are removed while the housewife prepares to make some pastry. Both she and Gretchen are called from the kitchen and Heinrich, who has been peeping through the window, clambers in and appropriates the showiest of the rings—the signet.

Gretchen is taxed with the theft, and in spite of her protestations of innocence is thrown into prison and condemned to death. The good priest visits her to hear her last confession and urges her to admit her crime. She takes a most solemn vow that she is innocent and the priest is convinced of her truthfulness.

The jailor comes to lead her forth to death, and pale and trembling, but sustained by her faith, she slowly walks across the square to kneel at the feet of Justice.

A hush falls upon the people as the priest raises his hand toward heaven and prays that a miracle may be shown to prove her innocence. There is a crash that terrifies the crowd. They start back, then rush eagerly forward. The scales have fallen from the hand of Justice and with them the signet, which has been hidden in one of the scale pans by the agile Heinrich.

Utterly unable to comprehend the seriousness of the situation or of his own action, he claims his toy and the last doubt is swept away. The Burgomaster bows low before the girl and the wife embraces her, while the populace loudly acclaim their joy over the miracle of the Scales of Justice.

THIS WEEK'S PROGRAMME AT A GLANCE.

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 27.

BIOGRAPH—Leather Stocking (Dramatic).
SELIG—Across the Divide (Dramatic).
LUBIN—A Fish Story (Comic).
LUBIN—Old Love Letters (Comic).
PATHE—He Learns the Trick of Mesmerism (C.).
PATHE—Suitor's Competition (Comedy).

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28.

URBAN—Wife or Child (Drama).
URBAN—Breach of Promise (Comedy).
VITAGRAPH—Onawanda (Dramatic).
VITAGRAPH—The Romance of an Umbrella (C.).

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 29.

ESSANAY—The Brothers (Dramatic).
URBAN—Love, the Conqueror (Dramatic).
URBAN—Chasing the Ball (Magic).
PATHE—Pierrot, the Fuddler (Dramatic).
PATHE—Jane Is Unwilling to Work (Comedy).

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 30.

LUBIN—The Judge's Ward (Dramatic).
BIOGRAPH—The Awakening (Dramatic).
BIOGRAPH—Wanter, a Child (Comedy).
SELIG—The Drunkard's Fate (Dramatic) 930 ft.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 1.

EDISON—The Wallace Jewels (Comedy).
EDISON—Two of a Kind (Comedy).
PATHE—A Game of Chess (Dramatic).
PATHE—An Eventful Trip (Comedy).
KALEM—The Mystery of the "Sleeper" Trunk (Dramatic) 870 ft.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 2.

GAUMONT—The Masterpiece (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Papa's Hat (Comedy).
PATHE—Vendetta (Dramatic).
PATHE—The Garbage of Paris (Industrial).
VITAGRAPH—The Scales of Justice (Dramatic).

Kalem Films

Issue of October 1st, 1909

THE "SLEEPER" TRUNK

LENGTH 870 FEET

A distinct novelty in film production. The love romance of a young customs inspector, depicting a daring attempt against his life, made by a clever band of millinery smugglers, which resulted in their capture and led to his happy marriage. The novel dock scenes offer some striking views of New York City's great harbor.

Free Descriptive Lecture to all applicants.

Kalem Posters in Four Colors are Supplied by the A. B. C. Co., Cleveland, O.

KALEM CO., Inc.

EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.

235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

Until Nov. 1

We will make a slide of your singer, operator, etc., with suitable wording, for 50c.

We will prepay it and guarantee it to be O. K. or send your money back.

Ask for the following lists

ANNOUNCEMENT SLIDES
SPECIAL AD. SLIDES
ILLUSTRATED SONGS

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

FOR SALE

Moving Picture Theatre, unusual opportunity. Reasonable terms, owner going south. Address,

T. LINHURST
221 Clarkson Avenue Brooklyn, N. Y.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 27, 1909.

LEATHER STOCKING

Freely adapted from the tales of James Fenimore Cooper.

What person has not been enthralled by the beautiful and thrilling pen pictures of that greatest of novelists, James Fenimore Cooper? Living as he did, almost associated with that tribe of the Algonkin stock, the Mohicans, his characters were real, living people, and while we have made no attempt to follow closely his story, we present a vivid appreciation of his work, the result, we may truthfully assert, being one of the most thrilling and picturesque subjects ever produced. Our story tells of the starting out of a party piloted by Big Serpent, who is elated at the opportunity of a long cherished revenge. They are waylaid by the Indians and seek shelter in the stockade, assisted by Leather Stocking and Uncas. Leather Stocking undertakes to secure aid by swimming the rapids clothed in an animal skin, and returns none too soon, for the party would have been incinerated by the savages. Length, 996 feet.

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 30, 1909.

THE AWAKENING

Tells of a young bachelor who is bent on taking life easy, but he finds to save his inheritance he must marry within a certain time, which time limit is nearing an end. A bride to order is the forced conditions and he goes to the altar with a pretty little Spanish girl, whom he hardly deigns to notice. She falls desperately in love with her hubby of convenience and by her artlessness wins him over. Length, 691 feet.

WANTED, A CHILD

The parents of a family of seven children, in almost desperate circumstances, have a chance to lighten their burden by an offer of their brother to take one of their young ones. At first they feel elated, but after looking each kiddy over they realize they can't part with any one of them. Length, 296 feet.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

A NEW WAY TO PAINT SIGNS

WITH THE BUTTS SIGN WRITING OUTFITS

Anyone can paint all kind of signs and show cards in half the time required by the old way and much better. We furnish these Special Outfits complete with ten alphabets and three sets of figures of the most modern styles of the day, from 2 to 12 inches in height, not printed alphabets but the real letter, cut out of the most durable material. We also furnish with this outfit a complete book of instructions for painting all kinds of signs and cards and a selection of beautiful designs, and guarantee that anyone can do perfect lettering as soon as he receives the outfit.

Special Price For a Short Time Only $5.00. Send in your order to-day.
None sent C. O. D. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money refunded.

THE BUTTS SIGN & NOVELTY CO., 228 Temple Court Bldg DENVER, COLORADO

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

MUTOSCOPE MACHINE for sale, made by American Mutoscope and Biograph Company. Address, T. J. Stewart Company, Erie corner of Fifth street, Jersey City, N. J.

THEATRES WANTED.

WILL BUY moving picture theater in city of ten thousand or over. Central States or Middle West. Every detail first letter. Address H. E. BENDER, 450 W. Exchange St., Akron, O.

WANTED—Moving picture theater, in or near New York City. Address CASH, care Moving Picture World.

THEATRES FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—Half interest in picture theater, Massachusetts; city of 40,000. No competition. Great opportunity. Capacity 500. Address "SACRIFICE," care Moving Picture World.

Vaudette Theater for sale; good business; 180 seats; Power's machine, piano, raised floor. Price, $700. Address, WALTER, Box 652, Grand Ledge, Mich.

Moving Picture Theater; fine location; good Pennsylvania city; doing good business; 219 chairs; other business reason for selling; this is a money maker. Address K. H. M., care of Moving Picture World.

SITUATIONS WANTED,

MOVING PICTURE OPERATOR with own machine desires stationary or travelling position; four years' experience. New York license. Address A. S. LATTA, care Moving Picture World.

C. C. Duryea, Nunda, N. Y., desires quick position as operator: can do all, and will go anywhere; best of references.

AT LIBERTY—Operator, an electrician and machinist, can run calcium light. Best references; willing to go on the road; seven years' experience. Address Geo. Fisk, 133 West 127th street, New York City.

INFORMATION WANTED.

If Miss H. Cary, slide colorist, will call at this office she will learn something to her advantage.
Moving Picture World.

HELP WANTED.

Practical Slide Colorists can find employment at the Henry B. Ingram Company Studio, 42 West 28th street, New York.

WANTED—Producer for moving pictnres. Must be able to deliver the goods and furnish references. Address A. B. X., care M. P. World.

FILMS FOR SALE

50 Reels Film free from rain and scratches, titled and in good condition, $16.50.
20 Reels Film for sale at $12.50 per reel.

MAYER SILVERMAN
322 Futon Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

DON'T

Miss A. Goodthing

BOOK THE HUDSON-FULTON SLIDES WITH LECTURER, FOR ANY DESIRED NIGHT

Phone or Write

AMERICAN FILM BROKERS

Phone
2314 Stuyesant

145-157 4th Avenue
NEW YORK

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

A CLOSE CALL.—A Western drama. John Wilson is the owner of a ranch in Wyoming. He goes out to his work, leaving his devoted wife and the beautiful little boy, five years old, his son Willie. Grey Eagle, a peaceful but hungry Indian, who has been kicked out of the ranch-house several times, comes again to beg for food. The child, fascinated by the Indian's headwork, gets him food and permits the Indian to take a bottle of whiskey. As the mother enters, the Indian goes out, followed a few minutes later by the child. We next see the Indian in the woods, enjoying a drink of whiskey, and the child approaches. Little Willie gives to the Indian a silver charm that one of the cowboys had presented to him that morning. The Indian and child are met by a cowboy from the ranch, who sends the child back towards home, and the Indian in another direction. As soon as the cowboy is out of sight the child again follows the Indian, is lost in the woods, and in a very pretty scene, after saying his prayer, the child lies down and goes to sleep. Meanwhile, the Indian, in trying to remove the cork from the bottle, has cut his finger and blood from the cut runs on his garments. Grey Eagle finishes his whiskey and falls asleep in the bushes. The mother of the child, ailarmed by his absence, goes in search of him, and meeting the father, tells him of the child's prolonged absence. Cowboy Dick rides up and tells of having seen the child with the Indian. The mother is crazed with fearful foreboding, and the father starts off with a number of his cowboys to find the Indian and the child. The Indian is found asleep and dead drunk. One of the cowboys notices the silver charm hanging to the Indian's coat, and recognizes it as the one he had given to the child that morning. Then the bloodstains on the Indian's sleeve satisfy the distracted father and the enraged cowboys that the Indian has, in a

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURES CO. IMP OF AMERICA

FIRST RELEASE OF "IMP" FILMS ALMOST READY

There is no use pretending we're not excited about it, for we are. After weeks and months of terribly hard work and a lavish outlay of coin, we are about to throw the product of our new factory upon the market. Watch! Listen! Wait! We're not going to make any rash claims, but we DO promise you the greatest American-made moving pictures you ever saw. SEE THAT YOU GET THEM. Keep your eye on the "IMP."

Independent Moving Picture Company of America
CARL LAEMMLE, President

drunken fury, killed the child. They seize Grey Eagle, tie him to a tree, and with threats of death try to compel the poor Indian to tell them where the child is. The Indian's only answer to their demand is a shake of the head, indicating that he does not know. Wilson orders the Indian to be tortured by fire to compel him to tell where the child is. The cowboys bring dry brushwood and pile it around the Indian. One of them lights a match and sets fire to the wood. Meanwhile, Shorty, a cowboy, returning to the ranch, stumbles across little Willie, fast asleep in the bushes. He picks the child up and dashes upon horseback toward the ranch-house. The flames are creeping nearer the Indian, Grey Eagle. The father begs the Indian to tell where the child is. The Indian shakes his head—he does not know. The flames are just reaching the Indian's feet when a cry is heard. Up dashes Shorty with the child in front of him. The father grasps his beloved little boy, the cowboys scatter the fire and release Grey Eagle, none the worse for his terrible close call. Our last scene shows the mother praying to God to restore her child. As if in answer to her prayer, the father appears, bearing little Willie in his arms. With a cry of joy the mother seizes and kisses her little darling.

GREAT NORTHERN.

HEROISM RECONCILES.—A. N. is engaged by the railway company. He leaves his wife and his two little children perfectly happy to go to his work. But on the road he meets a bad comrade, who tempts him to have a drink with him. This first glass is followed by more, and as N. at last reaches his working place he is half an hour late and rather intoxicated. He is watched, and after a while found sleeping instead of minding his duty. As this omission might have caused a serious accident if discovered a few minutes later, Norberg is discharged at once. Poverty soon makes its entry at N.'s home. In vain he tries to get work. The children are starving, and his wife, who used to be good and gentle, is getting cross and bitter. At last she makes him try once more to get back his old job, but he is again refused and he enters a public house to have a drink. There he happens to overhear two scoundrels planning to rob a train, getting it first off the track. Adversity has not hurt N.'s sense of duty and justice. Understanding the evil scheme, he hurries away to the railway track. He overtakes the criminals while they shift the rails, so that the express train, which is expected any minute, must run off the track. N. tries to get things right again, but the criminals throw themselves on him, tie him hands and feet, and him down across the rails, and then they hurry away out of sight. Using all his strength, N. now rolls himself on to the shifting machine and succeeds in turning it round with his head. An accident is thus prevented, but N. falls senseless back between the rails. After a while a guard finds the unconscious man. He is released from his bands, and so far restored to life that he can explain what has happened, and then he is taken to the traffic manager to give his report. Now things begin to look brighter for N. He has proved to be a man of courage as well as of presence of mind, and as men of such qualities are always called for at the railway, he gets his old job back with promise of increasing wages. He is also rewarded with a sum of money, and as happy as happy can be, he hurries away home to his little family.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

FAITHFUL WIFE.—Gray is seated with his little one on the lawn when word is brought to him that he must sail for foreign shores. He calls to his wife, and their parting is full of pathos. He goes with the sailor who brought the message, and they board the vessel. His wife, who is disconsolate at the separation, turns from the consolation a friend offers. He some little time later brings the news of the wreck of the vessel her husband sailed on. She reads that none survived, and falls, weeping, into a chair. The man leaves her, with reluctance, to conquer her grief. We see, however, that Gray, floating on a raft, was cast ashore on an island. Some years pass, and he is seen trying to attract the attention of a passing ship. Failing in this, he shows desperation. The wife, who believes Gray dead, visits grave with her child and friend to place flowers upon it. After returning home, he tells of his love, but she turns from him, into the house, where she puts the linen she has ironed into a basket. This he carries for her, despite the fact that she is loath to accept his assistance. Gray, who has been successful in getting away from the island, returns home and sees his wife and child accompanied by her friend. He later sees them at the graveyard, arranging flowers, and when the little one remains alone he goes to grave and sees that it is to his memory. He falls across it, and the child runs for her mother, who returns. Both she and her friend recognize Gray. There is a happy reunion of the family, the other man taking leave of them. Husband, wife and child return home to forget the many years of sorrow.

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED SONG ADVERTISING ANNOUNCEMENT SPECIAL

SLIDES

Special Slides Made to Order

58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614
CHICAGO

MARYLAND FILM COMPANY

400 Carroll Building : : Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE'S FOREMOST INDEPENDENT RENTERS

Write for our special money making proposition, it will pay you. Good clean films, and a square deal is what we offer you.

Box Ball Doubles the Profits of Your Theatre

$800 a Month With No Expense But Rent!

Moving picture shows pay out big money every week for employes, song slides and film rental. But Box Ball is a business that often brings in $200 in six days, yet has absolutely no expense but rent. One customer with four alleys took in $1,845.20 in 59 days.

Customers who spend only five cents in the theatre spend more than a dollar at Box Ball. Crowds are quickly fascinated with this new game. They never tire—the more they play the more they want to keep on playing. No one wants to quit loser, so he plays game after game—often spending hours when he first intended to spend a few minutes.

When the crowds are in your theatre give them free tickets for the first game. Every one will play at least once and many will become regular customers. Women and children play as well as men—they form teams and clubs and often spend a whole afternoon or evening.

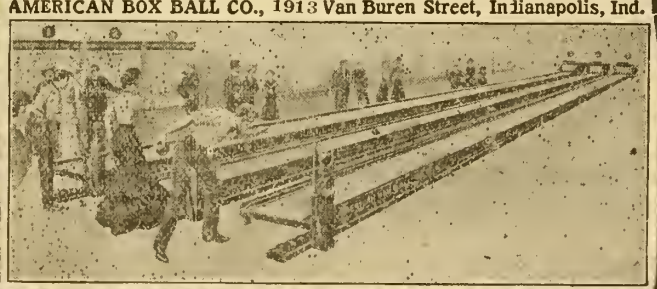
Install one of these money-making games in connection with your theatre. Rent the room above or get the store next door. Put in two or more alleys and you will be simply amazed at the wonderful profits.

Your only expense will be rent. Players set the pins with a lever and the balls are automatically returned. One man to collect the money is all you need, and he can care for as many as ten alleys.

One game usually lasts six minutes with two players. At 5 cents each that's $1.00 an hour from every alley—you can figure the profit yourself. With ten hours' play two alleys will bring you $20 a day, or $120 every six days.

Send for our free booklet and learn how you can own one of these great money-making games for only a few dollars down and the balance payable from your profits. Remember—you pay just a few dollars down, and your profits the very first month should more than pay the entire cost of the outfit. Write for booklet at once. Address

AMERICAN BOX BALL CO., 1913 Van Buren Street, Indianapolis, Ind.



Bought Our Heads Off

ALL DURING THE HOT WEATHER . .

Never in all the days you've been in the Show Business have you seen such a fine collection of Illustrated Song Slides

This following guarantee alone ought to convince you that we have a Superior Service

Complete Sets from Title Slide to Chorus

None faked or broken

Make a feature of displaying the Chorus Slide and let your audience join in the Chorus

Make them feel right at home

One order will convince you more than any argument we can present

Write for our latest proposition and ever lasting long list

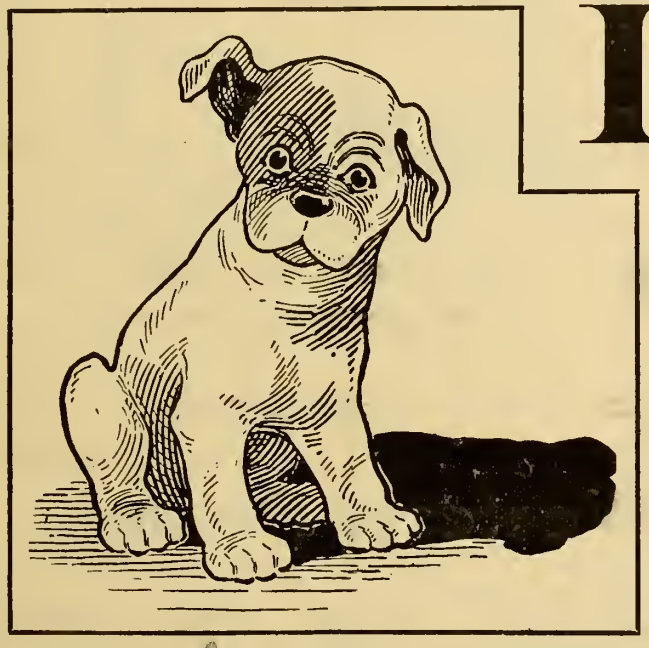
Records of all Descriptions Furnished

Chicago Song Slide Exchange

Ninth Floor, Masonic Temple

CHICAGO - - - - ILLINOIS

Pup Philosophy



I have been deserted by my parents, who left me to support myself.

I am going to make a living by selling my talents to Mr. F. C. Aiken of the

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO.

As a reward for my services I am to get all the dog biscuit I want, plenty of flea soap and a fine brass studded collar. Each month I shall have something to say about my employer. I can do this honestly, because I have found the company worthy in every way. Investigation has thoroughly proven that this company has bought every reel released by the licensed manufacturers since last February. It has also developed that the concern's attention to detail and its reputation for square dealing is above reproach. I shall want you to keep your eye on me and the things that I will have to say. I hope I can interest you.

I will sign myself

PUP SOCRATES
His Mark

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO.

85 Dearborn Street · Chicago, Illinois

A CLOSE CALL

CENTAUR

Length Approx.
975 Feet

Shipped from New York
September 29, 1909

A Thrilling Western Drama

THIS story tells how a ranchman's favorite child follows a drunken Indian into the woods and gets lost. Cowboys searching for the young one, come across the Indian lying in a drunken sleep, and when he denies the whereabouts of the child he is tortured, but before any real harm befalls him another cowboy rides up with the child, who had been found asleep, and returns him to the distracted parents. The Indian is set free amid cheers and allowed to go his way.

Scenes of cowboy life are shown in the film which accurately portray western life, the costumes and effects being perfectly reproduced.

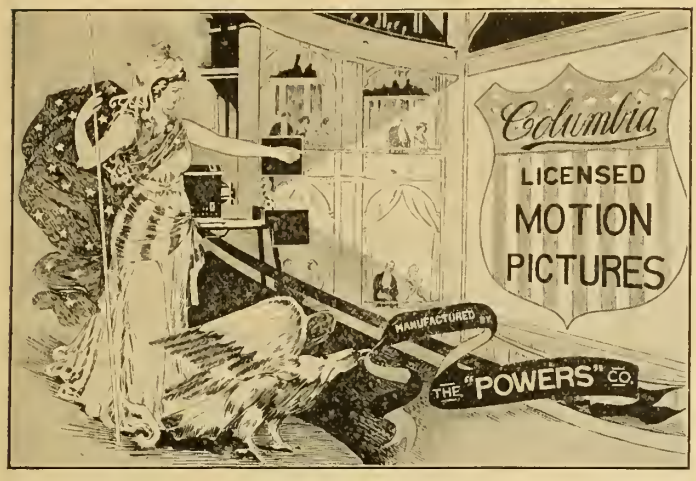
POSTERS FREE WITH CENTAUR FILM

CONTROLLED EXCLUSIVELY BY

Film Import and Trading Co.

127 East 23d Street NEW YORK

"Be Sure You're Right
Then Go Ahead."



We will produce strictly American Subjects of High Class
STORIES—LUCID AND SIMPLY TOLD
SUBJECTS—CLEAN, MORAL and EDUCATIONAL
SCENERY—APPROPIATE IN EVERY DETAIL

We believe in the old saying
"THE MORE HASTE THE LESS SPEED"

It is not our intention to photograph a subject to-day and release it to-morrow.
Reputation will be as desirable to us as the Almighty Dollar.
Highest prices paid for good manuscripts.

241st ST., and RICHARDSON AVE., WAKEFIELD, N. Y. C.

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, Octobar 1st

FAITHFUL WIFE

Dramatic Code Word, Redeem Approx. Length 1,000 ft.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

GRAND PRIX
Awarded First Prize and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

Manufacturers of
Films of Quality
Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

NEXT ISSUE

Release, Saturday, September 25th
THE GREAT PRIZE
Comedy Production
Length Appr. 455 Feet

Release, Saturday, September 25th
LIFE ON BOARD A TRAINING SHIP
A Subject of Unusual Interest
Length Appr. 540 feet

Release, Saturday, October 2nd
HEROISM RECONCILES
A Strong Dramatic Subject

ALL EXCHANGES RENT GREAT NORTHERN FILMS—Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY
NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN
7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 23—The Indian Runner's Romance (Drama)..994 ft.
Aug. 26—The Seventh Day (Drama).....693 ft.
Aug. 26—Oh, Uncle! (Comedy).....292 ft.
Aug. 30—The Mills of the Gods (Dramatic).....672 ft.
Aug. 30—Pranks (Comedy).....328 ft.
Sept. 2—The Sealed Room (Dramatic).....779 ft.
Sept. 2—The Little Darling (Comedy).....211 ft.
Sept. 6—"1776," or the Hessian Renegades (Dr.)..965 ft.
Sept. 9—Comata, the Sioux (Dramatic).....963 ft.
Sept. 13—Getting Even (Comedy).....587 ft.
Sept. 13—The Children's Friend (Dramatic).....386 ft.
Sept. 16—The Broken Locket (Dramatic).....999 ft.
Sept. 20—In Old Kentucky (Dramatic).....983 ft.
Sept. 23—A Fair Exchange (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 27—Leather Stocking (Dramatic).....996 ft.
Sept. 30—The Awakening (Dramatic) .....691 ft.
Sept. 30—Wanted, a Child (Comedy).....296 ft.

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 27—A Dash to Death.....815 ft.
Aug. 31—Suffer Little Children . . . For of Such is the Kingdom of Labor.....1000 ft.
Sept. 3—Ethel's Luncheon (Comedy).....
Sept. 3—Backward, Turn Backward, etc. (Dramatic) ———
Sept. 7—A Dangerous Pair (Comedy).....
Sept. 7—The Temptation (Dramatic).....
Sept. 10—The Making of Honey (Industrial).....190 ft.
Sept. 10—The Amateur William Tell (Comedy)....810 ft.
Sept. 14—Little Sister (Dramatic).....975 ft.
Sept. 17—How the Landlord Collected His Rents (C.).460 ft.
Sept. 17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Comedy).....500 ft.
Sept. 21—The Ordeal (Dramatic).....950 ft.
Sept. 24—A Knight for a Night (Comedy).....370 ft.
Sept. 24—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (Comedy).230 ft.
Sept. 24—Love and War (Dramatic).....400 ft.
Sept. 28—Why Girls Leave Home (Comedy).....1000 ft.
Oct. 1—The Wallace Jewels (Comedy) ...'.....720 ft.
Oct. 1—Two of a Kind (Comedy) .....'....280 ft.
Oct. 5—Laddie (Dramatic) .....1000 ft.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Aug. 18—The Wonders of Nature (Scenic).....1000 ft.
Aug. 25—On Another Man's Pass (Comedy).....950 ft.
Sept. 1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (Comedy).952 ft.
Sept. 8—Justified (Dramatic) .....970 ft.
Sept. 15—A Case of Tomatoes (Comedy).....495 ft.
Sept. 15—Three Reasons for Haste (Comedy).....485 ft.
Sept. 22—Gratitude (Drama).....950 ft.
Sept. 29—The Brothers (Dramatic).....970 ft.
Oct. 6—A Birthday Affair (Comedy) .....550 ft.
Oct. 6—The Magic Melody (Comedy) .....431 ft.

GAUMONT.

(Gorge Kleine.)

Aug. 25—Sevres Porcelain (Mystic).....194 ft.
Aug. 28—A Generous Emperor (Drama).....304 ft.
Aug. 28—The Horse and the Haystack.....297 ft.
Aug. 28—Great Event at Podunk.....357 ft.
Sept. 1—An Awakened Conscience (Dramatic).....627 ft.
Sept. 1—Magic Cartoons (Comedy).....340 ft.
Sept. 7—First Airships Crossing the English Channel (Scenic) .....510 ft.
Sept. 7—The Mason's Paradise (Comedy).....414 ft.
Sept. 8—The Stolen Gems (Dramatic).....464 ft.
Sept. 8—Glimpses of Paris (Scenic).....417 ft.
Sept. 11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dramatic).....940 ft.
Sept. 14—The Tricky Dummies (Comedy).....370 ft.
Sept. 14—Her Busy Day (Comedy).....250 ft.
Sept. 14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Comedy).....324 ft.
Sept. 21—Saved From the Quicksands (Dramatic)....600 ft.
Sept. 21—Taking in a Reef (Comedy).....380 ft.
Sept. 22—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dramatic).770 ft.
Sept. 22—Dropped From the Clouds (Comedy).....240 ft.
Sept 25—On the Crest of the Waves (Dramatic).....554 ft.
Sept 25—All for a Nickel (Comedy).....404 ft.
Oct. 2—The Masterpiece (Drama) .....857 ft.
Oct. 2—Papa's Hat (Comedy) .....140 ft.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

Aug. 21—The King's Protege (Drama).....647 ft.
Aug. 21—Up the Mountain from Hong Kong (Scenic)287 ft.
Aug. 31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Comedy).....404 ft.
Aug. 31—The French Battleship "Justice" (Dram.).557 ft.
Sept. 4—In Hot Pursuit (Dramatic).....514 ft.
Sept. 4—Romantic Italy (Scenic).....437 ft.
Sept. 15—The Fatal Love (Dramatic).....584 ft.
Sept. 15—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Scenic).....367 ft.
Sept. 18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Topical)...480 ft.
Sept. 18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dramatic).....500 ft.
Sept. 28—Wife or Child (Drama).....494 ft.
Sept. 28—Breach of Promise (Comedy) .....484 ft.
Sept. 29—Love, the Conqueror (Drama) .....650 ft.
Sept. 29—Chasing the Ball (Magic) .....347 ft.

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug. 20—The Queen of the Quarry.....690 ft.
Aug. 20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal.....170 ft.
Aug. 27—The Conspirators (Drama).....410 ft.
Aug. 27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Comedy)..575 ft.
Sept. 3—The Pay Car (Dramatic).....930 ft.
Sept. 10—Hiram's Bride (Dramatic).....—— ft.
Sept. 17—The Story of a Rose (Dramatic).....680 ft.
Sept. 17—Winning a Dinner (Comedy).....245 ft.
Sept. 24—The Winning Boat (Dramatic).....925 ft.
Oct. 1—The Mystery of the "Sleeper" Trunk (D.).870 ft.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Aug. 23—Before the Dawn (Drama).....615 ft.
Aug. 23—Wifey Away, Hubby at Play.....320 ft.
Aug. 26—Nearsighted Mary (Comedy).....495 ft.
Aug. 26—Midnight Sons (Comedy).....385 ft.
Aug. 30—The Doctor's Bride (Dramatic).....580 ft.
Aug. 30—The Haunted Hat (Comedy).....305 ft.
Sept. 2—The Woman Hater (Dramatic).....810 ft.
Sept. 6—The Call of the Heart (Dramatic).....670 ft.
Sept. 6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic).....255 ft.
Sept. 9—A True Patriot (Patriotic).....735 ft.
Sept. 9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Scenic)....200 ft.
Sept. 13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dramatic)....810 ft.
Sept. 16—The Fortune Hunters (Comedy).....575 ft.
Sept. 16—All on Account of a Letter (Comedy).....385 ft.
Sept. 20—When Woman Hates (Dramatic).....750 ft.
Sept. 23—The Conquering Hero (Comic).....730 ft.
Sept. 27—A Fish Story (Comic).....510 ft.
Sept. 27—Old Love Letters (Comic).....400 ft.
Sept. 30—The Judge's Ward (Dramatic).....950 ft.

PATHE FRERES.

Aug. 30—The New Mail Carrier (Comedy).....672 ft.
Sept. 1—The Little Street Singer (Dramatic).....426 ft.
Sept. 1—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Dram.)..502 ft.
Sept. 3—A Visit to Biskra (Scenic).....443 ft.
Sept. 3—Show Your License (Comedy).....420 ft.
Sept. 4—A Grave Disappointment (Comedy).....361 ft.
Sept. 4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Scenic).....253 ft.
Sept. 4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Scenic).....331 ft.
Sept. 6—Versailles (Scenic) .....462 ft.
Sept. 6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (Comedy).456 ft.
Sept. 8—The Little Soldier (Dramatic).....394 ft.
Sept. 8—Sweden—Gotha Canal (Scenic) .....456 ft.
Sept. 10—Tom Thumb (Dramatic).....1016 ft.
Sept. 11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics (Sc.)..371 ft.
Sept. 11—Sports in Java (Scenic) .....298 ft.
Sept. 11—How to Tame a Mother-in-law (Comedy).351 ft.
Sept. 13—Amateur Detective (Comedy).....390 ft.
Sept. 13—The Child's Prayer (Dramatic).....571 ft.
Sept. 15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dramatic).....492 ft.
Sept. 15—City of Naples (Industrial).....449 ft.
Sept. 17—Mountebank's Son (Dramatic).....892 ft.
Sept. 18—Oh, What a Beard! (Comedy).....335 ft.
Sept. 18—The Fresh Kid (Comedy).....295 ft.
Sept. 18—Construction of Balloons (Industrial).....361 ft.
Sept. 20—Aviation Contests at Rheims.....607 ft.
Sept. 20—Caught in His Own Trap (Comedy).....374 ft.
Sept. 22—The Tower of Nesle (Dramatic).....1088 ft.
Sept. 24—Careless Tramp (Comedy).....574 ft.
Sept. 24—Caucasian Customs (Scenic).....387 ft.
Sept. 25—Servant's Good Joke (Comedy).....548 ft.
Sept. 25—Trained Birds (Scenic).....397 ft.
Sept. 27—He Learn the Trick of Mesmerism (Com.).433 ft.
Sept. 27—Suitor's Competition (Comedy) .....518 ft.
Sept. 29—Pierrot, the Fuddler (Dramatic).....318 ft.
Sept. 29—Jane Is Unwilling to Work (Comedy).....525 ft.
Oct. 1—A Game of Chess (Dramatic).....558 ft.
Oct. 1—An Eventful Trip (Comedy).....390 ft
Oct. 2—The Garbage of Paris (Industrial).....407 ft.
Oct. 2—Vendetta (Dramatic) .....541 ft.

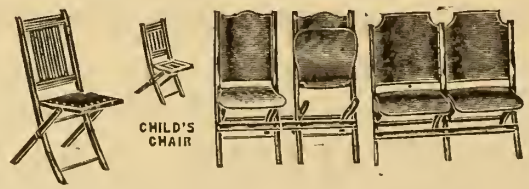
SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

Aug. 30—Winning a Widow (Dramatic).....450 ft.
Sept. 2—The Blight of Sin (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 9—The Engagement Ring (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 13—Freebooters (Dramatic).....995 ft.
Sept. 16—Crooked Path (Dramatic).....960 ft.
Sept. 20—The Bachelor's Visit (Dramatic).....775 ft.
Sept. 20—False Alarm (Comedy).....175 ft.
Sept. 23—Stricken Blind (Dramatic).....——
Sept. 27—Across the Divide (Dramatic).....980 ft.
Sept. 30—The Drunkard's Fate (Dramatic) .....930 ft.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug. 24—Judge Not That Ye Be Not Judged.....447 ft.
Aug. 24—Borrowed Clothes (Com.).....538 ft.
Aug. 28—The Evil That Men Do (Dram.).....925 ft.
Aug. 31—The Hunchback (Dramatic).....633 ft.
Aug. 31—Niagara in Winter Dress.....350 ft.
Sept. 4—The Galley Slave.....885 ft.
Sept. 7—The Fisherman (Dramatic).....430 ft.
Sept. 7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dramatic).....564 ft.
Sept. 11—An Alpine Echo (Dramatic).....990 ft.
Sept. 14—The Little Father (Dramatic).....610 ft.
Sept. 14—The Wealthy Rival (Comedy).....360 ft.
Sept. 18—The Marble Heart (Dramatic).....968 ft.
Sept. 21—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dramatic).....425 ft.
Sept. 21—The Siren's Necklace (Dramatic).....530 ft.
Sept. 25—Fantine (Dramatic) .....997 ft.
Sept. 29—Onawanda (Dramatic) .....545 ft.
Sept. 29—The Romance of an Umbrella (Comedy)..450 ft.
Oct. 2—The Scales of Justice (Dramatic).....983 ft.

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use
Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue
PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.
NORTH MANCHESTER, IND.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

Film Import and Trading Company.

May 1—Nevada Girl .....930 ft.
May 8—Cowboy's Sweetheart .....854 ft.
May 14—The Temptatious of John Gray....930 ft.
May 22—Johnny and the Indians.....877 ft.
May 28—Crystal Ball .....Aprrox. 933 ft.
June 19—Love Wins .....931 ft.
June 24—Private Brown .....Approx. 904 ft.
July 7—Cowboy's Romance .....Aprrox. 871 ft.
July 21—Tale of Texas.....Approx. 945 ft.
July 28—Maryland, 1777 .....Approx. 956 ft.
Aug. 4—Power of Love.....Approx. 995 ft.
Aug. 18—The Lost Letter.....965 ft.
Aug. 25—The Blacksmith's Daughter .....985 ft.
Sept. 1—Peaceful Jones .....Approx 932 ft.
Sept. 8—The Diamond Necklace.....545 ft.
Sept. 8—The Wishing Charm.....545 ft.
Sept. 15—A White Lie.....About 1000 ft.
Sept. 22—Dan Blake's Rival.....About 1000 ft.
Sept. 29—A Close Call.....About 1000 ft.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July 10—Persistent Lover .....445 ft.
July 17—A Shadow of the Past.....464 ft.
July 24—A Clever Nurse.....450 ft.
July 24—Off the Coast of Norway.....315 ft.
Aug. 14—The Spy .....619 ft.
Aug. 14—Water Sports .....214 ft.
Aug. 21—False Alarm .....353 ft.
Aug. 21—Surroundings of Copenhagen.....396 ft.
Aug. 28—The Shell .....567 ft.
Aug. 28—Cowboys in Argentina.....387 ft.
Aug. 26—A Strange Reunion.....910 ft.
Sept. 3—His Two Children.....1000 ft.
Sept. 11—The Gray Dame.....975 ft.
Sept. 25—The Great Prize.....455 ft.
Sept. 25—Life on Training Ship.....540 ft.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

May 21—Disinherited Son's Loyalty (Dr.)....887 ft.
May 28—A Fishermaid's Romance (Dr.).....806 ft.
June 4—Davy Crockett in Hearts United (D.).836 ft.
June 11—The Squaw's Revenge (Dr.).....990 ft.
June 18—A Terrible Attempt (Dr.).....575 ft.
June 18—Jones Gets Arrested (Com).....450 ft.
July 2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.).....935 ft.
July 9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.).....850 ft.
July 23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.) .....1000 ft.
July 30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C).800 ft.
Aug. 6—Sailor's Child (Dr.).....1000 ft.
Aug. 13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes..450 ft.
Aug. 13—The Yiddisher Cowboy.....550 ft.
Aug. 20—Half Breed's Treachery .....1000 ft.
Aug. 27—Secret Service Woman.....1000 ft.
Sept. 10—The Paymaster .....1000 ft.
Sept. 17—A Kentucky Planter.....1000 ft.
Sept. 24—The Squaw's Sacrifice.....1000 ft.
Oct. 1—Faithful Wife .....1000 ft.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Russian Romance (Drama).....850 ft.
Conspracy (Drama).....900 ft
Victim of a Crisis (Drama).....520 ft.
Salome Craze (Comedy).....435 ft.
Flirtation Collar (Comedy).....335 ft.
Brave Girl on the 15th Floor (Drama).....917 ft.
It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl (Comedy)..1010 ft.
Spanish Girl (Comedy Drama).....816 ft.
Her Favorite Tune (Drama).....892 ft.
How the Loser Won (Drama).....989 ft.
A Young Bachelor's Dream (Comedy).....826 ft.
A Strauge Reunion.....840 ft.
A Girl of the Woods.....860 ft.
The Railroad Wreck.....950 ft.
Sept. 16—The Actor Burglar.....950 ft.

INDEPENDENT FILMS.

The following films are released this week by the Empire Film Company, 150 East Fourteenth street, corner Third avenue, New York:

An Aerial Elopement (Clarendon).....540 ft.
A Lucky Mau (Lux).....397 ft.
Mady Millicent's Visitor (Ambrosio).....407 ft.
Mr. Muddlehead's Mistake (Ambrosio).....515 ft.
The Poacher (Lion).....666 ft.
Good Cigars (Lion).....335 ft.
The Five Divorces (Lion).....446 ft.
The Bull Fight of Oran (Lion).....416 ft.
The Ancient Roman (Cines).....600 ft.
Arab Life (Cines).....308 ft.
Marriage of Yvonne (Eclair).....577 ft.
Mrs. Minta's Husband (Warwick).....300 ft.
Jackson's Last Steeple Chase (Ambrosio)....725 ft.
Carlo and the Baby (Wrench).....206 ft.
Romance of a Pierrot (Cines).....938 ft.
Eleanora (Aquila) .....515 ft.
His Wife's Troublesome Twitching (Ambrosio) .....486 ft.
Squaw's Sacrifice (Bison) .....1000 ft.
The Great Prize (Great Northern).....455 ft.
Life on Board a Traiuing Ship (Great Northern) .....540 ft.
Dan Blake's Rival (Centaur).....
Theodora (Phoenix) .....750 ft.
From Portofino to Nervi (Croce).....338 ft.
Towards Immortalidated (Lion).....600 ft.

General Electric Company

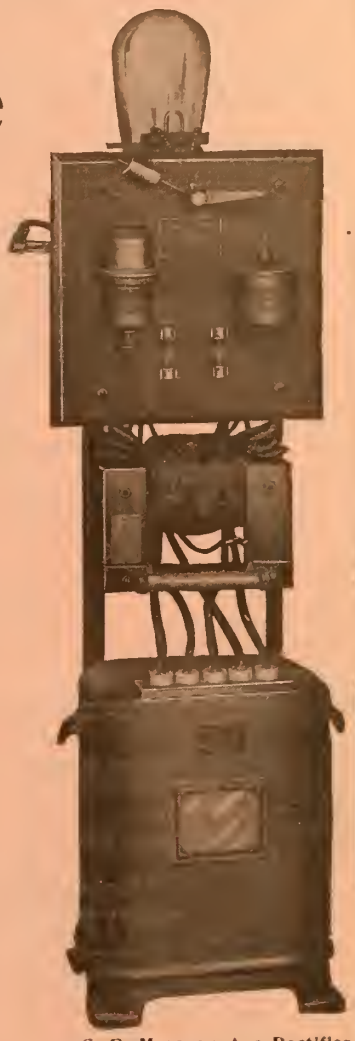
The Test of Service

—after all determines the value of electrical apparatus. Manufacturer's claims are idle words unless corroborated by statements of men in the field.

G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifiers received unqualified endorsement from moving picture men.

The Princess Theatre of New York City, in a letter dated August 21, says:

"We haved used a G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier for our moving picture machine for almost two years —having been the first, or one of the first, to use it. We have had at all times an excellent light and have saved a great deal in the cost of current. We have had no trouble with it—in fact it runs without any attention at all from us."



G. E. Mercury Arc Rectifier for Moving Picture Machines

We can show you how to improve your pictures and save money. Write today for further information.

New York Office
30 Church St.

Principal Office:
SCHENECTADY, N. Y.

Sales Offices in all large Cities

2272 ask about kosmik

economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

Gaumont AND Urban-Eclipse Films

Week Ending October 3rd — Licensed by the M. P. P. Co.

Released September 28

"WIFE OR CHILD"

Drama—Urban-Eclipse—Length 494 ft.

Depicts cleverly and entertainingly a country man's conflicting emotions divided in his love between his wife and child.

"BREACH OF PROMISE"

Comedy—Urban-Eclipse—Length 484 ft.

Shows how a "Near Bridegroom" decides "No Wedding Bells for him."

Released September 29

"LOVE, THE CONQUEROR"

Drama—Urban-Eclipse—Length 650 ft.

A poor girl teaches a gilded youth to respect her, and eventually to love and marry her.

Released September 29

"CHASING THE BALL"

Mystery Film—Urban-Eclipse—Length 347 ft.

A funny and altogether inexplicable subject.

Released October 2

"THE MASTERPIECE"

Drama—Gaumont—Length 857 ft.

An exquisite art subject of the Middle ages.

"PAPA'S HAT"

Comedy-Magic—Gaumont—Length 140 ft.

THE FEATURE OF THE WEEK IS

"THE MASTERPIECE"

It is a subject that will linger long in the memory.

Gaumont

Imported by

George Kleine

52 State St., CHICAGO — 19 East 21st Street, NEW YORK

ECLIPSE

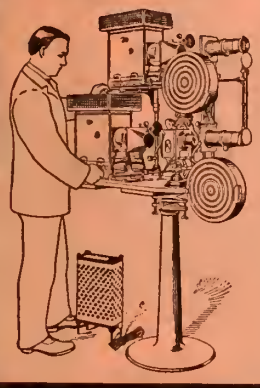
Vol. 5., No. 15. October 9, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."

F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes but none to compare with Motiograph.—PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

Calcium Gas Outfit

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light Write for Catalog to-day

Western Representatives { S Lubin, Geo. Melies FILM

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

Eagle Film Exchange

We handle the most up-to-date European goods, also the following makes:—Great Northern, New York Motion and the Centaur

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY :: :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

CALL Phone 1806 Stuyvesant WRITE WIRE PHONE 21 East 14th St. NEW YORK

GREAT EASTERN FILM COMPANY,

HIGH GRADE INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

No Rainy, Scratched Film No Repeaters

Supplies of All Kinds Pertaining to the Moving Picture Trade

Send for Price List

We are doing a larger business than ever. There must be a reason. Find that reason.

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 5

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year

POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current

POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current

POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK

57 varieties and not a pickle
in the whole lot!

I want every exhibitor to let this sink deep into his mind for the most serious consideration. Listen: Independence and freedom are not the only things you get when you deal with me. you get the pick of fifty-seven (count 'em, 57) varieties of independent manufacturers of film, as against only ten when you deal with the film trust. You get the very best goods, and you get them on time, every time. Only the Laemmle Film Service has the facilties to give you such a tremendous selection.

HERE ARE THE 57

from which I select my stock of films:

Italian Cines	Deutsche Mutoscope		Centaur Film Co. American
Williamson	Deutsche Bioscope Gesellschaft		Crescent Film Co., "
Great Northern Film Co.	Berliner Film Bourse		Lumiere-Pathe Co., France
Lux	Heinrich Ernemann, A. G.		Warwick Trading Co., England
Eclair	Fritz Gilies		Comerio, Italy
Walturdaw Co.	International		Anglo-American, England
London Cinematograph Co.	Precision Film Co.		W. Butcher & Sons, England
Ambrosio	Kineto		Aquila. Italy
Rossi	Safety Bioscope Co.		Italia, Italy
Hepworth	Kamm Co.		Pineschi, Italy
Cricks & Martin	"IMP" Films	American	Germania. Germany
R. W. Paul	New York M. P. Co.	"	Messter, Germany
Graphic Cinematograph	Phoenix Film Co.	"	Welt-Kinematograph, Germany
Sheffield	Chicago Film Co.	"	Stella, France
Walter Tyler	Columbia Film Co.	"	Raleigh & Roberts, France
British Colonial	Western Multiscope Co.	"	Lion, France
Wrench	U. S. Film Mfg. Co.	"	Hispato. Spain
Alfred Duskes	World Film Mfg. Co.	"	Robert Drankoff. St. Petersburg, Russia
Internationale Kinematografen	Penn Moving Picture	"	Clarendon Film Co.

TOTAL 57

Think of it! And as against this, the trust exchanges are tied down hand and foot to the ten manufacturers banded together to make you eat out of their hands. It's an argument you cannot dodge. Exhibitors are rapidly realizing it and my business is increasing in a more sensational manner than ever. Come! Get in!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

196-198 LAKE STREET, CHICAGO 111 EAST 14th STREET, NEW YORK

PORTLAND, Ore. MINNEAPOLIS, Minn. EVANSVILLE, Ind.

OMAHA, Neb. SALT LAKE CITY, Utah. MONTREAL, Can.

I AM THE BIGGEST AND BEST FILM RENTER IN THE WHOLE WORLD

We Make All Kinds of

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT AND ADVERTISEMENT SLIDES

Ladies Popularity and Baby Contest Slides, plain 50c. Colored 75c.

All accessories and plan for carrying out all contests furnished Write for Our List and Prices

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles

NEW PROCESS FILM TITLE COMPANY

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

FOR TWO YEARS THE STANDARD "CURTAINYLINE"

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $3.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock.

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

CURTAINYLINE CURTAIN AND PRODUCING COMPANY, Inc.

Room 405 Northwestern Building, 22 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

WHY—The Motiograph is the Best Motion Picture Machine

Because the Pictures are More Brilliant. The special patented Shutter is so arranged that it saves a lot of illumination otherwise lost.
Because Flicker is eliminated by the new patented Shutter.
Because the Pictures are Rock Steady when using a good film, and are restful to the eyes of your patrons. The result is because of accurate workmanship and excellence of design.
Because it has patented quick Rewind (one and one-half minutes) connected to main crank handle. No other similar.
Because it has the only perfect Fire-proof Shutter, automatic and absolutely reliable.
Because it has Enclosed Spiral Gears. They work smooth and wear longer.
Because it has a Perfect Take Up. Easy on the film and always reliable.
Because it has inclosed Framing Device. Wears longer, is quickly removed and patented.
Because it has "Wide Open" Lamp House, convenient for changing carbons, adjustment, etc.
Because it is absolutely Fireproof.
Because it has Double the Wearing Qualities possessed by other Machines.
Because it is almost Noiseless; runs more quiet than any other.
Because it has Heavy Pedestal Base, adjustable and patented.
Because it has more than 40 other points of special merit. Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco approved.

SEE WHAT USERS SAY:

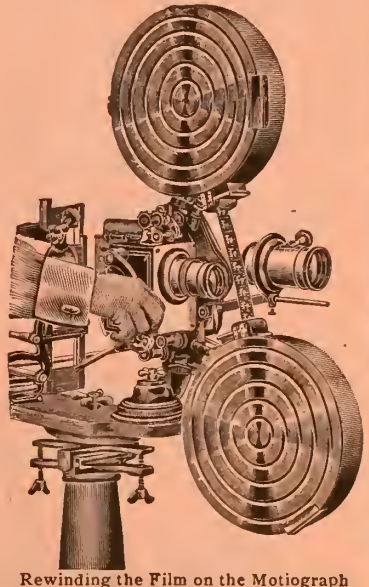
ON MARCH 28TH, F. L. F., CHICAGO, ILL., SAYS:
"I purchased my Motiograph Machine latter part of August, and have not spent one penny for repairs since. To say that I am pleased can hardly express it."
D. F. E., DENVER, COLO., FEBRUARY 1ST, SAYS:
"I have not sold a Motiograph to anyone who is not delighted with it."
O. T., GREAT FALLS, MONT., JUNE 7TH, SAYS:
"It's running fine, and we get the picture and the 'Biz.' We cannot say enough for the Stereo Motiograph. A snap for any operator."
M. F. F., OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., MAY 18TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph is the talk of the town."
E. T. S. CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA., JUNE 2ND, SAYS:
"Machine at the Grand Opera House is a dandy, and is daily making Motiograph converts."
P. & K., ST. ANTHONY, IDAHO, APRIL 16TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph projects the best picture in the country. We show a much better picture than our competitors."

Hundreds of Others Say Similar Things

OUR CATALOG will tell you lots of interesting things about Motion Picture Machines. Write for it To-day

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

564-572 West Randolph Street - - - Chicago, Ill.



Rewinding the Film on the Motiograph

Do You Notice

How I Put The Word Economizer In Small Type? — You Notice That The Word

HALLBERG

stands out strong and solid. There's a reason. Ever since I put the first Automatic Electric Economizer on the market, there have been so many thingamabobs dubbed "Economizer" that I wanted to save the unwary from getting something they didn't think they were. Wherever there is a moving picture theatre or a film exchange the word "HALLBERG" means merit, honest value and efficiency.

READ THIS

(Extracts from letters written by Jas. A. McCurry, owner Gem Theatre, Rocky Ford, Colo. Note the dates)

August 4 1908

"Now in regard to the "Economizer," I will wait this month and see how a CHEAPER CURRENT Saver does, which I have on trial."

November 11, 1908

I am tired of trying NO GOOD Current Savers. Ship me yours by freight at once. I am willing to pay your price for it. NOTHING IN THESE CHEAP ONES.

Now the simplest thing to do is to write Mr. McCurry. Ask him if the "HALLBERG" isn't the one real and only vital machine on the market. I carry a full line of 4000 c p. Flaming Arc Lamps—Buzz and Exhaust Fans—Spot Lights and my stock of "ELECTRA" Pink Label Carbons is complete. I also handle the best Moving Picture Machines and any style of Electric Signs. Get my prices, they are interesting.

Write for FREE Booklet No. 4-W

J. H. HALLBERG, 28 Greenwich Ave., New York

Hundreds of Exhibitors are making money with

Our Baby Show Contest Plan

Why not you?

We'll furnish you with full particulars free

We handle a complete line of contest supplies

Baby Slides made from photo or negative, including our perfect system of numbering and artistic coloring

50 Cents Each

Also Baby Show Announcements, tickets, posters and everything necessary to make your contest a success

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY

221 East 53d St. NEW YORK CITY

SOUTHERN RENTERS

NOW THAT WE ARE buying only from Licensed makers, we are in position to serve you both courteously and well :: :: We can place a few first run renters and guarantee all others protection. We make no promises, but instead we protect you with contracts. Handling only the output of Biograph, Pathe, Vitagraph, Selig, etc. Can't you ask about it. :: :: ::

S. Nye Bass Film Exchange

823 UNION STREET :: NEW ORLEANS, LA.

A Symbol

To express power, strength, might, main, position, dominion, men have ever resorted to the Symbol—The crown, the sceptre, the mace, the shield and its variations.

A Symbol may tell an exhaustive tale

OUR SYMBOL IS THE PREMIER FILM SERVICE LABEL

It tells the story of many years spent in LEADING the UPWARD trend of distributing a distinctive Film Service for particular exhibitors.

It is a Symbol which expresses a method of business conduct, broad and liberal; a standard of Film productions higher than ninety and nine have dared accept and a disposition to do the right thing at the right time, and give every man a square deal.

Such then is the basis upon which is founded the power, strength, might, main, position and dominion of our PREMIER FILM SERVICE.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.

Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio.

PATHÉ FRÈRES FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

ALL TOPNOTCHERS

Story of a Banknote

An Interesting Drama

October 4 Length 981 Feet

Sister Angelica

An Impressive Little Legend, Beautifully Colored

October 8 Length 705 Feet

The Pathe Professional Machine

is giving excellent results wherever it is used. If you have a first-class house, and want to give a clear, steady picture, why not install the best machine on the market? Price, $225.00

For sale at all FILM exchanges in the United States

NEW YORK
41 W. 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken,
136 Eddy Street - - San Francisco, Cal.

Quality Always--Selig's Record Show Them "Nef Ced"

THE GREATEST MELODRAMA EVER PRODUCED

The Drunkard's Fate

RELEASED SEPTEMBER 30, 1909

Code Word, Fate Length, 930 Feet

COMING, OCTOBER 7

Wheels of Justice

A Thrilling Drama

Code Word, Wheels Length 950 Feet

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

SPECIAL VITAGRAPH PICTURES OF
Hudson=Fulton Celebration

GRAND NAVAL PARADE Saturday September 25th. Showing the launching of the "Claremont," and the World's greatest assemblage of American and Foreign Naval vessels as escort to the "Half Moon" and "Claremont." Length, 700 feet.

HISTORIC PARADE Tuesday September 28th. Magnificent views of the procession with its floats and moving tableaux representing the principal events in American history. Length

MILITARY PARADE Thursday September 30th. An elaborate reproduction of the great military display of men of the U. S. Army and Navy, the National Guard, Naval Militia and delegations from the Foreign warships. Length

---

EXTRA Special Vitagraph Pictures of Commander F. A. Peary, the famous Arctic Explorer, taken at his home, Eagle's Nest. Length 300 feet.

All of the above READY for delivery MONDAY, OCTOBER 4

PRICE, 9 CENTS PER FOOT

Tuesday. October 5th. BETTY'S CHOICE. A charming love story daintly told amid picturesque scenes. Length, 642 feet.

Tuesday, October 5th. NEVER EAT GREEN APPLES. A comedy film no manager can afford to ignore. Length, 290 feet.

Friday, October 9th. FOR HER SAKE. An unusually interesting film. Introducing a most sensational picture of a sinking ship. Length, 995 feet.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company, 125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative, 913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 OCTOBER 9, 1909 No. 15

Editorial.

Plenty of Independent Film Assured.

Within the past week a deal was closed which should bring cheer to those who use or who desire an independent film service. Mr. Raleigh, of the firm of Raleigh & Robert, Paris, has signed an agreement with the Film Import and Trading Company, of this city, whereby they will become the American representatives for almost all European film manufacturers, Raleigh & Robert being the sales agents for these concerns in Europe The list includes all the foreign manufacturers of repute except those who already have their own agents in this country.

The importance to the independent exchange and exhibitor lies in the fact that this deal places at their disposal an immediate supply of new subjects, unlimited in quantity and superior in quality, with the assurance of a steady supply.

The Demand Will Govern the Supply.

We have interviewed Mr. Raleigh and the Flim Import and Trading Company and cannot but admire the business-like footing on which their plans have been drawn and foresee the advantages that the exchange and exhibitor will derive. Sample prints will not be sent to this country, but the Film Import and Trading Company will maintain a representative in Europe who is thoroughly posted as to the class of films that is suitable for the American market, and who is also well posted as to what subjects have already been shown here. Repeats will therefore be avoided. Exchanges will be required to place a standing order three weeks in advance for the number of reels they need and any increase will also require three weeks' notice, as no surplus will be imported. All film will be sold at a uniform price in this country, with terms alike to every one.

Duping Will Be Abolished.

Most important is the arrangement of release dates, which will be simultaneous on both continents, thus circumventing the duper in his nimble practices. Also all film will have the imprint of the Film Import and Trading Company along the edges. Possibly duplicate stray prints will find their way to this country, but naturally long after the release date, and therefore the legitimate exchange will not suffer in competition. It will be seen that the foreign manufacturer also will profit by the arrangement, as the duping of his product will become unprofitable, therefore it is presumed that he will only seek to do business through the one channel.

How the Quality Will Be Upheld.

The American representative who selects the films will see that a suitable division of comedy and drama comes in each shipment, therefore the worry of the exchange will be lessened. The foreign manufacturers have agreed not to offer any rejected subjects to any other American importer, under the same title, and with the maker's trademark thereon. Should these subjects come into the country through other channels any exchange purchasing them will be liable to having their legitimate supply cut off on three weeks' notice.

These are only a few of the details connected with a new system of handling the great European output which appealed to us as a step in the right direction. The system, if carried out on these lines, will give strength to the independent cause and give an impetus to the moving picture business as a whole.

A Lost Opportunity.

On Saturday morning, September the 25th, we started to count the number of cameras visible between the Battery and 129th street, which, with 110th street, seemed to be two principal focal points of the naval parade in honor of the Huson-Fulton Celebrations. But we soon gave up the attempt, because those cameras were so numerous. Only one observation seems called for and that is that it was a good day for the film makers, for the snap shot brigade were extremely busy and were blessed with beautiful photographic weather.

From the moving picture viewpoint, the parade was not the success that it might have easily been made, though there is no doubt a great many interesting pictures were taken. In the first place the principal objects, that is, the warships of the various nations, were stationary, so that the possibilities of getting some extremely fine effects were not open to the maker of moving picture films. What we think that the majority of the people had in mind was some such arrangement as this: that the "Half Moon" and the "Clermont" would be escorted up the river by the warships of all nations, when there would have been a chance of securing a panorama of these mighty vessels in motion. As it was the parade itself seemed largely to consist of pleasure craft, small motor boats and the like in which the two little ships of honor were so mixed up that they failed to stand out with the distinctness expected.

We think, therefore, that the authorities who had this part of the buisness in hand missed a great opportunity. Of course there may have been great difficulties in handling such a huge moving flotilla. We only write from the point of view of picturesqueness of effect. Of course, it is too much to expect that functions of this nature can always be arranged to suit the needs of photographers. On the other hand, a photographer, and especially a moving picture photographer, is in a sense a servant of the public, and his business is to give people at a distance who are unable to be present at these celebrations an idea of how the thing looks.

On the present occasion, as the newspapers show, camera men were busy in making stationary photographs of the miles of water pageant, but we think that when the moving pictures that were taken come to be shown on the screen, the lucky spectator will be much better pleased at seeing the great warships, as it were, moving in the parade. It is doubtful if the New York public will have such another opportunity of seeing so many warships from other nations in the Hudson River again, and it is, we repeat, a pity that they were not seen in motion on Saturday, the 25th of September. Perhaps when any similar celebration is being organized the powers that be will profit by the Hudson-Fulton failure and give the moving picture maker the chance that he and the public look for. Had we been present on the organizing committee of the celebration, be sure that warships in motion would have been one of the things that we would have stipulated for.

Essanay Enterprise.

The successful establishment of a British agency for the Essanay films is a fact upon which the enterprising house which trades under this name is to be congratulated. Essanay films, as we have repeatedly pointed out in these columns, are singularly clear and clean in their humor; they have caught the taste of the American public and they have also met with like reception amongst a public—the British public—which seems by some curious perversion of reputation, or shall we call it misapprehension, to be said to have no great perception of humor. Essanay films are therefore doubly fortunate in their opportunities and their achievements.

Now round this little group of facts in connection with American moving picture making, circles a lesson in the reward of enterprise and effort which we think worthy of specific endorsement in these pages. The Essanay Company are the junior company of the licensed manufacturers. It is barely two years since they started to make films, and yet to-day the photography and the humor of their pictures have won them a splendid reputation in two continents, a reputation which is growing and must lead to infinitely greater success than the Essanay Company is at present enjoying. All this is the outcome of perseverance and hard work.

It is not an easy thing to make good moving pictures which will stand the test of world-wide criticism, and successful comedy is the most difficult of all. Within the last year or so much capital and enterprise have been absolutely wasted in the effort by aspiring film makers who have never taken the trouble to master the principles of the work. We could name half a dozen of these firms, who, to-day, are no farther in their work than they were six months or a year ago. Some of them have gone out of business; others will meet a similar fate, if their work does not show improvement.

As we have said over and over again in these pages, the battle is one of quality. It is by the quality of their pictures that the Essanay Company in a very short time have made themselves a prominent factor in the moving picture field. Two years is really a very short time for a new firm starting at the beginning to achieve such a gratifying result. Good photographs of the stationary or moving kind are not so easily made as the unthinking and ignorant would appear to believe. As a rule the neophyte starts off with a success something like the beginner at the game of golf, who invariably astonishes himself and his friends by some extremely good strokes. Then his real trouble commences. He has to learn the alphabet of the game and to endure much tribulation before he can do that with certainty which in the beginning he did by chance. It is a way the gods have of fooling us in every department of life's gamble. We start out well, so well, that we underrate the difficulties that lurk around the corner and that have to be grappled with and surmounted before any new enterprise, no matter what it is, can be put on a safe, steadily running, businesslike basis.

Within the last few months there have been, as we have pointed out, many ambitious entrants into the moving picture field. There are at this moment so many people making pictures who are determined, in their own words, to beat Pathe and Biograph at their own game that we commend the lesson to be derived from the Essanay success to their consideration. Let them realize that Pathe, Biograph, Edison and Vitagraph, not to mention other firms, have only reached their present high standard of dramatic and photographic excellence by years of hard work. When we went to school we were all taught that there was no royal road to success and the would-be emulators of Pathe and Biograph had best make up their minds to this once and for all. In film making it is facta non verba that counts. The Essanay people have given us the facta and have not contributed much about the verba. They have done the work and got there. "Go thou and do likewise."

The Alliance.

There is a character in one of Charles Dickens' novels who occupies a sinecure position in a British Government office. He has nothing to do and he is well paid for it. Every now and again while he is idling away his time in society he announces his determination of returning to his office, "for fear somebody should do something." We conjecture that Mr. J. J. Murdock, the president of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance, who is at present in Europe, must be in much about the same frame of mind; for things are happening here which are somewhat calculated, we think, to interest him.

Then again, the Alliance, of which he is president, seems to have started out to do something. They have put on a publicity agent, who, we think, misconcieves the duties of his position; for, after glancing through the mass of matter which we received from him this week, we find it chiefly of a somewhat denunciatory character, such as the readers of moving picture literature and all sensible men have grown heartily tired of. A little emphatic outspokenness was perhaps excusable in the early days of the new condition of affairs.

Both sides, associated and Independent, said some very hard things of each other in the heat of difference and separation. But that kind of thing is not deserving of carrying on indefinitely. It is no good to anybody. Exactly, therefore, how the Independent cause is likely to be benefited by the fusillade of scurrilities which have started the official proceedings of the Alliance we fail to see. As we have said over and over again the pages of The Moving Picture World are open to any reasonable statement on behalf of the Independent side, which is always assured of our support so long as it proceeds on constitutional lines. But we will be no parties to the dissemination of vulgarities which some people seem to consider news items.

In some respects we confess to be in the same mind as Dickens' character, whom we quoted in our first paragraph, only it is not a question of fear with us, it is one of interested expectancy and sympathy. We are waiting for the Alliance to do something. When it does that something in the interests of the industry as a whole it will have all the support, advocacy and recommendation our pages can give it.

How We Vitagraphed the Hudson-Fulton Marine Celebration

Jupiter Pluvius took a holiday Saturday, September 25, and a more glorious day for the much-heralded marine pageant in connection with the Hudson-Fulton celebration could not have been desired from a photographic standpoint. Early in the morning we boarded the "Runaway," the trim and swift yacht of J. Stuart Blackton, of the Vitagraph Company of America. The "Runaway," mind you, was an official boat and carried Flag Officer G. A. White, Assistant General Manager of the Hudson River Day Line, and who was in command of the first squadron of the parade; so we could not have been better fixed for opportunity to view and photograph the procession. Besides the yacht's crew we also had on board a Vitagraph camera operator and Mrs. Blackton, who takes a keen interest in moving pictures.

THE "HALF MOON."
Replica of the boat that discovered the Hudson, presented by the Dutch Government.

A stiff breeze was blowing, raising the white-caps on the bosom of the mighty Hudson, which rose and fell as if with pardonable pride on this day of its celebration. Starting from the Day Line dock, we dashed down the bay to the Narrows at a 15-mile-an-hour clip to where the heterogeneous mass of water craft was assembling. For several hours the "Runaway" darted in and out among the vessels, separating the divisions and lining them up in some semblance of order. At last, when Commander White could no longer make himself heard through his megaphone, we retired to a quiet corner of the Brooklyn shore where we lunched and where we hailed Albert E. Smith, also of the Vitagraph Company, in his yacht, the "Ethel May." On this and the "Press Boat" were also Vitagraph camera men, which, together with four who were stationed at various vantage points on land, made no less than seven cameras which the concern had at work.

THE "ETHEL MAY."
Owned by A. E. Smith, of the Vitagraph Company.

The Dutch freighter on which the model of the "Half Moon" was brought to this country.

At 12.30 the signal to form in line was given and by 1.15 Commander White had the first division lined up and the procession started up the river, the "Runaway" darting here and there to keep the line straight, closing up gaps and regulating the speed of the various vessels. It was while Capt. White was halting the big side-wheeler Providence, of the Fall River Line, that the little "Runaway" was almost caught under the bows of the big steamer, as shown in the picture, and barely escaped the suction. The day passed without further incident than the overturning of a canoe by a police patrol and the "Runaway" standing by while we threw ropes to the struggling men and Mr. Blackton merrily turned the handle of his camera, taking in the scene. Mr. Blackton also insisted on getting close views of the saluting warships and Mrs. Blackton and we were glad when the "Runaway" left their smoke and noise behind.

The little "Runaway" was almost caught under the bow of the big steamer.

The first division of the parade having passed the finish line, and well down to where the models of the historic "Clermont" and "Half Moon" had come to blows over the rival honors of the day, Commander White's duties had ended and the "Runaway" sped to the nearest dock, where Mr. Blackton's assistant disembarked with the reels of negative film and took a train to the Vitagraph factory. The "Runaway" was then headed for the yacht's moorings and we reached the Vitagraph factory in time to meet the other six camera men who had been out on the same mission. In a few hours all the negatives had been developed and dried and projected on the screen and all turned out exceedingly well. It was after midnight when we left the factory and Messrs. Smith and Blackton were just then sitting down to select out of the thousands of feet of negative such parts as would make the best film of 600 or 700 feet and yet give a clear idea of the day's celebration. The employees of the developing room and printing room were waiting around, ready to take in hand and rush out the number of prints required for Monday morning's shipments, which was accomplished and the decks cleared for repeating the performance at the land parade on Tuesday.

THE "CLERMONT."
The first vessel to pass up the Hudson under steam.

The Vitagraph Company are famed for their speedy and satisfactory handling of topical subjects and we felt highly privileged at being allowed to watch the whole process. It is an arduous and even risky task compared with the ease of the exhibitor who gathers in the dimes for exhibiting the film or the exchange who farms it out. And if the Vitagraph or any other company confined their business to topical subjects they would soon go bankrupt, as the great expense attached, not to mention the consumption of energy, is in inverse ratio to the amount of profit derived from the sale of films of this class.

Warships saluting the "Half Moon."

THE "NORWICH."
Oldest steamer in commission on the Hudson. Built 1836.

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

CHAPTER IV.

Handling the Visitor.

The first impressions are the most durable. When we enter a moving picture house the impression formed on our minds at the threshold of the theater is the one that lasts. If we meet a polite and courteous usher, who shows us to our seats, we are disposed ab initio to take a favorable view of the entertainment. If there is not too much light in the auditorium but just light enough to enable us to distinguish surrounding objects and persons, then we are disposed to compliment the management upon its adroitness in striking the happy mean between darkness and light. For the proper lighting of a moving picture house is a problem of adjustment. You do not want total darkness; you do not want too much light. You want just enough to be able to see your way about without impairing the brilliancy of the picture.

Sometimes you are allowed to find your seat as best you may; then you run the risk of treading upon a man's corns or a lady's dress, and then are proportionately cursed. As a rule, however, it is to the credit of moving picture theater owners that they have courteous ushers and attendants. The more vigorous these latter are in excluding undesirable visitors, the better for the reputation of the house. We have more than once had to complain of the presence of people under the influence of strong waters or who go to sleep and snore, thus disturbing the enjoyment of their fellow visitors. But moving picture theaters are rising so much in popular esteem that this sort of thing is rapidly becoming a feature of the past. Many picture theater exhibitors are vying with each other in the proper care of their audiences.

Too much attention cannot be given to the cleanliness of the house; to its proper ventilation, and, then to the preservation of quiet and order amongst the audience. Again the sale of candies, with the noisy vocal accompaniments of the vendors is, we think, generally to be deprecated. Many high class moving picture theater exhibitors refuse to do this on the ground that the better kind of visitor is excluded by these cheap jack methods. Others again have objected to the lantern slide advertisements of candies which are put on the screen. Personally we object to this sort of thing, as we think it tends to lower the dignity of a moving picture theater.

The eternal feminine hat is always a source of much irritation to mere man. It is difficult to see how the admonition to the fair creatures to remove their hats can be dispensed with, for in this regard the average woman is quite a savage person. It is a matter of pure indifference to her as to how much inconvenience the person sitting behind her may be put to by the wearing of her hat. She bought it to wear; to be looked at; to be admired and envied on all and any occasion, and if she has to remove it "hell hath no fury like a woman" deprived of her pet hat.

We have sat behind rows of these things in a church, as well as in a moving picture theater, and our profanity has been too deep for vocal expression. Clergymen anathematize them; caricaturists make fun of them; men curse and criticise them. So what are we to do, except suggest that wherever possible before a woman enters a moving picture theater she must be made to understand that she must remove her hat. He will be a brave moving picture exhibitor who always successfully does this.

On general principles, therefore, we put it that the less advertising matter there is thrown on the screen, the less an audience is made to feel that the object of a moving picture theater exhibitor in getting them into his house is to extract something more than the admission money from them, the more likely that house will find public favor and continuous support. It is annoying, to say the least of it, to an average person of refinement to have a considerable part of his time taken up in reading announcement slides about ladies' hats, candies and the like. What we are insisting upon is the exclusion as far as possible of the mere huckstering element of a moving picture entertainment, and the making for everything possible in the way of orderliness, neatness, good sanitation, plenty of light, but not too much of it, courtesy on the part of the ushers and in short the general atmosphere of comfort, if not luxury, which the public at large always looks for in a place of entertainment and pleasure.

There is one little convenience which we think the public would always appreciate, and we are surprised that it is not taken up, namely the circulation amongst the audience of synopses of the stories of the films shown. Of course, these things could not be read in a dark house, but there is no reason why even in a continuous performance there should not be brief intermissions when the programme, if such we may call it, could be read by the audience. Some moving picture houses we know supply programmes, but none that we are aware of print anything about the stories of the films. This is a point we commend to the enterprising moving picture exhibitor. Anything which makes for the comfort of an audience is bound to result in a continuous patronage and the building of the family support which is one of the surest roads to success in conducting places of public entertainment.

(To be continued.)

A HUDSON-FULTON RECORD.

And this record is of an international, nay more, of an intercontinental nature. On Tuesday, September 28, the Warwick Trading Company took a series of moving pictures of the land parade in honor of the Hudson-Fulton Celebrations that passed through New York City. On Wednesday morning the president of the Warwick Trading Company, Mr. A. J. Ellis, who has been in New York City for some time, took passage for Liverpool by the Cunarder "Lusitania." Before the big vessel slipped from her pier a moving picture of the boat was made by the Warwick Trading Company. Arrangements have been made whereby these films will be projected on the screen of the Empire Palace, London's principal variety house on Monday night, October 4; that is, about little more than five clear days from the time the "Lusitania" left the Hudson. This, we believe, will constitute a record in the way of inter-continental moving picture making and exhibiting.

* * *

Mr. Ellis having departed, we will say that the impression he left behind with everyone whom he met was that he is a man of lofty ideals, clean record, great executive ability and strong personality. He is the type of man who is bound to succeed in any line, and as he has now assumed the active direction of the Warwick Trading Company we have hope of some developments. Said he in his quiet way: "I go back to London and the Warwick Trading Company will now start making pictures," with the emphasis on the last word.

That "many cooks spoil the broth" was never more verified than in the most unsatisfactory manner in which the Hudson-Fulton celebration is being conducted. The marine parade was a swindle as fas as the public was concerned who lined the banks of the river in thousands and the people who live inland and who have a chance of seeing the Vitagraph pictures of the parade will have a far more satisfactory view than if they had paid $5 for a seat in the grand stand. It does no good to find fault or criticise what cannot now be remedied, only it should be a lesson for the future and when a similar function takes place one master mind should be in control, with as few aides as possible, who will be held directly responsible for the success of their division.

Observations by Our Man About Town.

The past week has been a poor one for managers of small nickelodeons in New York. The drawing of hundreds of thousands of visitors to the city brought many dollars to the coffers of business men in certain lines that would not have passed over to their cashiers were it not for the celebration, but the moving picture exhibitors were not in the lines. I met an exhibitor on Fourteenth street one afternoon during the week and he had a tale of woe that would melt anything. I really sympathized with him, for what he said was quite within the bounds of truth in many respects. He commented on the Hudson-Fulton Celebration and why it was inaugurated and then declared that the sailing and steam vessels had shown longevity to a more striking degree than the moving picture business ever will. "Why," said he, "if Fulton had met with the amount of provoking red tape games, insidious local and State legislation and tantalizing tactics of grafters as the moving picture men have in the comparatively brief period of their existence, he probably would have put the 'Clermont' on a junk heap in short order. There is a vast difference between boats propelled by steam and moving pictures, yet there is a striking similarity and it is not out of place to say that if Fulton had to put up with what the moving picture men have, there would not be to-day a celebration such as has been held in New York the past week. What steam vessels are to the transportation world the moving pictures are to the amusement world, and the simile is not one of the sublime and ridiculous, either. One distinct difference between the two is that the political and other grafters have not been able to get upon the steam vessels that they have upon the moving picture business."

* * *

The exhibitor I refer to kept up a discourse that was quite interesting, although somewhat drawn out. He pointed out that but a few years ago the moving picture business was looked upon as a novelty and for that reason had smooth sailing without interference on the part of people who would rather collect tribute than do honest work. As soon as it became known that there was money in the store show business, then the operation of extraction of surplus revenue started, and it is still going on in spite of official and semi-official statements to the contrary. It is already rumored that the lobby of the State Legislature of New York will be a most active agency for the squeezing of the picture men when the next session convenes. It is but fair to assume that these rumors are but little pieces of ice that are slipped down the backs of the picture people to make them sit up and take notice that the squeezers are on the job.

* * *

The latest thorn in the side of the moving picture man is the enforcement of the law against admitting children under sixteen years of age to picture shows unless they are accompanied by parents or guardians. The enforcement of this law is left in the hands of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children. Its agents have been very active since the first week of September and the effects of their activity have been felt strikingly in box offices. Where children are found in nickelodeons they are gathered together by the Society's agents and conveyed to its headquarters in patrol wagons. Of course, the children are not punished, but simply held long enough to get their names and residences and put into them a fear of the law that will keep them out of the picture places when they are not accompanied by people defined by the law. The most interesting feature of the matter is that the agents can detect violations of the law in the store shows more readily than they can in the large theaters and syndicated nickelodeons. There is no use of any exhibitor playing dog in the manger nor attempting to secure immunity for an infraction of a law on the ground that larger fellows who are equally guilty are not called to account, but a complaint that there is an apparent discrimination in the enforcement of a law is at all times worthy of due consideration.

* * *

I have been informed, and believe it to be true, that the law relating to children attending picture shows has reduced the receipts of the places all the way from twenty-five dollars up on matinees. Nobody is complaining about the law. It is a perfectly proper safeguard over the rising generation, whose morals are at all times deserving of the most careful attention, but the complaints regarding discrimination in the enforcement of the law are as plentiful as weeds in an uncared-for garden.

However, the picture men will eventually weather the storm. Parents will not deprive their children of innocent pastime and the better class of nickelodeons will soon become similar to kindergartens. Parents are always favorable to places of innocent amusements for their children. They prefer having them there to having them romping and roving about the streets, or having the children spending time in places that are unknown to them. The parents will soon grasp the situation and the burden of the exhibitor will soon be lifted, at least to an extent. This will be brought about only by the efforts of the exhibitor. In the first place he must conduct his place in a manner that will make it inviting to the parents or guardians as well as the children; secondly, the exhibitor must strictly observe the law according to his best judgment and not admit children unaccompanied by parents or guardians during school hours unless he honestly convinces himself that they are not within the prohibited age. The argument that he is not the parent and has no birth certificate to guide him will not justify the exhibitor in any evasion of the law. He must exercise his best judgment on the question of age and suffer the loss of admission fees if there is a doubt. I believe that such a policy will eventually remove the strict surveillance now exercised by the people who have undertaken to enforce the law in question.

* * *

The holiday week just closing brought out the moving picture photographers in great numbers. I happened to be with the fleet of assorted vessels that participated in the naval event of last Tuesday and saw the picture-taking men on all kinds of craft and in all quarters. They were in rowboats, canal boats, ferry boats, gunboats, yachts, cruisers and battleships. They were only outnumbered by the newspaper camera men. It occurred to me that this promiscuous distribution of moving picture camera men was a waste of both time and money, and I quite agree with a film exchange manager who expressed the opinion that all concerned in the business would be better satisfied in the end if the manufacturers would get together and arrange a schedule by which the concerns would have their men work alternately in such events. These were the sentiments of the exchange men: "When more than one manufacturer enters the field and we are customers of all of them we are put in a trying position in deciding upon the concern from whom we shall purchase, especially when we know that more than one of them are competent and can deliver the goods. If moving pictures were like groceries, clothing, shoes, etc., we could take so much from each concern, but many of us can use only one copy of such pictures, and as they are not sold by sample, we are put on our mettle as to what we should do. Besides this, such an agreement between manufacturers would bring more returns to the whole. Where several of them are in the field all have the same expense and trouble with only a fraction of sales." I spoke on this line to a manufacturer and he told me the idea was all right, but not operative. Each manufacturer is reaching out for the prestige that good work on timely topical subjects carry with them, and experience has shown that it is practically impossible to get the manufacturers together on an allotment of events. One concern will figure that the events of a certain day will make the most popular subjects, and one or more others will entertain the same view, and none will relinquish the choice. It has been suggested that the manufacturers could make the allotment by a sort of lottery. When I brought this up I was told that first, lotteries are illegal; secondly, the prestige belongs to the best man, and there you are.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

CHAPTER XX.

Effect of Daylight and House Lights on the Picture.

Every particle of light, especially daylight, which strikes the curtain directly dims the brilliancy of the picture, but if the light rays be shaded from the curtain so that they do not strike it directly it is astonishing how light the room may be without causing material damage. This matter of lighting the auditorium while the picture is on involves several problems. The direct white rays must not strike the curtain, neither must they strike the eyes of the audience from the front. The best plan the writer has seen, taking everything into consideration, where the ceiling is of moderate height is to use ceiling lights for this purpose, shading the rays downward by means of a metal cone shade. Light green globes make a very pretty effect and do not seem to seriously affect the picture unless placed too close to it. They give off considerable illumination. Care should be taken that the piano lamp rays do not strike the curtain, either directly or by rays reflected from the music. It is, of course, desirable to have the auditorium as light as possible without damaging the picture. Any method which will not allow the direct light rays to strike the curtain or the eyes of the audience will serve. By "striking the eyes of the audience," I of course mean in such manner as to blind them with the glare as they look forward toward the picture. Guard these two points carefully and you will be the gainer.

Illuminating the Auditorium.

The placing of lights, aside from those to be burned during the time the picture is on, is a matter which must be governed entirely by the size, shape and height of the room and the color of the walls and decorations. As a guide in this matter it may be said that dark walls will reflect only about 20 per cent. of the light, whereas a clean, white surface reflects fully 80 per cent., with varying percentages for shades between. Added height of ceiling also operates to reduce a given light intensity. The following table give the approximate general effect produced by different numbers of sixteen candle-power lamps placed in a room of medium height with walls of medium shade:

No. Lamps per 100 sq. ft. of surface.	Approximate effect.
1.0	Dull
1.5	Medium
2.0	Good
3.0	Bright
4.0	Brilliant

In general it does not pay to be stingy with light in a theater. Between shows the auditorium should be well lighted, otherwise it is, if not depressing, at least not calculated to produce the best impression on the audience. Moreover, lack of plenty of light looks cheap and is an error from any and every point of view. In general it may be said that the bulk of the light should be on the ceiling. Placing a lot of lights around the curtain edge, unless they be ground glass globes, is a mistake. Their glare is thrown directly in the eyes of the audience, which, to say the least, is not pleasant. Taking the ordinary storeroom theater as an example, seating capacity 300, four ceiling clusters of eight 16 c. p. lamps each, with a good reflector above each cluster, will produce an excellent effect, these to be supplemented by six to eight 8 c. p. globes on either wall, designed to burn during the performance. These latter to be either colored light green or else their rays shaded downward by a proper reflector which will neither allow the direct light rays to reach the curtain or the eyes of the audience. On the floor, under the end chair of each fifth row of seats, may be placed a small globe enclosed in a small metal box one side of which is covered by wire screen. The wire screen is placed next the aisle and the aisle floor is thus lighted. The wires to these lights are carried under the floor, coming through a small hole to each lamp, the circuit being handled from the main switchboard and lighted only when the house is dark. A light enclosed in a metal box with glass front in which the word "EXIT" is blocked out, with letters in red, should be over each exit, this circuit, as has already been explained, being handled only by a switch located in the box office. One, two or all of the ceiling clusters should be arranged to be handled by a switch located in the operating room, as well as from the main switchboard. By this plan when the show is ready to start the other lights are pulled when the operator is given his cue. The operator then starts his machine and pulls the ceiling lights, thus the picture is on and the house dark at one and the same instant, producing a very nice effect. When the picture is done the operator snaps on the lights as the machine stops. Also if anything goes wrong the operator can instantly light, or at least partially light, the house.

It is best to have your lights so arranged that a part of them may be burned at a time without materially affecting light distribution as a whole, merely making the illumination less brilliant. This saves current when the janitor is cleaning up, also there may be other times when you will not need the full number of lights. The distribution of light and the location of the lamps will depend on the size and shape of the room and the decoration. Aside from what has already been said there is little to say of value. Each one must size up his house and plan his light scheme along lines which seem best for that particular case. But don't imagine because Mr. Jones has his theater lighting distributed in a certain way you have to make an exact copy. The light scheme which looks well and produces a splendid effect in Mr. Jones' house may look very bad in yours. Where there is a stage used for players it should by all means be brilliantly lighted. The writer does not know that there is any established rule setting forth a certain number of candle power per square foot of stage. He believes there is not. The following will, he thinks, serve fairly well on any stage, however: Foots—One 16 c. p. lamp to every 6 or 7 inches the full width of the proscenium opening Borders—One 16 c. p. lamp to each 7 inches, full width of stage, with one row of borders to every 4 feet of stage depth, counting from the front curtain line. The front row of borders should be hung as close to the front curtain as is practical. The number of border lights per row may be somewhat reduced where the height from floor to borders is shallow, say under 10 feet. The above stage lighting may seem excessive to some managers of small theaters, but take it from me it pays in the long run to have plenty of light on the stage. Your stage circuits should be so arranged that each alternate light of both foots and borders can be extinguished in scenes where not much light is desired. An effective, cheap border trough is made by placing the lamp sockets on the flat side of a 2 x 4 and then nailing a strip of heavy tin or sheet metal on its edge so that it will project about 7 inches, the strip of metal to run the full length of the border, of course. This trough should be hung at such angle that the lights cannot be seen from the front row of seats. Pain the inside of the trough white. This trough is cheaper and almost as good as those used in large theaters. Anyone can make them. As to scenery, there is, I believe, very little use in offering advice, but whatever set or sets you may decide upon they should be made and painted by people who make such work a business. It will be far cheaper in the long run, since such scenery not only will look far better but will last much longer. Advertisements on the front curtain, or anywhere in the house, for that matter, are in bad taste. They cheapen the whole house, just as advertising slides thrown on the curtain do. Better keep away from that game. It does not pay. The stage floor should be solidly constructed so as to avoid excessive vibration from dancing. It should have a top finish of carefully selected narrow hard maple flooring. The stage floor should be kept scrupulously clean, but very little water should be used. Wipe it up with a wet cloth, wiping dry immediately with dry cloths. The footlight valley should by all means be deep enough so that the tops of the globes cannot be seen by the audience from any part of the house. If this is impractical then flare the front edge inward a trifle over the globes. Proper dressing rooms should in all cases be provided in houses in which there will be actors. Any room where proper and ample dressing rooms cannot be had is unfit for any but a straight picture show, if it is for that. Theater managers will do well to remember that even the "twenty per" actor (?) is human and entitled to some consideration—at least to dressing room conditions which make for common decency. Theater managers provide such conditions, but the rapid growth of the cheap theater has unfortunately produced a too numerous breed of would-be managers, just as it has produced thousands of would-be operators. These men know little or nothing about the amusement business, though as a rule by the time they have been managing a small five-cent house from two to six months they feel ready and willing to offer expert advice to Klaw & Erlanger. They simply succeed in making theatrical men exceedingly tired. Many such men seem to think a 3 x 4 toilet room for a man or woman actor is a sinful waste of space. Put yourself in the actor's place, friend, and think how you would like to suffer the dressing room conditions handed out in too many nickel theaters.

(To be continued.)

THE ELEMENTS OF ACCURACY IN MOVING PICTURE MANUFACTURE.

By Arthur S. Newman.

CHAPTER VI. (Continued from page 374.)

I have spoken of the present tendency to add extra blades to the shutter of the projector. For some years past it has been usual to put a blade, generally of blue transparent material, on the shutter spindle opposite to the black obliteration shutter. I have made experiments with this form of shutter, and find that with either inaccurate films, or projectors which do not register well, an apparent improvement in the projected picture results; but with a perfect film and a perfectly registering projector the extra blade is detrimental, and a finer result is produced when the extra blade is omitted. Nevertheless, as we have to deal with things as they are, and as films good, bad, and indifferent as to steadiness, are included in nearly every performance, the average result is improved by the addition of the extra blade of transparent material. It is also probable that with the recently introduced extra opaque blade, or blades, a similar improvement takes place.

It is well here to differentiate between what is known as "flicker" and what I have been describing as unsteadiness. The two act and re-act on one another and a very vague understanding of the subject has obtained hitherto. Flicker I describe as being the effect of the shutter cutting off the light at stated periods, while unsteadiness is the want of superposition of the still parts of successive pictures.

During the first two or three years of the industry, projectors of various forms and principles were in use, but as the films of that period were of a very inaccurate description, it was difficult to say one was better than another; except in the qualities of reliability and freedom from flicker. As time went on the machines became more and more to be trusted, and the almost inevitable hitch during the performance became less to be looked for; and the shutters, which at first had 50 per cent. obliteration, were gradually reduced in size till even as small an amount as 10 per cent. was claimed by some manufacturers. Semi-opaque shutters also came in—and went out again, and a return to the opaque shutter took place; the size of the shutter also came back to about 25 per cent., in the neighborhood of which it still remains, and I think is likely so to remain; although with the constant alteration and improvement at the present time, it is dangerous to prophesy. The machine with the "dog," or "beater," movement soon carried all before it, and till recently it has been the standard machine. When films were very inaccurate the dog movement held its own easily, principally because it was so reliable, and not likely to "let down" the show. The old Maltese-cross movement, somewhat modified in design, is steadily advancing in favor, and deservedly so, because as now manufactured it will produce more accurate effects than the dog movement can ever hope to. The reason is not far to seek. Take a "beater" machine and measure the amount of film between the gate, where the picture is shown, and the registering point—i. e., the teeth of the lever-sprocket, where they engage with the film, and then deal in the same way with one of the recent Maltese-cross machins; the former amount will prove to be several times the length of the latter. Now, suppose the film to be even fairly accurate in itself, the amount of inaccuracy visible on the screen will, in the case of the "beater" machine, be several times the amount of that produced by the Maltese-cross machines; the former amount will prove to be several duced by Lumiere, also give accurate results, more or less perfect according to the amount of film between the registering point and the gate—in fact, the crux of accuracy in a projector may be said to depend principally upon the smallness of the length of film between the gate and the registering point. The adverse quality, almost inseparable from the pin machines—at least, all those at present made—is their liability to wear, owing to the comparative delicacy of their working parts. Improved manufacture, as in the case of the Maltese-cross machine, may some day make these machines as reliable as the others. When new and in perfect order this type of projector is undoubtedly the most accurate of all.

The beater machine depends for its accuracy upon the perfection of its lower sprocket, and upon its true and perfect fitting and mounting, and also upon the accuracy of the film when measured for a distance of several pictures.

The Maltese-cross machine also depends upon the accuracy of its driving-sprocket, but the accuracy of the film used in this machine is not so all important, because the measurement between the registering point and the gate is so much shorter. The adverse point is again the difficulty of insuring the accuracy in the cutting of the sprocket, and the perfect construction of the Maltese-cross. The pin-machine is easy to construct with accuracy, but, as I said before, the wear of the machine takes place very quickly, and its extreme accuracy is soon lost.

There is yet another principle for all the machines which to the present has not been used commercially; in which the inaccuracy of the perforation, should such exist, can be confined to each individual picture, instead of becoming cumulative; but, as this is not commercial, and I am writing for commercial people, it is useless to describe the principle at present. [The End.]

"HALLBERG" ECONOMIZER AND MOTIOGRAPH AT LYNCHBURG, VA.

Trent Bros., of Lynchburg, Va., who opened a new modern moving picture theater, placed their order with J. H. Hallberg ,of New York City, for a special 60 ampere "Hallberg" Economizer for alternating current and a Motiograph, 1909 model, moving picture machine. The equipment is of the highest class and from all reports is giving excellent satisfaction. The Electra pink label carbons, sold by Mr. Hallberg, are used exclusively at this theater.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

The foundation of the Alliance has been a perfect godsend to many a hard-working scribbler who cherishes the fond but delusive hope that he will make something out of it. There is, first, the philanthropic commercialist who, candidly, frankly and brazenly, asks the new Alliance for their advertising support. Next, there is the publicity gentleman who finds an opening for the dissemination of injudicious invective which looks well on paper, but hardly, in my opinion, is likely to advantage the Alliance's cause. There is nothing particularly clever or helpful in writing about bug-a-boos, as Mr. "Napoleon" Murdock (now in Europe) has probably found out by this.

* * *

Thirdly, there is the gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue. The Alliance must be like manna from Heaven to him. He is feeding on it with a hunger developed, it would appear, by a long fast. Murdock and Laemmle had long since exhausted their possibilities as themes for the Madisonian funniosities, so that the pages of the Madisonian film fulminator were becoming deadly stale, flat, and unprofitable to read. In point of fact, they were getting uncommonly dull.

* * *

For "James L." can be funny and readable, but I will be hanged if he can be original. You have to provide him with material to nibble at, just as you hand nuts to the squirrels in Central Park, near where I live. Then, like the squirrels, James L. cocks up his tail and gets interesting, even in his imitations. For instance: The World started "Notable Films of the Week." James L. imitated. The World started "Comments on Film Subjects" that deserved them. James L. imitated. The World started a series of articles about the running of moving picture theaters. James L. told his readers all about it in a column—or tried to tell them. The World comes out with the "Week's Programme at a Glance." Again James L. imitates. James L. is a champion copyist and imitator.

* * *

So that after these monotonous weeks of mechanical imitation it is quite refreshing to find that the gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue really has something original to write about. Of course it is the new Alliance, and of course he quotes, misquotes, distorts, and lays bare his own obtuseness. He carries his partisanship to such violent lengths that he lays himself open to a charge of excess of zeal by those in whose interests he writes. There are two sides to every question, however insignificant that question may be, and the gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue is hardly advantaging the cause he represents by his latest outbreak of pyrotechnical verbiage, which only illuminates one side.

* * *

But I am glad to perceive that there is one respect in which he has the common sense to line himself up with the Moving Picture World, and that is in regard to the advice given to the Independents to make good pictures, better pictures—pictures, in fact, that will sell. To the law and to the testimony: let the gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue tell his supporters in the Independent camp how to make those pictures and he will deserve well of his Independent friends. For down in Chicago the Madisonian publication poses as an "Independent" sheet, or Mr. J. S. MacQuade's business card is not to be believed. How about that, James L.?

* * *

This is the one fatal defect of all the other periodical literature devoted to the Independent cause. It is just so much vox et prœtera nihil, sound and fury, signifying nothing. The Independent publication issuing from No. 1 Madison avenue is full of advice on the subject of independence, and tells the people that they ought to make better pictures, but is quite incapable of offering them any assistance under that head. So with other sheets which have existed for a year or more on illiterate advocacy of a cause which they misrepresent and do not understand. Outside of ungrammatical squealings and barefaced scissors-and-paste concoctions, their assistance in helping the Independents to make better pictures is expressed simply and solely by the little word "nil." There is, to quote James L., a great deal of the "brass band," but nothing practical, helpful or really critical. It is all sheer denunciatory twaddle. Ask any of these gentry for a few practical hints and they are quite incompetent to give them. For what they do not know about moving picture making or moving picture selling is considerable.

* * *

There is, however, one redeeming feature in the situation, and it is this: That some of the Independent manufacturers are conscientiously trying to turn out good work, to make better pictures than they were making six or eight months ago. They have the common sense to realize that, as I said last week, the battle before them, like the battle before the associated manufacturers, is entirely one of quality. It will be remembered that seven or eight months ago Mr. Murdock started out to build factories and make pictures. It is permissible to inquire where those factories and pictures are. They are not on the American market. Perhaps they have been sold to the Filipinos. Who knows? What is wanted about the Independent situation is more work and less talk. Goodness knows there has been enough of the latter and little enough of the former. Let some of the scribblers referred to in my opening paragraph get a little closer to the practical end of matters, and then there will be some value in their lucubrations. At present their outpourings are mere gas and guff, of which, after two or three years, many on the Independent side I know are sick and tired.

* * *

The community is divisible in three classes: The "issers," the "wassers," and the "goings to be." On the Independent side there are many "wassers" and "goings to be," but not enough of "issers"—not enough of people who are doing things. The Independents suffer from lack of real workers, that is, people who are making good pictures; people who are selling them; people who are exhibiting them. Each section is represented in the new Alliance, and each section should get down and do their own business in the best possible manner. Then, as has been pointed out before, there is hope for the success of the Alliance. Never mind what other people are doing or are threatening to do, or are alleged by frothy-mouthed talkers and irrational, ill-informed scribblers to be going to do. Let the Alliance take no heed of these torrential outbursts of interested twaddle. Let the Alliance get down to business, carry out its policy, and then the Alliance will deserve the support of all those who have the welfare of the business at heart. But not every soi-disant friend of the Alliance wants the Alliance to do this. For if the Alliance really got down to the business end of matters, made good pictures, rented them and exhibited them, why, the occupation of the insincere agitator would be gone, and calamitous though this would be to me and others, the gentleman at No. 1 Madison avenue would have nothing more amusing and comical to write about. That would be a calamity indeed.

Notes of the Trade.

Winnipeg, the most progressive city in Canada, is the location of the newest branch of the world-renowned house of Gaumonts, manufacturers of moving pictures, talking and singing pictures and all supplies connected with the public exhibition and display of moving pictures, etc. The branch will tap a very large section of the continent of North America, where the moving picture, as a form of entertainment, is enormously popular. With such a large extension of territory to cover, the new branch of Gaumont, which has been organized by H. Blache, the capable New York manager, is assured of unmeasured success.

* * *

The New York Motion Picture Company have inaugurated a new style of poster which should certainly find favor with the exhibitor. It is a synopsis of the story of the film, printed in large and clear Gothic type which can easily be read by the public in the light of the street lamps. In addition to this they furnish a full sheet colored poster, lithographed in many colors, and bearing close resemblance to the actors in some important incident of the play. They want every exhibitor who shows Bison films to have one or both of these posters and exchanges are not limited as to quantity.

* * *

During his occupancy of the important position of publicity manager of Selig's ("the great moving picture house of the West"), Thomas Quill has made numerous additions to his circle of friends and well-wishers. For to a genial personality Mr. Quill adds unquestioned skill in handling the business of his department and the fine quality of loyalty to his company. All those friends, therefore, will cordially join in wishing Mr. Quill success in his latest enterprise, which dates from October 6, when he is to enter the bonds of matrimony. Mr. Quill is assured of a large volume of good wishes for his happiness and success.

* * *

Additional evidence of Vitagraph enterprise was found on Wednesday, when a special release of a short film showed Eagle Island, Maine, the home of Commander Peary. The Peary family is shown, including the several close views of the Commander himself, besieged by the reporters.

The latest addition to the Vitagraph stock company is a company of Italian actors who recently came from Rome to try their success in America with their compatriots. Those who have seen the first film for which they posed declare the work to be superior to that of any American stock company and equal to the best of the French companies. The Italian company has been retained for the season and some capital work is to be expected.

* * *

The American correspondent of the "Kinematograph and Lantern Weekly" (London, Eng.), draws on his imagination when he says that the recent Biograph success, "The Mended Lute," was written and staged by James Young Deer, a full-blooded Indian. As a matter of fact, the play was staged by the Biograph Company's own producer and was not written by Young Deer. Both Young Deer and his wife have, however, appeared in Biograph productions.

* * *

The "Independents" will no doubt be glad to know that a new exchange has appeared amongst them, thereby adding material strength to the independent field. The new exchange, known as the Peerless Film Exchange, with headquarters at 429 Sixth avenue, is going to the expense of fitting out their establishment with a supply of new reels, song slides, machines and parts. The management of the new company are old and experienced film dealers, and with their knowledge of the business should make a success of their new enterprise. They extend a cordial invitation to the trade to call on them.

* * *

The Edison Company had several cameras at work on the marine parade and issued a 700-foot film which gives a splendid idea of the spectacle.

* * *

G. Melies announces his first release for Wednesday, October 13. It is a modern war-time story, "The Stolen Wireless," and is said to be a thriller. This additional reel will give the licensed exhibitors more opportunity to vary their programs.

* * *

The Vitagraph Company of America has kept its promise in regard to fully covering the Hudson-Fulton events. The naval parade of Saturday was released on Monday, and Tuesday's parade was shown on Thursday. Both events were voted by the audiences to be better than the actual happening, since in from fifteen to twenty minutes the entire parade was seen with the dull parts eliminated. The Vitagraph has the only motion pictures of the Clermont and Half Moon moving under their own power, for one of the Vitagraph yachts was a scout boat and so was able to get the picture before the accident in the lower bay compelled a recourse to the tows.

THE CENSORSHIP IN CHICAGO.

Upon his return from New York City, where he attended the meeting of the Executive Committee of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance, Secretary William H. Swanson conferred with Sergt. Charles E. O'Donnell, who has charge of the censorship of moving pictures for the city of Chicago, relative to a plan to be followed which will avoid interference by over-zealous officials in the smaller cities. Sergt. O'Donnell has perhaps done more for the elevation of this form of entertainment than any other official in America. At the present time there are 407 picture theaters in the Windy City and no complaints have been received regarding these places of amusement during the past eleven months. Previous to the installation of this department hardly a day passed that the moving picture theater was not made the subject of attack from some direction. Ministers raised their voices against it and the daily newspapers seemed to take a delight in printing derogatory matter. A most drastic ordinance was passed and Sergt. O'Donnell was placed in charge.

It is a most fortunate thing that the man selected was broad minded and was himself familiar with the moving picture industry. He says:

"I consider the moving picture theater properly conducted, a boon to any community. It affords entertainment for young and old and my observation has been that it has had a tendency to bring together parents and children who spend the evening in the neighborhood picture house; there the father can not only entertain himself and his family with the price of a few drinks, which might otherwise be spent in the saloon, but he has the double enjoyment of being with his family. No picture should be exhibited which has a leaning towards obscenity or morbid sensationalism. I have taken a broad view of the matter in passing upon pictures, have only issued permits for those which I considered proper for women and children to witness.

"I am glad to say that I have received the hearty co-operation of manufacturers and importers and in a test recently made it was discovered that the entire city was well covered. A large number of members of philanthropic and social organizations divided the moving picture theaters of Chicago among themselves and made personal calls upon every one in one evening; only one man was discovered running a picture without a permit. The 12 attaches of this office are continually investigating and the moving picture proprietor does not know at what time an officer will drop in to see if he has a proper permit. I find very little tendency, however, toward an infraction of the law.

"Shortly after the inauguration of the Censorship Bureau I was besieged by ministers, prominent citizens and officials of surrounding towns who had been wrought up over the moving picture evil, as they term it. I took considerable trouble and time to explain to them the benefits of the moving picture theater when properly conducted, and with the hope that they would receive the benefit of the censorship proposed by the city of Chicago, as they were being furnished film by Chicago firms, they departed with a kindly feeling for moving pictures.

"Before a subject is allowed to be exhibited in Chicago it must first be submitted to the police censors. If it is passed a permit is issued for the entire picture, and if certain parts are ordered cut out, notation is made on the permit. A complete record is kept of the title of the picture, the date inspected and the action taken. Violation of the rules is punishable by confiscation of the film, fine or imprisonment.

"I am advised, however, that film exchanges will take out the piece ordered by the police censors for exhibition in Chicago and will replace it when sending same to an out-of-town exhibitor. This is a dangerous practice, for it may come back for further exhibition in Chicago and the exchange may fail to remove the objectionable part, in which case it would be liable under the law.

"Furthermore, when shown out of town it will create unfavorable criticism and may result in drastic action by the smaller municipality. In order to avoid this, I have been in consultation with Mr. Swanson and have come to the conclusion that the proper way will be for the manufacturers to submit every reel of film for approval before it is accepted. The objectionable parts will be cut out and destroyed by the Police Department; the film will then be stamped in a number of places as approved; thus each reel will carry its own certificate, and I am told this will also assist the film exchanges, avoiding the annoyance of replacing lost permits during the evening hours."

Secretary Swanson is heartily in favor of this scheme and will take up with the manufacturers the advisability of accepting Sergt. O'Donnell's suggestions and co-operate with the department in placing same in operation. This would also permit the film exchanges advertising the fact that their films have passed police censorship of Chicago and would have a beneficial effect upon the officials in outlying districts.

It is well known that the police censorship of Chicago is the most efficient of any in operation and there is no doubt that their approval of a film would be accepted as final.

CENSORS RECALL BULL FIGHT FILM.

Regarding the recent bull fight picture which was objected to by the American S. P. C. A., it is a source of gratification that the matter has been adjusted with the importers. The Board of Censorship condemned the picture in toto and the importers have agreed to hold up the picture throughout the country and to make every effort to recall copies which have been sent out.

The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

New York, September 21, 1909.

Gentlemen—Your attention is respectfully called to the "Bull Fight" film at present being exhibited at ——— and elsewhere. We are well aware that a bull fight is no more brutal than a prize fight, and that it is less dangerous to human life than a football game, but at the same time it is properly classed with the "spurious sports" which are quite foreign to the tastes of the American public, and there seems to be no occasion to cater to the depraved instinct for cruelty to animals which this so-called sport fosters in other countries.

Bull fighting, we are happy to say, has never been permitted to gain a foothold on American territory. It has been effectually stamped out in the Southwest, and the only attempt to erect a bull ring and ampitheater in New York was thwarted many years ago by this Society. We are well assured of the good work already accomplished by your Board, and are confident that it is only necessary to bring this flagrant abuse of the license permitted to amusement caterers in general to your notice to have it checked.

But while asking your co-operation in stopping such brutalizing exhibition as that now taking place at ———, the Society takes this opportunity of giving its emphatic sanction to the display of such motion pictures as may be calculated to arouse public interest in, and sympathy for, our animal friends. It is a pleasure to point, in contrast, to the film on exhibition last week at ———, entitled "Animal Motherhood," in which chickens are shown bursting from the shell, and nestled and cared for by the hen, a mother duck swimming in company with her brood, and colts and calves under the watchful eyes of mares and cows. Maternal love is the most beautiful thing in the world, and it is here exemplified in a degree hardly less touching than if the happy families represented were human.

We feel that, without in the least detracting from the pecuniary returns, these motion pictures can be made of great value in the humane education of the young. And, quite aside from sentiment, we suggest that you call the attention of the manufacturers to the striking point noted by representatives of this Society; that the bull fight film aroused the very slightest interest in an audience composed almost wholly of men, and these not of the highest type, in a place where the price of admission was five cents; while the films at the house charging fifty cents were generally admired and applauded by an audience composed in part of women and children. We assume that it must have cost much more money to produce the films which appear to afford no pleasure at all, while resulting, as we see it, in great harm.

Very truly yours,

(Signed) ALFRED WAGSTAFF, President.

NOTES FROM NATIONAL INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURE ALLIANCE.

That the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance will play a most important part in the litigation now pending and threatened in the moving picture field, is evidenced from the fact that the Alliance has already engaged counsel to undertake the defense of members of the Alliance and their customers. All parties concerned have been notified to forward to the secretary of the Alliance all papers, data and information pertaining to patent litigation. Secretary Swanson says that a tremendous mass of evidence is thus being secured which will prove of much value in the trial of the suits.

It will greatly expedite matters to have the attorneys of the Alliance try these various suits and, according to Mr. Swanson, the Alliance will force matters to an issue and secure a decision on all questions pertaining to the business. The members of the Alliance have been notified to inform their customers that the Alliance will undertake the defense of any suits which may be started. Secretary Swanson is now arranging with surety companies to secure indemnifying bonds to be given to the exhibitors.

Since the convention many new applications have been received by the N. I. M. P. A. Among those accepted are the Powers Company, of New York, which will shortly place their films upon the market; Philadelphia Projection Company, and the Scott Film Service Company, of Dallas, Tex. As the initiation fee is $250 on and after November 1, those becoming members before that time save $150.

Manager Denton, of the Columbia Theater, Memphis, Tenn., has discontinued licensed service and will secure his films in the future from the Dixie Film Company, New Orleans.

L. H. Purcell, proprietor of the Exhibit Theater, Lancaster, Ohio, has changed from licensed to Independent service and is now securing his films from the Michigan Film and Supply Company, Detroit, Mich.

The preliminary work of the Alliance has been progressing nicely. Handsomely engraved membership certificates are being prepared and will be in the hands of the members in a few days. Blank forms, in accordance with the system adopted by the Alliance, are being printed and will be forwarded to the members also.

According to Secretary Swanson of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance, affairs have moved with considerable speed and it will only be a matter of days before its effects will be strongly felt. Mr. Swanson says: "After the convention and banquet, the Executive Board went into session, meeting in Chicago and New York the entire week. The By-Laws were gone over and amended according to the resolutions passed by the convention and are now being printed. Copies will be mailed to all applicants. H. J. Streyckmans has been appointed manager of publicity and has already entered upon his duties. The work of this department will be very heavy, embracing as it does the dissemination of facts among the exhibitors and the work of handling the campaign of education through exhibitions of the Independent product. The formation of the Alliance has come at the opportune time, at the opening of the Fall season. It will result in increased orders for films. It is a fact that many film exchanges who were marking time, as it were, while looking about, will plunge once more into the game, being convinced that they are not threatened with interference. The exhibitor will also receive reliable information as to the exchange he is dealing with. A list of the Alliance members will be published for the guidance of the exhibitor. At the present time nearly every Independent manufacturer, importer and film exchange in the United States has already joined us or made application. There is no chance for the Independent cause to lose. We should have at least 35 per cent. of the business. As a matter of self protection in towns where there are, for instance, twelve theaters all running the same pictures, three or four of them will take Independent service as a business proposition and they will make more money than all their competitors.

Among the Exhibitors.

Madison, Wis.—Jay Sherwood is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A new moving picture theater is to be opened at 525 Main street. It will be known as the Vendome.

Logansport, Ind.—Harry Sipe has leased the Lyric Theater building here and will soon reopen it.

Ord, Neb.—H. W. Boyd, of Central City, has leased the Scenic Building here and will convert it into a moving picture theater.

Sullivan, Ill.—Roy Best, of Nokomis, will open a new moving picture theater here.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Colonial Amusement Company will erect a new moving picture theater at 4819 Delmar boulevard.

Macomb, Ill.—Jimmy Connors has purchased the moving picture theater of J. D. Blume and will continue the business.

Grand Rapids, Minn.—Comer & Hagen, of Duluth, have leased the old Bijou Theater here and will greatly remodel it.

Cooperstown, N. Y.—Mrs. F. H. Jarvis has sold the moving picture theater here to L. H. Spencer, proprietor of Otsego Hall.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Kent M. Austin will erect a moving picture theater at 311 Connecticut street.

Fairbury, Neb.—Benson Bros. have disposed of the Crystal Airdome to W. R. Clark.

Byron, Mich.—Louis Campbell is making arrangements to establish a moving picture theater here.

Marquette, Mich.—D. E. Rice has purchased the Bijou Moving Picture Theater, located in the Sundberg Block, from John Sairri and has taken possession.

Aurora, Ill.—George H. Mendart, of Chicago, is planning to open a moving picture theater here.

Milford, Ill.—B. R. Cleaver and Dick Watson have sold the Star Theater here to Frank Dawson and George Kievel, who intend to make extensive improvements.

ORDER TO-DAY A Package of

Silverine
TRADE MARK

CURTAIN COATING

One three dollar package will cover your curtain and give you a better, clearer and sharper picture than you ever dreamed was possible. Every package guaranteed. If your film exchange don't handle it, order from us direct.

The Perfect Curtain Paint

Manufactured by

SILVERINE CURTAIN COATING CO.

Oklahoma City Oklahoma

Comments on the Week's Films.

THE TWO BROTHERS (Essanay).

There is one respect in which this dramatic story by the Essanay Company, is a success, and that is as to the personality of the heroine. She is a very winsome girl, indeed, and when her enlarged portrait, in the course of the drama, is shown on the screen there was hardly a person in the audience, we venture to say, who did not, like ourselves, fall violently in love with her. On the regular stage it is policy to have a good-looking leading lady. It is also policy on the moving picture stage. There is one noted film house which early in the season secured the services of a very charming looking girl and excellent actress, whose praises we have repeatedly sung in this paper. She secured for herself quite a following amongst the patrons of moving picture theaters, and there is no doubt that no small part of the success of the films in which she figured was due to her exceedingly agreeable appearance.

The Essanay Company, therefore, are wise in pinning their faith to a good-looking heroine who can act, looks like a lady, wears her nice clothes with distinction, and generally imparts the quality of refinement and grace to the scenes in which she takes part. These, indeed, are the characteristics of the girl in the film entitled "The Two Brothers." The story of this picture, which in its photographic aspects pays tribute to the progress of the Essanay Company in their work, is that of two brothers, in love with a pretty girl. Of fraud and deception on the part of one, of self-sacrifice on the part of the other, and bewilderment on the part of the girl, and finally of a general clearing up in the situation in which the virtuous brother secures the love of the pretty girl, and the wicked brother is left with a pistol in his hand, as if thereby securing the only means of escape from the dilemma of perfidy in which he has placed himself. The story, it will be seen, is full of dramatic possibilities and is excellently portrayed by the Essanay actors. The palm, however, must be given to the girl who played the part of the heroine. She does her work so naturally, she looks so nice and generally behaves so well as a moving picture heroine that we hope to see this young lady's counterfeit presentment on the screen again. "Two Brothers," with its realistic office scenes, its agreeable domestic interiors, its simplicity of story and excellence of acting certainly ranks as a success for the Essanay Company, who are making rapid progress in popularity.

COHEN AT CONEY ISLAND (Vitagraph).

Though this is an old subject its astonishing good qualities and the cordial reception given to it by several moving picture audiences this week justify, we think, reference to the picture on this page. We have no hesitation in singling out "Cohen" as one of the finest pieces of comedy work put out by the Vitagraph Company. It is brimful of laughter from start to finish. Cohen's spouse and his friends have a day at Coney Island and their adventures as shown in the picture are of a side-splitting nature. They are so bewilderingly comic that they beggar description. Moreover, with all this pleasant fooling, it is so unforced and the pictures were so well taken that the film is one hardly ever likely to pall an audience. On the particular afternoon when we saw it it came as a positive relief to the entertainment, and, as we have said, was generously applauded by the audience. Then the best of it all comes last. Cohen and his spouse, after the day's doings, retire to rest. Then Cohen dreams a dream of the wonderful things that might have happened to him at Coney Island, but did not. Finally the escaped animals from Mr. Bostock's menagerie chase Cohen off the Island and are shown gathered around his bed. Poor Cohen wakes from the dreadful vision in great fright. Fortunately it was all a horrid dream, so he and his wife solace themselves with refreshment; and so, as it were, the curtain falls on as funny a piece of film making as we have seen in the whole of our experience. We think the Vitagraph Company should know how extremely popular Cohen is. It might encourage them to give us more Cohen adventures not necessarily on the Island, but in other fields where the ludicrous and the absurd afford a welcome relief to the drab monotony of daily life.

"Leather Stocking."—A Biograph rendering of James Fennimore Cooper's tale, "Leather Stocking," a free rendering, it is true, with no attempt to follow the story closely, but the favorite characters are all there and the dramatic incidents which are woven into the story are repeated with sufficient vividness to be clear to those who have read the novel. Those who have not, see a picture filled with dramatic incidents, one following close upon another, and each one leading to a development of the tale. The colonel and his two daughters, with a scout and an Indian guide, who proves to be Big Serpent, a savage who is planning to obtain revenge, and he nearly accomplishes his purpose. Leather Stocking's exploit in escaping from the stockade and making his way to the soldier's camp is sufficiently vivid to make one's blood tingle and the preparations for the burning of the unfortunate prisoners after the Indians effect an entrance to the stockade are blood-curdling. But the soldiers come and bring with them freedom. There is Uncas, too, the Mohican, who is left alone as the party, guided by Leather Stocking, leaves the stockade and goes on its way. The tale is well acted. That almost goes without saying when one is speaking of one of the Biograph's interesting Indian pictures. The photography is good and there is a sense of completeness and an impression that one sees here a truthful rendering of the life of the Indian, as nearly as a white man can do it. One enters into the spirit of the characters and becomes interested in their actions and the things they do. It might be well, therefore, to consider this rather more than an illustration of a popular novel. It might be considered a development of Indian character well worth the attention of anyone interested in the occurrences which go to make up life in the times there depicted. Dramatization of a novel in the hands of such a company as the Biograph is well worth all the attention one may give it. The work is so well done that it interprets the story better than one could do it himself by reading.

"Across the Divide."—A Western drama from Selig which develops dramatic situations and deep feeling as scene after scene appears upon the screen. The fidelity to scenery in the West, the careful illustration of character, as shown in the change of Barton, the miner, and finally of Mason, the gambler, and the homely, trustful piety of the two women who do all they can for the man who robbed their protector and pray for the repose of his soul at the close—all these are characteristic scenes which appeal to the heart and are productive of a greater comprehension of the possibilities of motion pictures to interpret character, even though no word is spoken. The details of this picture are worked out with care, and it is only in one or two instances, and those of a minor character, that one notices any slip. The entire picture, the sentiment it illustrates and the emotions it creates are all so human in their development that the characters almost speak. It is no wonder that the film wins applause at the close. It deserves the hearty plaudits of any audience. The acting is good enough to warrant it.

"He Learns the Trick of Mesmerism."—A Pathe comedy which illustrates forcibly and in a humorous manner the possibilities existing in mesmeric influence. The poor little man who has been downtrodden all his life suddenly develops hypnotic power and becomes so strong that by a mere wave of his hand he compels all around him to obey his every wish. The film is amusing because it illustrates some prominent traits in human nature and shows what might occur under certain conditions.

"Suitors' Competition."—A Pathe, illustrating how a girl chose a husband from among a number of suitors, each of whom was required to undertake some stunt to prove his worthiness. The large fellow won every physical contest, but was unable to overcome his cowardice enough to enter a burning building to rescue a dog. The little fellow who was unable to win in the physical contests rushes in, gets the dog and is declared the winner of the contest. The picture closes with his reward, which is the girl herself for a wife.

"Wife or Child."—An Urban which deals with the old stepmother problem in an interesting, though thoroughly human way. It shows clearly how a man left with a son is inveigled into promising to marry a young woman whom he has employed to care for his household. She succeeds in winning the father, but she can't win the child and the dramatic conclusion, where the father decides whether he will choose the new wife or the child, is a good closing. The photography is quite up to the Urban quality and the acting is satisfactory, but the story does not come up to the standard which the same firm has set in some of its pictures.

"Breach of Promise."—An Urban which deals with the old question of preventing a man's reaching his wedding, though in this instance the reason is an irate sweetheart of former days, who locks him in his room and leaves him.

"Onawanda."—A Vitagraph Indian story, the scene of which is laid in the region around Boston just after the time of the Pilgrims. It is a story of a friendly Indian, who, to prove that he is faithful to a friend, loses his own life in the rescue of his benefactor's children. It is perhaps a little out of the ordinary run of Indian tales in that it is more of a subtle character sketch than it is descriptive and is sufficiently interesting to hold the attention of the audience from the start to the close. It is, all things considered, one of the best of the Indian stories for this reason. The more or less spectacular rescue of the children and the development of the plot to create a feeling on the part of the preacher against the friendly Indian are all important features in the development of the story and add to its effectiveness. The staging seems to be quite satisfactory, while the action is in harmony with the subject and adds materially to the piece as a whole. The Indian is there, but he has been changed by kindness and is ready to give his life, even in the service of those who have befriended him. Technically the film is good. The photography is clear and the picture runs smooth, both important features in the enjoyment of a good drama.

"The Romance of an Umbrella."—A Vitagraph comedy which centers around an umbrella that leads a couple together. The story is nothing unusual, but the novelty of a rain scene is indeed worth considering. Here is a picture made while the rain was actually falling in the streets of New York, and the way the drops spatter as they fall on the sidewalk is convincing evidence that no trick has been worked to make this possible. The picture is notable for this achievement, though as a story it is no better than many others of the same general type of love stories.

"Love and War" (Edison).—An intensely dramatic picture, depicting too plainly for one's peace of mind the horrors of war as exemplified upon the field of Waterloo. The young couple going to the ball, the brilliant assembly in the ballroom itself, with the rich uniforms and the magnificent costumes of the ladies and the movement which makes it all the more beautiful are all interesting. Then Wellington's aides appear and quietly summon one officer after another. One can almost hear the booming of the cannon as it dawns upon the assembled company what this means. The young girl is the central figure and as one looks at the picture behind her it slowly changes and among the dead and dying in the foreground of that bloody scene is her lover. War is horrible and every motion picture that exemplifies this horror, no matter how it is done, is a messenger of peace. There cannot be too many of these, provided they tell the story in the right way, and that this picture does. The technical quality of the film is beyond criticism. It would be hard to reproduce a ball room scene better, or more clearly than this has been done, while the other pictures are equally as good in their way. The dramatic possibilities are carefully developed and the lesson is forced home almost unconsciously. The film is a good one and those engaged in its production deserve hearty commendation.

"The Winning Boat" (Kalem).—A picture which uses a boat race around which to weave an interesting story, with Grace as the heroine and two playmates of hers as rivals, with Jack the winner. The feud over Grace begins when they are children and never ceases until later in life, when she openly chooses Jack, after winning a boat race for him when he lies senseless from a blow by Ben. The dramatic moment when Grace decides to run the race is managed so nicely that it appears perfectly natural. In fact, that is about the only dramatic point of the piece. The rest is a series of incidents, fraught with human nature, but possessing little dramatic opportunity. They add to the picture and all together make a good series, but the drama is not as strong as it might be. The scene is a new one for Kalem. It is laid in a seashore village in New England, and is interesting for that reason. The technical quality is good, though no better than others of the Kalem films which have gone before. Clear photography shows beautiful scenery. It is quite in keeping with the subject and is accurate as to details. Melodramatic in character, yet it is more than ordinarily interesting and holds the audience to the end.

"Careless Tramp" (Pathe).—A comedy showing a tramp who sets a haystack on fire. There is some amusement in seeing the country fire department get to work, but they are not quick enough to save the hay. That burns before they can succeed in extinguishing the flames. Then comes a chase after the tramp, and when he is caught he is strung up to a tree, where he hangs until a woman, touched with pity, releases him.

"On the Crest of the Waves" (Gaumont).—A little domestic story which is an improvement over the usual Gaumont film of this type in that it does not end with a death. Quite the opposite, it ends with a birth, or something closely akin to it. A beautiful view of a Danish fishing village is shown. The father of a promising boy, a Danish fisherman, discovers his boy's cap on the waves as his boat is coming home. Of course, he is more or less perturbed by the occurrence, and the more so when his people are not at the landing to meet him. He does not find them at the house, either, which increases his apprehension, but as he kneels at the crucifix he sees his son, and is informed that the mother is returning from the church with a new baby which has arrived during his absence. There is little to be said about this film. The picture is a domestic scene out of a fisherman's life, admitting little opportunity for dramatic work, yet, perhaps, being of more importance to the life of the simple fisher folk it depicts than some of the strongly dramatic pictures.

"Caucasian Customs" (Pathe).—A film illustrating some of the simple and enjoyable customs of the Caucasians who turn out en masse to meet and entertain their governor general. The educational value of the film lies in the perfect photography which reproduces the details of costumes and otherwise illustrates the life of the people. There are some of their simple games and other pleasures and the customs are well represented. Any one who sees the picture will obtain a good idea of the people and the way they live.

"Aerial Elopement." (Clarendon).—A film which is certainly a novelty. Here is an elopement by aeroplane, a forecast of the future which may contain more facts than seems probable now. The escape of the bride from the detested would-be husband and the couple's flight are admirably managed, though the painted scenery where the automobile goes over the cliff is scarcely good enough to make it seem real. The picture is full of life and action, however lacking it may be in dramatic quality, but is nevertheless novel and interesting. We do not recall another film from this firm, but if they are all as good as this its output will be welcomed.

"The Magician's Love Test" (Cines).—A trick picture which is well conceived; the action is satisfactory and the tricks are well managed, but the photography and coloring are both poor. It is unfortunate that this is true. If the technical quality were satisfactory this would be a very attractive film, but the faults are so apparent that they spoil the picture in places. The movement of the figures at times is so rapid that it is tiresome to watch, but even with these faults it is interesting to look at and will please most audiences.

"Good Repentance" (Cines).—Tells a good story, the reformation of a gambler, which has many claims to dramatic power in places, but loses its effect largely because of poor photography. The staging is bad in places, too, yet in a way the excellence of the story, the reformation of a man and his restoration to his family, is sufficiently good to compensate in some degree for these defects. Make the photography clearer and the picture will be beyond just criticism.

"Jackson's Last Steeplechase" (Ambrosio).—A racing story which has good photographic quality, reasonably good acting, but must needs kill an innocent man to gratify the whim of a jealous woman. It is a racing story, and a jealous woman prevents a certain horse from winning, even at the expense of the rider's life. The pictures showing the race itself are not particularly good, but the operator did not place his camera right. In one or two instances the horse flashes by the camera so rapidly it is like only a flicker of light. Scenically the film is good, the views around the track being clear and distinct. The film has more good qualities than it has poor ones, yet it doesn't appeal very strongly to the average audience because of the unwarranted and wholly unnecessary death.

"Lucky Man" (Lux).—Represents a man fortunate enough to win an automobile in a lottery, but the trouble it causes him makes him shy of autos and he runs when a friend tries to get him into one. The photography is wretched, and the story has little point, except where the machine runs away. There it is a bit humorous.

"All For a Nickel" (Gaumont).—Evidently meant to illustrate the pigheadedness of a millionaire who lost a nickel and expended many hundred times that sum in an endeavor to find it, merely because those who saw him search for it made fun of him. To show them that he doesn't purpose to permit it to escape he hires men to do a lot of expensive stunts, and finally discovers the nickel adhering to his shoe. The action is lively, but possesses comparatively little interest.

"Fantine" (Biograph).—A film de luxe, which deals with the unfortunate Fantine in Victor Hugo's story, "Les Miserables," and is the second in the series they are producing, based upon incidents in this novel. This one deals with the unfortunate mother, who, betrayed and deserted, is forced to leave her child, Cosette, with Thenardier, who abuses her and constantly bleeds the mother for money. It also shows the arrest of Jean Valjean, who has already been seen as the galley slave, but who has risen to eminence, thanks to the good bishop's assistance and his own determination to merit the bishop's confidence. He is mayor when he is discovered, and through his desire to save another from suffering for him announces himself as Jean Valjean, the former galley slave, and is taken away by Javert, the relentless police inspector, who recalls his face. The scenes are very dramatic, following closely the text of the story and agreeing with the narrative in all essential features. It doesn't require heavy acting to make these films strongly dramatic. The story itself is dramatic, and the mere illustration of the scenes described is sufficient to attract interest and develop dramatic possibilities which do not reside in other films many times. The question of whether it is advisable to reproduce such scenes is, of course, for the companies to decide. It seems to the writer as though it would pay if not more than one in the audience understood the pictures. But there are many who understand them because they have read the story. Perhaps the showing of the pictures will lead to increased interest in this great literary masterpiece and will exert even more influence in the arousing of a desire to read the best there is in literature than any other cause could do. The film will thus have an educative value which cannot be measured. It is unnecessary to criticise a picture which so closely follows the original text and develops the situations in such an attractive and altogether satisfactory way.

"Servant's Good Joke" (Pathe).—The chief merit of this film lies in the fact that the leading character is played by one of the best comedians Pathe ever put on the screen. He will be remembered as the one who played the comedy role in "The Unskilful Skater," which was extremely funny. This picture deals with the effects of castor oil, which was introduced into a salad by a servant who was in love with her master. It is useless to describe the result. Suffice it to say that after all manner of wild actions at his engagement party the gentleman hurries home, only to receive a curt note to the effect that the engagement is broken off. The servant confesses and tells why, and wins. The suggestiveness of the picture may well be questioned, though in itself castor oil is not particularly suggestive. The picture makes the audience laugh, and there are few enough of such films, consequently, in spite of the suggestion of this one, it may be pardoned and enjoyed as something funny.

"Trained Birds" (Pathe).—A reproduction of a high class vaudeville act in which a number of trained birds perform cleverly. The photography is perfect, every detail of the act being brought out clearly. It is a remarkably good picture of its kind and will be certain to please.

"A Fair Exchange" (Biograph).—Recognizing the dramatic qualities in "Silas Marner," the Biograph Company have produced a film under the above title which is a free adaptation of the novel, but is sufficiently allied to it to retain all the interest of the story. The only change that in any way varies from the original is, the hero of the story is made a cobbler instead of a linen weaver. But this does not seem incongruous or wrong. The tale is told in quite the same way and the interest is quite as great. The film might have been entitled "The Power of the Child" and it would not have been far wrong. Perhaps no picture ever put on the screen more clearly or emphatically recognized the influence of a child in softening a hard heart. The story tells of Silas Marner, originally a charitably disposed individual, who, through unjust accusation, is made selfish and miserly. His only pleasure consists in counting his gold. And when thieves take that from him, he is almost a maniac. Then, just as he is raving the worst, a little child, whose deserted mother had died by the roadside, toddles across his threshold and falls exhausted at his feet. He takes the little one in his arms and murmurs, "This shall be my recompense," and one fancies that the exchange is more than fair. The child and its love is worth more than the gold, worth more than many times the amount of gold he had lost. The dramatic strength of the story has been recognized by everyone who has ever read it, even though it is a simple narrative; and in the film the simplicity is retained, the strength and interest being concentrated in the acting, which is in harmony with the tale. It is difficult to see where it could be improved. It is so good now that one almost feels as though the actual scenes were moving before one. It doesn't seem as though motion pictures could come so near speaking as they do in this film. The photographic quality is beyond reproach. Like all the Biograph subjects of late, the technical and dramatic qualities are alike satisfactory. One can enjoy the story the film tells, since the pictures are a pleasure to look at and deserve only commendation.

"The Conquering Hero" (Lubin).—A comedy which is based upon the opportunities for deceitfulness which are inherent in outward appearances so far as strangers are concerned. It is hard for the hero of an important athletic contest to be robbed of his clothes and his prize medal while on the way to attend a banquet at which he was to be the lion of the occasion. It is still more disturbing to be compelled to exchange clothes with the tramp and then be arrested as a vagrant. But it all ends well, consequently no harm is done. And the young man succeeds in obtaining his portion of the honors, including a bride. This might well be called "a study in clothes," inasmuch as its interest is confined to the element of human nature which is allied closely with clothes.

"True Love Never Runs Smoothly" (Edison).—A comedy which is a manifestation of the unconscious element of spooning that deserves to be shown those young couples who are oblivious of their surroundings at certain times. In this instance the career of the buggy after the country lad mischievously cuts the traces is sufficiently exciting to cause anyone but a pair of lovesick spoonies to realize the difficulties they were encountering. But after the buggy has cleared or carried away everything in its path and has gone swimming out into the lake, it is upset on a rock and cold water as a first aid to the lovesick is emphatically demonstrated. It is a funny picture, funny in its development of an unusual and lively situation. Technically it is quite satisfactory, and gets many a laugh as it proceeds.

"A Knight for a Night" (Edison).—A comedy illustrating the disadvantages, or possibly the advantages, of imbibing too freely. This particular gentleman suddenly found himself transported back through the years until he became a famous and brave knight, rescuing a lady from the hands of desperate villains who determined to carry her away. And just as he was about to receive a kiss as payment, he—woke up. That seems to be a disagreeable ending for what is otherwise a good picture. The producer should have permitted him to have that kiss. He was entitled to something for his exhibition of prowess, and surely a kiss was his by right under the circumstances. The incongruity of the picture constitutes its chief claim to comedy, and makes a comedy of a high class.

"The Tower of Nesle" (Pathe).—The reception of this film by the public fully justified the advance notice given in last week's Moving Picture World. It is, as should be, a series of moving pictures and not a moving picture record. The composition of the scenes in this film are so well thought out that every little section that goes to make up the hundreds of exposures forms a complete picture that could be painted by an artist. What we mean by composition is this: The arranging of the scenery, properties and actors in their proper relation to the picture and that each unit takes its place and forms an agreeable whole, according to the accepted principles of art. The lighting and photography in this film is an object lesson to be studied by beginners in the field. There is just one thing in the whole ensemble that did not meet our taste, and that was the heroic size of the figures in one or two scenes. Seen on a large screen such as Keith & Proctor's, the effect of figures of men and women nine and ten feet high was hardly in keeping with the exquisite taste otherwise displayed in the production.

"The Ordeal."—The second in the series dramatized by the Edison Company from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." The first one saw Jean Valjean bought for good by the bishop. This one takes up the event in his life after he has become mayor and the head of an immense factory. He has promised Fantine that he will care for Cosette, and this leads him, or it exerts an influence upon him, to reveal his true identity when an innocent man is arrested under suspicion that he is Jean Valjean, the ex-convict. The dramatic power exhibited when the struggle is going on with himself, as to whether he shall come forward and announce his identity, thus clearing an innocent man, or whether he shall allow him to suffer, is a marvelous production of the silent drama. Remembering the bishop's assertion that his soul has been bought for good, he gives himself up to the inexorable Javert, inspector of police, and submits to arrest, losing, apparently, all he has gained in twenty years of extraordinary effort. To go into details regarding this film is unnecessary. It is quite as good as the first scene and the dramatic power in some parts is even more pronounced. One requires a fair knowledge of the book to understand the pictures, but if the pictures are stimulating a desire to read the book they are performing more good than shows on the surface. No one can read the great work without being benefited, and in the same proportion no one can see the pictures without being benefited. The pictures are such faithful reproductions of the novel itself that one comes to feel acquainted with the characters and to look forward to other pictures which shall tell more of their history. The experiment of dramatizing this novel is proving successful, and it is hoped that other leading producers will undertake the same kind of work for other great stories. It will amuse and instruct, and awaken an interest in the great literary works which could be accomplished in no more direct way.

IMPORTANT NOTIC

The FILM IMPORT &

127 East Twenty-thi

Have acquired the American Agency of Messrs. Raleigh & Rob a large number of European Manufacturers of French, Italian, Germa

ADOLFO CROCE, MILAN
AMBROSIO, ITALY
AQUILA, TURIN
BUTCHER, ENGLAND
COMERIO, MILANO
DEUTSCHE, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE BIOSCOP, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE VEATASCOPE, BERLIN
DUSKES, BERLIN
ECLAIR, PARIS
GERMANIA, GERMANY
HISPANO, BARCELONA

The difficulty that has existed in the moving picture trade for several months past of obtaining an adequate supply of the best feature films of European make will now disappear, inasmuch as our weekly releases will include the best work of the European market. The release date of these films will be simultaneous both in the United States and Europe. All releases will be billed by the Film Import and Trading Company exactly to measure and charged accordingly, thus removing an abuse that has existed in the moving picture trade for some time past.

The European pictures released by the Film Import and Trading Company will not be bought on sample in New York, but will be purchased by our representative in Paris who thoroughly understands the conditions of the American market and the requirements of the great moving picture theater-going public in the way of suitable subjects.

For our own protection as well as that of our customers all foreign film released by us will bear upon one side of the sprocket holes our imprint, "The Film Import and

I, the authorized representative of the above named European makes has been duly transferred to the Film Import & Trading Company. New Y
Sept. 28, 1909.

All Exchanges should write for furt

FILM IMPORT &

127 EAST TWENTY-THIRD STREE

CE TO THE TRADE

TRADING COMPANY

rd Street, New York

rt, Paris, France, which house is the World's General Agency for loving Pictures, including the following renowned an and English brands:

ITALA, ITALY
LE LION, PARIS
LUX, PARIS
MEESTER, BERLIN
PASQUALI, TURIN
PEGLI, ITALY
PINESCHI, ROME
RALEIGH & ROBERT, PARIS
STELLA, PARIS
VESUVIO, NAPLES
WARWICK TRADING CO., ENGLAND
WELT KINEMATOGRAPH, FREIBURG

Trading Company," as soon as the printing machines can be changed to allow of it. If the exchanges will refuse all foreign film purporting to come from a manufacturer whom we represent that does not bear our imprint they will be of material help in suppressing film duping.

We shall release the first delivery of European film at the end of October; the definite date will be announced later. If necessary we shall be in a position to supply twenty reels per week, including one make of American film—the Centaur. Standing orders, three weeks in advance, should be placed with us for as many reels per week as each exchange may require. This standing order must not be subject to cancellation or variation except upon three weeks' notice to us in writing. It must be left to our discretion to regulate the supply of films without the exchanges specifying any particular make or maker.

f Moving Picture Films, hereby certify that the American Agency for the same rk.

(Signed) Charles Raleigh

OF RALEIGH & ROBERT, Paris

er particulars and information to the

'RADING COMPANY

T = = = = = = NEW YORK

"When Woman Hates."—A strongly dramatic picture from Lubin, based upon the fact that two girls loved the same man and the one unsuccessful in gaining his affections manages to destroy her former friend's happiness for a time. Eventually all is explained and happiness comes again to the discarded wife. The Lubin players are adepts at acting stories of this character and this play ranks with the ones which have gone before. The discovery of the discarded wife and the return of the man's lost reason are both dramatic scenes, well managed and impressive. Technically the picture is good, and the acting is quite in harmony with the subject. The film will maintain the reputation of the company for producing attractive pictures.

"The Legend of the Lighthouse" (Gaumont).—Here we have another exceedingly fine film, full of splendid achievement in the art of picture making. The charming photographic quality, the good taste displayed in selecting the locations, the arrangement and composition and the action all point to the striving for perfection among the leading film makers. There are little touches in this film that we recommend to the attention of American producers. Note the realism in the gruesome rifling of the bodies on the seashore by the old hag, the grouping and the handling of the villagers during the proclamation scene, the by-play of the neighbors at the bedside. Also note the splendid acting of the old woman and her son. Altogether making a fascinating if not pleasing representation of a rather unpleasant subject.

"The Sirens' Necklace."—A Vitagraph picture, illustrative of two common enough traits in many girls—coquetry and later a species of avarice. A young man's advances are repulsed because he cannot present the maid of his choice with gifts sufficiently rich to suit her esthetic taste. His singing on the shore attracts one of Neptune's daughters, who invies him to follow her to the bottom of the sea, which he does, and where he disports himself as suits his fancy. He obtains from her a gift of a string of real pearls of priceless value. When he returns to the earth above his advances are no longer repulsed. His gifts are sufficiently rich to satisfy the extravagant tastes of the avaricious beauty, and they live happily ever after. There are semi-humorous accessories which serve to keep the interest of the story fresh, but the opportunity for humor and comedy is not taken full advantage of, and in a film of this kind the comedy feature will ensure its greater popularity.

Among the Chicago Shows.

By G. P. von Harleman.

The thing of the future is the 10-cent vaudeville house, said a friend of mine to me the other day. You just watch, and in a year or two there will be no more little nickel shows. Well, you hit the truth, my friend, I said, if you emphasize the "little," but the 5-cent theater is an established institution dear to the heart of the average citizen, and you could just as well try to make a dry town of Chicago as rob the poor man of his picture show. He knows all about them—Selig's Indians and Edison dramas and Vitagraph films d'art, and Pathe's wonderful trick pictures—and he just raves about them, but first and last he loves that Biograph girl. But the bum show running old junk with rainstroms and lightning and periods of pitch dark when the operator is fixing the machine and the dingy little hall of grocery or drygoods fame is gradually fading away and big, commodious theaters, nicely furnished and nicely decorated are rapidly taking its place.

The family theater or 10-cent vaudeville house is something characteristic, I believe, of Chicago, characteristic anyway in predominance, for I never saw such a number of them anywhere else, and new ones are growing up all the time. To tell the truth about it, there is quite a general impression among the people here that the 5-cent theater eventually will be eliminated by the 10-cent vaudeville house; competition is very severe, many of the family theaters also running good motion pictures in addition to an extensive vaudeville program. The 5-cent theater tried to meet this competition by adding vaudeville on their program, but this is almost prohibitive for the small house, their seating capacity not justifying the heavy expense. Some nickel shows tried amateur nights with more or less of a success, but it seems that people soon got tired of it and the better class of patrons got disgusted with the raw and rough house always associated with such performances. The small 5-cent theater can't stand a decent vaudeville program, and more than one manager lost lots of money experimenting with additional vaudeville attractions and cheaper film service.

This was a tremendous mistake, for there is no question but that people go to a 5-cent theater to see a good picture and not bum vaudeville. Vaudeville, if an attraction, must be good; a rotten vaudeville performer is worse than a junk film and tolerated less, but if both are combined there can be but one result. Many a 5-cent theater "got wise" and cut their vaudeville altogether and concentrated their efforts on a first-class film service, and the result was very gratifying. As long as the motion picture is popular and as long as the 5-cent theater keeps a better film service than the 10-cent vaudeville house there is plenty of room for both.

I would estimate there are about fifty family theaters in Chicago, counting in the very large 5-cent theaters that run an exclusive vaudeville program, and the 20 and 30-cent houses. If we count all the 5-cent shows and 10-cent picture houses that run one or two acts of vaudeville as an additional attraction, there are at least 300, but I am making a distinction of the family theater as a house devoted to vaudeville exclusively. The family theaters are scattered all over the city, many in the suburbs and many in the residential districts.

Madison street is a street of picture houses and family theaters, almost one on every block. Saturday night is a big night on Madison street. You ought to see the crowds standing there in front of the small playhouses, patiently waiting half an hour at a time for a chance to buy a ticket.

Down at the Ashland, Palais Royal, Garfield or Kedzic family theaters there are people enough on the sidewalk to fill a small town in Missouri. The Garfield and the Kedzie are the two largest and are located in a district more densely populated than the two others.

The Garfield Theater had an exceptionally good show last Saturday night, and people fought to get in, obstructing the whole street and making a row that could be heard for blocks.

There is always a feature act with several persons producing a little sketch or once in awhile a novelty act or performing animals. The feature act is, as the name indicates, the chief attraction and the chief expense of the playhouse. A feature act cost any where from $100 up. Then there are two "teams" and two "singles," and in some of the theaters an illustrated song singer taking place of a single. The teams consist generally of a man and woman in eccentric dancing and singing stunts with a more or less clever dialogue. Two young ladies in fancy dancing and singing is another popular combination. Then there is, finally, the male team starring in fancy "buck and wing." This team sings always something like "Happy in the Sunshine and Making Lots of Noise," but the vocal presentation does not usually create an overwhelming enthusiasm on the part of the audience and is not expected even by the performers, for they always hasten to fall right in some "hot one" in the dialogue without waiting for the hurricane of applause otherwise so dear to the heart of the actor.

A very popular single is the negro or negro impersonator comedian. He must be very black in his face and make a smile like a hippopotamus and wear trousers of feminine character. When he opens his mouth you think about the New York subways, and he usually sings a little ditty entitled, "Strawberries Come and Strawberries Go, but Prunes Stay Forever." He always delivers a clever monologue, roasting us common people and especially the characteristics of ladies. Public institutions and figureheads always get their slam.

The life of the 10-cent vaudeville actor is not a dance on roses by any means. They are poorly paid and poorly treated—they claim so, anyway, in the daily press and the theatrical papers. The weekly salary of a single is $20.00 and team $40.00—that is the union scale and most of the actors belong to a well-organized union. The union now threatens a big strike if conditions are not improved, and several booking agents will be placed on the black list. The new scale is $25.00 and $50.00. Of course, this is only minimum, and I doubt very much if a first-class family theater ever pays as little for a team as $50.00.

It is really surprising what a good show some of these theaters put up once in a while. I have seen decidedly worse even in the Majestic and A. I. vaudeville house of Chicago, and many acts I wish I could have seen at the Majestic. Of course, I have seen acts that, as our friend Ryan says, are not up to the very high standard of the Palais Royal, but on an average the people certainly get their money's worth. The family theater runs three shows a day and four on Saturday, and also a two o'clock matinee Sundays. Late checks are employed to get rid of children and undesirables who would stay all day and all night if possible. As an approximate estimation, I should think the average patron stays for a show and a half, for many people do not like to leave during the course of the performance, as there is no intermission between the acts. The seating capacity of the family theater is of course considerably larger than that of the average moving picture show and ranging anywhere from 400 up to 800, or even more. Some of these theaters have quite an elaborate stage, the Garfield, for instance, being 30 x 20 x 19 feet. The scenery is very simple, as there is very seldom an act that needs special setting. All that is required for the feature act is a couple of chairs, a table, a couch and once in a while an additional rocker or a Morris chair. Acrobats and novelty act performers furnish their own outfit. The teams or the singles make their stunts, as a rule, before the advertising curtain. The orchestra consists generally of the "professor" and the trap drummer; the Garfield, Palais Royal and a few others have a four-piece equipment of piano, violin, cornet and drum. I don't want to be too severe on the gentleman with the cornet, but I sympathize with the sweet singing comedienne—a cornet makes lots of noise and is very annoying if not corresponding with the other pieces; it's bad enough if the professor gets mixed up on the "lead-sheet," but fifty times more so if the cornet and the violin are diverted from the right path. Of course you can't expect a Sousa's band in a 10-cent vaudeville house, but a crackerjack piano player and a resourceful trap drummer are far better than a six-piece orchestra of inharmonious disposition.

As I mentioned before, Madison street is a street of picture houses and family theaters. There are some very nice playhouses on Madison street and I go there quite often to see the shows, for I live in the neighborhood. The Ashland Theater is my favorite place and but a very short distance from my modest bachelor apartments. The Ashland Theater is a very elaborate theater, owned by Warner & Ottman, who also run the magnificent Gem Theater, on the South Side. The house is located at 594 Madison street and was opened on the 24th of November, 1908, at a cost of $20,000. It has a seating capacity of 430 and is handsomely decorated outside and in, the ornamental work being done by the Decorators' Supply Company of Chicago.

THE ASHLAND THEATER.

A. E. Weidner is the general manager; he doesn't say very much, not very much in comparison with one of his colleagues on the same street that likes the sound of his own voice and always takes the opportunity to make a little speech when he has to "can" some unfortunate actress lady that isn't classy enough for the high standard of his place. A. E. Weidner does things, though, and there is no question but that the Ashland Theater is one of the most popular and best conducted family theaters in Chicago. The Ashland Theater has a big, spacious stage and a stage manager with glasses, that wears a smile that won't come off (the stage manager, of course, not the glasses). That friendly smile is characteristic of that stage manager and very much appreciated by the audience, who never fail to applaud whenever it appears. That young man, Art. Leonard, certainly is "some" piano player, and Paderewski doesn't have anything on him when it comes to ragtime and when it's sad, very sad—that is, in the picture (for that's the only thing that's sad in the Ashland Theater)—well, don't misunderstand me, this is no insinuation on the film service whatever. The Ashland runs a very nice picture furnished by Geo. K. Spoor & Co., but that isn't what I was going to say. I was talking about our professor and, all jokes aside, he is a nice player and can also play some sad music. Of course, there is a drummer with a whole array of Yerkes sound effects and two ushers that try to beat the Marathon record collecting late checks and two operators that run a good picture with two machines (of course not at the same time), and two doormen, etc.—looks almost like team work, doesn't it? But the truth about it is that the Ashland Theater is very well equipped in service and has excellent facilities to handle the big crowds that pour in and out. The Ashland Theater is the only family theater I know of that uses illustrated songs, and the illustrated songs are quite a feature on the program of this playhouse. Songs are changed every day and an excellent service furnished by the Marine Song Slide Exchange. We have the best illustrated song singer in Chicago, says Manager Weidner, and I believe he is right. Of course I haven't heard all the illustrated song singers in Chicago, so I am no judge, so don't jump all over me, ladies and gentlemen, if I make such a bold statement. All I can say is that Miss Grace Reahm is very pretty, distractingly so, and has an exceptionally sweet and well modulated voice. She is the pet of the public and whatever she does, and whatever she says, and whatever she sings, she gets more applause than most of the performers. One thing I like about Grace Heahm is, she knows her songs by heart and sings in the spotlight. I don't like a singer that stands behind a screen and puts his sheet of music up to the light of the announcement sign so as to be able to read. The quality of the song will always suffer. The Ashland Theater caters to a very high class of vaudeville and gives a show as good as it's possible to give for 10 cents and allow a reasonable profit. All acts are booked through the Chicago Vaudeville Managers' Exchange, giving five acts and changing program every Monday and Thursday.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To our many patrons: We have been moving in our new building and adding new high speed automatic machinery so as to better keep up with our rapidly increasing business. We have in the last two weeks been obliged to delay some shipments, but are rushing out all orders as fast as possible. We expect to be running nicely not later than the 5th of October. This move is made to better accommodate our patrons. We put the price of tickets on an equal basis to all and come out in the open with one price to all. Thanking you all for your patience in the last two weeks and assuring you we will in a few days be ready to turn out more than double our former capacity, we are,

Respectfully,

THE CARTER PRESS.

Peabody, Mass, September 29, 1909.

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED SONG ADVERTISING ANNOUNCEMENT SPECIAL | SLIDES

Special Slides Made to Order

58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614 CHICAGO

SONG SLIDES

JUST ILLUSTRATED

You Can't Stop Me From Loving You an exceptionally pretty number with great Novelty Slides.

Strawberries

another knockout comedy number, the greatest of all huckster songs. Both composed by Thos. S. Allen of "Any Rags" fame, and published by Jos. Daly, 218 Tremont Street, Boston, Mass.

NORTH AMERICAN SLIDE CO., 143 North 8th Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SONG SLIDES

NEXT S and A FILM ISSUE

Order Quick Our Big Dramatic Subject

The Twelfth Juror

(Length Approx. 1000 feet)

A Story of Exceptional Interest

READY

Wednesday, October 13, 1909

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

MAKE IT EASY FOR THE OPERATOR

Don't waste time experimenting. Millions of feet of film are rewound daily on

The Lang Film Rewinder

Ask your competitor who has one. Send for a copy of our new Second Edition 1909-10 Catalogue, which is for your interest as well as ours.

For Sale by all the Leading Film Exchanges in the United States and Canada, including Pathe Freres and The Edison Mfg. Co.

PRICE, FIVE DOLLARS NET

Remit in Post Office or Express Money Order

MANUFACTURED BY

The Lang Manufacturing Co.

Olean, New York, U.S.A.

Latest Song Slides OUR MOTTO Accessories

BIG SALES AND SMALL PROFITS

Latest Films of European Makers. Best American Films. Artistically hand colored Hudson-Fulton Celebration Slides with Lectures.

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL COMPANY

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

214 Sixth Avenue - - - NEW YORK

We give you what we promise and a little bit more. That is why we are the fastest growing film exchange in New York. Drop us a line.

If it has this Mark It is the Best

BRAYTON SLIDES

Have an Individuality Distinctly Their Own

ADVERTISING SLIDES—NO TWO ALIKE

Made to Sell the Goods as Advertised

193 of the Most Beautiful Announcements

YOU SHOULD HAVE OUR LIST AND MONEY MAKING SCHEMES

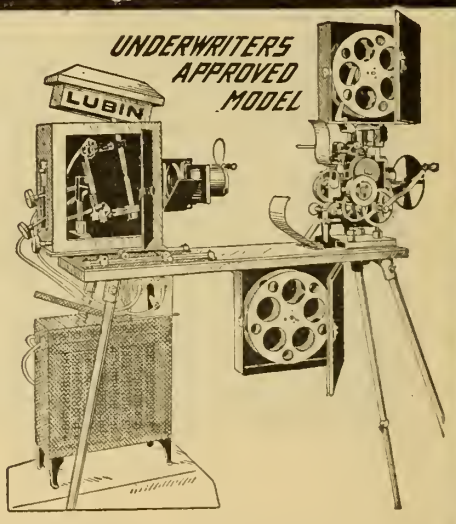
BRAYTON MANUFACTURING CO.

122 East Randolph Street : : : Chicago

LEADERS NOT TRAILERS

To insure insertion, advertising copy should reach us not later than Wednesday morning of each week.

LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL



equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

Released October 4th

Who Discovered The North Pole?

Is it Peary, is it Cook? This all absorbing question so occupies the minds of two scientists that they become crazy and are now figuring it out in a padded cell. Length, 535 Feet.

"Billiken"

It is the ever smiling face of happy "Billiken" which helps a little girl through the crisis of a severe sickness. But you will note wonders after you have seen the funny actions of "Billiken." Length, 455 Feet.

Released October 7th

A Blank Check

A young rascal takes advantage of the absence of the bookkeeper, fills out a blank-check made out to his order and casts suspicion on the innocent man Honesty, however, is victorious at last and the thief meets with his just deserts. Length, 955 Feet.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHICAGO FAMILY THEATERS.

Bookings, Week September 27—October 4.

Apollo Theater.—Manager, Robt. Levy. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Drakos Dogs, wonderful canine actors; Four Musical Mays, spectacular musical act; Clifford Dempsey & Co., presenting "Oh! You Kid"; Eva Thatcher, the Irish lady; Brooks & Green, singers and dancers.

Crystal Theater.—Manager, Frank G. Schaefer. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Pearse Mason & Peters, refined comedy singing act; Denton & Le Bouef, comedy horizontal bar performers; Lew La Mar, laughing comedian; Florence Brocee, singing and dancing soubrette; Crown Comedy Four, presenting "Dr. Dippy's Busy Day."

Columbia Theater.—Manager, W. P. Shaver. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Frederick Travallion, presenting "La Moto"; "Phroso," she, he or it, the ninth wonder of the world; Princeton & Yale, the chorus girl and the hick; Madlyn Jourue, petit singing and dancing soubrette; Davies & Cooper, comedy acrobats; Morse & De Lannoy, eccentric singing and dancing sketch.

Garfield Theater.—Manager, Fred Schaefer. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Captain L. C. Morley, 14 American Zouaves 14; Wills & Barron, eccentric comedy sketch, "Have You Seen Happy?"; Florence Pierce, comic cartoonist; Shewbrook & Berry, Lilliputian sketch artists; Ruby Marlow, character vocalist.

Hamilton Theater.—Managers, Lueders & Anderson. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Sidney Jerome & Co., in an original somewhat different comedy act; Denham Sisters, premier singers and dancers; Mlle. Dolores & Co., pantomime sketch called "Monkey Shines;" Blanch Irwin, character vocalist; Watson & Dwyer, eccentric singing and talking and dancing comedians.

Lyceum Theater.—Manager, Fred Leinnick. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Joues Williams Trio, presenting "Crushed Strawberries;" Lawreuce & Carroll, singing and talking comedians; Silent Tait & Almee, European comedy novelty sketch; Edwin Warren, eccentric monologist; Christine Hill & Co., in a comedy dramatic playlet.

Virginia Theater.—Manager, J. V. Ritchey. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Zeuo, Zeno Troupe, a circus in one act, introducing tight wire walking, foot juggling, contortion and acrobatics; John Ennor, the celebrated traveloguist, in an illustrated lecture on the North Pole; Belle & Forbes, the military comedians; Al. H. Wild, yodler and mimic; Zelma Wheeler, the real Bowery girl.

Franklin Theater.—Managers, Gisel & Beckman. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. J. Montrose McCoy, wonderful basso profundo; The Albions, boxing comedians; Scott & Wallace, eccentric comedy sketch artists; Marle Doyle, singing and dancing soubrette; Peters & Peters, comedy singers and dancers.

Premier Theater.—Manager, Chas. W. Schaefer. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. The Clares, in a pleasing comedy sketch; Evelyn Burton, high class vocalist; Chambers & Allen, colored comedy sketch artists; Eugene Sweet, eccentric comedian; Neapolitan Trio, Italian musicians and singers; Nellie Showers, character soubrette; Conley & Taylor, comedy musical artists; Harry Walters, monologist.

Ashland Theater.—Manager, A. E. Weidner. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Lottie Wilson, singing and dancing soubrette; Virginia Warblers Quartette, plantation pastime; Mort Franklin, tramp comedian; Marion Seeley, singing comedian; Dulmage, comedy bicyclist.

Grand Theater.—Manager, Duke Brahman. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Sunshine Quartette, real Southern entertainers; Harris & Elmore, singing and dancing comedians; La Belle Gleen, Cuban prima donna; Finley & Hopkins Quintette, a night on the levee; J. Louis Johnson, monologue comedian.

Gem Theater.—Manager, Chas. W. Schaefer. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Dumont & Gorman, comedy sketch; Ernie Gale, singing comedian; Summers & Horn, Dutch comedians; Miss Lillian Murry, refined character vocalist; George & Georgette, comedy sketch; Dixon & White, colored comedians.

Pekin Theater.—Manager, Robt. Mott. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. McCormick & Wallace, novelty ventriloquists; The Great McCarvey, impersonations of the fair sex; Wm. H. Van Dorn & Co., Thermos Arktos, or the Mysterious Crucible; Madge Clinton and Her Piccaninnies, comedy singer and dancers; Griffin Sisters, Southern nightingales.

Elite Theater.—Managers, Michallstetter Bros. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Abbott & Alba, comedy playlet and legal advisor; Fogg & Alger, musical comedians; Frank Walsh, singing comedian, "She Bumped Up a Little Bit;" McNally & Slavins, presenting "Going to the Wedding;" Mack Sisters, singing and dancing soubrettes.

Janet Theater.—Manager, Harry Hayman. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Dancing Dupars, celebrated wooden shoe dancers; Chief Whitehorse, celebrated Indian musician and singer; Daly Trio, Irish singing and dancing sketch; The Munsons, sensational novelty act.

Arch Theater.—Manager, Arthur Jarves. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Friedlander Bros., musical comedians; Berns & Dean, Parisian soubrettes; Sol Berns, Hebrew Impersonator; Plantation Quartette, singing comedians; Ward Baker, America's most soulful violinist.

Palais Royal Theater.—Manager, Jos. F. Ryan. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Buckley & Stocker, comedians; Chas. T. Lane, the cannonball king; Ed. Gilmore, eccentric comedian and mimic; Elmore & Ray, comedy sketch artists; Carrie Winner, champion buck dancer.

Bijou Dream Theater.—Manager, Sigmund Faller. Agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Gilmore Kinkey & Gilmore, ragtime entertainers; Hogan Sisters, pleasing singing and dancing soubrettes; Manola Family, celebrated Greek acrobats; Mamie Davis, phenomenal female baritone; Matilda & Alveria, Spanish sister act; Kid Brown, black faced banjo king; Chas. Young, singing and dancing comedian; Lillian Gary, serio-comic soubrette.

Union Theater.—L. Goodman, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Jerome & Lewis, comedy singers and talkers; Happy Bob Pell, black face comedian; Ethel May, clever male impersonator and dancer; Raleigh & Raleigh, comedy sketch artists; Derrill & Marvello, singers and dancers; Caesar, the horse with the human mind; Crosby & Crosby, clever singers, dancers and talkers; Ed. F. Silvers, eccentric comedian.

Palace Theater.—C. Cleary, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Geo. Leslie, funny black face comedian; Dot Ames, in songs and dances; Sedor Grant, Hebrew comedian; Donna Terressa, character soubrette.

Casino Theater.—Nicholas Lessaris, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Raymond & Spires, novelty comedy sketch artists; Gladys Carlton, song and dance soubrette; Chas. Nielson, eccentric musical comedian; Joe Kirby, comedian.

Oriental Theater.—Herman Johnson, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Morris Jones, black face comedian; Princess Astra, novelty snake and dove act; Arthur Higgins, eccentric comedian; Evelyn Bird, song and dance soubrette; Ed Melroy, the original human snake.

MISS GRACE RHEAM,
Soloist at Ashland Theater.

Royal Theater.—Nicholas Sampamis, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Walter Fleming, colored and comic cartoonist; Dalton & Boyle, that rube sketch team; Millson & Rose, the Dutch comedian and the soubrette; Steve Smith, eccentric comedian.

Woodlawn Theater.—T. Rosenheim, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Henderson & Sheldon, expert banjoists and singers; Estelle Mack, song and dance soubrette; Charlie Wilson, eccentric comedian.

Monogram Theater.—Mrs. Marks, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Oren Hagensheimer, clever impersonator of birds and animals; Ursula Nolan, song and dance soubrette; Crosby & Crosby, comedy sketch artists; Harry Victor, song and dance comedian; Ben Bromley, Dutch comedian.

Chicago Theater.—Mike Mayer, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Bradford & Bradford, comedy sketch team; Grace Mackay, song and dance soubrette; Goersch & Wagner, comedians; Charlie Smith, black face comedian; Mabel Goodwin, song and dance soubrette; Raymond & Raymond, novelty sketch team.

New Ashland Theater.—Hamburger & Powers, managers; Washburne & Irving, agents. Stock for a week, presenting two sketches entitled: "Wanted—A Baby" and "Kathleen Mavoureen."

Standard Theater.—Wm. Brickhaus, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Clever Fischer; Trained Dog Circus; Ella Ardell, in refined singing specialty; Charlie Connors, comedian; Welsch & Welsch, sketch artists.

Swanson's Theater.—T. Mitchell, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Rapier & Rapier, comedy sketch team; Elvina Richards, in songs and dances; Evelyn Bird, song and dance soubrette; Le Vere & Ring, clever sister team; La Tours, novelty comedy jugglers; Brott & Sams, comedy bell boy and the soubrette; Ethel Fries, soubrette.

Principal Theater.—Wm. J. Hesch, manager; Washburne & Irving, agents. Great Keigley, novelty barrel jumping; Jerome & Jerome, comedy singers, dancers and talkers; Fay Delmar, song and dance soubrette.

SLIDES
of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

Pansy The Moon Is Shining.
Someone Else
Hello, Angel Face
I'd Rather Be With You On Old Broadway.
Oh! What I Know About You?
My Southern Rose.
I'm Going To Do What I Please.
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have A Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Twilight.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

COMPENSARC

That's the device that saves Moving Picture men two-thirds on their electric light bills, and yet gives better light. Did you see our ad last week? Well, don't look it up. Just write for our

Booklet 15018

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
1402 Broadway
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA. 733

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample. FORMULA, $3.00.

H. E. HUFFINGTON
8 So. Carey Street, Baltimore, Md.

CHEAP
Steel Frame Theatre Chairs
ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs
Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.
Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.
New York Office, 44 Park Place
Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.
Western Office,
Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.

(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)

1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

$7.00 a Day

$15.00 for THREE DAYS

$30.00 A WEEK

For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction, free.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE

Mssler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York

'Phone 4267 Orchard.

Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.

CANAL DOVER, OHIO

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF!

NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!

NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.

109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

Old Films Made New

Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

Write to-day for terms

Work done promptly

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.

744 Orleans Street, Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TO MAKE MIRRORS

¶ We furnish complete instructions for making all kinds of Mirrors so simple that anyone can make a first-class Mirror as soon as they read over our copyrighted instructions. For $2.00 we send you the complete outfit. This price is good for a short time only. No machines used, all ingredients can be secured of your local druggist for a few cents.

The Butts Sign & Novelty Co.

228 Temple Court Building, Denver, Colo.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500 OPERA CHAIRS IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

For Sale

100 PLUSH OPERA CHAIRS FOR $100

Cost $7.00 each

BUFFALO FILM EXCHANGE

272 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands, Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.

ASHLAND, OHIO

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities

Stories of the Films.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

PIPPA PASSES; Or, The Song of Conscience.—The mere suggestion of portraying in motion pictures the poetic thoughts of that eminent English poet, Robert Browning, is indeed startling, and yet there never lived a writer whose dramatic force and psychological analysis was more pronounced than he, who was unquestionably among the greatest of English writers. In appreciation, the Biograph has taken for inspiration his masterpiece, "Pippa Passes." His great love for Italy induced many of his works being located there, for it was to him the clime of poetic romance. Our story opens with Pippa awakening in her little room with the morning's light pouring through the window, for the "day's at the morn; morning's at seven; the hillside's dew-pearled; the lark's on the wing; the snail's on the thorn; God's in His heaven. All's right with the world." To-day is a holiday in Asolo, the whir of the spindles of the silk mill is silenced and Pippa, the little silk-winder, saunters forth with her lute to brighten life's ordeal with song, little realizing what good she is doing. Her song of peace, "God's in His heaven. All's right with the world!" induces faith, hope and charity—faith in God's justice, hope for our welfare, and charity towards mankind. The workman goes to spend his time and earnings at the tavern, neglecting his despairing wife, with their little child, who grieve at home. In the midst of the roistering, Pippa passes, singing her song of peace. The words sink deep into the heart of the workman, and force him to return to his sorrowing wife, with a resolve never to err more. The next episode is that of the marrying of Jules to the Greek model, whom he believes an innocent young girl. Upon learning her true character, Jules would have struck her down, but at that moment Pippa passes, and her song induces him to be charitable and he resolves to save and protect her. Wending her way through the lanes, Pippa approaches the shrub house of Luca, wherein a terrible tragedy is impending. Luca sleeps and his wife, Ottima, is persuading her lover, Sibald, to dispatch him. With upraised dagger, he approaches the couch, and the dagger is about to fall, when Pippa's song is heard. What a transformation. Conscience turns their eyes into their very souls and how black the aspect—"God's in His heaven. All's right with the world!" Are we not of the world? How stand we in the sight of God? What ministering angel art thou, who with song has stayed the hand that would have done irreparable wrong? Oh, God! What would I not do to efface the sable mantle that shrouds my soul—my life, my all to Thy disposition I yield." Thus has Pippa's song averted a tragedy. Returning to her little room, she retires. "Day's turn is over, now arrives the night's." The golden sunshine fades into silver moonbeams and Pippa sleeps, innocent of the good her peregrinations have worked. In this picture the Biograph presents a most artistic subject handled in a manner never before excelled, with keen appreciation of its poetic and dramatic value; photographically perfect, and comprising many novel effects never before attempted. Length, 983 feet.

FOOLS OF FATE.—The awful result of discontent. Parcae, the trinity of Fate, is bound to hold sway, and fools we be if we become the toy of those three goddesses—Clotho, Lachesis and Atropos—for resistance is in vain when we by daring incur their opprobrium. Cloth spins the thread of life, and Lachesis designs our lots according to the laws of ethics, and woe betide him or her who seeks to diverge, for Atropos wields her bistoury, clipping the thread, and we dangle in the vortex of belligerent inclinations. Fanny is the wife of Ben Webster, a trapper, and while he is an affectionate and dutiful husband, she yearns for something which appears better than her lot. She reasons: "Have I not youth and beauty and attainments far above this environment? Why should I be compelled to toil and struggle in this wilderness." Truly, she did not know just what she yearned for, still a change of any sort would have been acceptable. Discontent is stamped upon her countenance, as Ben bids her good bye for a hunting trip in the North Woods. Webster embarks in his canoe, and sighting game, stands to fire. The light craft is overturned, throwing him into the water. Weighted down by his heavy clothing and cartridge belt, he would have drowned, had not his plight been witnessed from the shore by Ed Hilton, a Canadian hunter. Hilton leaps in and succeeds in dragging the half-drowned trapper to land, where a strong friendship springs up between the two, and as night falls they make camp and sleep under the same blanket. Next morning they part with a vow of eternal friendship. Fanny goes to the village grocery store, and by chance meets Hilton, and it is a case of love at first sight with both, each, of course, ignorant of the other's identity. A second meeting is contrived and Hilton, thinking her a single girl, suggests an elopement, to which she consents. A meeting place is planned, and Fanny is there and leaves with Hilton for his cabin. She has, however, left a note for Ben saying that she "is tired, and is going away." Poor Webster's heart nearly breaks as he reads this short, but cutting letter. Grief at first possesses him, then revenge. Taking up his gun, he starts after her. He hits a trail with the aid of a couple of villagers who had witnessed unseen the clandestine meeting of Fanny and the Canadian. Tracking them to the cabin he bursts in a few moments after their arrival. You may imagine the amazement on both sides when Ben finds Hilton is the man, and Hilton learns that Webster's wife is the woman. Hilton proves his innocence by commanding Webster to shoot; but no, Ben cannot kill the man to whom he owes his life, and so he staggers out and back to his own home. Hilton, on the other hand, drives the heartless Fanny from him. She goes out, and for a time is undecided, when she resolves to face her husband and beg his forgiveness. Night has fallen and the cabin is in darkness when she enters. Going to the next room she gets the lantern, by which light she sees her husband sitting with his head reclining on the table. She assumes it is his grief, but on touching him, his inert form falls to the floor, he has terminated his existence. The shock causes her to recoil, and so doing knocks over the lantern, extinguishing the light. There in the shaft of moonlight we leave her kneeling beside the awful result of her discontent. "Oh, thou fool!" Length, 972 feet.

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

LADDIE.—No sweeter, sadder tale of mother's love has ever been presented to the moving picture audience. Those who have read the book and cried over it will appreciate its beauty all the more when they see it on canvas, and those who have been denied the pleasure of reading the story will realize how dear a little treasure of literature they have missed.

Briefly told, it is the story of a youth who leaves his widowed mother to seek his fame and fortune in a great city. Risen to fame and affluence, he is visited by his old mother unexpectedly at a moment when he is entertaining his affianced and her father. The sudden appearance of his mother, whose quaint, old-fashioned clothes and baggage are so strikingly incongruous among such luxurious surroundings, visibly embarrasses him and he ill-conceals a feeling of shame before his guests.

His changed manner is not lost upon the poor old lady, who, although at first mystified, is finally forced to the conviction that her presence in "Laddie's" house is not welcome. Although broken-hearted at the realization, she determines that "Laddie" shall not be embarrassed by her presence and steals from the house, stopping only to tuck her shawl about him as he lies asleep on the couch and to imprint a loving farewell kiss upon his brow.

Awakened from his sleep by a police messenger, he hurries to the hospital to find that she has been the victim of a street accident and is at the point of death. Overcome with remorse and shame, his grief knows no bounds. Willingly would he sacrifice all his earthly possessions—even life itself—if she were spared to him, but in vain! She dies in his arms, a smile of supreme happiness upon her countenance as she unites his hand with that of the lovely girl who is his affianced wife. Approx. length, 1,000 feet.

THE MINISTER'S DAUGHTER.—A story of power and strength. A country minister, stern, earnest, righteous, filled with compassion for mankind, yet unforgiving when what he considers sin touches one of his own household; his daughter, tender and sweet, lured by a life she does not understand and of which she has seen only the glitter and fascination, and a village ne'er-do-well, whose kindness of heart may have its limitations, but which works where the minister's fails, are the leading characters in this touching and absorbing drama of life in a locality where the currents usually are sluggish and peaceful.

The very quiet of its environment gives a greater strength to the story—a story that is rich in contrasting types and powerful in its theme and situations.

Mary, the minister's daughter, believes she has a great voice and, lured by dreams of a successful career, she runs away to appear on the stage. Her illusions are quickly dispelled on her visit to the theatrical employment agency and she returns home, but her father has no forgiveness for her. To him the theater is a place of evil so pronounced that his child has sinned beyond redemption by her action. He turns her away. She has no home—she is too proud to turn to others for succor. Blindly she wanders about and, almost unconscious of her surroundings, falls fainting on the steps of her father's church while service is going on.

Within, the village ne'er-do-well has just embraced the church and is being made much over. He leaves, filled with a holy peace, and on the steps finds the weeping, stricken girl. To him there is but one thing to do, and he does it. He helps her in and up to the altar where he has just been received with forgiveness and kindness. The minister turns and his face sets like granite. He will not receive his child, and the drunkard casts from him the religion that he gladly embraced but a few short moments before.

It is a magnificent scene—one that terminates with the minister clasping his daughter in his arms and the drunkard resuming his faith. Approx. length, 830 feet.

EXPERT GLASS BLOWING.—The blowing of glass holds the distinction of being one of the oldest industries in the history of the world, and also one that requires the utmost skill and extreme care. Even the slightest puff of smoke or draft of air so minute that it is imperceptible to the individual will spoil articles of extreme value in the twinkling of an eye, while in the process of making. The various exhibits shown in the picture are what might be termed masterpieces of glass. Spinning glass alone requires the utmost care, as the glass is drawn to a thread as fine as that which is spun by the spider, and yet becomes so flexible that it may be woven into a modern dress of fashion. The process of making a glass smoking pipe, and the sudden explosion of the glass when a breath of air reaches it have a certain fascination that is sure to hold the attention of those who are studiously inclined. Approx. length, 170 feet.

A NEW LIFE.—As in the two previous films, this story, though complete in itself, is really another incident in the life of Victor Hugo's hero, Jean Valjean. It begins with his heroic rescue of an unfortunate sailor who has fallen and hangs suspended between sea and sky from the yardarm of a man-of-war. Jean Valjean, the convict, gets permission from the officer and, climbing the rigging, rescues the man. His feet having been set free to perform this office, he takes advantage of the fact and pretends to accidentally fall from the yardarm into the sea. Once there, he disappears from view, and the careful search of the officers and sailors results in the decision that the man has been drowned. But we see him reappear in the forest where he has before his arrest secreted clothing and funds, and we see him find the unfortunate Fantine's little daughter, Cosette. She has been sent by the brutal Thenardiers to bring water from the spring, and when the giant convict reaches down and takes the heavy pail from her hands a new chapter is opened in both her life and his own. Jean returns with her to the inn, and, after saving her from a whipping at the hands of Madam Thenardier, he offers to take the child from them. They drive a hard bargain, making him pay expenses far in advance of what has been actually incurred for the child, but he takes her with him. Regretting that they have not driven a still more advantageous bargain, the Thenardiers decide to attempt to secure more money for her release, and Thenardier himself pursues Jean and Cosette, overtaking them in the woods. Jean refuses to take back the money and relinquish the child, and, when Thenardier grows insistent, he produces the deathbed order from her mother, proving his right to the child. He does this with full knowledge of the risk he runs of being traced by the authorities, but sees no other way out of it. The result is that Tenardier and his wife make the case known to Inspector Javert, the inexorable officer who has pursued our hero throughout the story. Javert follows him to Paris, where he and Cosette have taken humble lodgings, and, after satisfying himself that Jean is really the convict he is searching for, he secures gendarmes and follows him. In attempting to escape, Jean and Cosette find themselves in a close alleyway almost surrounded by high walls, the only entrance being that through which the soldiers are coming. Jean takes advantage of the dexterity learned as a convict and succeeds in climbing an angle of the stone wall, and pulling Cosette up after him, drops over into the convent yard just in time to baffle his pursuers. Javert and the soldiers linger in this part of the town and the danger is by no means past. Jean finds, in the gardener of the convict, an old employee, whose devotion prompts him to secrete Jean from the nuns until an opportunity occurs to get him safely away. This opportunity comes through the desire of the nuns to bury one of their number beneath the altar, which is in direct disobedience of a city ordinance. To seem to comply with the ordinance they must send a coffin supposed to contain the nun to the cemetery. The faithful old employee is entrusted with this task and as a reward for its successful carrying out, is promised a position in the convent employ for his brother and his brother's little daughter. Jean Valjean is thus secure of a future for himself and Cosette. In the coffin Jean Valjean travels safely past Javert and his soldiers to the graveyard, where Cosette, who has been carried out in the old employee's basket, meets him. But the grave-digger at the cemetery insists on carrying out the duties of his office and burying the casket, and it is only through a clever ruse on the part of the faithful old servitor that the grave-digger is gotten out of the way and Jean finally released. This film contains more dramatic incidents than either of its predecessors, and the touching story of the young child's loving influence in the life of the great-hearted Jean Valjean will make a direct and moving appeal to everyone. The Edison Company is confident that this film, which is splendidly interpreted by its stock company, will prove a distinct and brilliant advance over the other extracts from "Les Miserables," which have formed the plot of preceding pictures. Length, 1,000 feet.

HANSEL AND GRETEL.—Every grown-up, to say nothing of the children, has read and loved the quaint Fairy Tales of Grimm. They have possessed reality for thousands and thousands of us and led us to believe that they might come true and that such things did really happen. And now comes the magic art, photography, which cannot lie because it can reproduce only those things that really take place; and we have positive proof that our belief in fairy stories has all the time been well founded, for here is one which has been photographed as the events took place. There can be no doubting after this. We are transported back to the little Dutch cottage in the woods and see

"Dr. Cook and the North Pole"
"Hudson-Fulton Celebration"
"Shackelton and South Pole"

Beautifully colored slides, historically correct. With lecture on slides, at $5.00 PER SET

EXCELSIOR SLIDE CO.
A. L. HARSTN, Mgr.
138 E. 14th St., NEW YORK, N. Y.

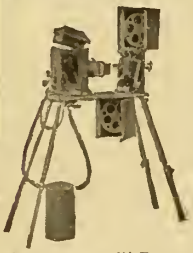
If Hudson or Fulton Were Only Alive

As my Film Service is—Why would the box office receipts increase as they do?

Answer—By taking service from

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 East 23d Street
NEW YORK CITY
Long Distance Phone 1512 Gramercy

RENT 2 REELS, $6



A week, three changes; 10 000 Roll Tickets, 90c; Condensers, 50c; 50 Electric Carbons, $1.15, Electric Lamps, $2 00; Announcements Slides, 15c; Prepared Glass for writing or drawing, 10c; Stereopcons, $12 00; Portable Booth $10.00. Free Catalogue of everything in the business.

$157 75 or will Rent for $5 a week.

L. HEIZ, 302 E. 23d St., New York

CALEHUFF
A Member of the
FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION
Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk.
MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.
LATEST SONG SLIDES
$5.00 per set
N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

START RIGHT WITH
THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

and you're in the business to stay. The people want to go night after night, but their eyes can't stand it if the pictures are blurred and shaky.

For clear, steady pictures the Edison is the one machine you can depend on to bring back the same crowd every night—the home and family crowd. That's the kind of patronage that will put your business on its feet.

Write to-day for full particulars, booklet and a copy of the "Edison Kinetogram."

EDISON FILMS
Releases of October 5th and 8th

RELEASED OCTOBER 5

LADDIE

The popular story dramatized. A country lad leaves his widowed mother to seek his fortune in the city. Manhood finds him rich and famous. The unexpected visit of his aged mother visibly embarrasses him before his wealthy friends. Heartbroken, the poor old lady steals out of "Laddie's" house, is injured on the street and dies in his arms in the hospital. A most pathetic story, superbly acted.

No. 6525 Code, VERTELLING Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 8

THE MINISTER'S DAUGHTER

Dramatic. A minister's daughter, infatuated by the stage, runs away from home. Her illusions dispelled, she returns, but is repulsed by her father. She falls fainting on the steps of the church, is found by the village ne'er-do-well and brought to the altar, where he convinces the minister of the error of his course.

No. 6526 Code, VERTELLO Approx. Length, 830 feet

EXPERT GLASS BLOWING

Industrial. The process of glass blowing and spinning cleverly illustrated. Interesting and instructive. Photographically excellent.

No. 6527 Code, VERTELSEL Approx. Length, 170 feet

Releases of October 12th and 15th

RELEASED OCTOBER 12

A NEW LIFE—Dramatic

No. 6528 Code, VERTEMENT Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 15

HANSEL AND GRETEL—A Fairy Tale

No. 6529 Code, VERTEMOS Approx. Length, 630 feet

WHITLER'S WITLESS WANDERINGS—Comedy

No. 6530 Code, VERTENCIA Approx. Length, 330 feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.
MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.

New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents
P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.
Dealers in All Principal Cities

To insure insertion, advertising copy should reach us not later than Wednesday morning of each week.

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER
"Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special coudensors, carbons and lugs.
109 East 12th Street, New York

Feature Films for Traveling Show
For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.
ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT
The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.
PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE
14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

GET A FLYING START

SOARING HIGH ABOVE ALL OTHERS!

In guaranteeing a certain aged service and delivering promptly when promised, entitles this firm to the distinction of giving

"The Best Service in America"

AMERICAN FILM SERVICE, Temporary Headquarters: 120 E. Randolph St., Chicago

little Hansel and Gretel and their parents; and we feel their hunger and are glad when their father starts out with the load of brooms, which they have just finished, to make some sales; and when we see the borrowed milk, which is to relieve their hunger until he returns, spilled on the floor and the children driven to the woods after berries, we know that fairies cannot be very far away and that something is going to happen. Soon we see the children wandering in the woods and beginning to be frightened as it grows late and strange, uncanny faces laugh at them from behind tree trunks and the rocks. We see them meet the sandman, who puts them to sleep and laughingly goes on his way, and then we are privileged to be the only ones who see what happens while they sleep. Suddenly the woods beyond them grow light with strange radiance and shining angels with their harps look down upon them and guard their slumbers; and when the night is done and the dawn approaches, we are the only ones who see the troops of fairies that discover them and awaken them with bells of flower cups and trumpets from the honeysuckle. But this is not all, for even though the day has dawned they are not out of danger. Soon we see the terrible old witch, who has finally found them, casting her spell over them and driving them, all unconscious of her presence, through the forest. We see her suddenly stop and hold up her hands and the marvelous house of gingerbread and frosting appear out of the thin air and take shape before them! We see her put Hansel in a cage to be fattened that she may eat him later on, and then we see—but why tell the rest? Of course, the witch meets her deserts and everything ends happily both for Hansel and Gretel, and for the gingerbread children whom they bring back to life out of the witch's spell. The illusive and imaginative quality of the fairy tale has been fully preserved in this Edison production, and those who have read the story, or who have heard the opera, will find new interest in it and enjoy the original and logical denouement which comes as a surprise at the end. The photography of the film is beautiful. Length, 630 feet.

WHITLER'S WITLESS WANDERINGS.—Absent-minded men have always been a source of amusement to their acquaintances and annoyance to their families. Whitler was a pronounced type of these poor unfortunates and also a bookworm of the worst kind. One day, while reading a book entitled "Flying Machines, Past and Present," his wife asked him to accompany her for a walk. Almost the first thing he did in his preoccupation was to put the book and umbrella in the baby carriage and tuck the baby under his arm. They had not gone very far when his wife desired to enter one of the greenhouses in the botanical gardens and left Whitler outside to mind the baby. Whitler didn't remain seated very long, but was soon on his way, still interested in his book—in fact, he was so absorbed that he didn't realize when he lost the baby carriage and caught hold of the street cleaner's cart. Neither did he come to when he dropped that for a lawn mower, with which he almost denuded a stylish lady of her dress; nor when he was run down and over by a sight-seeing automobile. His miraculous escape from death left no impression on him, although it almost gave the mounted "cop" heart failure; he continued on his way, immersed in the story of the flying machine, little dreaming that he would soon experience the sensation of a flight himself. Up a steep mountainside he climbs, his eyes glued to the pages of the book—out upon a huge projecting cliff he walks, and off into space, his umbrella luckily acting as a parachute until it collapses, and then Whitler blazes a new trail down the side of the mountain. Reaching the bottom with a terrific bump, he wakes up—and finds himself sprawling on the sidewalk outside of the botanical gardens, his irate spouse lecturing him soundly for having fallen asleep at his post of duty. Of course, it was only a dream, but so startling that it cured him of absent-mindedness; and what his dream did for him this most amusing picture by the Edison Company will do for all absent-minded men who see it.

ESSANAY MFG. CO.

A BIRTHDAY AFFAIR.—The celebration of Smith's birthday is to be an event. Mrs. Smith, with social aspirations, plans big things and taxes her ever-patient husband to the extent of his bank account. The final achievement of the silver candelabra, which, from its prominent berth in a house-furnisher's window had dazzled Mrs. Smith's eyes for months, now called for many other rare and costly furnishings, for would not a thirty-dollar candelabra look out of place set on cheap and mended linen, and who would care to arouse the curiosity of the guests with expensive table linen over a rickety dining table. It is finally decided to employ two liveried servants, a French chef, et al., until Smith finally expresses the wish that he had never been born. But, then, Mrs. Smith has social aspirations. The invitations are written and ready to mail. Mrs. Gotrox, Mrs. Richley and others have been invited, and Mrs. Smith's fluttering heart is carried high on the hopes of social ascension. Smith starts out to mail the invitations, but, while en route, meets an old college pal, and—well, one drink called for another, and the invitations are forgotten. The day arrives, drags painfully towards the hour. Smith hurries home from work and begins an elaborate toilet. After some painful wrestling with the rented dress suit, Smith stands before his mirror to admire the immaculate effect. He turns to an old coat dropped carelessly on the floor, when lo! the invitations which he had forgotten to mail drop from his pocket and on the floor. A tragedy is averted by the appearance of Mrs. Smith in the new gown, and Smith barely succeeds in stowing the accusing missives in his pocket. He makes an excuse to leave the house for a moment and runs out into the street. He gets an idea and hurries to a messenger station. From there he dispatches regrets from all the guests and hurries home. He arrives there during the invasion of messenger boys, each bearing regrets from the invited guests. Mrs. Smith wilts as she opens each one and drops into a chair on reading the final one, a picture of hopeless despair. Smith now seeks to redeem himself. He blusters and storms about, and finally hits on a scheme. The viands shall not be wasted. He'll invite the neighbors. A hurried canvas of the neighborhood, in which the local butcher, a policeman, a hungry tramp and others are ushered into service, brings the desired result. All finally gather around the table, and though Mrs. Smith's social star burns dimly, there is some satisfaction, of course, in dazzling her neighbors.

THE MAGIC MELODY.—Angelo Petrosina Jones, violinist, composer, etc., is inspired to write his masterpiece. In his garret above Hans Schwartz's delicatessen store, he fingers his beloved instrument, nibbling at Herr Schwartz's cheese, moving dreamily in andantes, adagios, and con dolores. Angelo Petrosina Jones, tiring of his vain efforts to win his Muse, drops on his cot and goes to sleep. He has a dream. A melody, alluring and sweet, steals into his ears. From the fragmentary harmonies he builds his famous Magic Melody. So masterful is the composition that in playing it he finds that he cannot resist the desire to waltz rythmically with his music, so he waltzes himself out of the room and down the stairs into Herr Schwartz's delicatessen store. Herr Schwartz and family, caught by the enchantment in the music, all waltz out of the place after the Pied Piper and down the street. During the journey they pick up a number of pedestrians, who all waltz off to possible doom under the charm of the irresistible melody. A staid, sober, dapple-gray horse, hitched to an express wagon, forgets his lowly calling, under the music's charm, and joins the procession. A clumsy elephant, the grand finale of a circus parade, breaks away from his keeper to waltz merrily at the rear of the music-charmed throng. The climax is eventually reached when a wooden Indian in front of a cigar store descends from his pedestal and waltzes off under the spell of the magic melody. Angelo P. Jones awakens with a start, stares about him, then drops on his cot again in despair as he realizes it was merely a dream. Vainly he strives to summon again the motive of the master melody. A pounding on the door banishes completely the last remnants of the composition. He crawls hurriedly under the bed. It is Herr Schwartz coming again to collect his rent.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine)

THE PILL BOX.—A police officer purchases a box of pills from an apothecary's shop, but on his way homeward he accidentally drops it from his pocket.

Two vagabonds, passing soon after, find the globules in the box and with it comes an inspiration telling them the best method of using their find to advantage. They do not know what the pills are intended for, but decide to exploit them as a cure for toothache. One of them disguises as a physician, while the other acts the part of a laborer suffering greatly from a painful tooth. The latter makes his way first to an inn, where, seating himself among a group of patrons, he affects to be struggling intensely to overcome the tortures of the aching member. When, by his groans and sighs, he has attracted the attention of all the customers in the cafe, the supposed physician saunters in, presents the sufferer with one of his pills which cures immediately, and sells one to each person in the group for the small charge of one dollar. He assures them it is a preventative as well as a cure.

Considering the fact that they are ever in danger from the dread affliction, they all hasten to swallow their tablets. Then the real trouble commences, for the pills were, of course, not for toothache, while the effect really is to give each a bad attack of cramps.

During the turmoil the two impostors have managed to get away. They make themselves comfortable in the shade of a grove near the town.

The police, being informed of the imposture, follow the guilty ones to their resting place. Here, without awakening them, the officers give each a number of the pills. After they have suffered the pangs of their victims they are placed under arrest.

BREAKING THE BANK.—Showing in wonderfully clear photography the amusing incidents in the life of a toy bank which the owner attempts to open.

He tries first to open it with tools. Result—His neighbors raise serious objection.

He throws it from windows at various heights, doing much damage to many things, but not affecting the bank.

He drops it from the top of the Eiffel Tower, only managing to injure a bystander.

He finally uses dynamite with the unexpected result that he is arrested on a charge of anarchy and has great trouble in obtaining his release.

A WEDDING PARTY IN LUNA PARK.—Many costumes, gorgeous billboards, shouting youngsters, merry crowds, hosts of joy devices—these form the settings for this picture.

The wedding party try all the devices warranted to thrill and amuse, while the audience enjoy all the pleasures from the standpoint of onlookers.

The film will be a wonder to people who never have opportunity to see the big playgrounds which are so common to dwellers in the large centers.

The dance hall, the moving staircase, the shoot-the-chutes, the infernal wheel, the laughing gallery, the toboggan slide are all visited and fun runs high.

Further, the film has interest as a travelogue for the Luna Park is of Paris and the concessions differ from ours in America, while some "machines of joy" are shown which are entirely unfamiliar to us.

THE SLEUTH AND THE WIG.—Opening in the home of a police officer. After he has said his morning farewells his wife removes her wig pre-

Kalem Films

Issue of October 8th, 1909

THE HAND ORGAN MAN

LENGTH 910 FEET

A delightful picture of every day city life, having for its hero one of childhood's joys, the hand organ man, showing how he repaid the kindness of a little girl by saving her from a gang of Italians. The hero is not played by an actor made up for the part, but is a real organ man with his monkey from the city streets.

Free Descriptive Lecture to all applicants.

Kalem Posters in Four Colors are Supplied by the A. B. C. Co., Cleveland, O.

KALEM CO., Inc.
EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.
235-239 W. 23d St., New York City
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

SONG SLIDES
$3.50 THE SET

The New Slides for the New Songs

Fraidy Cat.
Stop Your Teasing.
'Neath The Arbor Vita Tree.
Mary Brown.
When The Robin Sings Again.
Let Me Prove My Love To You.

A new song added weekly. Send for special standing order proposition.

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

FOR SALE

Moving Picture Theatre, unusual opportunity. Reasonable terms, owner going south. Address,

T. LINHURST
221 Clarkson Avenue Brooklyn, N. Y.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED OCTOBER 4, 1909.

PIPPA PASSES
Or, The Song of Conscience

In this picture the Biograph presents a most artistic subject, handled in a manner never excelled, with keen appreciation of its poetic and dramatic value; photographically perfect, and comprising many novel effects. While there has been no attempt to follow literally the story, a decided stress is brought to bear upon the psychological importance of Pippa's song, which really typifies conscience and peace. Several beautiful episodes are introduced and the staging, costuming and acting is of the highest order, making it a production the subject deserves.

LENGTH, 983 FEET.

RELEASED OCTOBER 7, 1909.

FOOLS OF FATE
THE AWFUL RESULT OF DISCONTENT.

A life story showing how foolish it is to rebel against the designs of Fate. A young woman, tired of her lot, elopes with a man, who is himself innocent of any wrong, only to find in him the person to whom her husband owes his life, he having previously saved him from drowning. The husband follows his wife and her unknown companion, and is amazed to find the unwitting wrecker of his home the man to whom he has sworn eternal friendship. This is the basis of a story most intense in its movement, working up to a climax that is as unique as it is thrilling.

LENGTH, 972 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK
GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

A NEW WAY TO PAINT SIGNS
WITH THE BUTTS SIGN WRITING OUTFITS

Anyone can paint all kind of signs and show cards in half the time required by the old way and much better. We furnish these Special Outfits complete with ten alphabets and three sets of figures of the most modern styles of the day, from 2 to 12 inches in height, not printed alphabets but the real letter, cut out of the most durable material. We also furnish with this outfit a complete book of instructions for painting all kinds of signs and cards and a selection of beautiful designs, and guarantee that anyone can do perfect lettering as soon as he receives the outfit.

Special Price For a Short Time Only $5.00. Send in your order to-day.
None sent C. O. D. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money refunded.

THE BUTTS SIGN & NOVELTY CO., 228 Temple Court Bldg DENVER, COLORADO

laratory to dressing for her regular daily trip to market.

As she leaves the room for a moment the family dog steals the wig for a plaything and gets entirely out of sight before her return.

On her return she is disappointed to find her wig has been stolen. She forthwith makes her way to a wiggery to purchase a new one.

Meantime the dog has tired of his plaything and left it beside the road.

Two policemen find the mangled wig and forthwith decide there has been a murder. They follow all prescribed methods in search for a clue, and finding an Apache asleep upon a park bench they arrest him.

Arrived at the station the Apache shows the commissioner an address in the wig at which it will doubtless be possible to find the owner.

The address is that of the maker and the commissioner goes directly to the shop where the owner has preceded him in her desire to obtain a new head covering.

She accuses the police commissioner of the robbery and drives him back to headquarters where she orders her husband, who is on duty, to arrest him. The poor husband is about to do so when the irate wife decides he is the cause of the trouble for owning the dog and thereupon chastises him.

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

YACHTING OFF COWES.—Fine weather and a good breeze favored this unusually interesting marine contest, of which we were fortunate in securing a brilliant kinematographic reproduction at close quarters.

With jackyarders aloft over full mainsails the twelve competing vessels cut smartly through the water, passing and repassing each other, at times heeling almost completely over, thrilling scenes and grand water effects being presented.

Meteor IV. and White Heather secure the lead, the latter ultimately beating the German Emperor's yacht by fourteen minutes.

GAMBLING PASSION.—A strong story, depicting the evils of the game.

Tracing in artistic sequence the effects of the craving for excitement upon the home life of a refined man.

The home is finally despoiled by the gambler, while his wife and little son seek refuge in a forest hut, miles from their former city dwelling.

Fortune again favors him and after huge winnings he returns and finds them gone. Flowers dropped by the youngster as he and his mother ride along the highway, lead the now thoroughly reformed father to the little family where reconciliation is effected.

KALEM MFG. CO.

THE HAND ORGAN MAN.—The band organ man. What happy recollections of childhood's joyful days the name brings back. Strange, mysterious being, this hand organ man of our childhood. We never knew whence he came or where he went. On some bright Spring day we would hear the distant sound of his organ and would rush to the gate. Yes, there he was, 'way down the street, a crowd of happy youngsters about him. Into the house we would rush to beg a penny from mother and then watch with eager, impatient eyes his slow progress up the street until finally our cup of childish joy was full when he reached our door and setting down his organ began to play, while the quaint little monkey of which we were secretly afraid climbed over the fence and doffing his little red soldier hat held it out for our penny. Soon, all too soon, the music would cease; the monkey would climb up on the organ, and all would disappear around the corner and out of our sight forever.

Scene I.—Pietro Leaving Home. Here is the hero of our picture, Pietro, the hand organ man, a sturdy son of sunny Italy, and with him are his two inseparable companions, the organ and Franco the monkey.

Scene II.—Pietro Playing.

Scene III.—Banker Guffantti's Home. Pietro's wanderings lead him up into the northern section of the city, where the more pretentious homes of the wealthy class are located. He stops before the residence of Mr. Guffantti, a wealthy fellow-countryman of his, who has amassed a comfortable fortune as a private banker. At the sight of Franco the maid calls Bettina, the banker's little daughter, to come. Bettina rushes down the steps and is soon clapping her hands in delight at Franco's antics. Now she gives him a coin, which Franco receives gravely. Meanwhile Banker Guffantti and his wife have come down the steps and stand enjoying Bettina's pleasure. Guffantti questions Pietro in his native tongue and finding him straightforward and agreeable, draws his wallet from his pocket and hands Bettina a dollar bill to give the monkey. Bettina holds it out to Franco, who seizes it eagerly and delivers it to his master. After many effusive thanks in liquid Italian, Pietro and Franco move on, little Bettina watching them out of sight.

Scene IV.—Pietro Shows Little Bettina's Gift—The Plot. It is now late in the afternoon. Back to the Italian quarters come Pietro and Franco, tired from their long day's tramp. The men ask him what luck he has had. He shows them the dollar bill little Bettina has given him and tells of the beautiful little girl in the fine house where the man had a whole wallet full of money. The men glance cunningly at each other and question Pietro about the house and little girl.

Scene V.—The Threatening Letter.

Scene VI.—Vieto Sees the Detectives.

Scene VII.—Little Bettina Is Taken. Arriving at the Guffantti home, Vieto first steals cautiously around the corner of the house. On his arm is the large basket containing a few bananas. He goes to the back door and knocks. When the maid opens the door he offers his bananas for sale. The maid refuses to buy, but Vieto insists the mistress has asked him to bring them. The maid calls the mistress. Meanwhile the other two men have crept up near the open door. No sooner do the mistress and little Bettina step out than the leader seizes little Bettina, places her in the basket and rushes away. Vieto and the other man grab the mistress and the maid, place their hands over their mouths to prevent their screaming and force them into the house. The door is closed and securely tied with a piece of rope, then away they hasten to join their leader. He has rushed back through the grounds and along the steep bank overlooking the Hudson. Now he stops to cover little Bettina more securely. The other two catch up with him, and all three hurry back towards the Italian quarters.

Scene VIII.—Pietro Recognizes Bettina. Back at the Italian quarters all is quiet. One of the women is washing; another busy carrying wood. Suddenly Vieto leaps down the wall at the back and calling the women around tells them of the taking of Bettina. At first the women refuse to help hide her, but on being assured by Vieto that they will receive plenty of money they consent. Now Vieto calls the other two with the basket containing Bettina. The basket is opened and poor, frightened Bettina taken out. While all are crowded around looking at her, Pietro enters. He sees the crowd and comes forward to find out what the trouble is. What is this? The little girl that was so kind to him and that gave him the dollar bill, in the hands of this rough gang. He must help her. But how?

Scene IX.—Pietro Informs the Parents.

Scene X.—Bettina Rescued. Meanwhile, back at the Italian quarter they are busy removing all Bettina's nice clothes and putting on some old rags, the better to disguise her. Vieto holds up a gold locket and bracelet they have taken from her. He also suggests cutting her hair. That will disguise her more, and besides the long hair will sell for money. While all are intent on Bettina, at the back appears Pietro. He beckons on the detectives. In a moment they are upon the unsuspecting Italians. A desperate struggle ensues. Vieto seizes little Bettina and attempts to escape into the house with her. But the father follows him and overpowers him at the doorstep. The mother clasps little Bettina in her arms. Soon the struggle is over. All the Italians are captured. Guffantti and his wife, with their arms around little Bettina, turn in grateful acknowledgment to the one to whom they owe her recovery, Pietro the Hand Organ Man.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

THE JUDGE'S WARD.—Robert, the judge's son, is a vacillating young man. Helen, his father's ward, is devoted to him and he sincerely desires to make her his wife. An old flame, Dorothy Deane, an actress, writes him asking him to call and say good-bye, prior to his nuptials. She is playing with a great success at a city theater and he calls on her in her dressing room, where he meets a merry company and all repair to a roof garden.

The judge and Helen happen to attend the performance and drop in at the roof garden for refreshment. Revelry is high when Helen detects her intended in the actress' company. His father, a very stern man, reproaches him for his conduct and upon arriving home drives him from the house.

Three years have passed. Robert has married the actress and a child has blessed them. His father's help being gone, the little family suffers terrible privation. One day his wife departs leaving a note saying she will return to the stage.

In desperation, seeing his child hungry, he resolves to go to his father and ask his help. When he calls the judge is counting a sum of money and refuses to listen to him. He departs but shortly returns to rob the desk. Helen, by a clever ruse, surprises the son in his work and, broken by shame and remorse, he kneels at her feet. The woman's love cannot be stifled and she resolves to help him. She calls at his squalid home and eventually reconciles the judge to his repentant son. Length, 960 feet.

PATHE FRERES.

THE STORY OF A BANKNOTE.—This is an unusually interesting drama and a remarkable example of intelligence in stage management, in which every detail is carried out, that the picture might present the story in a simple, poignant manner. The different characters are portrayed by a company of competent artists, and the photography is superb.

The opening scene shows the interior of a squallid little home, where a poverty stricken young woman is anxiously awaiting the return of her husband, who has gone to get food for the little ones. The unfortunate man soon puts in his appearance, having in his possession one loaf of bread, the purchase of his last few pennies. After feeding the children, he again leaves the house to go in search of employment.

Driven to desperation by their hard struggle against poverty and starvation, the young wife, who, in her rags, still possesses a rare womanly charm, decides to make a great sacrifice that her children might have comforts and food. She has received a note from one of her old admirers, asking her to meet him at a certain place, that they might renew their friendship. After long deliberation, the poor woman yields to the temptation, and putting the children to bed, she steals from the house and goes to the appointed place, where she meets her friend. The latter, who is apparently very prosperous, enters his auto with the young woman, and they are driven at once to a modiste, where her rags are discarded for a stunning new outfit. The couple upon leaving the place are attracted by a large crowd, and upon investigating they discover that the curious people are watching a poor man who has fallen in the street from exhaustion. Moved to pity at the unfortunate man's sad plight, the woman slips some money into his hand and disappears. The stricken man is none other than her husband, but luckily they did not recognize one another. After being revived, the happy man purchases a lot of food, which he immediately takes home to his children, who enjoy a great feast. Soon, however, the tradesman discovers that the bank note presented to him in return for the provisions is a counterfeit, and he hastily calls in the police and enters a complaint. The officers find the man in his home, and are about to place him under arrest, when the latter's wife returns, and upon hearing the story of how her husband came in possession of the money, she at once realizes that he is the man whom she aided on the street. The disillusioned woman offers to accompany the police to the place where her friend is in business, and upon arriving there, it is discovered that he is the leader of a gang of counterfeiters. They are all arrested, after which the woman returns to her family, and as a reward for her services to the government in aiding to round up the culprits, her husband is given a good position. Length, 981 feet.

FEMALE SLEUTH.—In a fashionable gambling den where an old Baron has just broken the bank, a young woman becomes suspicious of a couple of men who have been heavy losers in the game. When they leave the place she follows them, realizing that they are about to perpetrate some deed. The pair go to the hotel where the Baron is living, and engage the room next to his. That night when the old fellow is asleep they sneak into his room and steal all of his money and valuables. In the meantime the young woman who suspects just such a procedure, has notified the police, and the latter arrive at the hotel just as the thieves are leaving. They jump into an automobile and hasten away, closely followed by the officers. The chase continues for a long stretch, until finally the thieves are cornered, but determine to fight till the end, they jump out of the car and run through the woods. The officers follow, and open fire upon the fugitives, who in turn fire a volley at their pursuers, killing one of the officers. The pair finally get clear of the police and make their way back to the gambling den, where they appear as though nothing had ever happened. The young woman leads the police to the place, and after a hard struggle the dishonest men are arrested. Length, 604 feet.

THE MUSIC LESSON.—The beauty of this artistically colored film is indescribable, for like all our trick pictures, it introduces many new novelties in transformation scenes. In the first part a group of pretty girls appear and the old professor proceeds to instruct them in the art of singing. The professor places a large staff above the scholars' heads, and out of a shapeless mass come the notes and take their places upon the staff, without the aid of human hands. Length, 295 feet.

SISTER ANGELICA.—This is one of the most beautiful and fascinating little legends that has ever been presented through the medium of the silent drama. The film is richly colored and the photography is perfect, bringing out every detail of the artistic acting and magnificent background, which forms such an important factor in the dramatic precision.

In the first picture we get a glimpse of the interior of a hospital tent on a battlefield where a soldier is lying, wounded unto death. Realizing that his time to go is close at hand, the dying man asks for a slip of paper, on which he writes a little note to the only woman he ever loved, begging her to come to him that he might see her before he passes away. Handing the missive to one of his comrades he instructs the latter to carry it to Sister Angelica, a member of a cloistered community, who in years gone by had been his sweetheart. The messenger hurries away toward the convent, arriving there just as the good nuns are going into the chapel to pray. It is the duty of Sister Angelica to care for the altar of the Virgin Mother, and when the other sisters have passed out after prayers, she remains behind to attend to her duties. The messenger, who has stolen into the convent unseen, at an opportune time presents himself before Sister Angelica and hands her the note. As the good woman reads the lines, the love that has lain dormant in her heart for years, suddenly awakens and bursts forth, impelling her

Geo. Méliès
"STAR FILMS"
Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co.
To Be Released
Wednesday, October 13, 1909
The Stolen Wireless
A Wartime Story

The different scenes of this film in which over 200 persons take part, are taken in beautiful scenic surroundings.

The combatants are soldiers of the American Army.

The plot is very strong and exciting.

Place your order with us at once if you want this subject delivered on time

GASTON MÉLIÈS
204 East 38th Street
New York

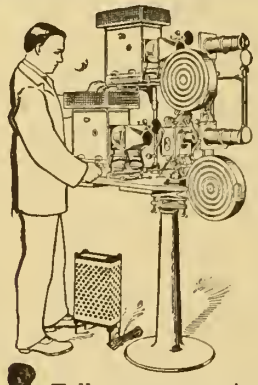
Enterprise Optical Co.
564-572 West Randolph St.
Chicago, Ill.

United Film Sales Company

Have a large stock of late INDEPENDENT FILM FOR SALE AT BARGAIN PRICES. Write or wire for list of subjects. Prices 1 to 5c per foot. We deal in good Film only and are not renters.

Phone Gramercy 2369 — 30 East 23rd Street, New York City

FILMS FOR RENT
6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week
$2.00 per change all in good condition
Signs and Banners no extra charge
FOR SALE—50 reels of film at $13.00 per reel
LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

FILMS

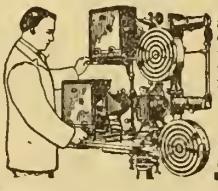
If you are dissatisfied with paying high prices for films try our service.

1 reel changed daily $ 3.00 per week and up
2 reels changed daily 6.00 per week and up
3 reels changed daily 9.00 per week and up
4 reels changed daily 12.00 per week and up

Value For Your Money

Knickerbocker Film Exchange, 1402 B'way, New York

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.
Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

SONG SLIDES. LECTURE SLIDES.
WE MAKE SONG SLIDES AS GOOD AS THEY CAN BE MADE FOR MONEY.
WE DON'T MAKE ANY BETTER SLIDES THAN OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BUT NO SLIDE MAKER MAKES BETTER SLIDES THAN WE DO.
WE DO NOT CUT PRICES TO ENTICE OUR NEIGHBORS' CUSTOMERS AWAY FROM THEM. WE WANT OUR GOODS TO SELL ON MERIT ALONE, NOT BECAUSE THEY ARE CHEAPER THAN THE PRODUCT OF OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT. ALL CHEAP SLIDES, LIKE SHODDY CLOTHING, ARE INFERIOR.
WE INTEND TO MAKE SLIDES SO GOOD THAT OUR CUSTOMERS WILL BE WILLING TO PAY THE HIGHEST PRICE FOR THEM.
WE MAKE NO MISREPRESENTATIONS ABOUT OUR GOODS.
OUR SONG SLIDES ARE FIVE DOLLARS PER SET.
To Standing Order Customers we give 10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT.
WE HAVE OVER SIXTY DIFFERENT SUBJECTS FOR LECTURETTES, AT $6.00 PER SET.
LOOK IN THE LIST OF SLIDE MAKERS IN THIS PAPER FOR OUR NEW GOODS NOW BEING ISSUED. SEND FOR LIST.
THE HENRY B. INGRAM CO., INC.,
42 West Twenty-eighth Street, New York.

Genuine Independent Films

We have been buying altogether nothing but the real genuine Independent Films for the last 2 years and we have on hand more Independent Films than all other Independent Exchanges in this territory. Gaumont, Eclair, Lux, Radius, Powhaton, Centaur, Bison, Film Import, Les Lions and Great Northern. We can serve two or three shows in any town. We remodel, rebuild and sell all makes of machines and automatic pianos.

WAGNER FILM AMUSEMENT COMPANY, 120 N. Third Street Machine Dept. 208 N. Fourth Street, Film Dept., St. Louis detective, and during that time, much to the to go to the dying man, but suddenly she remembers her vows, and restrains her emotions. The soldier retires, and soon the Mother Superior enters the chapel where she finds Sister Angelica in tears, and upon questioning her, the latter hands the note to the Mother begging leave to go in the name of humanity. The Mother refuses to countenance such an unusual procedure, and reminding Sister Angelica of her vows, leaves her alone to give vent to her feelings.

The heart-broken sister falls upon her knees before the shrine of the Blessed Mother, and lifting up her eyes in humble supplication, she invokes the spritual aid of the Virgin. Her prayers are heard, for suddenly the statue of the Virgin Mother becomes animated, and descending from its place in the niche, stands before the awestruck nun, instructing her to go quickly to the side of the dying soldier. The good sister steals out of the convent, leaving the Virgin, who has been transformed into a fac-simile of herself, to take her place among the other nuns, so that she will not be missed.

The messenger accompanies the kind-hearted nun to the camp, where she arrives just in time to give religious solace to the dying man, and after a few gentle words from the good sister the brave soldier peacefully passes away in her arms. After closing his eyes and folding the dead man's hands across his breast, Sister Angelica, feeling that she has done her noble duty, turns her face again toward the dim cloister, and hurries back to assume her duties. Entering the chapel, she finds her substitute busily engaged in her work of decorating the altar with flowers. At sight of Sister Angelica, the Virgin Mother again resumes her inanimate state, and returns to her position in the niche above the altar. Soon the other nuns come into the chapel, and Sister Angelica takes her place among them and kneels for evening prayers. Length, 705 feet.

HOW JACK HELPED HIS LITTLE SISTER.—This is a simple, sweet little story of childhood days, and one which will please the rising generation. Little Marguerite, in her innocence, allows her birds to escape from the cage. Her brother Jack happens along, and finding his sister in tears, promises to coax back the little fugitives. Going out to the field, he whistles and calls, and soon we see all the little birds coming from all directions to the little charmer, perching on his outstretched hand. Finally the birds are all recaptured and put back in the cage, while Marguerite, in her high glee, dances and claps her little hands, promising never to allow them to escape again. Length, 213 feet.

ANTI-FAT SANITARIUM.—This very amusing comedy, which is bubbling over with many droll situations, shows in the first scene a couple of extremely fat women, who tip the scales at over three hundred pounds. Their appetites are quite in keeping with their corpulence, and while they passively sit enjoying a copious repast, one of the pair discovers an advertisement in the newspaper which causes them both to sit up and take notice. She reads that a young man possessing a million would like to make the acquaintance of a petite young woman, object matrimony. As one of the women is in a position to entertain just such an alluring proposition, she invites the other to accompany her to a physical culture school, where she might be able to train down to weight and stand a chance at winning the man with the fortune. After many vicissitudes the clumsy pair arrive at the anti-fat sanitarium, where they contract to pay the sum of five hundred dollars to the professor if he will be able to reduce their weight. The latter accepts the trying task, and immediately starts in to train his new pupils. They don athletic suits and enter the gymnasium, ready for action, and the tortures that the pair go through in trying to reduce their weight is beyond power to describe. Finally, after a long and strenuous treatment, the desired results are obtained, and the two fat women have been reduced to such slim figures that their friends do not recognize them.

Now the great event takes place. The man with the millions comes to claim his bride, and when he is shown into the room, the darling of his heart nearly drops dead at sight of him. He is so big and fat that she loses no time in kicking him out of the place. Length, 653 feet.

DOG PICKPOCKET.—This is an exceptionally interesting and amusing picture, as the principal part is acted by a dog, and it is remarkable how well this dumb animal succeeds in playing his part with almost human intelligence.

This dog Jack has been trained in the art of picking pockets, and has attained such a high degree of perfection that his dishonest master is able to live well by the fruit of his thefts. He eventually is caught in the act, and as well-trained dog detectives exist, one is put on his trail, and soon Jack and his bad master are rounded up and placed under arrest. Length, 315 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE DRUNKARD'S FATE.—Paul Dupont and petite Marie are in love. Lizette Cortuse also admires the handsome mechanic Paul and in our opening scene Paul shows his preference for Marie, and Lizette, chagrined, throws herself into the arms of the wealthy Mons. Dorel, a vineyard owner, who is smitten with her charms. Then we are present at a fete Dorel gives to his employes. Paul indulges too freely in the wine Dorel provides for his guests. High words between these two end in a brawl, in which Dorel is roughly handled by the younger man. Dorel is violent tempered and the enmity born of this quarrel is destined to darken the lives of both Marie and her future husband.

We next see Marie in the garden weeping over Paul's misconduct. He comes and craves forgiveness. Marie induces him to take the pledge; he consents, and together they repair to the Curate's parlor and before the assembled villagers Paul swears to abstain from liquor. Marie asks the priest to announce her wedding. "For, father, if he keeps his pledge, we will be the happiest couple in France."

Lizette hears the news and promptly indites the following note to Paul: "So you will marry petite Marie? Well, I sha'n't go begging. I am to marry the rich Mons. Dorel. He hates you as I hate her and we shall yet triumph over you both."

Eight Years Later.—We get a glimpse of Paul's home in Paris; he is now sober and industrious. He, Marie and their pretty daughter, Nanette, are very, very happy.

Temptation.—Lizette and her elderly husband have come to reside in Paris; she still nurses hatred for the Duponts, and her opportunity for vengeance presents itself. The pair are seated at a wine table, outside a boulevard cafe. Paul passes. Dorel recognizes him, feigns friendship and desires to renew old relations. "Come, man, join us; we will drink to our village days. My wife and I are strangers in a strange city; you shall show us this Paris of yours. We have plenty of money; you shall help us spend it." The old craving returns. Paul drinks and is lost. Hours afterward, the Dorels lead the intoxicated man into the presence of his wife and child, and laugh with satisfied derision at poor Marie's horror. Days of poverty and sorrow follow; then comes another reformation. Return to work and weeks of sobriety, happiness again seems to have entered the home. This does not, however, suit the Dorels. They learn that Paul is at work on a new building near their home; they visit the scene; he is on a scaffold high in the air; they stand just out of sight watching. It is the noon hour. Marie brings Paul's dinner. He descends and greets her. Lizette's crafty brain has decided upon a plan. "Climb that ladder, take this saw, weaken the staging; perhaps a few months in the hospital will change our friend's good resolutions.'

The plan succeeds only too well, and poor Paul, hurled to the ground, maimed and shattered, is carried away, to hover for weeks between life and death, while Marie slaves to keep a roof over the heads of herself and child. At last the injured man is brought home. The kind-hearted doctor calls and leaves his instructions: "Deny all alcoholic stimulants, as the sight of liquor might bring on a return of the mania." The constitution once weakened by drink, becomes a prey to hallucinations.

The Dorels have kept informed of how things were going with the Duponts. They make a call. Lizetter discovers and reads the doctor's orders. Her perverted mind immediately forms another plan. She goes to a wineshop, secures a bottle of wine (gives Dorel his instructions), he returns with it, finds his victim asleep and with cunning malice places it temptingly before the unconscious man. Paul awakens, sees the wine and struggles to resist the craving, but his tortured mind yields and a drunkard's fate overtakes him. His tormentors climb the rickety stairs outside his garret window and stand gloating over their work, when an accident occurs. Lizette, in the height of her triumph, falls to her death. The stair rail against which she had leaned was old and rotten and broke with her weight.

Vengeance Is Mine, Saith the Lord, I Will Repay.—A startling ending to a picture story that teaches a great temperance lesson.

WHEELS OF JUSTICE.—Our story begins with the absconding of a bank cashier, and a substantial reward is offered for his capture. We see a detective agency's office, and the president of the bank gives a complete description of the defaulter which is immediately sent by the agency to all towns within a radius of one thousand miles from the scene of action.

We are now brought to a small town. A well dressed stranger appears, applies for and secures room and board at the home of old Deacon Hooper, who, assisted by his only daughter, conducts a small lodging house. Almost simultaneously with the arrival of the stranger a description of the culprit bank official is received by the town marshal, together with a notice of reward.

Sally, old Hooper's daughter, proves to be a much sought after favorite of the village, but the young minister of the Methodist church is favored by the father, possibly because of the old gentleman being a deacon of this church.

Bear in mind that Sally has been somewhat in touch with the outside world, she wants something more than the customary restraint of village life, and as a result she readily yields her affections to the fascinating and unscrupulous manner of Brighton, the defaulter.

While this little love episode is being conducted, the town marshal informs the Brennan's Detective Agency that Brighton is in Seaview, and that further information may be secured by applying to Hiram Sleek, Esq., marshal of said town.

A few days elapse before the arrival of the disappointment and chagrin of her father and the young minister, Sally has completely yielded her heart to Brighton. Of course, they, knowing nothing of the cashier's identity or dishonesty, refrain from interfering in the courtship.

Eventually, on a bright Sunday morning, Sally instead of accompanying her father to church, as was their custom, tells him that she is going riding with her lover. Old Hooper appeals to her, but in vain, her love has reached its crisis, which refuses to recognize parental authority.

Now Brighton is well aware of the opposition to his suit, and moreover realizes that it is not safe to remain any length of time in one place. Still, with what little honest manhood is left in him, what was begun as a mere flirtation on his part, has proved more serious than he thought. Therefore, unwilling to give Sally up, he prevails on her to elope. This they do on the very morning of the arrival of the detective. He, together with the now very important marshal, repair to the Hooper home, only to ascertain that their prey has flown, and with him the deacon's daughter.

Her last act before departing, is a note hurriedly written and left in her room, informing her grief-stricken father of the step her love, outwitting her judgment, has prompted her to take.

Hastening to John, the minister, whom he wished to call son, the old man tells him what has transpired, and he, at first horror stricken and stunned with the suddenness of this unexpected truth, seems unable to grasp the situation.

Thereupon our friend Sleek, alias Sleuth plenipotentiary, of the incorporated city of Seaview, accompanied by the detective, old Hooper, and the young minister, hurry to the boat landing where Brighton and his fiancee are supposed to have embarked. They ascertain that a man and woman, apparently nervous and excited, had made inquiries there a few minutes prior, and upon learning that they were too late for the regular passenger vessel, had chartered a launch, bent on reaching a point where they could meet with railway connections.

Immediately the pursuers charter another and faster launch. A chase ensues, exciting in the extreme to all parties concerned. Finally the boat occupied by the eloping couple is sighted. With a desperation born of a full realization of what awaits him, Brightou orders the captain of his launch to put in shore. The execution of his orders are attempted too late to save him. The sure vigilance of the detective, more handicapped than assisted by the blustering officiousness of the marshal, results in the capture of Brighton.

Naturally, Sally, on being informed of the true character of the man to whose wiles she thought she had lost her heart, asks forgiveness of her father, which he willingly yields as he clasps her in the shelter of his arms.

A few months elapse, and in that time John, the clergyman, has by his ever steady persistent efforts succeeded in persuading Sally to become his wife, and the simple vision of their domestic happiness tells us the ending of a little story of love misled, mistaken and finally threshed out to its proper plane.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

BETTY'S CHOICE.—Betty Kenyon meets Basil Howard, a country gentleman, who has recently inherited the fertile acres that adjoin the handsome estate of 'Squire Kenyon. She secretly approves the clean-cut young Englishman, but Betty is a sad little flirt and she thinks it never would do to let him perceive the impression he has made. To hide her real feelings she is inclined to hector him a bit and delights in putting his love to the test. They are walking by the lake when Betty decides that she desires some water lilies, well knowing that there are none within reach of the shore and that no boat is at hand. Basil, nothing daunted, strides into the water and gathers a double handful. All would have been well, but, in returning to shore, Basil has the misfortune to step upon a sunken log, which turns under his tread and causes him to lose his balance. He is a sorry sight when he reaches the shore and triumphantly presents his lilies to Betty. As they turn toward the house, Cecil Gilman, a visitor to the Kenyons, is presented to her, and she accepts his escort, a little bit ashamed of the bedraggled appearance of Howard and more than willing to tease him by mildly flirting with the newcomer. Men from the city are particularly attractive to those who live apart from the whirl of town life, and Gilman makes rapid progress in his flirtation with Betty, who delights in tormenting the man she really loves At the County Ball she ignores the evidence of her programme to dance Basil's single dance with the Londoner, and a quarrel is the result, Basil vowing that he never will speak to so fickle a woman again. There has been an epidemic of burglaries in the vicinity of the Kenyon estate, and when 'Squire Kenyon is called to London on business he is glad that he leaves for the protection of his household so brave a man as Gilman declared himself to be That night Basil, strolling through the grounds and taking a mournful delight in looking at the light in Betty's window, surprises the housebreakers entering the Kenyon home. He follows them and arrives upon the scene just as Betty and her mother have been thrown aside by the thieves, who are throttling Gilman. Basil's opportune arrival turns the tables for a moment, but one of the intruders uses his gun. Basil is wounded and things begin to look dark again, but the shots have alarmed the police who come to the rescue of the household. The last

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY 110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City

BROKERS IN

Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.

FILMS FOR SALE. $10, $12, $15 per reel.

One New Dressler Machine, One Second-hand Power's Machine, One Edison Machine. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.

Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

Advertising copy should reach us not later than Wednesday morning.

THE GAUMONT COMPANY

OF CANADA

403-404-405 Henry Birks Building

Montreal, Quebec

Exclusive Canadian Agents for all products of the Gaumont Co., Paris, have pleasure in announcing to Canadian Film Exchanges and Exhibitors, that their Montreal offices will be opened for business from October 1st.

Films — The Best — Gaumont

Machines — The Chrono — The only M. P. machine without a star wheel.

Talking Pictures — The Chronophone — An Exclusive Novelty

With a full line of accessories—Rewinders—a new idea. Reels — different. Lenses — special symetric. Carbons—more light. Lamps—stronger.

THIS IS NOT A BLUFF WRITE US

You can save something and gain something.

U. S. Agents for the Chronophone and all apparatus

Gaumont

GAUMONT CO.

124 E. 25th St., N. Y. City

Western Canadian Agents

Canadian Chronophone Co.

410 Kennedy Block, Winnipeg, Man.

Gaumont

scene shows Basli able to be about again, and Betty shyly confesses that he is her choice and that she flirted with Gilman merely to rouse his jealousy, the scene closing on a pretty tableau of the betrothal.

NEVER EAT GREEN APPLES.—Mrs. Hawtrey is passionately fond of fruit and keeps a supply in her room. On arising she munches an apple while her maid prepares the bath. That morning ceremony concluded, she prepares to have her hair dressed, but she has been too impatient to await the ripening of the apples and the green fruit begins to exhibit the usual result. In a few moments she is in agony and the terrified maid wildly screams for help. The pains increase and Mrs. Hawtrey adds her cries to those of the maid. The household is alarmed and even passers-by pause before the house in the belief that a murder is being committed. The attention of the police is attracted and there is a hurry call for the ambulance. All the time the pain grows greater and the advent of the surgeon is hailed with joy by the anxious husband and a score of friends. He prescribes the application of a hot water bag and in a few moments the expressions of agony give place to relief and the grateful patient passes the apples about to the others, who accept the fruit, but, warned by her example, they do not eat.

FOR HER SAKE.—Joel and Tom are shipmates, and no one is more pleased than Tom at the news that his chum has inherited a fortune from his uncle. Joel follows his letter to confirm the news in person, and in his delight Tom takes him to visit Mary Turner, whom some day he hopes to marry, though Mary gives him but slight encouragement. With Joel and Mary it is a case of love at first sight, and they almost forget Tom in the dawn of love. Tom feels slighted, but he does not realize that it is Joel who has won Mary's love. Joel becomes a frequent visitor at the Turners' and one day he and Mary go for a walk. Tom is left in the cold, and in a jealous passion he follows them and his worst suspicions are confirmed, for he overlooks their betrothal, and in a sudden accession of madness he attacks his chum. Joel and Mary are married and the only cloud upon their happiness is the refusal of Tom to be friends. As they come from the church he refuses to offer his congratulations to the happy pair and it is evident that his anger is bitter and unyielding. For eight years Joel and Mary are supremely happy. Joel has given up the sea and they have a charming home. Two children have come to bless their union and they have all that the heart could desire. Like a thunderbolt from a clear sky comes the announcement that the bank in which Joel's money is deposited has failed and that there is not the slightest hope that the depositors will receive even a portion of their funds. Joel looks for work, but the financial depression, which resulted in the ruin of the bank, has had its effect on the market for labor as well, and at last he is glad to accept a position as common sailor aboard a whaler bound on a long voyage. There is a sad farewell and Joel goes to join his ship, aboard which Tom is mate. Joel seeks to be friends, but Tom is unforgiving and roughly orders Joel to stow away his things and report for duty. The whaler encounters a storm and springs a leak. The pumps cannot keep the hold clear and the gallant little vessel founders. Tom makes his way to shore and presently encounters Joel, who has been washed ashore, but is unable to aid himself, since his leg is badly bruised. He begs Tom to assist him, but the hatred still burns and Tom passes on. With bits of wreckage Tom builds himself a rude shelter, some provisions have come ashore and Tom is very comfortable, but in the smoke of the fire his conscience paints visions of Mary and the babies, and at last he rushes to the shore. Joel is unconscious, but a swallow of the precious stimulant brings him back to a realization of his condition and with Tom's assistance he limps to the shelter. Two weeks pass. The leg is better and the old friendship has been renewed. A sail is perceived, and in answer to their frantic signaling a boat puts out and takes them aboard. Some weeks later Mary is astounded to hear the welcome voice of her beloved and turns to be clasped in her husband's eager arms, but Tom has come with him, in response to Joel's pleadings, and the sight of Mary's joy is full repayment for his renunciation, and her grateful kiss is more highly prized than would be a decoration for bravery. For her sake he has brought back her husband to her arms, and, the old bitterness gone forever, things once more assume their proper proportion.

FILMS FOR SALE

50 Reels Film free from rain and scratches, titled and in good condition, $16.50.

20 Reels Film for sale at $12.50 per reel.

MAYER SILVERMAN

322 Futon Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

WANTED—To buy Pathe Passion Play; must be in good condition. Apply immediately. Mr. F. L., 98 St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal.

FOR SALE—New Edison Calcium Gas Outfit, consisting of generator, saturator, tubing, dynamic burner and two boxes of oxone. Address CALCIUM, Box 111, Ridgewood, N. J.

MUTOSCOPE MACHINE for sale, made by American Mutoscope and Biograph Company. Address, T. J. Stewart Company, Erie corner of Fifth street, Jersey City, N. J.

THEATRES WANTED.

WILL BUY moving picture theater in city of ten thousand or over. Central States or Middle West. Every detail first letter. Address H. E. BENDER, 450 W. Exchange St., Akron, O.

WANTED—Moving picture theater, in or near New York City. Address CASH, care Moving Picture World.

THEATRES FOR SALE.

Moving Picture Theater for sale in Vermont; well equipped; good proposition; low price. Address H., care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater; fine location; good Connecticut city; doing good business; 400 seats; other business, reasons for selling. Address DALEY, care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Theater in town of 26,000 in New York State. First class condition. Bargain for quick sale. Address COHOES, care of Moving Picture world.

FOR SALE—Two first class moving picture theaters in New York City; good reasons for selling; absolutely no violations. Address P. D. Q., care of Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater; unusual opportunity; very reasonable; must sell, going South. Address T. LINHURST, 221 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Vaudette Theater for sale; good business; 180 seats; Power's machine, piano, raised floor. Price, $700. Address, WALTER, Box 652, Grand Ledge, Mich.

Moving Picture Theater; fine location; good Pennsylvania city; doing good business; 219 chairs; other business reason for selling; this is a money maker. Address K. H. M., care of Moving Picture World.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

MANAGER—Experienced in moving pictures and vaudeville, press work, baritone singer, lecturer and producer; reasonable salary; good references; responsible parties only. C. W. LAWFORD, Coudersport, Pa.

TRAP-DRUMMER, at liberty after 30th of month, with full line of traps for picture effects, and experience. LEWIS HECK, Gayety Theater, Lynchburg, Va. (Eu route.)

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 360 W. 45th St., New York City.

MOVING PICTURE OPERATOR with own machine desires stationary or travelling position; four years' experience. New York license. Address A. S. LATTA, care Moving Picture World.

C. C. Duryea, Nunda, N. Y., desires quick position as operator; can do all, and will go anywhere; best of references.

AT LIBERTY—Operator, an electrician and machinist, can run calcium light. Best references; willing to go on the road; seven years' experience. Address Geo. Fisk, 133 West 127th street, New York City.

INFORMATION WANTED.

If Miss H. Cary, slide colorist, will call at this office she will learn something to her advantage.
Moving Picture World.

HELP WANTED.

Practical Slide Colorists can find employment at the Henry B. Ingram Company Studio, 42 West 28th street, New York.

500 SETS OF SONG SLIDES
For Sale at $1.25 per set. Send for lists.
EXCELSIOR SLIDE CO.
A. L. HARSTN, Mgr.
138 E. 14th St., NEW YORK, N. Y.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

THE SHERIFF'S GIRL.—Ben Thompson is the Sheriff of Loredo County, Arizona. Ben and Jear have never been on speaking terms. Ben is visiting his sweetheart, Belle Gordon. Sandy Jones, who runs the poker games at the Horseshoe Gambling Saloon, rushes up and informs the Sheriff that he is wanted in a hurry. Our first scene has shown the interior of the Horseshoe gambling room. Bad Bill and his gang have entered and held up Sandy Jones, have taken all of his money and jewelry and have abducted "Big Lizzie," one of the dancing girls. The Sheriff bids his sweetheart good-bye, and after a brief investigation at the Horseshoe, he dashes off, accompanied by a trusty lieutenant, in pursuit of the bad man. An exciting chase on horseback follows, and we show real riding of a kind that makes one hold his breath as the Sheriff and his man follow the trail of the four outlaws. The bad men catch sight of the Sheriff following them, and, leaving the girl beside the road, they double back, hoping to catch the Sheriff and finish him. Ben is as tricky as a fox. Making a detour, he gets behind the outlaws, finds the girl, and conceives a bold plan for capturing Bill. He hides the girl and his horse in the woods, then, disguised in the girl's mantilla, he seats himself at the roadside and awaits the coming of Bill. Bill returns, places him arm affectionately around what he supposes to be the girl, and the next instant he is startled to see Ben Thompson's six-shooter shoved into his face and to hear the command "Hands Up!" Ben takes the girl and Bad Bill back to town and deposits Bill in the county jail.

Bad Bill's accomplices abduct Belle, the Sheriff's girl, carry her off and tie her to an old post on the bank of the river. They then send a note to the Sheriff, in which they inform him that if he does not release Bad Bill within three hours, the rising tide of the river will drown his sweetheart. The Sheriff determines to be faithful to his duty as Sheriff and also to save his girl. A wild ride brings him up to where the outlaws are resting. Here follows a thrilling revolver fight, three men on horseback dashing down a steep hill against the plucky Sheriff. Two of the outlaws are killed, and the Sheriff pursuing the third one comes to the point on the river bank where his girl is waiting in agony a fearful death. He dashes into the water, unties the girl and lifts her head, just in time to rescue her from a watery grave.

GREAT NORTHERN.

VAGABOND LIFE.—A small gypsy family, consisting of an old grandfather, a girl, Ritra, fourteen, and a boy ten years of age, settle down at a fair in order to earn a little money by singing and dancing. As soon as they commence, a policeman appears, demanding in a coarse manner to see their papers, and as the poor people have no papers nor permission to perform at the fair, they are taken to the police station, in spite of the protest from the onlookers. The old man is fined, and as he has no money to pay the fine, he is imprisoned. He is heartbroken, and the children are crying desperately as they are taken to an infant asylum. But the gypsy blood does not allow Ritra to remain quiet in her bed while the grandfather is in prison. When everything is quiet at home, she sneaks into the room where her brother is sleeping, wakes him, dresses him, and escapes with him through the window. In the middle of the night the two desperate children ring the bell at the home of the judge. He does not like to be disturbed in his sleep, and does not feel better when he hears that the children will tempt him to elude the law and set the grandfather free. But his heart melts when he sees the children's touching love for the old man, and their firm belief in the absolute power of a judge. As they are about to leave him, brokenhearted, he calls them back and takes them himself to the grandfather, whom he not only frees, but also presents with a sum of money. The kind-hearted judge is richly rewarded in seeing the overwhelming joy and thankfulness of the children, and he would have been still more satisfied if he could have witnessed their rejoicing as they feel once more the road under their feet and can partake of their humble meal in the green meadow.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

DOVE EYE'S GRATITUDE.—Indian life in all its phases is interesting, and "Dove Eye's Gratitude" will not disappoint. A young white chap leaves his log cabin home, where live his father, mother and two young sisters, to hunt game, and it was a lucky day for Dove Eye, a pretty Indian girl, that he did; but of this you will learn later. Dove Eye, accompanied by One Feather, who is in love with her, goes down to the stream, and with her companion's assistance gets into a waiting canoe. While One Feather stands on the shore, Dove Eye glides from view. She lands and picks berries. Intent upon her occupation, she does not see coming toward her a huge bear. Just as he is about to attack her, she turns and runs away, screaming. The white lad, who hears the screams, runs through the woods, and sees Dove Eye followed by the bear. She falls, and were it not for the young man, who kills the bear, she would have been killed. As it is, she is injured. After he bathes and binds her wounds, she places around his neck a necklace, taken from her own. He helps her into her canoe, and she paddles away. When she returns to camp and tells of her rescue, One Feather becomes jealous and says the white man will suffer. The youth returns home, tells of his adventure and gives the necklace to his little sister. The father goes for provisions and leaves his son in charge, providing against an attack by the Indians, who later give the boy a hard fight. The mother has loaded the last gun and the house is in flames, so when the remaining shot is fired, her anguish is great. The Indians rush into the burning house and take the little girl prisoner, leaving the others to their fate. When the little girl is brought to the Indian camp, Dove Eye recognizes her necklace and questions the child, who tells her how she became the possessor of it. Dove Eye loses no time in getting away and flying on horseback to the cabin, reaching there just in time to save the white folks. Dove Eye entreats the father, who has just returned and would rush to his little one's rescue, to rely upon her, promising to return that night with the child. When Dove Eye reaches her home the Indians are preparing to go to rest, while One Feather guards the little one. The Indian girl sends him for water, and while he is gone she releases the child and gallops off with her. When the family offer their thanks for the safe deliverance of their child, she only points to her wounds, showing that her kindness is merely a proof of her gratitude.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

THE MAN AND THE LAW.—A story of one of the trials that occur more or less in the life of a policeman. Our hero, a kind-hearted policeman, is called upon to serve a warrant for the arrest of a poor woman who is the only support of a sick child. She did not really steal, but found a purse dropped by a rich woman on the street, and no one claiming it, she goes to the drug store to have a prescription filled which the doctor said was absolutely necessary to spare the little one's life. She is watched by an informer, who swears out a warrant for the arrest of this poor woman. The kind-hearted policeman is the one who is delegated to serve the warrant. When he comes into the dilapidated garret of this poverty-stricken woman, his heart goes against him and he cannot issue the warrant against her. He offers to make up the amount missing, but the accuser refuses to allow the lady to accept it. His feelings finally get the better of him to such an extent that he throws the warrant into the villain's face. The next scene, in the judge's private office, is one filled with dramatic interest, where the villain shows that the officer did not serve the warrant, and our kind-hearted policeman is brought before the judge and asked why the writ was not served. He explains the case to the judge, who does not think he is justified, and our policeman takes the stand: "If that is the law he is serving, he would sooner be a man than a policeman." He throws his hat, coat and club on the judge's desk and goes back home. When he comes home and tells his wife what he has done, she feels very bad and tries to comfort him. Back in the judge's room, the judge is meditating whether he has done the right thing or not. He finally concludes that he has done an injustice to this officer, who is, in fact, a noble man, and decides to help him. The last scene is in the policeman's home, where the judge enters and gives him a letter showing that he has been recommended for promotion.

FOR SALE—1,000 feet film, released Aug. 1, $10-$15 per reel; Edison Ex. Model, Power's machines, $60; new, $100; No. 4 Optigraph, nearly new, $40; Model B Gas Outfit, $25; Song Sets, $1.50. Will buy machines, film. For rent: 6,000 feet film, 3 sets song slides, $12 weekly, one shipment, 12,000 feet, $20. H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wis.

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

		Feet
Aug.	30—The Mills of the Gods (Dr.)	672
Aug.	30—Pranks (Com.)	328
Sept.	2—The Sealed Room (Dr.)	779
Sept.	2—The Little Darling (Com.)	211
Sept.	6—"1776," or The Hessian Renegades	965
Sept.	9—Comata, the Sioux (Dr.)	963
Sept.	13—Getting Even (Com.)	587
Sept.	13—The Children's Friend (Dr.)	386
Sept.	16—The Broken Locket (Dr.)	999
Sept.	20—In Old Kentucky (Dr.)	983
Sept.	23—A Fair Exchange (Dr.)	995
Sept.	27—Leather Stocking (Dr.)	996
Sept.	30—The Awakening (Dr.)	691
Sept.	30—Wanted, a Child (Com.)	296
Oct.	4—Pippa Passes (Dr.)	983
Oct.	7—Fools of Fate (Dr.)	972

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Sept.	3—Ethel's Luncheon (Com.)
Sept.	3—Backward, Turn Backard, etc. (Dr.)
Sept.	7—A Dangerous Pair (Com.)
Sept.	7—The Temptation (Dr.)
Sept.	10—The Making of Honey (Indus.)	190
Sept.	10—The Amateur William Tell (Com.)	810
Sept.	14—Little Sister (Dr.)	975
Sept.	17—How the Landlord Collected His Rents	460
Sept.	17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Com.)	500
Sept.	21—The Ordeal (Dra.)	950
Sept.	24—A Knight for a Night (Com.)	370
Sept.	24—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (C.)	230
Sept.	24—Love and War (Dr.)	400
Sept.	28—Why Girls Leave Home (Com.)	1000
Oct.	1—The Wallace Jewels (Com.)	720
Oct.	1—Two of a Kind (Com.)	280
Oct.	5—Laddie (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—The Minister's Daughter	830
Oct.	8—Expert Glass Blowing	170
Oct.	12—A New Life	1000
Oct.	15—Hansel and Gretel	630
Oct.	15—Whitler's Witless Wanderiugs	330

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Aug.	18—The Wonders of Nature (Sc.)	1000
Aug.	25—On Another Man's Pass (Com.)	950
Sept.	1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C.)	952
Sept.	8—Justified (Dr.)	970
Sept.	15—A Case of Tomatoes (Com.)	495
Sept.	15—Three Reasons for Haste (Com.)	485
Sept.	22—Gratitude (Dr.)	950
Sept.	29—The Brothers (Dr.)	970
Oct.	6—A Birthday Affair (Com.)	550
Oct.	6—The Magic Melody (Com.)	431

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

Sept.	1—An Awakened Conscience (Dr.)	627
Sept.	7—The Mason's Paradise (Com.)	414
Sept.	8—The Stolen Gems (Dr.)	464
Sept.	8—Glimpses of Paris (Sc.)	417
Sept.	11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dr.)	940
Sept.	14—The Tricky Dummies (Com.)	370
Sept.	14—Her Busy Day (Com.)	250
Sept.	14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Com.)	324
Sept.	21—Saved from the Quicksands (Dr.)	600
Sept.	21—Taking in a Reef (Com.)	380
Sept.	22—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dr.)	770
Sept.	22—Dropped from the Clouds (Com.)	240
Sept.	25—On the Crest of the Waves (Dr.)	554
Sept.	25—All for a Nickel (Com.)	404
Oct.	2—The Masterpiece (Dr.)	857
Oct.	2—Papa's Hat (Com.)	148
Oct.	5—The Pill Box (Com.)	450
Oct.	5—Breaking the Bank (Com.)	490
Oct.	9—A Wedding Party in Luna Park (C.)	434
Oct.	9—The Sleuth and the Wig (Com.)	504

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

Aug.	31—Prof. Puddenhead's Patents (Com.)	404
Aug.	31—The French Battleship "Justice" (D.)	557
Sept.	4—In Hot Pursuit (Dr.)	514
Sept.	4—Romantic Italy (Sc.)	437
Sept.	15—The Fatal Love (Dr.)	584
Sept.	15—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Sc.)	367
Sept.	18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Top.)	480
Sept.	18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dr.)	500
Sept.	28—Wife or Child (Dr.)	494
Sept.	28—Breach of Promise (Com.)	484
Sept.	29—Love, the Conqueror (Dr.)	650
Sept.	29—Chasing the Ball (Magic)	347
Oct.	6—Yachting Off Cowes (Sc.)	464
Oct.	6—Gambling Passion (Dr.)	530

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug.	20—The Queen of the Quarry	690
Aug.	20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal	170
Aug.	27—The Conspirators (Dr.)	410
Aug.	27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Com.)	575
Sept.	3—The Pay Car (Dr.)	930
Sept.	10—Hiram's Bride (Dr.)
Sept.	17—The Story of a Rose (Dr.)	680
Sept.	17—Winning a Dinner (Com.)	245
Sept.	24—The Winning Boat (Dr.)	925
Oct.	1—The Mystery of the "Sleeper" Trunk	870
Oct.	8—The Hand Organ Man (Dr.)	910

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

		Feet
Aug.	23—Before the Dawn (Dr.)	615
Aug.	23—Wifey Away, Hubby at Play	320
Aug.	26—Nearsighted Mary (Com.)	495
Aug.	26—Midnight Sons (Com.)	385
Aug.	30—The Doctor's Bride (Dr.)	580
Aug.	30—The Haunted Hat (Com.)	305
Sept.	2—The Woman Hater (Dr.)	810
Sept.	6—The Call of the Heart (Dr.)	670
Sept.	6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic)	255
Sept.	9—A True Patriot (Patriotic)	735
Sept.	9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Sc.)	200
Sept.	13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dr.)	810
Sept.	16—The Fortune Hunters (Com.)	575
Sept.	16—All on Account of a Letter (Com.)	385
Sept.	20—When Woman Hates (Dr.)	750
Sept.	23—The Conquering Hero (Com.)	730
Sept.	27—A Fish Story (Com.)	510
Sept.	27—Old Love Letters (Com.)	400
Sept.	30—The Judge's Ward (Dr.)	950
Oct.	4—Who Discovered the North Pole (C.)	505
Oct.	4—Billiken (Dr.)	455
Oct.	7—A Blank Check (Dr.)	975
Oct.	11—Papa's Honeymoon (Com.)	600
Oct.	11—Out for the Day (Com.)	390
Oct.	14—Sandy, the Poacher (Dr.)	840
Oct.	18—The Major and the Judge (Com.)
Oct.	18—Haps and Mishaps (Com.)	240
Oct.	21—Mignon (Dr.)
Oct.	21—Aunt Lena's Visit (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Visit to Uncle (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Buried Secret (Com.)
Oct.	28—More Precious Than Gold (Dr.)

PATHE FRERES.

Aug.	30—The New Mail Carrier (Com.)	672
Sept.	1—The Little Street Singer (Dr.)	426
Sept.	1—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Dr.)	502
Sept.	3—A Visit to Biskra (Sc.)	443
Sept.	3—Show Your License (Com.)	420
Sept.	4—A Grave Disappointment (Com.)	364
Sept.	4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Sc.)	253
Sept.	4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Sc.)	331
Sept.	6—Versailles (Sc.)	462
Sept.	6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (C.)	425
Sept.	8—The Little Soldier (Dr.)	394
Sept.	8—Sweden: Gotha Canal (Sc.)	456
Sept.	10—Tom Thumb (Dr.)	1016
Sept.	11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics	371
Sept.	11—Sports in Java (Sc.)	298
Sept.	11—How to Tame a Mother-in-Law (Com.)	351
Sept.	13—Amateur Detective (Com.)	390
Sept.	13—The Child's Prayer (Dr.)	571
Sept.	15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dr.)	492
Sept.	15—City of Naples (Indus.)	449
Sept.	17—Mountebank's Son (Dr.)	892
Sept.	18—Oh, What a Beard! (Com.)	335
Sept.	18—The Fresh Kid (Com.)	295
Sept.	18—Construction of Balloons (Indus.)	361
Sept.	20—Aviation Contests at Rheims	607
Sept.	20—Caught in His Own Trap (Com.)	374
Sept.	22—The Tower of Nesle (Dr.)	1088
Sept.	24—Careless Tramp (Com.)	574
Sept.	24—Caucasian Customs (Sc.)	384
Sept.	25—Servant's Good Joke (Com.)	548
Sept.	25—Trained Birds (Sc.)	397
Sept.	27—He Learned the Trick of Mesmerism	433
Sept.	27—Suitors' Competition (Com.)	518
Sept.	29—Pierrot, the Fnddler (Dr.)	318
Sept.	29—Jane is Unwilling to Work (Com.)	525
Oct.	1—A Game of Chess (Dr.)	558
Oct.	1—An Eventful Trip (Com.)	390
Oct.	2—The Garbage of Paris (Indus.)	407
Oct.	2—Vendetta (Dr.)	541
Oct.	4—The Story of a Banknote (Dr.)	981
Oct.	6—Female Sleuth (Dr.)	604
Oct.	6—The Music Lesson (Com.)	295
Oct.	8—Sister Angelica (Dr.)	705
Oct.	8—How Jack Helped His Little Sister	213
Oct.	9—Anti-Fat Sanitarium (Com.)	653
Oct.	9—Dog Pickpocket (Com.)	315

SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

Aug.	30—Winning a Widow (Dr.)	450
Sept.	2—The Blight of Sin (Dr.)	995
Sept.	9—The Engagement Ring (Dr.)	995
Sept.	13—Freebooters (Dr.)	995
Sept.	16—Crooked Path (Dr.)	960
Sept.	20—The Bachelor's Visit (Dr.)	775
Sept.	20—False Alarm (Com.)	175
Sept.	23—Stricken Blind (Dr.)	990
Sept.	27—Across the Divide (Dr.)	980
Sept.	30—The Drunkard's Fate (Dr.)	930

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug.	28—The Evil That Men Do (Dr.)	925
Aug.	31—The Hunchback (Dr.)	633
Aug.	31—Niagara in Winter Dress	350
Sept.	4—The Galley Slave	885
Sept.	7—The Fisherman (Dr.)	430
Sept.	7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dr.)	564
Sept.	11—An Alpine Echo (Dr.)	990
Sept.	14—The Little Father (Dr.)	610
Sept.	14—The Wealthy Rival (Com.)	360
Sept.	18—The Marble Heart (Dr.)	968
Sept.	21—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dr.)	425
Sept.	21—The Siren's Necklace (Dr.)	530
Sept.	25—Fantine (Dr.)	997
Sept.	29—Onawanda (Dr.)	545
Sept.	29—The Romance of an Umbrella (Com.)	450
Oct.	2—The Scales of Justice (Dr.)	983
Oct.	5—Betty's Choice (Dr.)	642
Oct.	5—Never Eat Green Apples (Com.)	290
Oct.	9—For Her Sake (Dr.)	995

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

Film Import and Trading Company.

May	1—Nevada Girl	936 ft
May	8—Cowboy's Sweetheart	854 ft.
May	14—The Temptations of John Gray	930 ft.
May	22—Johnny and the Indians	877 ft.
May	28—Crystal Ball	Aprrox. 933 ft.
June	19—Love Wins	931 ft.
June	24—Private Brown	Approx. 904 ft.
July	7—Cowboy's Romance	Aprrox. 871 ft.
July	21—Tale of Texas	Approx. 945 ft.
July	28—Maryland, 1777	Approx. 956 ft.
Aug.	4—Power of Love	Approx. 995 ft.
Aug.	18—The Lost Letter	965 ft.
Aug.	25—The Blacksmith's Daughter	985 ft.
Sept.	1—Peaceful Jones	Approx 932 ft.
Sept.	8—The Diamond Necklace	545 ft.
Sept.	8—The Wishing Charm	545 ft.
Sept.	15—A White Lie	About 1000 ft.
Sept.	22—Dan Blake's Rival	About 1000 ft.
Sept.	29—A Close Call	About 1000 ft.
Oct.	6—The Sheriff's Girl	960
Oct.	13—His Mexican Bride	970

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July	17—A Shadow of the Past	464 ft.
July	24—A Clever Nurse	450 ft.
July	24—Off the Coast of Norway	315 ft.
Aug.	14—The Spy	619 ft.
Aug.	14—Water Sports	214 ft.
Aug.	21—False Alarm	353 ft.
Aug.	21—Surroundings of Copenhagen	396 ft.
Aug.	28—The Shell	567 ft.
Aug.	28—Cowboys in Argentina	387 ft.
Aug.	26—A Strange Reunion	910 ft.
Sept.	3—His Two Children	1000 ft.
Sept.	11—The Gray Dame	975 ft.
Sept.	25—The Great Prize	455 ft.
Sept.	25—Life on Trailing Ship	540 ft.
Oct.	2—Vagabond Life	436
Oct.	2—Adventures of an Emigrant	466

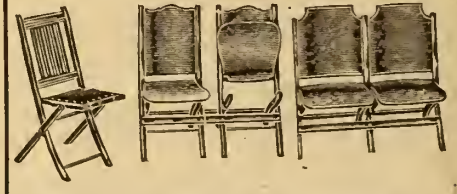
NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

May	21—Disinherited Son's Loyalty (Dr.)	887 ft.
May	28—A Fishermald's Romance (Dr.)	806 ft.
June	4—Davy Crockett in Hearts United (D.)	836 ft.
June	11—The Squaw's Revenge (Dr.)	990 ft.
June	18—A Terrible Attempt (Dr.)	575 ft.
June	18—Jones Gets Arrested (Com)	450 ft.
July	2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.)	935 ft.
July	9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.)	850 ft.
July	23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.)	1000 ft.
July	30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C)	800 ft.
Aug.	6—Sailor's Child (Dr.)	1000 ft.
Aug.	13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes	450 ft.
Aug.	13—The Yiddisher Cowboy	550 ft.
Aug.	20—Half Breed's Treachery	1000 ft.
Aug.	27—Secret Service Woman	1000 ft.
Sept.	10—The Paymaster	1000 ft.
Sept.	17—A Kentucky Planter	1000 ft.
Sept.	24—The Squaw's Sacrifice	1000 ft.
Oct.	1—Faithful Wife	1000 ft.
Oct.	8—Dove Eye's Gratitude	1000

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Aug.	16—Russian Romance	850
Aug.	16—A Conspiracy	900
Aug.	16—Victim of a Crisis	520
Aug.	16—Salome Craze	435
Aug.	16—Flirtation Collar	335
Aug.	16—Brave Girl on the Fifteenth Floor	917
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl	1016
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—Her Favorite Tune	892
Aug.	16—How the Loser Won	816
Aug.	16—A Young Bachelor's Dream	826
Aug.	26—A Strange Reunion	610
Sept.	16—The Actor Burglar	950
Sept.	23—Nobody Loves a Fat Man	950
Sept.	30—The Man and the Law	1000

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

MONEY-MAKING

FILMS D'ART

The World's BEST "Films D'Art"

NAPOLEON (Pathé) 2090 feet
LADY OF MONSOREAU (Cines) 1700 feet
THE FALSE OATH (Ambrosio) 900 feet

Ask your "EXCHANGE" and be convinced that these are the only copies in United States, Imported by

EXHIBITORS' FILM EXCHANGE

Telephone 2775 Stuyvesant

138 THIRD AVENUE between 14th and 15th Streets : : NEW YORK

ITALIANI:
QUESTE FILMS SONO IMPORTATE DIRETTAMENTE DALL'ITALIA PER GL' ITALIANI D'AMERICA. TUTTE PORTANO TITOLI ITALIANI. QUESTE FILMS NON SI POSSONO AVERE DA NESSUN' ALTRO CHE DA NOI.

THE BEST FILMS OUT

ASK FOR THEM

Attention! Film Manufacturers

SCENARIO WRITER

Desires permanent position with large producing firm to superintend the staging of his own plays. Only those who are facilitated to produce the highest quality of work and pay a commensurate price for the necessary brains need answer.

I have a large number of subjects in readiness, and in preparation. Have travelled in every country of the globe and can direct the mannerisms and select the correct costumes for every nationality. Have over twenty years' experience in theatrical life in all lines, from performer to manager, and am the author of many well known and popular travel stories.

Present position pays $50 per week but desire to make connection with Moving Picture Firm. Address

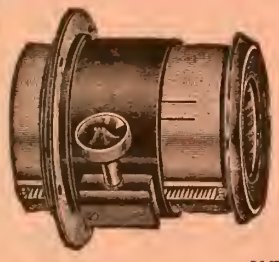
J. D. T. - - Care of Moving Picture World

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies. : : : :

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND —OHIO—



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

North Pole Film

Your box office will not freeze if you are wise enough to arrange with us and receive before your competitor the original pictures of

..DR. COOK..

ARCTIC-EXPLORER

Landing at Copenhagen With His Danish Whaler
The Esquimo

Big Money-Maker

This Film if properly advertised will bring larger crowds than any picture ever produced

Released About Sept. 22nd—Wire Your Order

AMERICAN FILM EXCHANGE
Wabash Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

SOUTHERN FILM EXCHANGE
146 W. 5th St., Cincinnati, Ohio

THE HOUSES OF HEADLINERS

Renters of all makes of Film without paying any license

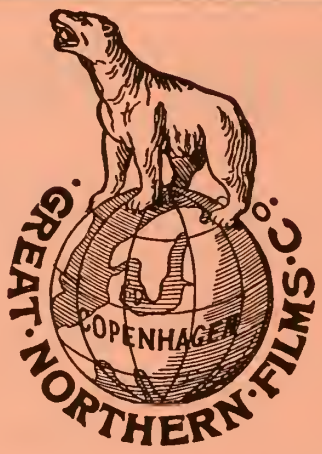
PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"
Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN
THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

GRAND PRIX

Awarded First Prize and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908



Manufacturers of

Films of Quality

Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

NEXT ISSUE

Vagabond Life

A beautiful story of filial love and how it melted the heart of a magistrate. App. length 436 ft.

Adventures of an Emigrant

A continual laugh comedy subject. App. length 466 ft.

ALL EXCHANGES RENT GREAT NORTHERN FILMS—Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN

7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

The Best Of All—After All

Chicago Vaudeville Managers Exchange

The Largest Independent Booking Offices West of New York

Booking all of the Best Family Theatres in Chicago

Also other houses in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan

Reputable managers are invited to call and see us when in Chicago

FRANK Q. DOYLE, Mgr.
151 Washington St., (Fourth Floor) Chicago, Ill.

Who's Who—And Why

We Are It With A Big I

Don't you swear when you get a set of slides you have used several times before.
Don't the operators swear about condition of slides, all cracked and patched.
Don't your musicians swear at the chestnuts handed you, music worn and badly torn.
Don't your singer swear when he opens a package, and finds wrong music enclosed.

Awfully Annoying, Doncher Know

We absolutely guarantee against the above therefore we're

Who's Who——And Why

We Are It With A Big I

Write us for particulars of the Best Illustrated Song Slide Service in the United States

Chicago Song Slide Exchange
907 Masonic Temple : Chicago, Ill.

Exhibitors, Look! Listen! and Be Convinced!

...THE NEWEST...

INDEPENDENT EXCHANGE

Is here to give you something you never had before. For a starter we offer you your choice of 500 Reels of Latest Releases Now in Stock

PEERLESS FILM EXCHANGE
429 Sixth Ave., New York City

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, October 8th

DOVE EYE'S GRATITUDE

Dramatic Code Word, Recent Approx. Length 1,000 ft

Indian life in all its phases is interesting, and the subject we here present "Dove Eye's Gratitude" will not disappoint. This is unquestionably one of the most intense dramatic productions in moving pictures, beautifully colored and in every particular up to the "Bison" standard of photographic and dramatic excellence,

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.
Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

ask about kosmik
economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

Gaumont

George Kleine

ECLIPSE

Week Ending October 10th

52 State Street, Chicago 19 East 21st Street, New York

Oct. 5th—Sparkling Comedy. "THE PILL BOX." Gaumont, 450 Feet. Shows how clever Hoboes treat Tooth-ache Patients with Cathartic Pills. One long loud laugh.

Oct. 5th—Another Funny Scream "BREAKING THE BANK." Gaumont, 490 Feet. Pointing the moral "Don't bank your money."

Oct. 6th—Scenic. "RACE FOR THE KING'S CUP." Urban-Eclipse, 464 Feet. An exquisitively depicted Yacht Race, showing the "Ocean Swallows," maneuvering at close range and traveling at break-neck speed. A superb subject.

Oct. 6th—Drama. "GAMBLING PASSION." Urban-Eclipse, 530 Feet. A lesson that will strike home. Ends happily.

Oct. 9th—Comedy. "WEDDING PARTY IN LUNA PARK." Gaumont, 434 Feet Jollification of a Bridal Party in an Amusement Park.

Oct. 9th—Comedy. "SLEUTH AND THE WIG." Gaumont, 504 Feet. Proving that detectives occasionally "miss the mark."

Posters in Four Colors for all above Film Subjects are supplied by

THE A. B. C. CO., CLEVELAND, OHIO

They Will Pack the Theatres

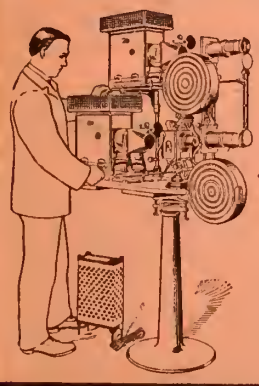
Vol. 5., No. 16. October 16, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."
F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes but none to compare with Motiograph.—PRICES. $150.00 AND UP

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light Write for Catalog to-day

Western Representatives { S. Lubin Geo. Melies FILM

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

On Exhibition at Electrical Show, Madison Square Garden, New York City, October 10th to 21st, by J. H. Hallberg.

Calcium Gas Outfit

Eagle Film Exchange

We handle the most up-to-date European goods, also the following makes:—Great Northern, New York Motion and the Centaur

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY :: :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

Phone 1806 Stuyvesant GREAT EASTERN FILM COMPANY, 21 East 14th St. NEW YORK

HIGH CLASS INDEPENDENT FILM SERVICE

No repeaters, no dark, rainy, scratched film. Full supply of new Independent subjects weekly. Supplies of all kinds pertaining to the Moving Picture trade at cut rates. Write at once for particulars and Price List.

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No 5
POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year
POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current
POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current
POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK

The Hit of the Season

Come to the Electrical Show

at Madison Square Garden, between October 11th and 21st and watch the Moving Picture combination you have been looking for--

HALLBERG
Electric Economizers

for all circuits, for moving picture as well as incandescent lamps; saving 60 to 90 per cent. on the electric current bills. Designed and made by an Electrical Expert.

MOTIOGRAPH

The Flickerless Motion Picture Machine. Giving about 25 per cent. longer exposure on the screen than any other machine, because of the patented dissolving shutter. Designed and built by Moving Picture and Optical Experts.

ELECTRA
PINK LABEL CARBONS

Giving a steady brilliant white light on the screen, which have never had a rival that you would notice. Made by the Greatest Carbon Experts in the world.

HALLBERG SPECIALTIES

including Spot Lights, with color wheels; 4000 candlepower Flaming Arc Lamps, Exhaust Fans, Asbestos Covered Cable, Terminal Connectors, Tungsten Lamps and other necessary supplies for theatres and moving picture men.

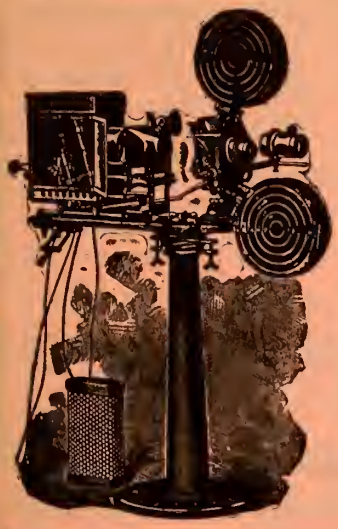
Come to the Electrical Show

and see all of these things. If you cannot come, send for my free booklet No. 5W--It tells you all about it. My goods are the best, and my prices are right.

Every Moving Picture Operator

who presents his license card personally at this office, will receive free tickets to this great show, which would otherwise cost him 50 cents each at the door.

J. H. Hallberg, 28 GREENWICH AVENUE, NEW YORK



PREVENTS TIRED EYES AND HEADACHES

The rapidity of our new shutter has been so perfected that 30 to 40 per cent. less non-exposure (which has heretofore caused the tremulous vibration producing so many tired eyes and headaches) is found in the Motiograph than in any other machine, making perfect brilliancy of picture and sharpness of outline. Together with the rocklike steadiness of the pedestal the flicker is thus entirely eliminated.

Five-cent Theatre and Vaudeville-House Managers increase their bank account with the Motiograph. Patrons who come once will always come again where they know they see the best pictures, positively rest their eyes instead of tiring them, and where all fire risks are removed.

The Motiograph

1909 Theatre Model, Especially Approved by the Underwriters Association

OTHER POINTS OF EXCELLENCE IN THE MOTIOGRAPH found in no other machines are: A special Film Rewind by which the film can be rewound with the main crank in two minutes without removing either reels or magazines, saving time between pictures and entertainments; perfected Fireproof Magazines, Fire Traps, with four rollers and with spring actuated flanged guides, preventing side movement and making it impossible for fire to pass them; never failing Automatic Fireproof Shutters; Perfect Framing Device; Flanged Sprocket Rollers to prevent film being torn or ruined by accidentally running off sprocket wheels; Enclosed Gears and working parts; Perfect Take-up with new form of belt adjuster; Lid Off Wide Open Lamp House making it easily accessible; Improved Arc Lamp with all Hand Wheel Adjustments; Slide Carrier Swing, saving one-third more illustration for the Motion Pictures.

FILMS AND SLIDES

Headquarters for the finest, largest and most complete stock in the United States. The success of an entertainment depends on never allowing the interest of an audience to flag; patrons who have come once will come again when constgnt change of programme is made.

Send For NEW CATALOGUE of Entertainers Supplies explaining everything and showing how big money can be made entertaining the public, sent free. Special literature describing the advantages of the Motiograph for professional entertainers and theatre managers.

CHICAGO PROJECTING CO., E. D. OTIS, Mgr., Supply Dept., 225 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

We Make All Kinds of

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT AND ADVERTISEMENT SLIDES

Ladies Popularity and Baby Contest Slides, plain 50c. Colored 75c.

All accessories and plan for carrying out all contests furnished — Write for Our List and Prices

WRITE US for samples of our plain and tinted titles

NEW PROCESS FILM TITLE COMPANY

Room 405 Northwestern Bldg., 22 Fifth Ave. - - Chicago, Ill.

FOR TWO YEARS THE STANDARD — "CURTAINYLINE"

It will not crack or peel off any kind of a curtain or surface—if properly used.

CURTAINYLINE Will give you better results than any other curtain paint on earth under all conditions. A $5.00 carton will cover 150 square feet of surface. ALL EXCHANGES carry it in stock.

We Build Curtains and Scenery of All Kinds

CURTAINYLINE CURTAIN AND PRODUCING COMPANY, Inc.

Room 405 Northwestern Building, 22 Fifth Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

The North Pole Craze

PHOENIX FILM 112

Approximate Length 500 Feet — COMEDY — Shipped October 7th

This film gives a vivid idea of what happens among those taking sides in the Cook-Peary dispute. It's a comedy that's a laugh from start to finish if there ever was one, and will prove a big attraction any place.

A Child's Plea

PHOENIX FILM 113

Approximate Length 500 Feet — DRAMATIC — Shipped October 7th

This subject is one of those highly dramatic films that appeals to the majority, particularly because it treats of incidents of the life of one of that big class who support motion picture theatres.

Synopsis of these films sent upon request. Exhibitors who cannot get them through their exchanges should write or wire us.

PHOENIX FILM COMPANY

Manufacturers of Independent American Film

700 McCLURG BUILDING - - CHICAGO

★ Geo. Méliès ★

"STAR" FILMS

Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co.

To be released, Wednesday, Oct. 20, 1909

FOR THE CAUSE —OF—

SUFFRAGE

A comedy with modern events, provoking uninterrupted laughter

Exhibitors should ask their exchange for

THE STOLEN WIRELESS

A wartime story which is full of interest

Released Wednesday, October 13

GASTON MÉLIÈS
204 East 38th Street
New York

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL COMPANY
564-572 West Randolph St.
Chicago, Ill.

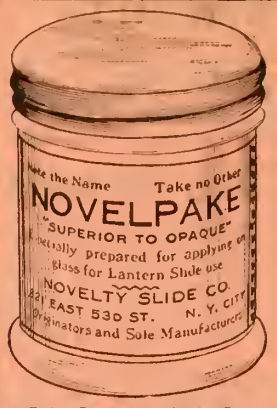
It's a darned sight more important to have the best films you can lay your hands on than to have the swellest "front" that was ever put on a theatre! The sooner you realize that your regular patrons, (not the transients) are the ones who support you, the quicker you'll grasp the fact that they are coming to see your films, not your front. Don't try to be satisfied with anything but the very finest, classiest pictures. The one way to be sure of getting them is to deal with the man who has become the biggest and best renter in the world by means of quality films and quality service! Meaning me!

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

196-198 Lake St., Chicago 111 E. 14th St., N.Y.

Portland, Ore. Minneapolis, Minn. Omaha, Neb.
Evansville. Ind. Salt Lake City, Utah Montreal, Can.



Note the Name Take no Other
NOVELPAKE
"SUPERIOR TO OPAQUE"
Specially prepared for applying on glass for Lantern Slide use
NOVELTY SLIDE CO.
221 EAST 53d ST. N. Y. CITY
Originators and Sole Manufacturers

Send us 25c for a jar of

"Novelpake"

and make your own slides

One jar will make 100 slides

Brush 10c. All Postage Paid

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY

221 East 53d St. NEW YORK CITY

SONG SLIDES

The clearest and best colored slides on the market

$4.00 per set, cash with order or will send C. O. D.

"Singing Bird"

The greatest song success of the season

Published by
JOSEPH MORRIS COMPANY
Philadelphia

Every Slide a Winner

Made exclusively by

The Premo Co.

934 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

EXHIBITORS!

Don't miss this chance we offer you

500 Strictly Independent Reels to select from at cheap prices

PEERLESS FILM EXCHANGE

429 6th Avenue, Cor. 26th Street, - New York

A Symbol

To express power, strength, might, main, position, dominion, men have ever resorted to the Symbol—The crown, the sceptre, the mace, the shield and its variations.

A Symbol may tell an exhaustive tale

OUR SYMBOL IS THE PREMIER FILM SERVICE LABEL

It tells the story of many years spent in LEADING the UPWARD trend of distributing a distinctive Film Service for particular exhibitors.

It is a Symbol which expresses a method of business conduct, broad and liberal; a standard of Film productions higher than ninety and nine have dared accept and a disposition to do the right thing at the right time, and give every man a square deal.

Such then is the basis upon which is founded the power, strength, might, main, position and dominion of our PREMIER FILM SERVICE.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio.

NOTICE TO THE TRADE

My Connections with the Consolidated Amusement Co. of Baltimore will Terminate Dec. 2, 1909, as Manager

Meanwhile, am taking a much needed rest and will not be in charge of the business

Manufacturers, Dealers and Exhibitors please accept thanks for many favors shown me personally

HARRY R. RAVER

Address, APARTMEMT 1, THE CHARLES, 2012 N. CHARLES STREET, BALTIMORE, MD.

PATHÉ FRÈRES

FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Wholesome Subjects

The Trappers

Monday, October 11 Length 804 Feet

Romance of a Poor Girl

Friday, October 15 Length 656 Feet

A TRIUMPH COMING

Film D'Art

Drink

By EMILE ZOLA

Friday, October 22 2106 Feet

The Pathe Professional Machine

is giving excellent results wherever it is used. If you have a first-class house, and want to give a clear, steady picture, why not install the best machine on the market? Price, $225.00

For sale at all FILM exchanges in the United States

NEW YORK
41 W. 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken,
136 Eddy Street - - San Francisco, Cal.

Quality Always--Selig's Record

Show Them "Nuf Ced"

A Western Picture that will make you sit up and take notice

Pet of the Big Horn Ranch

RELEASED OCTOBER 11, 1909

Code Word, Pet — Length, 1000 Feet

Selig's Greatest of all Melodramas

A Tale of the Backwoods

RELEASED OCTOBER 18, 1909

Code Word, Woods — Length, 1000 Feet

Selig's Great Melodrama and Comedy

Lost in Siberia

Code Word, Siberia — Length, 785 Feet

—AND—

Bear and Forebear

Code Word, Bear — Length, 180 Feet

Two On One Reel

WILL BE RELEASED OCTOBER 14, 1909

COMING OCTOBER 21st

Selig's Wild West Feature Film For 1909

The Cowboy Millionaire

This Picture will be the Hit of the Year

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

Tuesday, October 12

RED WING'S GRATITUDE

Red Wing is the daughter of a Brulle Chief and as the drudge of the tepee, is driven to tasks far beyond her strength. One day unable to continue her berry picking, she sinks exhausted to the ground, but the chief seeks with blows and harsh words to drive her to her task. The interference of a little company of emigrants prevents the father from continuing his brutality, and in revenge the chief steals the little daughter of the emigrants, but she is released by the grateful Indian girl, who starts to paddle the child to her father's camp. The warriors follow, and Red Wing is struck by a bullet, but she paddles on and the emigrants, attracted by the report of the gun, appear upon the scene just in time to drive off the redskins and make comfortable the Indian girl's last moments. The star parts are assumed by two real Indians, who have aided the producer in creating the actual atmosphere of an Indian camp, while at the same time they have loaned real Indian accoutrements and clothing. An unusually real and interesting picture of actual Indian life. Length, 562 feet.

TOO MANY ON THE JOB

Samuel Dobson wants to go to an important banquet. The tailor sends home dress trousers a full two inches too long. In vain he appeals to his wife, his daughter and his sister-in-law to make the desired alterations. Each has some good excuse to offer, but each in turn repents and makes the desired cut, with the result that poor Dobson finds that his trousers are four inches too short instead of two inches too long. A brisk little comedy picture that is sure to get the laughs. Length, 410 feet.

Saturday, October 16

THE DIVER'S REMORSE

An unusually novel subject dealing with the men who wear the rubber armor of those who fight in the depths of the sea. Deep sea divers are employed for the pictures, which give an admirable exposition of diving methods, and the scenes at the bottom of the sea are wonderfully realistic as produced from suggestions made by the divers themselves. An unusual subject with a thrilling story well acted. A genuine novelty. Length, 900 feet.

Do not fail to get our posters from your exchange or from the A. B. C. Company Cleveland, Ohio

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company,
125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative,
913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 OCTOBER 16, 1909 No. 16

Editorial.

Another Lost Opportunity.

Mr. A. R. Dugmore, probably the best known photographer of animals in this country, is back from several months' stay in East Africa, where he has been photographing the wild and rare animals of that region. Some of his work has already appeared in Collier's Magazine and has deservedly attracted favorable notice and comment. There have been several interviews with Mr. Dugmore published in the New York papers during the last few days, but we fail to notice any mention on the part of Mr. Dugmore of his having used a moving picture camera. It is regrettable that so intelligent and skillful a worker should have failed in this respect. Mr. Dugmore is not alone in his inability to recognize the fact that more and more the public is clamoring for moving pictures of the wonders of nature, and particularly those of the animal kingdom. We have in mind the names of several men who are doing great work in what we would call exploration photography. For example, there is Mr. Monsen amongst the Indians. He has a fine collection of stationary photographs of Indian aboriginals in Arizona and elsewhere. Then, again, there are the recent polar explorers or self-styled explorers. These have brought many interesting stationary photographs of the polar regions.

In each case the traveler or explorer seems to have unaccountably overlooked the claims of the moving picture camera to a place in the equipment. We are at a loss to account for this, unless it be on the grounds that people who make it their business to produce stationary photographs are not aware of the enormous public interest which attaches to a moving picture of rareties of scenery and life. Of course, it is far more difficult to successfully use a moving picture camera than it is a snapshot camera. But the difficulties are not so great that they cannot be overcome.

It cannot be too widely known that the interest attaching to moving pictures is continually on the increase, whereas the interest surrounding the ordinary stationary photograph, except in rare cases, is pretty well at a standstill. The world, indeed, has been pretty well covered by the stationary photograph. People are demanding motion, as is evidenced by the excitement created by aviation photographs, Hudson-Fulton photographs and other subjects on the moving picture screen.

Whenever a scientific or geographical expedition is to be undertaken we would put in a claim for the presence of the moving picture camera in the equipment. Shackelton, who got near to the South Pole, was wise in his generation, and his moving pictures of the Antarctic ice fields are attracting great attention in Europe. It is not clear whether a moving picture camera figures in Mr. Roosevelt's equipment. We hope it does, and that the distinguished ex-President's results will be publicly shown. The various film manufacturing concerns are always to the fore with the moving picture camera in their enterprises. It now remains for the private individual, the traveling photographer, explorer, geographer and the like never to undertake his journeys without a moving picture camera, as he is always sure to find a market for his pictures and interest a large section of the public.

Rumors Run to Earth.

Alarmists and such trade papers as subsist only on the most gullible have been spreading the rumor that Chas. Pathe is in this country to discover the reason for a falling off in business; also the canard that Pathe and Lubin were about to sever allegiance with the Motion Picture Patents Company and cater to the independent market. While no credence was given to these items of news among the trade, they started other rumors; so, acting on the assumption that there is never smoke unless there is fire, we interviewed the heads of both concerns, who each indignantly repudiated the rumors as being without the least foundation. As a matter of fact, Chas. Pathe is not in this country, neither does he take any active interest in the American output of his concern, which is in capable hands and who report that sales show a substantial increase instead of a falling off.

Much is also made of the report that Pathe is using other than Eastman film stock, it even being termed a deep laid scheme by the Patents Company to corner all the raw stock and thus harass the independents. Nothing to it. Eastman N. I. stock is used exclusively in Pathe's American factory and his reason for using other raw stock abroad is known to us to be a purely personal one.

* * *

The Film Import and Trading Company, whom we announced last week as having taken over the agency for a large number of European makes of films, are also the subjects of some absurd rumors which we are authorized to characterize as fabrications. As they have been unable to fill all the orders received for Ansco film, for which they are selling agents, it has been said that this is part of a scheme to thwart independent American manufacturers, get control of the entire independent film business of the country and then sell it out to the Motion Picture Patents Company! This absurd rumor we are also asked to emphatically deny. We are assured by the managing director of the F. I. & T. Co. that if they have one object in view besides minding their own business, which is the marketing to the best advantage the products of the various concerns for which they are agents, that object is to help in placing the independent film business of the country on a substantial and profitable footing—not as an integral part of the Patents Company, but as a worthy competitor.

It may seem like wasting valuable space to refute these inventions of meddlesome busybodies, but we do so here to save ourselves and our readers much needless correspondence.

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

CHAPTER V.

SHOWING THE PICTURE.

The methods of showing the picture in a moving picture house are many and varied. There seems, indeed, no generally recognized way in which this can best be done. More often than not, expediency gives way to the maximum of effectiveness. Firstly, there is the simple screen or sheet upon which the picture is projected either from the front or back. This is the original and it should be said the primitive method of showing a stereopticon view. It shows the audience too much, that is to say, it does not heighten the effect of the illusion, which should be the aim of those who project either stationary or moving photographs. It is not even a compromise in stage effect; in the latter, as everybody is aware, the aim of the stage producer is to create an effect of illusion—the effect of looking upon a scene or play in progress through an aperture or opening. In other words, the assumption is that the wall of a room or the side of an outdoor scene is removed and gives one, as it were, a privileged view of what is taking place, whilst those who are enacting their parts of the scene are unconscious of being under observation.

It is precisely this effect which the moving picture is designed to create. If you show your picture on an ordinary screen in full view of your audience, it is obvious that you do not create the effect of an ordinary stage setting scene through an aperture, such as the stage proscenium. Another way of showing the picture is upon a wall which has a whitened opaque surface surrounded by an ornamented frame. This is a very good system in its way, but it does not give the full effect of stage setting. The audience never loses consciousness that they are looking at a picture on a wall. Of course, this method does not allow of the picture being projected from the back. As we have said, it is a fairly satisfactory method, but it only partly accentuates the illusion of actuality.

It cannot be too strongly insisted upon that the moving picture at its best, in respect of the sensuous impression which it creates, is, allowing for the absence of the spoken word, an almost perfect substitute for a stage play, and that therefore it demands exactly the same treatment in the theater as does an ordinary play. It should have all the assistance of good music and effects of lighting, as is being daily found out and admitted by leading film makers. Indeed, the musical end of matters, as we shall take occasion to point out in a subsequent article, is receiving more and more attention. Meanwhile, we have to discuss what in our opinion is the ideal way of showing the picture on the stage.

To our mind, something in the nature of a compromise between the ordinary and a moving picture stage is desirable. Let us imagine the ordinary stage opening. It may be forty or fifty feet across and proportionately deep. But you do not want a picture that size. It seems to us that the best plan in such a case is to set the moving picture screen well back on the stage and to connect the sides of the house by suitably painted cloths or side pieces so that when the house is darkened and the picture is shown the audience have the impression that they are looking at the enactment of a scene set a little way back on the stage. They look at it, as it were, through an aperture or tunnel, at the side of which there is nothing to distract their attention, but rather something in the nature of a design complementary to the picture which shall concentrate their attention on the latter.

The whole problem, in short, is an optical one, and its solution is in the nature of a compromse between the creation of a perfect illusion and the observance of surrounding conditions. Let us illustrate what we mean. Sometimes in a stage play a play within a play is shown, as in the case of "Hamlet." Skilful stage-craftsmanship makes the illusion complete. Audience and players are one for the time being. At present there is very little attention paid to this question of illusion. There is too much of the idea on the part of the thoughtless moving picture exhibitor that all he has to do is to show something on his sheet and the audience will be satisfied. Not so. The average audience likes illusion, and the greater the illusion the better it likes it. An ordinary stage play, after all, is only an illusion. The players are mere puppets temporarily filling their parts. But this is part of the illusion, together with that of the lighting, the scenery, the music, the other incidentals, which, if well done, make for completeness of success, and the audience goes away satisfied. The critics say nice things about the illusion; the public flocks to the theater night after night; actors, managers and others all make fame and money out of the cleverly managed series of illusions or make-believes.

The problem before the moving picture exhibitor is identical. The film is the play; he has at his command the resources of music, lighting, the proscenium opening or its equivalent. It is up to him, therefore, to so calibrate all these component parts of the illusion that the effect upon the mind of his audience shall be so completely illusive as to satisfy them. In other words, he must find out the best way of showing his picture to produce effect, and this is what we have endeavored to tell him in this chapter.

(To be continued.)

Vocalized Moving Pictures.

The singing and talking photograph is not progressing in public favor so quickly as perhaps could be wished, but probably we are on the eve of important developments. As we have already announced, the Cinephone synchronizing device is ready for the market and with the general publicity given to the ingenious plan for keeping the sound of the phonographic record and the movement of the figure of the photograph in unison, vocalized moving picture photography should attract increasing interest.

With the Cameraphone at present in abeyance public attention is divided between the Cinephone and the Gaumont Chronophone. The latter is having considerable vogue in various parts of the United States and Canada. That vogue, however, will probably very largely extend if the public interest in vocalized moving pictures becomes more general or, we should say, more generally evident.

The public interest in the matter is unquestionably very strong nevertheless. For we constantly hear people predicate the time when the vocalized moving picture will be the exception and not the rule. The public, in short, is ready for it. There is one theater in New York City, and only one to our knowledge, where singing pictures are shown, and these are favorably received.

Generally, then, it would appear that we are on the eve of important developments in the scientific conjunction of the phonograph with the photograph. Possibly the practical details in certain instances are not at that stage of perfection where they might be; or they may be other causes which are retarding the general adaptation of the idea. But this fact is abundantly clear, namely, that the time is ripe for the popularization of vocalized moving pictures and that so soon as the manufacturers are ready they will find the public ready.

Plain Talks to Theatre Managers and Operators.

CHAPTER XXI.

Ventilation.

The matter of ventilation is one of much importance, both Summer and Winter. There are too many owners and managers who seem to imagine that stirring up the air with wall or ceiling fans is "ventilation." It is nothing of the sort. Ceiling and wall fans perform an important office in cooling the theater, since rapidly moving air, for reasons not necessary to go into, produces a sensation of coolness to the human body. Ventilation, however, does not necessarily have much to do with coolness. The office of ventilation is to purify the air in a room by removing it, substituting out of doors air instead. Here we have two separate and distinct propositions as applied to Summer and one as applied to Winter, viz.: In Summer a movement of the air by wall or ceiling fans, or both, to produce coolness, and a pumping out of the air by an exhaust fan or vent flues to purify. In Winter we have only the changing of the air, but that is even more important in Winter than in Summer, since the house is then tightly closed. As to ceiling or wall fans for cooling, their size and number will depend, of course, entirely on the size of the house, but comparatively large fans are always best for several reasons. It does not pay to buy cheap fans! They are an abomination and source of noise, continual trouble and expense. By all means get good fans. It will pay you well to do so. But having procured them do not imagine you can stick them up, make the connection and let them run for six months without attention. Some fans are self-oiling, but that does not mean they will run for six months with one filling of the cups without serious damage to the journals. Nor does it pay to try to make them do it! Oil is cheap—considerably cheaper than worn and cut journals and ruined armatures. Where wall fans are only run three or four hours a day they may be allowed, unless something goes wrong with them, to run for two weeks without attention, but it is an excellent rule to set certain days, in such cases the first and fifteenth of the month, for overhauling the fans, and make it an invariable rule to attend to this duty on these days. The "overhauling" should consist of emptying the oilcups and refilling with fresh oil, examining the whole fan and cleaning it thoroughly, closely examining the commutator and brushes, replacing brushes that are getting too short and seeing that the brushes make good contact with the commutator bars. If there is sparking at the brushes the trouble should be remedied or it may in time cause serious damage. It may be caused by an almost invisible bit of copper pulled across the insulation between two commutator bars. This may be removed with No. 00 standpaper or by very careful scraping with a knife blade. The oil in the cups may look all right, but it gets dirty and needs renewing. All this involves some work, but there is no excellence without labor—and it pays, in the long run, in dollars and cents, in temper saving and in satisfaction both to yourself and your patrons. You may say, "O, my fans run all right without all that monkey business!" Granted, but your fans will be in the junk pile when those of the fellow who follows my directions will be practically as good as new and you will have spent dollars in repairs where he has spent dimes. Your service will have been more or less unsatisfactory, at least at times, while his will have been practically perfect at all times. Wall fans should be placed at convenient height and set to blow backward diagonally towards the audience's faces, but the height of center of draught should be such that excessive air current will not be felt in the seats. A little experimenting will determine the proper angle to set the fans, but it pays to observe these details closely.

For ventilation there are two methods, viz.: The exhaust fan and the vent flue. With the latter I do not propose to deal, since that is a problem for a ventilation engineer. Where practical it is best to locate the exhaust fan at the rear (stage end) of the house, since then the air will be drawn the full length of the room when the front doors are opened. The fans should be of ample size, since it is much cheaper to operate a large, slow-speed fan than a small, high-speed one; moreover, the low-speed fan is more nearly noiseless—an important consideration in a theater, especially if there be acting. The larger, lower speed fan is much the best in every way. It is stated that in a crowded theater the air should be changed once in five or six minutes, but the writer is unable to discover what this assertion is based on.

Other authorities say there should be 1,500 cubic feet of air per person per hour. Again I have been unable to discover what this is based on. The average person, so say the medical fraternity, breathes about 25 inches of air per breath and breathes an average of 18 times per minute. This would indicate an hourly consumption of about 15 cubic feet of air per person. But the human body gives off gases aside from this which help render the air impure. Still the writer believes, and is willing to assert, that an entire change of the air once every tin minutes is amply sufficient when the house is full to capacity. In fact he very much questions if even this time is not much shorter than there is any real need of. He is a believer in thorough ventilation and plenty of fresh air, but there is no earthly sense in throwing away money pumping more air than is necessary. In Summer the air becomes impure much faster by reason of the perspiration thrown off which carries with it impurities. The writer lays no claim to being anything even approaching an expert in ventilation, but common sense seems to tell him that 1,500 cubic feet of air per person per hour is excessive as is the changing of air every five or six minutes. You will have to "show me" the necessity for any such air movement as that. Having decided how often you want the air changed any fan manufacturer will be able to provide a suitable sized fan to do the required work.

The fan speed should be regulated by a controller, however, since it will not be necessary to run it to speed when the house is but partially filled; also it may be necessary to slow it down when singing or vaudeville is on. And now a further word concerning fans. Some makers set their fan blades at a wide angle and run them slow speed, while others prefer the high speed and slight blade angle. Common sense will tell you that the fan with heavy blade angle will move more air than will one with slight blade angle, speed being equal. It therefore follows that you can run the wide angle bladed fan at lower speed and secure the same results. Such a fan is considerably less noisy in operation, besides requiring less power per cubic foot of air moved. The most effective speeds for properly designed exhaust fans will be found to be about as follows: 24-inch fan, 700; 30-inch, 550, and 36-inch, 450 revolutions per minute. The speed controller should be located either at the main switchboard, at the stage switchboard or in the operating room, as seems best in the individual case. In purchasing an exhaust fan, as in other things, don't look at the price so much as at the quality. That is to say, don't buy a poor fan because it is cheap. It will be very costly by and by if you run it long.

(To be continued.)

Notes of the Trade.

The last of the Vitagraph releases of "Les Miserables" will be published in November. This will include the remainder of the story and introduce several remarkable scenic effects in addition to the dramatic incidents of the barricade, the flight through the sewers of Paris, and the death of Jean after the marriage of Cosette to M. Marius.

* * *

We are informed by James B. Clark, president of the Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Company, that the accident in the Columbia Film Exchange, with which he is also connected, was grossly exaggerated in the newspapers, as well as in some trade papers, which referred to it as a film explosion. The loss also was trivial, as the day's shipments had not arrived and all the other new stock was out on circuit. The loss of the old stock did not prevent the Columbia from doing business as usual, and they did not have to turn over their customers to the Independent Film Exchange, as stated in a paper which is famous for distorting the news. Neither, by the way, is the Independent Film Exchange a branch of the Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co., as also stated by this same oracle.

* * *

That the Film Import and Trading Company, of New York, appreciate the necessities of the moving picture business, is evidenced by the fact that they have completely equipped a room on the third floor of their building at 127 East Twenty-third street, for demonstrating the productions they are exclusive agents for. Their first release of European feature films, under their contract with Raleigh & Robert, of Paris, will be made Tuesday, November 2, and they extend a cordial invitation to not only the exchanges, but the exhibitors as well, to visit their exhibition room and satisfy themselves that these pictures are what they claim for them: the most wonderful ever shown. We would advise all exchanges to communicate at once with the Film Import and Trading Company, with the view of securing these splendid goods on release day, November 2.

Observations by Our Man About Town.

A Justice of the Supreme Court in New York has just decided that the Court cannot enjoin the police from interfering with moving picture shows that are operated on Sunday. Injunctions of this character first became popular in December, 1908, when Mayor McClellan threw his bomb into the camp of the moving picture exhibitors of Greater New York. The exhibitors hurriedly organized, and lawyers found themselves pressed for time in getting out injunctions against the police. It has taken a little over nine months to get a Supreme Court decision on the question. This may be due in a measure to the Summer vacation intervening. The New York courts have just started in to work again after a vacation of three months. The decision is handed down just one month before the election. It is remarkable how things do happen sometimes. A talk with exhibitors on the matters failed to unearth any dismay on their part. Some of them evince a thankfulness. They take it for granted that as election time is but about a month distant the picture shows will not be annoyed by the police for several weeks at least. The police will be kept busy looking after the political gatherings and polls and the pictures will escape their attention in the meantime.

* * *

"It seems to me," said a prominent exhibitor, "that Providence and the law work hand in hand against us city exhibitors. Coney Island and other resorts pull through the season without a scratch, but just as soon as we settle down to business, trouble comes upon us. Why could not that decision have been made last Spring, or the early Summer, and some of the trouble put on the shoulders of those who have not as much at stake as we have?"

* * *

This complaining sentiment is shared by many exhibitors, but on calmly surveying the field it would seem that the city exhibitors need not, after all, anticipate a repetition of what they endured last Fall and Winter. The conditions this year are not the same. Last Fall and Winter the churches and allied organizations were making strong, persistent demands for the regulation of moving picture shows in their bearings upon the minds of children. The campaign made was a determined one and led to considerable cross-fire work at the many public meetings. Since that time a Board of Censorship has been organized, and since its existence many who were radical a year ago have gradually reached the conclusion that the picture shows are not so bad, after all. It is an indisputable fact that many people who ranked with the radicals against the pictures had never seen them, but were influenced by what they had been told, and these people have since endorsed the pictures as an innocent and instructive method of entertainment. This is a big point gained, and it is not likely that these people will aid any movement against the exhibitors if the latter conduct their places on a conservative basis. Concert-hall methods must be avoided, particularly on Sundays, and the place of exhibition must be maintained on a scale that will be inviting to women and children as well as to men.

* * *

Naturally, the lot of the exhibitor is a hard one. He must meet the requirements of numerous municipal departments and officials, and not only please one, but all. Exits, fireproofing, light, ventilation and seating comforts worry him night and day, but for such is he an exhibitor and he must bear his burden patiently.

* * *

If the exhibitors were better organized, perhaps many of the burdens could be avoided, or at least lightened. The only time they appear to be able to get together is when some scare comes along in the form of a municipal act or a court decision, and then they are really not together. In all such movements expenditures are necessary to perfect the organization and carry out its plans, and the schemes some exhibitors resort to in order to escape their share of the expense is little short of criminal. Take, for example, a condition that existed last Winter at a time when some men expressed a willingness to mortgage their homes to raise money for contribution to a plan that afforded relief. Their checks were accepted and they secured what they sought, but the checks were never paid. In some cases there were no funds to meet them, but in others payments were actually stopped, although the relief for which they were given was secured. No one can imagine a more despicable act than this, and it is not surprising that an organization should fail in its operations when such men are in its ranks. It is but fair to say that such men were a small minority in the exhibitors' association last Winter, but they were sufficient in numbers to discourage and disgust the men who were working hard and in good faith for the interests of the exhibitors as a whole.

* * *

Should the approaching Winter reveal conditions that will force the exhibitors to again combine for united action, it is hoped there will not be handicaps to the movement as those just referred to. An influential and enthusiastic exhibitor who was prominently identified with the movement last Winter has expressed a willingness to again actively participate should the exhibitors be required to take united action, but he gives fair warning that those who duped the organization must be forced to care for themselves, and an active organization must be perfected in time to give every opportunity to test the membership before ingrates can share the fruits attained by the hard workers.

* * *

An exhibitor suggested the other day that it was time the moving picture men took an interest in politics. The idea is a good one. Business men in all branches and labor men take an active interest in politics, and they do it openly for the protection of their interests. The moving picture people cannot do likewise too soon. If all the film exchange owners and the moving picture exhibitors in Greater New York got to work and influenced votes they would receive more respectful attention at the hands of some people who depend upon politics for their positions. The exhibitors have been too timorous. They could put the fear of defeat in the heart of many men who have been crushing them by grafting methods. They not only have an excellent chance to show strength by personal solicitation, but also have a powerful weapon by which to advocate the election of this or that candidate in their projecting machine and screen. Let the exhibitors think this over. Now is the time to do it. With their resources they can make a campaign that will make some people sit up and take notice. Taking a commercial view of it, there could not be a better drawing card for the nickelodeon during the election season. Bear in mind, however, if this is undertaken by the exhibitors it should be operated on principle. They must not become mercenary. The object should be to force recognition. It can be done by united action, and if accomplished the exhibitors will be better able to demand and secure fair and equitable consideration. It will be the first step towards wiping out the cancerous growth of graft and convincing the bleeders that the moving picture business is a legitimate one and not dependent upon concessions such as are accorded gambling and other resorts.

* * *

Some exhibitors have raised objection to this proposition on the ground that if the candidates the picture men advocated should be defeated, the exhibitors would be persecuted worse than ever. There is only one answer to that: Are you willing to take a chance to better your condition? Habitual submission to continual oppression kills manhood. Let the exhibitors go into the fight like the candidates do—to win! Failure would not necessarily bring upon them the anger of the powers. A good fight, though a losing one, frequently wins admiration, and if the exhibitors secured a little consideration, much less admiration, the effort would not have been in vain. There are a good many shrewd politicians among the exhibitors, and if they went into a combined movement with their fellow exhibitors all would be more at ease than they are at present. They have given up enough graft. They should now try political persuasion. OLIVER.

The new Majestic Theater, in Denbury, Conn., have installed, through the Actograph Company, a Power's Cameragraph and double dissolving view stereopticon complete and a Power's Inductor.

NEWS FROM MURDOCK.

We have received the following notice from the office of the International Projecting and Producing Company:

"Under date of October 5, we are in receipt of cable advices from Mr. Murdock, of Paris, stating that new contracts had been made and signed with the European manufacturers for the exclusive American agency for their product, and that these contracts will eliminate all the abuses which had tended to militate against the progress of the International Company and the Independent cause."

SPECIAL NOTICE.

Managers of Moving Picture Theaters will be presented FREE with a fine portrait slide of Otto T. Bannard, Republican Candidate for Mayor, by calling at The Henry B. Ingram Company, 42 West Twenty-eighth street, New York.

WHAT IS NEEDED.

By F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

Mr. Van C. Lee, in the issue of October 2, assures us that what is lacking in moving pictures is the stereoscopic effect: perspective. He leaves the impression that with this one added thing moving pictures will be perfect.

The writer, in all friendliness, joins issue with Mr. Lee. That the added item of perspective (stereoscopic effect) would be of immense advantage, none will deny, but the real trouble with moving pictures as an amusement, to the writer's mind lies not there, but rather in the lack of perfect photography coupled with miserable projection and rain marks. That moving pictures draw equally as well as vaudeville has been demonstrated right here in Chicago in numerous instances by theaters cutting out the vaudeville end of the program without a cent's loss in business. The public will pay to see good pictures, properly put on. The trouble with the average (I use the word "average" advisedly) moving picture theater manager is that he seems to be totally lacking in discernment as between a well and a poorly projected picture. A picture is a picture with him so long as the outlines of the figures can be seen. Brilliancy of illumination and sharpness of projection mean nothing to him. Shadows on the curtain he never sees. But the public visits many theaters and notes the difference in pictures at various houses. Given the right sort of film in good condition, a good machine and appliances, the writer will engage to put on a picture which will please any audience, regardless of the fact that it has not perspective in any marked degree. But the matter of lack of perspective decreases inversely with the distance from the curtain. At the rear end of the house the picture will be found to have perspective in a marked degree, though near the curtain it is as flat as a board. Poor photography is still with us, though the manufacturers are making rapid headway in perfecting this item. There is no one thing can justly be named as "the" thing wrong with the moving picture theater, but there are quite a number of items which go to make up an indictment which has been returned by the grand jury of the public, and this indictment must be answered without undue delay. In point of importance the writer would array them about as follows: (a) Cheap service with rainy films. (b) Ignorant or careless operator. (c) Lack of brilliancy in projection light. (d) Shadows on curtain. (e) Vibration of film due to poor perforation, shrunken film, worn sprocket holes or worn machine parts. (f) Poor photography (this would have been about "b" a year ago). (g) Lack of perspective to those near curtain.

These are all faults; but, on the other hand, in each and every item there is being improvement made, at least to some extent. But let me say right here, as I have said before, that owners and managers have got to wake up to the paramount importance of what is behind the wall of the operating room before the best results will ever be attained. The day of the boy and the cubbyhole is passing, and it cannot pass too quickly for the good of the moving picture business as a whole.

SOME NEW DEVICES WHICH LOOK GOOD.

By F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

Mr. W. W. Curtis, 56 Fifth avenue, Chicago, recently showed to the writer two devices which promise exceedingly well. The first is a slide carrier which works with a treadle. The carrier attaches to the front of the condenser. On either side is a small, square metal box, in one of which the slides are placed, not one at a time, but the whole illustration of a song in a bunch. The slides are set on edge and are held against the back side of the box by a spring. After placing in the box they are not touched by the hands at all until all are run. The treadle is worked by the foot and the change is practically instantaneous. The slides enter the box on opposite side automatically, and all that is necessary when the song is finished is to lift the whole bunch out, reverse their order and insert them in the other box. The writer has not seen this device tried out in actual show practice, but it looks thoroughly practical. It leaves both the operator's hands free for rewinding or anything else he desires to do as he runs the song. It avoids much handling of the slides, which tends to diminish ornamental (?) finger-marks and does away with the jarring of the carrier while removing and inserting slides.

The other device is a safety shutter. This is merely a hinged loop-guard with a finger which engages a projection on a metal shutter covering the aperture. When the finger is engaged with the projection the shutter is wide open and the loop-guard back (toward the upper loop) as far as it will go. Should the film break inside the gate, the upper loop would, of course, instantly increase in size, pushing the hinged guard ahead and releasing the shutter, which drops over the aperture. The device may be used in conjunction with the ordinary automatic shutter and seems to eliminate any and all danger from fire. The one weakness of the automatic shutter is that it offers no protection should the film break between the aperture and intermittent sprocket. By this device such danger as exists from that source is eliminated. The device is entirely practical.

Mr. A. W. Crowe, Watertown, S. D., has sent to the writer a device for projecting the image of the carbon points to test out. I have tested the device and have no hesitation in pronouncing it excellent. It is attached to the side of the lamp-house and projects the carbon points so clearly that even the small heat cracks are plainly seen. Not only this, but the flow of current is visible in a sort of moving, purple shadow. It allows the operator to see every detail of his craters—their exact shape, size, etc., etc., thus enabling him to secure much better light. Moreover, it enables him to study the electric arc intelligently and see the exact effect of every lamp or carbon adjustment; and all this is constantly before the operator's eyes without the least eye-strain or inconvenience. Mr. Crowe says he desires to sell the invention outright to some manufacturer. His address is Box 42, Watertown, Wis.

HALLBERG'S EXHIBIT AT THE ELECTRICAL SHOW IN MADISON SQUARE GARDEN NEXT WEEK.

The annual Electrical Show will open to the public on Monday, October 11, and will continue for ten days. J. H. Hallberg, 30 Greenwich avenue, has secured one of the most prominent spaces, immediately on the right hand on entering the main floor of the Garden, where he will exhibit the celebrated "Hallberg" Automatic Electric Economizers for moving picture and incandescent lamps, in full operation in connection with the Motiograph moving picture machine and combined stereopticon outfit, and the Electra Pink Label carbons. The exhibit is promised to be of unusual interest to moving picture men, because it will mark the first appearance in Greater New York of the Motiograph, thousands of which are operating in other parts of the country, and for which Mr. Hallberg has been appointed special agent. The many good points and great saving qualities of the "Hallberg" Economizers will be fully illustrated and explained, as will also the perfect design and construction of the Motiograph, and special attention will be given to those who visit the exhibit by Mr. Hallberg, who will be in charge personally. There will also be exhibited the "Hallberg" 4,000 candle-power flaming arc lamps, spot lights, terminal connectors and other specialties.

The Kleine Optical Company, of New York City, will furnish the films for the exhibit and some very choice selections will be shown.

ESSANAY CAPTURES WORLD'S CHAMPIONSHIP BASEBALL SERIES.

The Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, by again securing exclusive rights for the world's baseball championship series, are justly entitled to the appellation of pennant winners.

They have secured exclusive motion picture rights for the great Detroit-Pittsburg championship games, now being played, which subject will be released immediately upon the termination of the series. A corps of competent camera men left Chicago Wednesday and arrived in Pittsburg Thursday morning. During the day they looked over the field and secured reservations for camera booths. A half-dozen cameras were stationed about the field, ready to catch every play of any importance made during the game. Close-up views of Hans Wagner, Tyrus Cobb, Tommy Leach, "Smiling Bill" Donovan, Fred Clarke, and other stellar lights of the Pittsburg and Detroit teams, were secured, besides the most sensational plays during the Friday game. The enterprise of the Essanay Company is to be commended. Their film, "Taft in Chicago and at the Ball Game," scored a big hit all over the country and sold to a record-breaking limit. Their pictures of the world's baseball championship game of 1908 were masterly in point of photography and received much praise.

Duluth, Minn.—The Marshall Company has purchased the Lyceum Theater here.

"The Red Domino," a Great Northern rendering of this famous play, is the headliner among the Independent films for the coming week. The demand for Great Northern film is now so great that the American agent is figuring on putting out an extra reel.

National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures.

Established by The People's Institute, 96 Fifth avenue, corner Fifteenth Street, New York City, N. Y.

Governing Board.

Rev. Dr. Geo. Wm. Knox, Chairman.
Charity Organization Society—W. Frank Persons.
Children's Aid Society—C. A. Prosser.
City Vigilance League—Matthew Beattie.
Ethical-Social League—George William Knox.
League for Political Education—Robert E. Ely.
Neighborhood Workers' Association—Howard Bradstreet.
Public Education Association—Mrs. Miriam Sutro Price.
Society for the Prevention of Crime—T. L. McClintock.
Woman's Municipal League—Miss M. Serena Townsend.
Members at Large: John Collier, Mrs. Josephine Redding, Albert Shiels, Charles Sprague Smith, Gustave Straubenmuller, Miss Evangeline E. Whitney.

Committee on Censoring.

Albert Shiels, Chairman; Michael M. Davis, Jr.; Joseph F. Driscoll, Milton Gosdorfer, Wm. M. McKenzie, William J. O'Shea, Mrs. Augusta Prescott, C. A. Prosser, Mrs. Josephine Redding.

Executive Committee.

Michael M. Davis, Jr., Chairman; Howard Bradstreet, Ralph Folks, Thomas L. McClintock, Mrs. Augusta Prescott, Mrs. Josephine Redding, Albert Shiels.

Officers.

John Collier, General Secretary; Frederick N. Cooke, Jr., Executive Secretary; Walter Storey, Censorship Secretary.
'Phone, 3843 Chelsea.

The National Board of Censorship has been organized for the improvement of motion pictures and for their further extension in this country as social and educational forces. Its work consists of censoring moving pictures and dealing constructively with the social, civic and educational problems connected therewith.

History and Organization.

As a result of the rapid development of this business during recent years and the problems consequent in a number of cities of the country, an investigation of conditions was undertaken by The People's Institute, a civic organization of New York City. A Board of Censorship for New York was formed, which has developed into the present National Board. For nearly five months every moving picture film shown in New York City has been censored. The demand of the country at large for the supervision of moving pictures has led to the extension of the work to national scope.

The Board is under the general sponsorship of an Advisory Committee, including many persons of national standing. The Governing Board, including representatives of civic societies, will be enlarged from time to time by the addition of new groups and by national affiliations. The Executive and Censoring Committees, subject to the Governing Board, undertake the active work and the direction of the secretarial staff.

The funds for the work are being secured by The People's Institute, which has appealed to trade interests and to public-spirited individuals for contributions.

Scope of the Work.

1. Censorship of Films.
2. Local Improvement of Motion Picture Shows.
3. Encouragement of Social and Educational Possibilities

1. Censorship of Motion Picture Films.

The motion picture might be censored in two places. First, in the moving picture theater itself; second, in the hands of the manufacturer before it is put upon the market. It is obviously a great economy to censor the pictures before they leave the manufacturer. The motion picture film business is highly centralized. The greater proportion of the films imported from abroad and also those made in this country pass through the hands of the trade in New York City before they are put on the market anywhere. The Board of Censorship, examining the pictures at their source, is thus able not only to avoid duplication of labor, but to bring its standards to bear upon the makers of films at the strategic point of the business.

This Board now censors all the pictures of companies controlling 80 per cent. of films issued for circulation within the United States, and is gradually extending its censorship to the entire trade.

National Development: It is the purpose of the Board to co-operate with cities in every part of the country in their efforts to handle the motion picture problem. The business is so organized, as has been pointed out, that no local censorship can without great labor watch the entire output of pictures sent to a city, nor is it possible for any such local body to exercise a large influence upon the standards of the manufacturers of films. This Board will supply to any city or any responsible individual or organization within any city lists of all motion pictures which have been examined and passed by the Board. This information can be supplied weekly and should obviate the necessity of re-censoring such pictures.

Picture films issued prior to the establishment of the censorship on March 26, 1909, are still on the market, but in the nature of the business will gradually be displaced.

Standards of Censorship.

The Board has found that merely censoring pictures is but part of its work. Its aim is to improve the quality of pictures made, as well as to eliminate the undesirable. The criticism of the Board is sought by manufacturer and importer upon pictures, or upon projects for pictures before these are manufactured. The Board deems such constructive advisory work an important part of its program.

No iron rules can be laid down for the judging of motion pictures, nor does the Committee on Censoring assume to formulate such. In general, scenes depicting crime and vice and those depending upon immorality or suggestiveness are frowned upon. This does not imply the cutting out of any representation of a crime, for such might be incidental to an entirely proper and desirable story. Crime or violence for its own sake, however, indecency or immoral suggestiveness, are not permitted to pass. The Board constantly bears in mind that pictures may be displayed before immature persons. On the other hand, the Board realizes that it is dealing with a business; that this business cannot be improved all at once, and that patience combined with steady pressure, exercised always in the right direction, will in the long run yield the best results.

Since the establishment of the Board, there has been a marked and generally recognized improvement in the grade of pictures submitted, and this, we believe, will be permanent and increasing as the manufacturers realize our standards. We must bear in mind that a large percentage of the films are made abroad and that the influence upon the manufacturers can, for this reason alone, be but gradual. What is absolutely bad can be eliminated promptly, but the constructive work of the Board must proceed slowly, step by step.

The actual censoring of pictures is done by the Committee on Censoring, the members of which give their time without compensation. This committee is at present composed chiefly of persons connected with public and private educational institutions in New York, and of two moving picture exhibitors.

2. Local Improvement.

Although the censoring of moving pictures can best be accomplished by one national board, such conditions as the vaudeville, proper lighting of houses, sanitation, etc., that are distinctly local, can be most effectively handled by each community for itself. It is the experience of this Board that the majority of motion picture exhibitors strive for decent shows, and that co-operation with such exhibitors is most important. The National Board, if desired, will assist in such local work in every possible way.

3. Social and Educational Possibilities.

In addition to the work of censoring, the Board is endeavoring to develop the social possibilities of moving pictures. The utmost encouragement is given to any movement on the part of the manufacturers or exhibitors tending toward making the moving picture show more valuable as a means of entertainment.

The Board also sees in the moving picture an agent which can educate. The right kind of entertainment may itself be educational, and the moving picture is also capable of use in direct pedagogical ways. The Board is using every effort to open up this field among public and private institutions. At the same time the business standpoint must be recognized and the practical value of producing films for educational use demonstrated to the trade. A number of "model" shows have been arranged by the Board, in which speakers, as well as pictures, have emphasized the educational possibilities ahead. This work will be continued.

Influence of the Board.

While the Board has agreements with manufacturers, as above indicated, to submit to its verdicts in regard to their pictures, the power of the Board rests at bottom upon public opinion. The moving picture trade realizes that the public has become incensed against moving pictures and that the public too often fails to discriminate between good and bad shows. Naturally the trade sees that this feeling must react and is reacting injuriously to the business. The manufacturers desire to produce what the public wants. The National Board of Censorship is a means of finding out the standards and demands of the public. The moving picture output of the world comes from manufacturers scattered over this country and Europe, far removed from the localities where their pictures are shown and without a common platform to meet even the managers of the theaters, much less the public. As providing such a platform, the National Board of Censorship has been generally welcomed.

The sympathy of the public on the one hand, and of the trade on the other, thus lies at the basis of the censorship. If well conducted, the Board believes this movement will bring vast improvement in the moving picture shows of the country, but the co-operation of the public in this and in other cities is needful to full results. It cannot be too clearly borne in mind that the moving picture business partakes partly of the nature of a theatrical enterprise and partly of journalism. The moving picture show, essentially local, is a form of theater. The moving picture films, in their manufacture and method of distribution, resemble much the publication of a number of weekly magazines. This peculiar nature of the businces is the basis for the belief of this Board in the economy and general desirability of the policy herein outlined of a centralized national censorship.

Magnitude of the Task.

In struggling with the moving picture problem the censorship is dealing with nine-tenths of the total theater problem. Moving pictures are now the most important form of cheap amusement in the country. They reach the young persons, immigrants, family groups, the formative and impressionable section of our cities, as no other form of amusement now does, and cannot but be vital influences for ill or good. They are the only theater that it is possible for the entire family of the wage-worker to attend. In their social and educational possibilities they provide the basis for a neighborhood theater of the people.

The following manufacturers and importers, representing 80 per cent. of the national production, co-operate and have agreed to submit to the censorship of the Board every picture intended for the entire American market:

Biograph Company.
Edison Manufacturing Company.
Essanay Company.
George Kleine (The Gaumont Company, Charles Urban Company).
Kalem Company.
Luhin Manufacturing Company.
Geo. Melies.
Pathe Freres.
Selig Polyscope Company.
Vitagraph Company of America.
The Great Northern Film Company of Copenhagen; Ingvald C. Oes, American representative; "Great Northern," "Columbia American."
The Film Import and Trading Company; "Centaur Film Company."
New York Motion Picture Company; "Bison."

ALLIANCE NOTES.

That the exhibitors of the country are taking an active interest in the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance is evidenced by the many letters received by Secretary Swanson. One thing is certain, that the days of the dishonest film exchange are numbered. The secretary of the Alliance is now compiling statistics gathered from the manufacturers showing the amount of film such exchange is using, and credential cards issued by the Alliance will give this information. A list which is now being printed by the Alliance gives the names of all members and also the independent interests who have not yet joined. The manufacturers and importers are also given showing the number of reels released each week and the foreign manufacturers represented by each individual importer.

* * *

The Verdi Theater, Thirty-fifth street and Seeley avenue, Chicago, has changed from licensed to Independent service.

* * *

The Cincinnati Post, under date of September 30, devotes considerable space to the Great Northern pictures of the landing of Cook at Copenhagen and commends the Independents for their enterprise in securing such an up-to-date subject:

PICTURE MEN PULL OFF A BIG SCOOP WITH FIRST COOK MOVING PICTURES.

The same ship that carried Dr. Fred. Cook to the United States also carried about a million yards of film showing him coming into Copenhagen while the populace was going crazy over him. While Peary on Eagle Island, is sending out occasional knocks, a moving picture theater on Fifth street, east of Plum, is showing Cook, as shabby a little man as you could find at any Salvation Army lodging house, receiving the homage of Danish princes and other silk-hatted dignitaries. You see innumerable hands reaching over the ship's side to grasp the hand that planted the American flag at the pole, and you see the same hand waving the shabby cap that Cook put on after he came from the pole.

The first picture shows the Hans Egide approaching the harbor of Copenhagen. Occasionally, while the ship is plowing through the waters, you are taken on board where you see the explorer in a perpetual smile, pointing up at the rigging or talking intensely to his fellow passengers. The mannerisms of Cook remind one of Theodore Roosevelt. His conversation is punctured with gestures, smiles and funny little grimaces. He shows his teeth often.

You Get a Peep.

Then you are taken back to the harbor at Copenhagen. You see a large number of frock-coated and silk-hatted personages hoarding a launch and then you see the launch speeding over the water. The silk-hatted men climb aboard the Hans Egide and the audience is permitted to join them. You see the Crown Prince of Denmark shaking hands with this shabby American and placing his arm about his shoulder. And then the explorer is buried from view by the onrush of the other dignitaries. If you were there you couldn't feel the thrills any stronger.

Back to the harbor. An immense crowd is covering every inch of the wharf. It sees the ship in the distance and you can almost hear it shout. Cook walks down the gang plank. Before he gets to the bottom he is engulfed. He is carried along by the movement of the crowd and you can tell Cook is in the center of the mass by his peculiar cap. He gets into a carriage and the crowd keeps pace with it.

Next the explorer is seen on the balcony of the building of the Royal Geographical Society. He is still wearing his seedy clothes. On the street in front is a great crowd. Cook appears and he makes a speech about a minute long. The audience then gets another view of the explorer at close range. He waves his cap as if in acknowledgment to the people in the house, and that finishes the show.

About a million feet of Cook films were made from the original films taken at Copenhagen and distributed among Independent theaters all over the country. There was as much competition between the film producers as between the correspondents when Cook reached Copenhagen, and the Independents accomplished the biggest "beat" in film history.

The crowds that are anxious to see the Cook pictures are so great at times that it has been necessary on several occasions to reel the film off at great speed. At such times Dr. Cook appears to be running while the silk-hatted dignitaries are running after him.

VAUDEVILLE VS. MOVING PICTURES.

F. H. Richardson, Chicago.

The writer is in receipt of several letters from managers in various parts of the country asking his ideas concerning the comparative drawing qualities of the moving picture—illustrated song and moving picture—vaudeville programme. This is a matter of much, and under certain circumstances vital, importance. The writer firmly believes there is a lack of the commonest kind of common sense displayed by theater managers when it comes to the matter of considering the two programmes. The average Chicago five-cent house playing a mixed bill of pictures and vaudeville pays $80 for acts and $20 for pictures, running one reel of old stuff, two singles at $20 each and one double at $40. This is a total programme cost of $100 per week. What does he get? His pictures are, of course, comparatively old. His vaudeville is the usual brand of $20 "artist" (?????) save the mark! May the artists forgive me. Let us examine this "vaudeville" matter for a moment. It really is a curiosity. There is the ever present "soubrette" (defined, by the way, by Webster as a "chambermaid, a female servant or attendant"). This lady is supposed to sing, dance and wear nice clothes. Umph! Almost without exception the clothes are tawdry (how could they be otherwise on $20 per?), the dancing mediocre or rotten and the singing—let us in mercy draw the veil. The black-face is a monstrosity—a libel on the negro, dressed in hideous caricature made up of absurdities calculated to make the audience laugh by their very silliness. The German is the same old threadbare combination of sideburns, chin-whisker, pipe, low hat and a big paunch we have viewed these many years. Not a hair is changed—or a line of the dialogue either, I am almost tempted to say. The monologist perpetrates the same old be-whiskered jokes which are lineal descendants of those which went into the ark with Father Noah. And this is the mess the manager pays eighty or more good American dollars for. Of course there is an occasional exception in a team or single which really is quite passable, but are by no means numerous. Sometimes a manager gets tired of wrestling with such a rotten mess and concludes to adopt the pictures only programme. What does he usually do? Does he give the picture programme a square deal or anything even faintly resembling it? Very seldom! He has been paying for his vaudeville-picture programme let us say $100 per week. He changes to pictures but pays only half that sum for his service. It isn't a howling success—of course not! If he had gone to the exchange and offered his hundred dollars for two reels and two songs changed three times a week he would have had a programme lasting forty to fifty minutes and one that would, in the writer's humble judgment, double discount the cheap vaudeville as a drawing card. He could get good song slides and strictly first run films for that money, I believe. He would have to employ a real operator, one who has the knowledge and willingness combined, and have a good trap drummer in addition to his piano player to get the best possible results. The opinion of the writer is that a picture show can hold its own any time and anywhere against cheap vaudeville if the pictures are the best, are properly put on and accompanied by proper sound effects, all of which latter can be made by a competent, up-to-date trap drummer, and if there is a competent, careful, painstaking pianist. Of course the pictures should be accompanied by well sung illustrated songs, the slides projected by a good dissolving stereopticon. It is a regrettable fact that not one theater in fifty runs the best films in the best manner—no, not one in a hundred. The pictures of to-day are capable of being made into a really magnificent show, but all too seldom is it done.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

You cannot make an omelette without breaking eggs. To quote Captain Jack Bunsby in Dicken's novel, "Our Mutual Friend," "the bearing of this observation lies in the application of it." When I started out to criticise the new Independent Alliance it was inevitable that I could only use plain words in order that my meaning should not be misunderstood. I want every reader of the Moving Picture World to know what my object is. That object is the aggrandizement of the moving picture as a form of popular entertainment. That is the sole object of my writing in this paper.

* * *

But though a man's motive may be made clear to anybody who will take the trouble to understand it, his methods are not so easily understood, simply because the exigencies of conventionally good manners discountenance absolute candor, either on paper or by word of mouth. In other words, plain speech or writing must not be pushed to its utmost limits, otherwise social intercourse would be intolerable.

* * *

Now, as the object of the new Alliance is identical with mine, it is permissible to inquire whether we propose reaching our object by the same route. I want the public to have the best moving pictures that can be made—and I don't care who makes them. We have in existence one body of men animated by these motives, since January last, namely, the making and selling of high-class moving pictures. These men conduct their business, as I know by actual, practical, personal experience, in a business-like manner. The result is that they are successful. Some of their pictures are not perfect. Nothing on this earth is. But, generally speaking, it may be said with all fairness that in the nine months of its existence the combination or association of licensed film manufacturers has wrought marvels in improving the quality of their pictures and the general conduct of the moving picture business. This is obvious. It is plain for all men to see.

* * *

Then comes the Alliance—a body of men with no fixed program, no real leader, and a rank and file of supporters some of whom (and their names are pretty well known, too) are hardly fit to hold the position of Sunday school teachers. Are these elements such as are calculated to dignify the moving picture business? I say, No.

* * *

Of course, the situation is not irredeemable. You have such reputable people as the Lumiere Company, Mr. Laemmle, The Great Northern Company, and others, lending the Alliance the support of their names. But also in the Alliance there are those (as has been said in these pages before) who have failed in their public and private engagements (I repeat, for your special edification, James L., have failed in their public and private engagements); who are deficient in the mere elements of modern business methods; who know nothing of the technique of moving picture making, nothing of the art, nothing of the dramatic side, nothing at all, in fact, about the matter, except that the moving picture business is like an orange, to be sucked and flung away when done with. It is for these people just a vehicle for money-making into which the ignorant, the depraved, the unprincipled can jump, and have jumped, and are jumping.

* * *

It is unfortunate that these undesirable elements exist in such large numbers and are present in the new Alliance. They are a discredit to any business, and that is the tragic part of the present situation. They are present right here in New York City; they are present in Chicago. They have no right in this business. Their proper place is behind a pushcart, from whence many of them came. On the other hand, they have their redeeming features, or, shall I say, their uses? They are exploited by professional agitators, by Judases (the original Judas, by the way, had the saving grace to go and hang himself—my Judas has not, unfortunately), and by those who achieve prominence or make money by trading on ignorance. Such is the condition of the Alliance, in parts.

* * *

Everybody knows I am right; everybody is saying I am right; James L. Hoff knows I am right, but it does not suit his purpose to say that I am right. Just now he wants to be an Independent agitator. Let him look upon his own sheet of a few months ago and he will see that he has written more bitterly against the Independent side than I have done. But I am only attacking the worst elements on the Independent side. He was attacking Independence itself. Now he is backing it up. James L., my boy, you are not only an imitator, but you are a turncoat, and your inconsistency has been your ruin, for you no longer count in the scheme of things. To add to James L.'s misfortunes, he is so hard up for sympathetic company that he seems glad to walk arm-in-arm with individuals who are infinitely more untrustworthy than the worst elements on the Independent side which I am condemning—namely, the dishonest trader, the film duper, the fraudulent bankrupt and the invincible ignoramus. Nice people to dignify the moving picture industry, are they not? I wish James L. every possible joy in the company of his new-found friends.

E. H. MONTAGU,

Manager Chicago Office Pathe Freres.

One of the best known characters in the film business is E. H. Montagu, the able and popular manager of Pathe Freres' Chicago office. Mr. Montagu has been in the game from the very beginning and has seen the motion picture business develop from the small road show to the lavishly equipped permanent exhibition hall of to-day, and he is still as enthusiastic in regard to its future possibilities of growth.

E. H. Montagu was born in England in 1873, and for several years practiced law in London. Tiring of the mustiness and confinement of law chambers in the big city and desiring to see more of the world, he took a trip across the Atlantic and landed in New York City in 1903. Recognizing the great possibilities of the motion picture in this country, he connected himself with Miles Bros., the pioneers in the film rental field. In August, 1905, he became affiliated with Pathe Freres and opened their Western office in Chicago in the same well-known offices at 35 East Randolph street, known by every film man from coast to coast.

I have said that Mr. Montagu is an enthusiast on motion pictures, and this enthusiasm rightly centers on the magic word "Pathe." Pathe has done more for the business, he says, than anybody, and I think with him. Pathe was the pioneer, so far as making motion pictures popular and educating the public to look for novelty and substantiality in this form of entertainment. Pathe came over to this country in 1904, and at that date there were few exhibitions of moving pictures here, the American manufacturers being limited, and practically no European. The Pathe people sold their films at a very reasonable price, having their eyes on the future, and built up a substantial business, which has benefited the entire trade. There is more than one film renter that has Pathe to thank for his present existence, and there are many that got a helping hand when times were hard and ends wouldn't meet. Now that the business has been firmly established, is there one manufacturere that does more than this same firm to promote the success of the business by providing programs that compete in quality and originality with the living drama?

Mr. Montagu's firm belief in the motion picture business and its future does not include the mixing with the program of cheap vaudeville. The man, he says, that puts vaudeville in his house necessarily cuts on the film service. The small theater cannot bear the expense of vaudeville and good pictures, and to combine a mediocrity of the two courts failure to the exhibitor, and we all suffer accordingly. He says he would rather look upon any one of Pathe's colored films d'art than any vaudeville show, and there are many others of the same opinion, for the Pathe colored films are exquisite, an art in which Pathe is unique, while the scenes are enacted by actors of international reputation.

I might have sat in Mr. Montagu's office all day and heard him elaborate on the past successes and coming triumphs of Pathe, and it was hard work to get him to say a word about himself or his own work in exploiting Pathe films. But anyone who is pessimistic as to the future of the business should drop into Mr. Montagu's office; it is a stimulant. His pleasant and cordial manner soon puts the visitor at his ease, and if the visitor is a prospective customer, that same pleasant manner and confidence in the firm he represents invariably lands the customer. Broad-minded, a keen observer, and possessed of unique business ability, Mr. Montagu is one of the successful men in the film business—successful in making friends and successful in making business for his firm.

TRANSPORTATION FACILITIES.

The one loud cause for complaint among exhibitors, as well as exchanges, in the West is the recent abritrary ruling of the express companies. The increased charges hit the trade with violence not known in the East where short jumps and low rates are the rule. Exhibitors all over the land should not lose sight of the main fact that this imposition has been brought about by the arrogance of the Pacific and Adams Express Companies, more especially the former. In Denver we are particularly afflicted with this outbreak of Pacific arrogance, but must bear it to some points. Whereever possible shipments are routed over the Fargo, Globe and United States lines with very good results and most courteous treatment. The Pacific employees, below the general agent, usually are not to blame. They are simply obeying orders. But the transaction of business of a nature which necessitates talking with higher officers is most decidedly unpleasant and is avoided as much as possible. It might be a good idea to keep a close eye on the actions of the Pacific elsewhere and if a good case of violation of interstate commerce rules can be established it should be made public at once—not through the commission at Washington—but through the newspapers. That will force action very quickly, as has been demonstrated very repeatedly by one of Denver's express trust busters.

LANTERN SLIDE NOTES.

Some backwoods towns are raising the question as to whether or not moving picture illustrated song singers should be allowed to sing in church choirs. These way-back places are always raising novel questions. There are a number of picture singers who could very materially improve some known church choirs and as many more of such singers who might profit in more than one way by helping the choirs with their voices. Such discussions are generally precipitated by managers who are seeking free advertising. Almost invariably, if traced, it will be found that the manager of a nickelodeon having a good singer tries to get him installed in some church choir with the screened motive of getting the people to flock to the nickelodeon to hear the singer when the church is not holding services. In such cases a protest appears to be perfectly proper, but where a nickelodeon singer is disposed to attend church and help a choir along in good faith he should be encouraged. All illustrated song singers are not competent nor qualified to belong to church choirs. A season of probation among the humble and sincere of the congregation might work a change. Some years ago a similar agitation arose regarding actors and actresses attending church. This culminating in the founding of a church in New York that attained the distinction of having a congregation composed almost entirely of the professional people. Since that time broad-mindedness has spread and the bigots have been relegated beyond hearing. This nonsensical talk about picture singers will end the same way. Local prejudices soon die out and if kept alive the rest of the world look wise and smile.

* * *

Many complaints are being made by the moving picture theaters about the country against slide rental bureaus sending them faked-up sets of slides. A gentleman of this city went into a moving picture show in a country town a few days ago and saw a set of slides used with a song that had been culled from no less than four sets of slides for songs of a different character than the one being sung. He recognized some of the slides, as they were made by him over ten years ago. He asked the manager where he got his slides and was told that they came from a rental agency in New York that sends out the most alluring notices. The manager said that it was a regular thing to receive faked sets of slides for songs where the pictures contained half a dozen different characters and that they did not fit the lines. This rental agency makes a practice of buying up the old trash from music publishing houses and keeps a man to fake up sets from this junk for new songs as they come out. Some of the music publishing houses have also been guilty of this reprehensible practice, and the only way to stop it will be for the song slide makers to get together and establish a big rental agency, take the rental business in their own hands and stamp out the junk shops that are killing the business. Apropos of this, there is no reason why the dozen or more reputable slide makers in this city should not establish a central agency and run a big rental business that would furnish all the theaters within two hundred miles of New York with song slides and stamp out the establishments that have been faking and copying slides.

SLIDE COLORISTS SCARCE.

Slide manufacturers report a scarcity of competent colorists. This means that many colorists, disgusted with the crowding down of prices for work incidental to the small makers of slides cutting the prices of slides below the profit mark, are quitting the business and that the incompetent ones are keeping at work. As we have remarked before, every time there is a cut in the price of song slides, the girls' wages are cut. Ten years ago the lowest price paid for coloring song slides was fifteen cents per slide, and some of the firms engaged in the manufacture of slides paid as high as twenty and twenty-five cents. To-day many slide colorists are working for less than three cents per slide. Of course they are turning out three-cent work.

The price of song slides has fallen in ten years from 85 cents per slide to 25 cents, as no slide maker to-day gets from standing order customers more than $4.50 for a set of 16 picture slides and has to furnish a title page and chorus slide free. The result is that the slides to-day are mere daubs alongside the work of ten years ago, and hardly any of the old artistic colorists of that day are now found working. They were careful workers and their work was accurate and beyond reproach, while to-day anything goes.

The cause of this is principally the enormous number of song sets that have to be turned out to supply the demand made by the moving picture theaters, the film bureaus and the music publishers, principally the music publishers. There is one firm of music publishers in this city whose slide bill even at the low prices which they pay for their slides, amounts to $30,000 a year.

The degradation of the song slide business has also affected the lecture slide business and pictures are shown to-day by lecturers that wouldn't have been tolerated by intelligent audiences ten years ago. Too many of the lecturers have no knowledge of what good work really is, and they couldn't get good work if they knew what good work was and wanted it. Another effect of this has been that churches and organizations are giving entertainments with lecturers who deliver their drivel for $25.00 and pay their operators about $3.50 for a night's work, whereas such lecturers as Stoddard and George W. Cromwell formerly paid a competent operator $75.00 per week and all expenses.

Slide manufacturers who might better be behind the counter in a grocery store weighing out sugar and coffee have multiplied by the score, and they are responsible for the condition of affairs. Many of them to-day are anxious to sell out their establishments, having done all the harm they possibly could to the business, and being up to their eyes in debt.

If there ever was a call for an association of competent slide makers, there is one now. The theaters are calling for a better class of work and as the moving picture business settles down on a staple basis they are getting a better class of audiences, especially in the country, where poor films and bad slides soon ruin the reputation of the house.

The final result of the whole matter is that wages must go up and with it the price of slides. The saturnalia of cheap, nasty work has had its day. Wages must adjust themselves to a basis where the competent colorist will be called back into the work again, but this cannot be accomplished until the honest slide makers get together and keep faith with each other. They may lose some customers on the start, but the superiority of their work will win out in the end, and the scrubs will have to retire.

Comments on the Week's Films.

YACHTING OFF COWES (Urban-Eclipse).

Properly to understand this picture the student of it in a moving picture theater should know what and where Cowes is. Cowes is the Mecca of the World's yachtsmen—an unpretentious little village on the Isle of Wight, just off the southern coast of England. Its surrounding waters are traversed by ocean liners and numerous other craft, thus giving Cowes Roads a very animated aspect, comparable in some respects to the Narrows of New York. Each August, society resorts to Cowes for the yachting, and there are innumerable contests in which the chief yachtsmen in the world congregate, including the German Emperor. The result is that some magnificent racing is seen, and the sport affords a splendid test for high-class photography. The stationary photographs of the yachts are tolerably familiar, and that, too, of very high technical quality, but it has been reserved for Mr. Charles Urban to show us, in his moving picture camera, a magnificent series of motion photographs of the beautiful white-wings, as they are called, which flock to Cowes in the yachting season. The definition of these pictures is wonderfully sharp and crisp, and the tone values excellent. Then the yachts were photographed at comparatively short range and are shown in all variety of evolution. This is one of the most beautiful pieces of technical moving picture photography which Mr. Kleine has released. The audience, on the occasion when we saw it, applauded the picture very vigorously—it came so freshly, surprisingly and changefully in the program. We have no doubt that this yachting picture will be immensely popular wherever it is shown. It illustrates a notable sport in its best phases, and the photography of it does justice to the theme.

A BIRTHDAY AFFAIR (Essanay).

The Essanay Company are passing from improvement to improvement, and as we sat and watched the picture under review this week it seemed to use that the influence of a certain famous moving picture studio on East Fourteenth street, New York City, was plainly visible in the work, for the Essanay Company are manifestly leaning towards delicately humorous comedy adroitly played. There are distinct traces of this influence in "A Birthday Affair," which chiefly relies upon refined humor for success. It is an excellent story. The lady determines to give a birthday party and hands her husband the invitations to post. He, good man, on the way to the mailbox meets a friend and so forgets to post the invitations. Well, the preparations for the feast proceed, and just before dinner is to be served, the good man discovers, to his horror, the invitations in his pocket. Now, here we perceive good craftsmanship on the part of the story teller. The husband betakes himself to a post-office and sends a series of bogus telegrams to his wife, which are supposed to come from the disappointing invited guests. The success of the scheme pleases its author and, of course, depresses its victim. She, good woman, in the sanctity of her own dressing room discovers—what? The letters of invitation he has forgotten to post! Naturally, she turns upon her forgetful spouse like an aroused tigress; but he, good man, knowing the sex (as we do), had prepared himself for emergencies with a pretty little present, which pacifies wifey, and so all ends happily. With the calling in of the "halt, the maimed and the blind," the dinner is served after all.

In this the Essanay Company are taking up a story of undoubted freshness, humor and sparkle. It is pure comedy, and it was acted throughout in a spirit of pure comedy. The leading woman, if we may call her so, had all the authority of charm, distinction and decision in her work. She took the stage and she held it. She seemed to feel the various emotions of delight, rage, disappointment, agitation and depression—she got it all over the footlights, so to speak. So with the actor who depicted the husband—a first-class humorist if ever there was one. The audience was not slow to show its appreciation of a very fine piece of moving picture work, for they applauded just as heartily as they would have done Maude Adams or John Drew in a Broadway talking piece.

As we have before pointed out, there is an unlimited opportunity for moving picture makers to put out pure comedy subjects of a humorous nature—the stories are evidently to be had, and so are the actors and actresses. Pictures like "A Birthday Affair" are distinctly helpful to the art of moving picture making.

FEMALE SLEUTH (Pathe).

Modern melodrama of the French school, with a woman as heroine. This might pass for a series of stage photographs of fashionable life in France, where we see the Parisian boulevards, Nice, the gambling rooms, presumably at Monte Carlo, and scenes of fine modern life. The story, of course, is simple. The female detective is after a couple of aristocratic thieves and by her agency, which is not quite clearly made evident to the audience, the culprits are finally given over to justic after a terrific struggle—a struggle we have never seen on a moving picture stage. The men really look as if they were really trying to get away and the captors really look as though they were really trying to hold their men whilst our smart slim lady detective stands by in triumph. What we like about this picture is the fine lifelike movement of the well-dressed crowds amongst whom the incidents are cast. It all looks so natural, while at the same time so dramatic. The story, as we have said, is very little; the chief value of the picture, to our minds, lies in the fact that it presents to American eyes some accurate pictures of modern French habits.

GAMBLING PASSION (Urban-Eclipse).

If for no other reason, this picture deserves special recognition because of its excellent photographic technique. Like "Yachting Off Cowes," noticed elsewhere, it is a splendid example of sharp definition and accurate translation of light and shade in their correct relative tone values. The scene mostly passes out-of-doors on the French country side, and the story is unfolded in a simple, idyllic fashion. A man is ruined by gambling, and his wife and little son go away into the country. But on this pretty and pastoral journey, making a series of delightful pictures, the child drops flowers by the wayside. The gambler reforms, wins back his money, and is restored to the embraces of his wife and child through the agency of those flowers, which indicate the path the fugitives had traversed. A very simple story in a most exquisite rural setting. Plotless and without excitement, this theme strongly appealed to our fellow audience, whilst the magnificent pictorial qualities of the photograph also earned commendation. Of course, few in a moving picture audience know anything about the technique or technology of moving pictures. The majority of people just know when they are pleased, although they may not be able to say precisely why. The fact remains, however, that your average audience seems to have an unerring instinct for good photography, good drama, good acting, and they certainly singled out the "Gambling Passion" for warm praise.

CARNIVAL AT NICE (Pathe).

Another Pathe, though an old one, which, we think, deserves special mention in virtue of its subject. Carnival is somewhat misunderstood in the United States of America, with, we believe, the single exception of New Orleans, which has a large French element. Carnival means, in French, an outbreak of gayety just before the Lenten season. Shrove Tuesday is there called Mardi Gras, and on that day people make carnival. The relationship between Mardi Gras and Coney Island therefore is an absurd one, or, we should say that the concluding festivities of the Coney Island season are mis-named. At New Orleans, Mardi Gras is observed in the French fashion, and this film shows us what that fashion is. You have everything violently grotesque in the way of disguises, sartorial caricatures, and generally the apotheosis of absurdity; but the French are refinedly artistic, and so it comes about that carnival time at Nice is a thing of exquisite enjoyment. You have flower parades, as well as noise and pantomimic costume. It is all delightfully sensuous and stimulating. On these accounts, then, this particular film deserves close notice as showing how the volatile French set out to enjoy themselves before Lent imposes some restrictions on pleasures and carnalities.

"The Scales of Justice" (Vitagraph).—A strongly dramatic picture, based upon the misfortune of an idiotic child who steals a ring and an innocent girl is condemned to death for the theft. She is led to the statue of Justice on her way to the scaffold and while praying for a miracle the scales fall and the ring is discovered in one of the pans, where it has been placed by the idiot. The action is dignified and impressive as befits the subject. One might say that this is the strongest film of the week. The masterly handling of the miracle and its effect upon the simple-minded populace, with the accompanying features of the devout prayer which brings the miracle, are all features of a picture which cannot fail to make a strong impression upon all. The situations could scarcely be made more dramatic and the action is so closely in harmony with the subject that it impresses with its strength and convinces by its mastery of the subject. The picture is commended as an example of good work in all departments. True, one would not care to see more than a single such heavy drama in a programme, but one which had such a picture as this with Carolyn Wells' work for comedy would be as good as could be produced. The combinations possible now are sufficiently promising to make the motion picture a rival of the best dramas.

"The Magic Melody" (Essanay).—The story of a music composer who had a dream which resembled the "Pied Piper of Hamlin," excepting that in this instance a horse and an elephant joined in the procession and had their share in the parade after the wonderful waltz. It was a rude awakening, though, because the unfeeling landlord came and knocked vociferously for his rent, waking the artist, who hastily disappeared under the couch when he realized the cause of the disturbance. The fun here lies in the extravagances of the conception and in the action of the supposed artist.

"The Music Lesson" (Pathe).—A magic film which represents a group of pretty girls, with a number of interesting transformations that are as mystifying as they are lively. The picture will commend itself to those who want something out of the ordinary. It is startling to see the notes appear out of nothing and take their place on the scale. The coloring is artistic and the picture will serve as a welcome change.

"The Awakening" (Biograph).—A love story of a different sort, intended to illustrate the perversity of Cupid's pranks when he sets out to force two people to love each other regardless of their own inclinations. Love is a matter which no one can control and to which all are alike susceptible to some extent; but the major had determined that he would not love, even though his uncle's will enjoined marriage within a certain limit, else his inheritance would be cut off. It seems that the time limit was about expiring, and the marriage was consummated, but the indifferent major left his bride and returned to his convivial companions at the club. While there, the face of the wife at home continuously haunted him, and finally, when he returns, just in time to have her fall from a trellis into his arms, Cupid's work is done, and one can almost hear him chuckle as he disappears, seeking other fields to conquer. The staging, the acting and the photography combine to make a very pleasing picture—one that has no element of gloom and much that provokes pleasurable sensations. It is quite up to the Biograph standard and is well regarded by the audiences who see it.

"Wanted, A Child" (Biograph).—Labeled comedy, but is, after all, somewhat pathetic. That parents should be driven to such serious straits that they consider allowing one or more of their children to go, is anything but a comedy. In this instances, the father of seven, who loses his position and then thinks of what may come to them, is quite willing to consider the proposition of his bachelor brother, who is ready to take one to live with him. Here is where the trouble begins, because when the parents come to look over the seven children they cannot decide upon which one shall be allowed to go, and decide to keep them all. It is scarcely comedy, this. On the contrary, the pathetic side is more prominent; at least, the emotions aroused are more pathetic than otherwise, and one is strongly influenced to pity the couple in their painful indecision. The film is good and the sentiments aroused are not unpleasant.

"Love, the Conqueror" (Urban).—A love story, the scene of which is laid in the England of to-day. The costumes, the staging and the scenery are all of the present-day England, illustrating school life and showing modern shops as they actually appear in the daily intercourse of the English people. It is a love story, no more than ordinary, however, in which a poor schoolmaster's daughter is insulted by the scion of a wealthy house, whom she rebuffs very forcibly. But his sister is sick, and the young girl is a friend for whom she has a great liking, and as soon as she is able to sit up she sends for the young lady. The young man, realizing his first error, apologizes and is accepted as a lover. There is nothing of especial interest about the story. It is the scenery, the staging and the action which interest. The photography is excellent, being clear and showing no disposition to blur. The tonal quality of the film is maintained at a very high standard, while the outdoor views are instructive as well as interesting. The picture will please by its technical excellence, if in no other way.

"Chasing the Ball" (Urban).—A magic film which shows a bowling ball traveling long distances through open country, over walls, up the sides of buildings and through various other places as unaccountable as they are interesting, while a crowd follows it, endeavoring to recapture it before it disappears entirely. Finally it falls into a stream in a wood, where it is secured and chained down to prevent further flight. The technical quality of the film is good, some of the outdoor scenes being of very high standard. The Urban photographer has a happy faculty of reproducing outdoor scenes with a fidelity which it is difficult to equal. The chase affords numerous humorous incidents and accidents which keep the audience laughing.

"Pierrot the Fuddler" (Pathe).—Tells the love story of Pierrot and Harlequin, but which is made more interesting because Pierrot and Harlequin are both in love with the same dressmaker. Harlequin gets Pierrot drunk and thereby spoils his own chances. Pierrot succeeds in making the dressmaker love him through pity. There is an exciting dream, in which Pierrot stabs a dummy, thinking it is his sweetheart, and then when she appears he thinks it is her ghost; but fortunately the difficulties are all untangled and the couple are supposed to live happily ever afterward. The technical excellence of the film, and the touches of humor which are due to the grotesque situations developed, have their influence, but otherwise the picture is rather commonplace.

"Jane Is Unwilling to Work" (Pathe).—Illustrating the attempt of a father to force his unwilling daughter to work. He gets her a number of situations, but she creates such a disturbance that she is unceremoniously hustled out of each place, ending in a laundry, where the head laundress is tumbled into a tub of suds as a result of the rough-house created by the girl who will not work. The whole film is a series of rough-houses, and while it is funny, it is a coarse sort of fun which is not likely to satisfy those who care for the more subtle and enjoyable humor.

"The Wallace Jewels" (Edison).—That the work of Miss Carolyn Wells in comedy for motion pictures is appreciated has been told before. It would be difficult, indeed, to concieve anything more delicate and genuinely humorous than "Ethel's Luncheon," her first contribution to motion picture scenarios. In "The Wallace Jewels" she has added not only the genuine comedy, but two or three dramatic situations which improve the picture and add immensely to its interest. The professor and his daughter form two pleasant enough objects in their pursuit of specimens in the mountains. Then the scene of the field glasses, with the discovery of the man burying a box on a distant mountain side, the headlines in the paper which determine the girl to go dig up the box and obtain the reward for discovering the jewels, her flight and capture all combine to make a genuinely dramatic piece of work. But after her screams have brought all the neighboring villagers to her rescue the whole picture is turned into a comedy by the discovery of the remains of a pet dog in the box and not the famous Wallace jewels. Miss Wells' humor is of the delicate and suggestive type, rather than the broad and coarse sort which is rather overdone in motion picture work, perhaps because it lends itself more readily to decisive action. Yet there is a quality about the humor represented in Miss Wells' work which might be followed with profit by others who are seeking for fame as motion picture producers. The action is good. It might be said that some scenes are as good as the best the Edison Company has done, which is high praise indeed. The photographic quality is up to the highest standard, with full gradation of tone and a snap to it which makes it very pleasing to look at. As pictures the scenes are satisfactory. The selection of the points for staging would be hard to surpass, consequently the entire picture is of the type which appeals to cultivated people, while it is made sufficiently plain for those whose opportunities for culture have been more limited. The Edison Company deserves the highest consideration for its work in this direction and this picture should be steadily popular.

"Pippa Passes" (Biograph).—This company has been more than ordinarily ambitious in its reproductions of famous stories and novels, but it has never undertaken anything which required the acting that is demanded by this picture. This was one of Browning's most subtle poems, dealing almost wholly with pschycology and its manifestations in a direction not usually noted. It is scarcely necessary to repeat the story excepting to note that it explains the influence which one may exert upon others and still be wholly unconscious of that effect. In this instance the singing of Pippa, who goes out with her lute to sing merely because she feels happy, much as the birds do, yet her singing is wonderfully efficacious in preventing crime and evil purposes. The subtle influence of a pure personality, pouring forth a song which declares "God's in His heaven, all's right with the world" is marvelous and raises a train of thought which is scarcely explainable. The acting in the picture is superb. Perhaps it may be said with truth that it has to be, otherwise the film would have no strength. There must be acting, and that of the very highest character, or the picture will fail of its purpose. It is very questionable whether this picture is understood by a majority of the audiences who see it, or will see it, in the future. It is a very dramatic, yet subtle story, and Browning was a master of this sort of writing. Consequently, it is questionable from a certain standpoint. It is quite likely that a larger proportion of those who will see the picture have never read the poem and may not understand it for that reason. But the fact that many will not understand it does not detract from its excellent presentation and its value as an art subject. The company says that it considers the picture in many respects the best it has ever put out, and there is a strong disposition to agree with the producers. It is a beautiful picture in every sense and its technical quality is sufficiently good to make it more attractive. If one does not understand the story he can at least enjoy the pictorial qualities. These make it worth seeing, especially the novel effect of the breaking dawn and approach of night.

"Who Discovered the North Pole?" (Lubin).—A little comedy based upon the fierce controversy now raging between Messrs. Cook and Peary. The conception is comical enough to maintain the interest and cause people to laugh. And perhaps one might say that the picture settles the question. Anyhow it is as near settled as it is between the two gentlemen who are quarreling over the proposition. It is a successful attempt to give a comical turn to the fierce dispute which threatens to divide the world into two camps, separating them at the pole.

"Billiken" (Lubin).—This comic figure has been put in motion pictures before, but perhaps not in quite so original a manner as has been done this time. The fact that Lubin has done it is sufficient to insure the funny part. Besides, the picture clearly demonstrates that nothing can happen to you when Billiken controls. It is a neat bit of comedy and deserves a good run. The numerous funny situations developed are all satisfactory and provoke vigorous laughter.

"Story of a Banknote" (Pathe).—A drama which has plenty of that much wanted feature of films, action. It is a melodrama which will appeal very strongly to a large number, since it tells the story of a poor man who is apparently beaten in his struggle with the world and whose wife temporarily deserts him and goes with a former admirer who turns out to be the leader of a gang of counterfeiters. There are the pathetic features of hungry children, a discouraged husband, arrests and other accompaniments which go to show the difficulties which may beset one in his daily struggle. The actors are all artists of more than local reputation and while the action is what is most wanted, the acting is quite up to the highest Pathe standard. The film is beautifully photographed and reproduced. The story is well told, hence all the qualities which go toward making a good film are present. There is no reason why this should not be popular.

"Two of a Kind" (Edison).—A bit of comedy from the above studio which has a rather original basis. Two guests of the superintendent of a lunatic asylum think the other is crazy and start to humor each other until the superintendent arrives. The grotesque situations and the amusing attempts to prevent the escape from the room are funny. While the subject cannot be said to be of the highest class, because it is rather unfortunate to make sport of a serious affliction, even though the principals in the picture were neither of them insane, a good deal of fun is extracted from the action of the characters who are in trouble. The picture is not unpleasant, yet it cannot be said to be really as attractive as it might be. The technical quality is satisfactory. It is only the subtle influence of making fun of a malady that is to be criticised.

"A Game of Chess" (Pathe).—A better title for this picture would be "absent mindedness." Two gentlemen become so absorbed in a game of chess that they forget all else until it is finished, allowing the ordinary run of events, even to a burglary and a fire to go on without disturbing them, and they finish their game knee deep in water. In a way the picture is funny, yet it lacks sufficient movement, even with the different disturbances, to keep up the interest.

"An Eventful Trip" (Pathe).—A trick picture in which the objects held by three travelers and the train in which they are riding perform peculiar stunts, throwing the travelers around in a very unceremonious and undignified manner. They plunge into the water from a bridge and then regain the track. The train jumps the rails in a tunnel, but goes forward just the same. Some of the scenery reminds one strongly of a former picture, "When the Devil Drives," and the appearance of the fish in the water after the train plunges into the stream, appears rather like one which has been seen before. It furnishes a variety and for its kind is a good enough picture.

"The Mystery of the Sleeper Trunk" (Kalem).—This picture is timely and the advertising given the customs inspectors in New York recently should help it. It is the story of a "sleeper" trunk, which means one that seems to have no owner, a method used by smugglers to get their goods into this country illegally. Along with the story of the trunk goes the love story of a young customs inspector which grows out of it, including the melodramatic attempt upon his life by the smugglers' agents, and other interesting details which never fail to please an audience. Not the least interesting are the excellent views of New York harbor which appear in the different scenes. Through the country these views should furnish a good idea of how New York harbor looks and those who are familiar with it will enjoy the reproduction quite as much. The firm has made a success with this. There is plenty of dash and go to it, relying upon the melodramatic features of the story to create a feeling of interest on the part of those who see the picture. The photography shows a distinct improvment in photographic quality, which is pleasing to all lovers of good clear work.

"The Masterpiece" (Gaumont).—While this picture is based upon a love story, it is really a representation of life among men who enter monasteries and devote themselves to the work of a brotherhood. It turns upon a masterpiece which one of the monks has painted, his inspiration being his love for a woman already married. Because of this he devotes his life to the work of a monk. The interest is principally in the picturesque views about the grounds and in the building itself. It is an interesting picture, though it becomes more so if one looks beneath the surface and sees what is actually occurring in the hearts of men whose lives are thus consecrated to the service of mankind. Technically it would be hard to surpass and the photographer selected some remarkably beautiful scenes for the setting of his stage.

"Papa's Hat" (Gaumont).—A series of delightful child pictures centered around the experiences of a little one with an opera hat which opens when she touches it. The consternation written in the little face is irresistible. The technical quality of the film is satisfactory and the entire picture is pleasing.

"Vendetta" (Pathe).—The chief interest lies in the remarkably beautiful scenery, which includes views of sea, mountain, stream and plain. The story of the vendetta is the same as all vendettas and merely means that one must avenge the death of another. It is not that which will please so much as the scenery, which is so good. The pictures could not be surpassed.

"The Garbage of Paris" (Pathe).—One of those interesting industrial pictures which illustrate so clearly how curious occupations are carried on. The disposal of garbage may not be an especially attractive subject for a motion picture, but it is attractively worked out and depicts a phase of life which would otherwise be unknown to but few people.

"Laddie" (Edison).—Unrequited love, shame for his mother because she is old-fashioned, and uncontrolled grief when he is notified that she has been injured in an accident and lies at the point of death in a hospital, form a combination of emotions which make this film extremely dramatic and cause it to arouse sentiments which are sufficiently effective to bring tears to the eyes of a good many in the audience. It is a free adaptation of the story and one who has read the book will appreciate the story the more to see it so beautifully reproduced on the screen and so well acted. The hero of the play is a finished actor, whose every motion conveys the strongest possible expression of the subject; and his grief when he discovers his mother seriously hurt, seems natural, the acting is so good. But the same criticism applies to this film as to others which have been mentioned before. Its strength lies in the acting, and action, not merely acting, is what counts with most of those who like motion pictures. Of course there are some who are educated up to an appreciation of the art which is developed in the portrayal of a story like this, but it is unfortunate that a majority are not, and would much prefer the gun play of some producer who makes pictures of the Wild West or some robbery and subsequent chase and capture of the criminals. But even though this is true, the fact remains that Edison is to be commended for producing such a beautiful picture. With the story, the acting and the photography as near perfection as present processes permit, there is no reason why the picture should not be popular and should not exert an elevating influence upon the silent drama.

"The Pill Box" (Gaumont).—A comedy which illustrates the imposition two tramps practice upon a number of innocent people. They find a box of pills and fix a plan whereby they sell them for a dollar each as a toothache cure, when, as a matter of fact, they are for an entirely different purpose and bring on a severe attack of cramps when they are taken. Perhaps the funniest part is where they are given a number of pills by the police and after they have been troubled with the cramps long enough they are arrested. The real fun of the picture is so diaphanous that it is difficult to see very much to it.

"Betty's Choice" (Vitagraph).—A tale of flirtation, combined with a burglary, in which there is gun play, and a girl who confesses that she flirted merely to tease and will not do it again. These are the elements utilized by the Vitagraph actors in constructing a rattling good play. It is one of those films which appeals to a larger proportion of a motion picture audience and satisfies them, as can be seen by the expression on their faces and their applause in some theaters. The action is there, and action is what motion picture audiences want. Nor is the drama entirely devoid of art; but however that may be, the average audience is much better pleased with melodrama than it is with drama, particularly where art is the feature rather than the action of the characters. The Vitagraph actors understand this disposition of the people and build their pictures accordingly.

"Never Eat Green Apples" (Vitagraph).—A rather broad humorous film which exhibits in a somewhat bald manner the effects of eating green apples. There will be a difference of opinion regarding this film, or the propriety of it. The writer is free to say that he has no sympathy with such subjects and believes they should be avoided.

Coming Headliner.

DRINK (Pathe).

It must be about thirty years since the late Charles Reade's adaptation of Zola's play entitled "Drink" took London by storm. Only the other day the original exponent of the chief man's part in this play died, old and despairing, in New York City, by his own hand. A real tragedy, indeed! Zola, as the student of his work knows, was no namby-pamby writer. He was a realist. He wrote of things as he saw them. He was bitterly attacked and reviled for his unflinching realism, but posterity will probably give him a very high place amongst nineteenth century writers. As it is, though some of his English publishers were prosecuted a few years ago, statues have been raised to Zola in Paris, where his memory is revered. It seems only yesterday that he was officially prosecuted for sedition!

The story or drama has been called times out of number a great moral lesson. It shows the fall of a reputable workman through drink. Though this is only a small part of the story, which, in its other phases, concerns itself with woman's jealousy and revenge, the evil effects of drink occupy chief attention, and it is by drink that a revengeful woman defeats her rival and brings about the death of Coupeau, the chief man character. Coupeau, in the latter stages of the play, recovers from an accident; takes to drink; becomes a maniac; goes to the hospital and subsequently is released, cured. Of course, he is warned against strong drink. Left alone, his wife's rival contrives that he shall have access to a bottle of whiskey, and the final and most tragic scene of the play shows the hold which the spirit obtains upon him. He falls into delirium tremens, goes mad, and dies just as his wife and her rival return. Drink and a woman have killed their man, as they have killed their man before, and are killing him at this moment.

This last scene is one of intense power, and the actor who took the part of the maddened Coupeau was a very strong performer, for he seemed to get into the very skin of the part and to suggest, according to conceptions of it, the very reality of delirium tremens. But, indeed, the whole play is convincingly acted right through. The quarrel between the two women is the sub-plot of the piece. It starts in a laundry, advances a stage when the wicked woman loosens the scaffold from which Coupeau falls, and reaches its culminating point in the death chamber of the maddened drunkard. It goes without saying that all the parts in the piece are superbly acted and that the photography of it is up to Pathe standard.

"Drink," neither as a book, nor as a play, nor as a film, is the most agreeable subject; it is a tragic warning. The points are brought home clearly and decisively. The lesson will not be the less effective because it will be given in thousands of moving picture theaters throughout the United States. We rather object to sermons on the moving picture stage, but we make an exception in favor of "Drink," which is an intensely powerful argument in favor of, not merely temperance, but of prohibition.

THE MOVING PICTURE IN EUROPE AND AMERICA.

By Frank L. Dyer in The Kinetogram.

"During my trip abroad I took particular note, from a spectator's standpoint, of the conditions that obtain in the moving picture field throughout the continent, and, viewing them impartially, must say that they stand out in painful contrast to those that prevail in the United States. In Europe the business is on a decidedly low plane. There is absolutely no semblance of organization and, as a consequence, the negative influence that prevailed during the incipient stages of the business in this country are manifest to a pronounced degree. With the exception of the productions of a very few of the large manufacturers the films are worthless because lacking in the essential points of subject, portrayal, production and photography. Neither are the places of exhibition, with but few exceptions, to be compared with ours. They seem to have been standing still all the while we in the United States have been progressing. The films of American manufacturers are very popular on the other side. I saw Edison films in London, Berlin, Paris—in fact everywhere on the continent—and was gratified to note that the audiences were quick to perceive and appreciate their superiority to films of native manufacture.

"In this country the situation is well in hand. In the first place there is an organization which is the prime essential of every successful business. There is a complete understanding between the manufacturers, exchanges and the exhibitors. The best of good-will and harmony prevails. The business has profited by the combined and intelligent efforts of manufacturers and exhibitors to elevate it to a higher moral and artistic plane—by manufacturers in improving the character and production of their films and by subjecting them to the close scrutiny of a Board of Censors, and by exhibitors in catering to the demands of the public in a manner that will eventually entirely dispel the popular misconception of the motion picture playhouse."

MOVING PICTURE OPERATORS TO HAVE THEIR OWN CHARTER.

Picture Machine Operators' Branch of Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., held their regular meeting at Gallagher's Hall, 402 Eighth avenue, this city, on Monday night, October 4. The attendance was very large and enthusiastic. General President Barry and Secretary-Treasurer Hart, of the International Alliance Theatrical Stage Employees of the United States and Canada, were present and addressed the meeting. Among other visitors present were Brothers Dignam and Williams, of Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., and Business Agent Long. The latter also made some remarks. The addresses were enthusiastically received and generously applauded. Brother Hart, in his remarks, spoke as follows: "The report is being circulated that Local No. 35 would lose its charter. This," he desired to say, "was a malicious, wilful lie, made by former Local No. 1 against Local No. 35, who have been their bitter antagonists for years. Former Local No. 1 had their charter revoked for disobeying the I. A. T. S. E. laws and for its unfair treatment of I. A. T. S. E. men. Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., has been in existence for the past fifteen years and has tried to live up to the constitution of the I. A. T. S. E." Brother Hart also said "that the moving picture operators were becoming a factor in the field of organized labor that must be recognized. At Kansas City, Pittsburg and Oakland, local unions of moving picture operators have been formed." Brother Hart said he was surprised to see such a large growth in our organization since he visited it last, and he complimented the men upon their neat and fine appearance, as well as their orderliness, and that they were men with a purpose and not a lot of "kids." In concluding his remarks, Brother Hart said: "And now I have a little surprise to spring. The moving picture operators of Greater New York will have their own individual charter from the I. A. T. S. E. of the United States and Canada within a week or ten days at the latest."

General President Barry endorsed fully all the remarks made by Brother Hart, and also congratulated the operators present on their organization. Under the laws of the I. A. T. S. E., Local No. 35 controls the operators of all lamps, strips, brackets, or any electrical device, except switchboards, in a theater, and any other so-called union claiming to do this are not telling the truth, and are misrepresenting the facts.

There will probably be an advance in the initiation fees of this branch soon. Any operator holding our card for one year will be recognized by the I. A. T. S. E. of United States and Canada or any theater employing organized labor.

I. G. SHERMAN, Recording Secretary.

Second Important N

Being Something About The Fi

Under Our Contract With

FILM IMPORT & T

127 East Twenty-thi

We announced in these columns last week that THE FIRST RELEAS

Tuesday November 2d

Our representative in Paris has personally selected every reel

Only the Very Bes

Selected from the feature productio

ADOLFO CROCE, MILAN
AMBROSIO, ITALY
AQUILA, TURIN
BUTCHER, ENGLAND
COMERIO, MILANO
DEUTSCHE, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE BIOSCOP, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE VEATASCOPE, BERLIN
DUSKES, BERLIN
ECLAIR, PARIS
GERMANIA, GERMANY
HISPANO, BARCELONA

After our first release, we will publish in these columns from week to week, the na secure your service, does not appear in our list, you will know you are missing the m

You are aware of course that we are also the exclusive agents for the Centaur F New York, October 13th.

HIS MEXIC

is a dandy—Don't miss it—We will be glad to have you write us for further parti

FILM IMPORT & T

127 EAST TWENTY-THIRD STREE

Notice to the Trade

rst Release of European Films

Messrs. Raleigh & Robert

RADING COMPANY

d Street, New York

OF EUROPEAN FILMS would be made the latter part of this month

ill be the day and date

nd we can positively assure you that this first release contains in Motion Pictures

ns of the following manufacturers

ITALA, ITALY
LE LION, PARIS
LUX, PARIS
MEESTER, BERLIN
PASQUALI, TURIN
PEGLI, ITALY
PINESCHI, ROME
RALEIGH & ROBERT, PARIS
STELLA, PARIS
WARWICK TRADING CO., ENGLAND
WELT KINEMATOGRAPH, FREIBURG
VESUVIO, NAPLES AND OTHERS

es of all exchanges buying film from us and if the exchange from whom you, Mr. Exhibitor, st wonderful subjects ever thrown on a screen.
ns—Every one of which bristles with life and action. The next picture, shipped from lars and any information you may desire.

AN BRIDE

RADING COMPANY

= = = = = = NEW YORK

CHICAGO NOTES.

By F. H. Richardson.

It is worthy of note and of serious consideration that the managers of the Boston, Alcazar and Pastime theaters all assert that there has been absolutely no falling off in business since the elimination of vaudeville from their bills. These houses used vaudeville for a considerable time—and good vaudeville it was, too, as nickel-theater vaudeville goes. They are now using, and have been using for many weeks, except Saturdays and Sundays, nothing but high-cass films and illustrated songs, and yet the box-office receipts are the same as before. Managers will do well to think this matter over, remembering, however, that you cannot eliminate vaudeville and run junk films.

* * *

The old Electric Theater, the second oldest "still in business" moving picture theater on the North Side, has passed into the hands of Mr. Charles Paterson and has been re-christened the "Wegota." It has been remodeled into a beautiful little house and is doing well. Much ingenuity was displayed by Mr. Paterson in the matter of a stage. Working under difficulties, he literally evolved a stage which is a wonder, under the circumstances. The aisles are lighted by small electric globes in metal cans open on one side, placed under each fifth end seat. The light is thrown on the aisle floor only. Mr. Patterson has demonstrated the fact that he is something of a genius and that he has distinctly good ideas of his own.

* * *

Manager Hardin, of the Chicago Edison office, reports business picking up with the advent of the cool weather. Mr. Hardin says he regards the business outlook, in the moving picture field, as exceptionally good for the coming Winter. In fact, this seems to be the consensus of opinion among men qualified to speak with authority. The prospects for business are excellent, they all say, which sounds remarkably good to the writer.

* * *

The writer called on Manager Joseph Hopp, of the Standard Exchange, Monday, September 27. Mr. Hopp usually greets one with an expansive smile. On this occasion, however, the said smile had a sort of front porch attachment. "Why the superabundance of good humor?" I inquired, and was speedily enlightened. Monday, September 27, was the first day of the third year of the Standard Exchange's existence—a sort of birthday, as it were. And no wonder Friend Hopp added an extension to his smile. He was no doubt contrasting the two small rooms and couple of dozen reels of film two years agone with the present commodious quarters and large volume of business. Manager Hopp, in the parlance of the street, has "made good," and is entitled to laugh right out loud if he wants to.

* * *

The writer learns that the National Moving Picture Independent Alliance has engaged legal talent to defend its members and exhibitors of independent films and has selected the Viascope machine, made by the Viascope Mfg. Co., Chicago, and the "Peerless," made by Knack, of Oshkosh, as two of the machines to be approved for projecting independent films. The writer has examined the Peerless machine and it seems to be an excellent piece of mechanism. It is built almost like the Power's, but is considerably simpler. The balance wheel is exceptionally heavy, which makes for steady motion, but the star is rather light. The writer never passes judgment on a machine until after having run it for at least two weeks, but, so far as he is able to see, the Peerless ought to give excellent results on the curtain.

* * *

A very beautiful new moving picture house, the "Casino Garden," has opened on Madison street, near Monroe street. The decorations of this house, particularly the lobby, are unique and very pleasing. There is an arcade facing the street, back of which is an extensive lobby. I shall have more to say about this house a little later.

* * *

The writer has just had the privilege of examining the plans for a new design of machine. He cannot pass judgment from lines on paper, but will say that the thing looks entirely practical and he believes it will work perfectly. The machine is now being built. At one fell swoop the design does away with the cam and cam-shaft and combines the fly-wheel and shutter. The intermittent movement will be rapid —in fact, there is no limit to its speed except the strength of the film itself. I await the completion of the machine with considerable interest.

OHIO NOTES.

By W. C. Kunzman.

Carl Bitzer, manager and vocalist of the Royal Theater, Sandusky, Ohio, has inaugurated a new policy which is making a great impression on the patrons of the Royal Theater. Beginning August 30, Mr. Bitzer contracted to show two reels of the latest and best motion pictures at each performance—a double show for one admission. Two No. 5 Power's machines are being used, together with a double dissolving stereopticon, the program being so arranged by Mr. Bitzer that there are no waits, but a continuous show from 1 to 11 P. M. Mr. Lewis, of Ann Arbor, Mich., has charge of the operating room, with Mr. Hoff as his assistant. Mr. Lewis is an expert electrician as well as an operator. The re-arranging and remodeling of the operating booth at the Royal was done under Mr. Lewis's personal direction, and to take a look into his booth to-day, one can say that the Royal has one of the finest fireproof operating booths in the State of Ohio. It is open to inspection daily for the patrons of this theater, and visited by hundreds weekly. A Hallberg Economizer will be installed within a few days, reducing the electric light bill and giving a clearer and brighter light. Miss Hochradle, who has been engaged as vocalist during Mr. Bitzer's absence, has returned to her home at Ann Arbor, Mich. Mr. Bitzer is a hustler and always gives his patrons a good show for the small sum of five cents.

* * *

The Sandusky Theater, with a seating capacity of 1,300, was reopened for the season of 1909-10 on September 20 with high class vaudeville, consisting of eight acts weekly, and three reels of motion pictures.

* * *

U. O. Woodward, who has been connected with the Mozart throughout the State of Pennsylvania, with headquarters at Lancaster, Pa., will take charge of the Sandusky Theater this season.

* * *

Manager Charles Reark, of the Theatorium, Sandusky, Ohio, while in Cleveland last week contracted for two first run reels daily. Mr. Reark says he is going to give his patrons a real "hot show" daily for the small sum of five cents. Business was very good with him all during the Summer in spite of the competition he had to put up with.

Among the Exhibitors.

Winchester, Ill.—Joe and Frank Ruark have closed their moving picture show here.

Herington, Kan.—A. Petrie and C. F. Perry are preparing to open a moving picture show here.

Carrollton, Mo.—S. Waterson has opened a new moving picture show on North Folger street.

Bangor, Me.—Collins & Merrill, of Dover, have leased the Orpheum Theater here, on Market street.

Knoxville, Tenn.—Frank Rogers has leased the Lyceum Theater, at 313 Gray street, and has taken possession.

Springfield, Mo.—George Olendorf is making arrangements to open a Landers theater here.

Waverly, N. Y.—Clarence Cowles has leased the Walker block and will remodel it into a moving picture theater.

Northwood, N. Dak.—E. Jackson, of Grand Forks, is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Ft. Wayne, Ind.—George C. Killen is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater at 1124 Calhoun street.

St. Joseph, Mo.—J. F. Bilz is erecting a new moving picture theater here.

Kewanee, Ill.—E. C. Smith, of Chicago, has purchased the Princess Theater here from E. J. Funk, and has taken possession.

Boston, Mass.—The Argelo Cafe, at 340 Washington street, is undergoing alterations and will hereafter be a moving picture house.

Jacksonville, Fla.—John J. Fahey has bought the Electric Theater on Main street from A. C. Wallace, and has taken possession.

St. Louis, Mo.—F. L. Talbot, owner of the moving picture theater at 17 South Sixth street, will make extensive improvements.

Eau Clair, Wis.—The Orpheum Theater Company has been incorporated, with a capital of $10,000. Incorporators: Messrs. Nelson, Dowling and Bonell.

St. John, N. B., Can.—G. C. Jordon has joined the ranks of moving picture entertainers, for he has purchased the Princess Theater, which is located at Princess and Charlotte streets, from its former owner.

Peoria, Ill.—Mr. Christ, of Morton, will open a new moving picture show here.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—J. P. Russell has sold the Majestic Theater here to M. Schwartz.

Alabaster, Mich.—A. J. Berube, of Oscoda, has opened a moving picture theater here.

Huntsville, Mo.—J. K. Howell has sold his moving picture show here to Rankin & Solberg.

Griswold, Ia.—Roy Willett is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Clayton, Ill.—Ike L. Teachenoer and Ed. B. Coe will open a new moving picture theater.

Newark, Del.—Dr. J. W. Long has remodeled the Armstrong building into a moving picture show.

St. Louis, Mo.—George W. Murray will erect a moving picture theater on Delmar boulevard.

Lewiston, Idaho.—Ed. L. Wiggin will start a new moving picture and vaudeville theater here.

Leavenworth, Kan.—Carl Mensing is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Cleveland, Ohio.—Martin Cowen is erecting a new moving picture theater at 7307 Wade Park avenue.

Carrollton, Mo.—S. Waterson, of Kansas City, is planning to open a new moving picture theater here.

Dover, Me.—C. W. Hayes, Esq., and D. H. Danforth are preparing to open a moving picture theater here.

Jasonville, Ind.—George Vance, of Loogootee, is making arrangements to open a new moving picture show here.

Paw Paw, Mich.—Miss Kate Conley has sold the Idle Hour Theater here to R. O. Thayer, who has taken possession.

St. Charles, Ill.—J. S. Shesler has purchased the Parquet Theater on West Main street and has taken possession.

Montgomery, Ala.—The Majestic Theater management has leased the Bijou Theater here for a moving picture show.

Calumet, Mich.—Lee Lassner has purchased the Bijou Vaudeville Theater on Fifth street, and has taken possession

Seattle, Wash.—William G. Spurrier, of Baltimore, Md., has purchased the Savoy Theater here and is now in charge.

Allentown, Pa.—The Temperance Amusement Company is making arrangements to open a moving picture theater here.

Merrill, Wis.—Chas. Staehle is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater in the Montgomery Building.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Franklin Amusement Company will build a two-story moving picture theater at 120 North Fifty-second street.

Missoula, Mont.—T. C. Penny has purchased the Bijou Moving Picture Theater here and is making arrangements to open same.

Roanoke, Va.—The Jefferson Company has awarded a contract for the erection of a $30,000 vaudeville theater here to J. J. Nesbit & Co.

Milwaukee, Wis.—John Koenig has secured a permit for the erection of a new moving picture theater, to be located at 704 Walnut street.

Coffeyville, Kan.—Moses Eberstein has sold the Odeon Theater, at 102 West Eighth street, to C. N. Clark, who has already taken possession.

Long Beach, Cal.—The Strand Improvement Company has disposed of the Byde-A-Wyle Theater to E. B. Campbell, A. Berheim and S. L. Mack.

Mankato, Mich.—F. H. Northrop is making arrangements to open a moving picture theater here. It is known as the Wonderland Family Theater.

Hamilton, Ohio.—Carl Mason and William Shears are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater at the corner of Main and B streets.

Tilton, N. H.—Stevens Brothers, of Franklin, have opened a new moving picture theater here in the Lovering building, to be known as the Lyric Theater.

Salinas, Cal.—George A. White has let the contract to H. A. Greene for the erection of a new moving picture theater, to be located on Main street.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Olinger, Grabhorn & Truettner have been incorporated under the International Theater Film Association, with a capital of $15 000.

New Bedford, Mass.—Joseph J. Roberts, of Worcester, has been awarded the contract for the erection of a moving picture theater here for Mrs. Cordelia Vien.

Northampton, Pa.—C. B. Wannamaker, of Allentown, is completing arrangements for the opening up of a modern vaudeville and moving picture theater here.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Horace B. Deal Company is estimating on plans for a moving picture theater, to be located at the corner of Aspen street and Haverford avenue.

New York, N. Y.—Architect M. W. Del Gando has completed the plans and specifications for the remodeling and enlarging of the moving picture hall, owned by Pascarella Munsone, at 2097 First avenue.

All The Best

Nothing But The Best

That's what we have and what you want

READ THE LIST

N. Y. Motion Picture Co,
Bison, Eclair, Centaur,
Great Northern, Phoenix

and the Pick of all the Foreign Films

No Old Assn. Films in Our Stock

WRITE us today, how many reels you use and how often you change and get OUR PRICE

Philadelphia Projection Co.

Perfection Film Service

44 N. 9th Street - Philadelphia, Pa.

MISS LOUISE M. MARION

In Her Celebrated Sketches

ALSO SPECIAL RECITALS

Illustrated with Lantern Slides

is booking engagements for Vaudeville in Moving Picture Theatres, between the Films. For particulars address

LOUISE M. MARION

321 West 23d Street, New York City

Mr. Exhibitor!

If you want to see your house "packed," ask your nearest Exchange Man to supply you with the GREATEST AMERICAN FEATURE FILM the MOTION PICTURE WORLD has ever produced—"The Only Authorized and Authentic Motion Pictures of the Great United States Military Tournament" held at Camp Taft the week of July 5th to 10th, Toledo, Ohio. Over 3,000 feet of film, reproducing, with wonderful clearness, The Modern Field Artillery in Action—Lively, Thrilling Drills by the Infantry—Wall Scaling and Skirmish Work—Wonderful Saddle and Bareback Riding by the Cavalry—Modern Quick-Firing Cannon in Action—Engineer Troops Building Bridges and Destroying Them with Dynamite—Signal Corps in Scientific and Instructive Field Work—Hospital Corps Showing How the Wounded Are Cared For—and the hundreds of other "stunts" that will excite your audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

Lively now! Be the first in your territory to exhibit these remarkable pictures. Now is the time to "stock up" on a little "Easy Coin of the Realm."

N. B.—If your Exchange will not furnish you, let us know the seating capacity of your theater and we will send you further particulars.

The Tournament Film Co., Toledo, Ohio

NEXT S and A FILM ISSUE

Comedy and Drama—An Exceptional Reel

"The Widow"

(Length Approx. 520 feet)

GUARANTEED

"A Laugh in Every Foot"

"A Woman's Wit"

(Length Approx. 475 feet)

Rich with thrills and intensely interesting situations

READY

Wednesday, October 20, 1909

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs

Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

New York Office, 44 Park Place

Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Western Office,
Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Everything in NEW and S. H.

Motion Picture Machines

Films, Stereopticons, Song Slides and Supplies. Same wanted. Catalogues free.

HARBACH & CO.,
809 Filbert St., Phila., Pa.

OUR MOTTO: BIG SALES and SMALL Profits

Latest and Best FRENCH-ITALIAN and AMERICAN Subjects

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL COMPANY

214 SIXTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Drop us a line or a trial will convince you that we can give you the entire satisfaction

THE GAUMONT COMPANY

OF CANADA

403, 404, 405 Henry Berks Building - - Montreal, Que.

Films	The Best	Gaumont (Paris)
Machines	The Chrono	A New Movement No Star Wheel—No Flicker
Talking Pictures	The Chronophone	A Novelty A New Price

Accesories. A new improved Rewinder. A different Reel. The wonderful Symetric Lense. You can save something and gain more by writing for our proposition at once

Gaumont

Agents for Western Canada

Canadian Chronophone Co.

310 Kennedy Block, Winnipeg, Man.

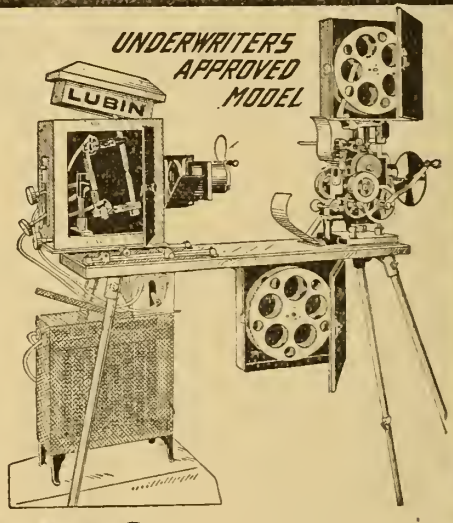
U. S. Agents for Chrono and Chronophone

GAUMONT CO.

124 E. 25th St., New York

Gaumont

LUBIN'S 1910 MARVEL



equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

FILMS

RELEASED OCTOBER 11.

PAPA'S HONEYMOON

Papa has decided to marry again, and takes his two boys, Max and Moritz, along on his honeymoon. The boys do not like the new mother and the trip becomes a succession of exciting incidents. LENGTH, 600 FEET.

OUT FOR THE DAY

Father takes his wife and six children out for the day. Did you ever have a wife and six children? If so, you can appreciate father's troubles. If not, you can only imagine them. This film is a screamer. LENGTH, 390 FEET.

RELEASED OCTOBER 14.

SANDY, THE POACHER

In the hills of Scotland, Sandy the poacher is loved by the game warden's daughter. The assistant game warden is madly in love with the girl and tries to take her away from Sandy, who is accused of the murder of the game warden, who really was shot accidentally by the assistant. All ends well and the lovers are united. LENGTH, 840 FEET.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA

Cincinnati, Ohio.—John J. Ryan is preparing to erect a large airdome here.

Ottawa, Ill.—Bart Bungart is planning to open a moving picture theater here.

Bethany, Mo.—G. V. Oliphant is preparing to open a moving picture theater here.

Homer, Ill.—C. B. Burkhard is preparing to open a new moving picture theater here.

St. Louis, Mo.—Oppenheimer Bros. will erect a vaudeville theater at Suburban Garden.

Spencer, Neb.—Fred J. Sedlacek has sold the Spencer Opera House to C. B. Hodge.

Brooklyn, Ia.—C. T. Rasmussen is preparing to open the Majestic moving picture show here.

Sullivan, Ind.—Roy Bess is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Burlington, Vt.—W. J. Lebarron, of Loraine, Ohio, is erecting a new moving picture theater here.

St. Paul, Minn.—George B. Lennon has purchased a lot on Wabash street as a site for a theater.

Connellsville, Pa.—The Colonial Theater Building, owned by L. F. Ruth, was badly damaged by fire.

Atlanta, Ga.—Asa G. Candler has purchased the Lyceum Theater property here and has taken possession.

Cairo, Ill.—M. J. Farnbaker has purchased the Pathe Theater, on Eighth street, and has taken possession.

Pekin, Ill.—Charles C. Pyle, of Chicago, has purchased the Vaudette Theater here and is now in possession.

Waukegan, Ill.—Joseph Howard is having plans prepared for the erection of a modern vaudeville theater here.

Clarion, Iowa.—Mr. Wilson has disposed of his interest in the Electric Theater here to his partner, Mr. Kinson.

Pecatonica, Ill.—R. H. Griffin, of Rockford, is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Troy, Ill.—George H. Schmacker has opened a new moving picture theater in the Rieder's Opera House Block.

Ft. Scott, Kan.—M. D. Mowdy is making arrangements to open a moving picture theater in the Marshall Building.

Atlanta, Ga.—W. Harry Scott has purchased a half interest in the Elite Moving Picture Theater, at 36 Peachtree street.

Muskogee, Okla.—The Muskogee Amusement Company will erect a $10,000 moving picture and vaudeville theater here.

Lime, Ohio.—Louis Cunningham and Russel Smith will open a new moving picture theater. It will be known as the Star.

St. Paul, Minn.—The Columbian Amusement Company, of Minneapolis, is contemplating the erection of a vaudeville theater here.

Springfield, Mo.—George F. Olendorf is preparing to open a new vaudeville theater on College street. It will be known as the Lyric.

Denver, Col., August 23.—A very gratifying change has come over conditions in the country tributary to Denver during the past two weeks. After several months of very indifferent conditions the receipts of the picture houses have suddenly taken an upward tendency and fat purses with broad smiles are the usual decorations for the exhibitors. The upward tendency is hard to explain, except that there has been a cessation of the intense heat and people have become tired of park and outdoor amusements and are going back to the pictures. The awakening has occurred not alone in Denver, but reports from outside towns are even more encouraging and houses that were offered for sale a month ago are now withdrawn from the market.

From the exchange standpoint the improvement is most remarkable. Exhibitors who a few weeks ago could scarcely pay their bills for very cheap service are now asking for later films. Houses that joined the ranks of the independents because they felt they could not afford the $2 per week are now coming in and gladly paying the royalty for the privilege of getting licensed films.

Here is one typical example of the business done: The Isis Theater, Denver, is probably the largest real picture house in the West. It is a genuine theater with all fittings, seating over 1,000 persons and showing nothing but pictures. For two nights the entrance has been blocked to the sidewalk continuously from 7 to 10 o'clock. People waited as long as thirty minutes to get seats and at times the lines extended to the curb. In fact, there were no lines, simply people massed with their faces toward the entrance.

At other show houses the conditions were about the same, although in a lesser degree owing to the smaller seating capacities. Only one house, the Denver Theater, which has recently gone independent, showed a distinct lack of business, there being no waiting line at any time, so far as was noticed.

The writer read with some pleasure the description of the trip through the plant of the Selig Polyscope Company in Chicago. It may be interesting to know that during the past year Mr. Selig has bought enough wild animals to stock a full sized show. A dozen wolves, several coyotes, several bear cubs, deer, mountain lions and similar beasts have been sent from here to be used in pictures at the Selig studio. At present the writer is holding for Mr. Selig several bear cubs and two deer, all of which are remarkably tame and gentle. The deer have been loaned to the Denver city park, where they are daily visited by thousands of children and petted from morn till night. They will be shipped to the Selig studio as soon as Mr. Selig returns from Europe where, rumor has it, he has gone to buy a Zeppelin airship to be used in Colorado next Winter for making new and exciting subjects. The view of a crowd of horsemen rushing through canons and over trails can be made without a break from an airship, while heretofore the camera has been stationary and many excellent effects lost. The airship will be used for some novel scenic negatives impossible to obtain in any other manner.

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED SONG
ADVERTISING
ANNOUNCEMENT
SPECIAL

SLIDES

Special Slides Made to Order

58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614
CHICAGO

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

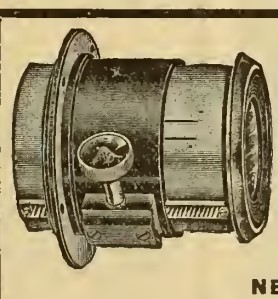
Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies. : : : :

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND —OHIO—

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"
Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN
THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.
(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)
1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

$7.00 a Day
$15.00 for THREE DAYS
$30.00 A WEEK
For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction free.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
Mssler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS
Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster
Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York
'Phone 4267 Orchard.
Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver Shipped built up It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine
FIRE PROOF!
NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!
NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

Old Films Made New
Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

Write to-day for terms

Work done promptly

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.
744 Orleans Street, Chicago, Ill.

LEARN TO MAKE MIRRORS
¶ We furnish complete instructions for making all kinds of Mirrors so simple that anyone can make a first-class Mirror as soon as they read over our copyrighted instructions. For $2.00 we send you the complete outfit. This price is good for a short time only. No machines used, all ingredients can be secured of your local druggist for a few cents.

The Butts Sign & Novelty Co.
228 Temple Court Building, Denver, Colo.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500
OPERA CHAIRS IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

For Sale
100 PLUSH OPERA CHAIRS FOR $100
Cost $7.00 each
BUFFALO FILM EXCHANGE
272 Washington St., Buffalo, N. Y.

FOLDING CHAIRS
For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

ROLL TICKETS
YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities

Stories of the Films.

A CHANGE OF HEART.—The daagers of evil association. "He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith"—Eccles. xiii. 2. The contaainating influence of evil companions has caused more woe than any other morai agent. Here we portray an episode in the life of the son of indulgent parents. Left to follow his inclinations, he drifts into the association of reckless companions, and having money at his disposal, he is ahle to indulge in any moral caprice they may suggest. Drinking is always the feature with such parties and the head and heart henumbed hy the fumes of alcohol are never normal and the heing is morally weakened, ofttimes falling into a morass of irreparahle ruin. Wicked companions invite us to perdition. Howard Norris, a fortune-spoiled young man, spends his time with a party of reckless youths who are attracted hy his freedom with his money, and hence do their hest to keep him entertained according to their own standard. Drinking and auto speeding forms the principal occupation of those who have nothing hut money and time at their disposition. On one of their auto rides Norris meets a pretty simple country girl, who is artlessness personified. She sits on the porch of her humhle home endeavoring to arrange her raven tresses as she sees pictured before her in the fashion paper. The old father sits hy admiring her who is all in all to him. Norris alights and asks for a drink of water, and the girl's simplicity induces his dangerous attentions. A second visit is made, and he prevaiis upon the girl to meet him clandestincly. To this she accedes, and with the aid of his companions, the young man plans a deception, one of his associates volunteering to play the part of the minister. The pretended marriage performed, the young man takes the girl to the Summer hotei at which he is stopping. Meanwhile, the old father hecomes uneasy at his child's absence, and approaching the cafe the young man frequents, he learns the truth from the hoasting, reckiess youths, who do not enlighten him as to his daughter's whereahouts. Returning home almost hroken hearted, he swears to kill on sight the young profligate who lured his child off. The chums of the young man arrive at the hotel and intimate to the girl the nature of the situation, and she demands the truth from Norris, learning which she flies out of the place to make her way homeward on foot. She has scarcely gone when Norris' mother arrives from a trip ahroad, and appreciating the tone of the companions, she whispers those old-fashioned words of love and advice, the like of which he has not heard in some time. He sees what a wheip he has heen, and realizing that he loves the little country girl, he hastens after her to right the wrong. Overtaking her in the road, he persuades her to go and he married in earnest, which she does, and they then proceed, accompanied hy the officiating minister, to the old man's home, who now believes it has all heen a mistake. The suhject is a life story convincingly told in a series of most heautiful rustic scenes. Length, 977 feet.

THE LITTLE TEACHER.—A comedy of rustic schooldays. Youth and authority never go hand in hand. To command, the commander must have either age or whiskers, and it is not to he wondered at the scholars of the little country school rehelling, when the little teacher, a pretty girl, smaller and younger than many of her charge, was put in position "to teach the young idea how to shoot." She had a premonition that the task was a disagreeahle one, and it required the persuasive urging of the school committee to induce her to take charge. Her very entrance in the school room is met with suppressed derision, and the trouhle comes when she requests Dave, the hully of the class, to get up and recite. He refuses point blank, and incites a mutiny during which the entire class holts. Weeping, she leaves the school house for home, discouraged and embarrassed. On the way she meets Jack Browning, a surveyor, who, upon learning the cause of her grief, volunteers to lend her aid. With her, he goes to the school room, where, meanwhile, the scholars have returned and are raising Cain. At their entrance quiet is induced and Dave is thrashed into submission hy the surveyor, and quite willingly does he recite his lesson. Still he is chagriaed, and the gibes of his classmates arouse his ire further, so he decides to how to Nemesis and meet the surveyor after school. The meeting takes place, for the surveyor, anticipating trouble, calls to protect the little teacher on her way home. The determined but misguided Dave receives another hump, and is now docile. Furthermore, he begins to see his teacher in a new light. He hecomes dceply smitten with her and gathers wild flowers to adorn her desk, despite the fact that Patsy says he is "mush." The teacher's thoughts, however, are in another direction, for the well-meant protection of the surveyor unwittingly wins her heart. The surveyor is a married man, whose wife now joins him, and he is quite innocent of the suffering he has caused, never dreaming that the little girl esteemed him more than a friend. But then it is the unsophisticatedness of the teacher that induces this misunderstanding and she soon recovers to notice the true honest love of her hig punil, Dave. You may imagine Dave's elation upon learning of the surveyor's harmlessness, and he at once sets siege upon the little teacher's heart and is victorious. Length, 982 feet.

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine)

CONVICTING EVIDENCE.—Openiag scene is laid in the courtyard of a wealthy planter of Spain. A number of belles are dancing to the strains of a mandolin in the hands of his daughter. The new faces and hackground with the exceedingly natural acting make this a particularly hright and happy scene.

The merrymaking is increased by the arrival of the men from the fields. Shortly, the farmer's daughter and one of his servants draw apart from the revelers, for they are lovers.

The girl's father arrives, separates them, discharges the youth, and introduces the son of a wealthy neighhor to his daughter as a friend.

At his earliest opportunity the new friend offers his hand in marriage. He is refused. He plans vengeance, murders the girl and places suspicion upon her former lover.

The innocent man is captured, hrought to the scene of the crime, accused of the deed. Heartbroken hy the death of his sweetheart and the unjust accusation, he loses his mind and is placed in the dungeon at the town prison.

Later the watch of the murderer is found clutched in the hand of the dead girl. The guiity man is brought to justice and the maddened man, after having his mind restored hy his mother's voice, is given his liberty.

HOW HE EARNED HIS MEDAL.—A young man, while strolling in the streets of Paris, finds a medal which has heen given to someone for bravery. Wishing to wear the medal he starts search for opportunities to prove himself a hero.

Mistaking a galloping horse far a runaway he stops it and is heaten by the occupants, who are forced to miss their train.

He attempts to save several hathers from drowning, thereby getting further chastisement for himself.

Seeing smoke floating from a window he thinks the building is aflame, and unceremoniously throws water in upon an old gentleman who is quietly smoking his pipe.

He then saves a fly from a neighhor's glass in the coffee house, and is punished for interfering.

On every occasion he finds his opportunity to display heroism develops into a case where he is interrupting others and that rather than heing a hero hecause of saving people, he is one because of having heen suhjected to so much humiliation. He therefore proudly pins the medal upon his coat.

PRINCESS OF THE SEA.—The scenes are laid along a heautiful sea coast and within the walls of huge old castles, huilt on high cliffs overlooking the ocean.

Beautiful grounds, old ivy covered walls, richly costumed knights and ladies, perfect acting, with clear and interesting plot, serve to make this one of the strongest reels of compartively short lengtn ever released.

On a boating trip a young prince sees a heautiful princess, attended hy an undine, emerging from the sea.

He is fascinated and manages to gain her attention long enough to tell her his love and find it is reciprocated.

They are later married with great pomp at his castle, where for a little time only she is content.

When she decides to return to her ocean home the hridegroom tries to dissuade her. Failing in this he follows her to the sea shore to say adieus.

Here he hecomes so enchanted by her stories of the world below the sea that he follows to the submerged castle in which she resides.

THE LIQUID AIR.—An old inventor succeeds in getting liquid air with a temperature of 140 degrees below zero.

So cold that in order to work with it he is forced to wear thick fur clothing, as are his thermometers and his servant, who inadvertently enters during the experiments.

Amused by the discomfort his discovery has given to the servant, he decides to please himself further at the expense of other people's comfort.

He calls upon the door keeper of his building, whom he finds hathing his feet in a tub. As he enters with the cold chemical the water is frozen, leaving the man's feet embedded in a cake of ice.

Next, the stream of water from a gardener's hose is solidified in midair.

From him the professor goes to a coffee house where hoth waiters and customers are frozen into laughable poses.

At last, content with his entertainment, he opens the vase, allowing the weather to moderate and the frozen people to regain movement.

Evidently he expects them to laugh with him at the joke he has played upon them. But instead, he meets just punishment.

THE BROKEN VIOLIN.—The story opens at the camp of a band of gypsies where an old man is seen driving several children out to beg for him in a nearby city.

The little brother and sister in whom we are interested are next seea singing before the dwellings of the city.

The boy is a violinist and his sister sings. They are very fortunate in their earnings until a cross doorkeeper, displeased by their music, snatches the violin from the youngster and breaks it upon the pavement. The children naturally threaten him with revenge. Further angered, he takes them to the police, catering complaint that they are thieves.

In the court room their counsellor pleads that they are more artists than thieves and beggars.

The children give an exhihition of their ahility. It impresses the judge so favorahly that he dismisses the case against them.

The counsellor adopts both little musicians and the drama closes showiag them hoth happy in their new home.

ALPHONSE, THE DEAD SHOT.—The title tells the story, for Alphoase accomplishes everything he wishes, with his revolver.

He trims limbs from a tree by expert shooting.

When in attendance at a military review he shoots the hats from any who fail to salute the flag.

He punishes a cruel teamster, removes a dog's tail, lights a gentleman's cigarette, punctures wine bottles so corkscrews are needless and finally shoots out the light in his room, angering his wife so she attempts to hreak his revolver and succeeds in exploding the chamber and demolishing the room.

ONE-LEGGED PETE AND PAT.—A lively comedy showing the marked ahility of two one-legged beggars to care for themselves with the same case that men fully equipped with two active limbs are able to show.

KALEM MFG CO.

THE MAN AND THE GIRL.—This picture has for its theme the power of triumphant love and depicts the transformation worked in the nature of a man hy his love for a young girl. At the time of the opening of our story they were hoth living in the same little Western mining camp. The man, Morgan, a big hulking miner, young, hut crude and savage, disliked by all his fellow workmen on account of his sullen temper and vicious tongue; the girl, Nance, a timid, gentle slip of a young girl, just hudding into womanhood.

Scene I.—The Girl Filis a Mother's Place. In one of the little cahins that dot the hillside hack of the camp lives an elderly miner named Martin and his two motherless daughters, Nance, a young girl of eighteen, and Millie, a chubby, mischievous little miss of seven. Martin is busy getting some wood ready for Nance's use before he starts to his day's work at the mine. Millie comes around the corner of the cabin and wants to help daddy hold the wood. Martin remonstrates with her, telling her a splinter may hurt her, hut she persists and grahs the stick he is splitting. Down comes the stick, driving a splinter into little Millie's finger. Hearing her cry of pain, Nance rushes from the house and attempts to console her. It is now time for Martin to start to his work at the mine. Getting his dinner pail, which Nance has filled for him, he leaves his two daughters together. Nance comforts the weeping Millie and giving her their pet puppy for a companion, starts for water. But little Millie is unwilling to be left alone, and after a minute inspection of her injured finger starts after Nance.

Scene II.—The Man Is Rejected for His Cruelty to Little Sister. A short distance from the cahin a little mountain stream of delicious sparkling water comes tumbling down from the snowcapped mountain above. Here Nance comes with her two buckets. At her hack appears young Morgan, one of the mine workers, a rough, hulking man, young hut gruff and rude, with frowning eyes and sullen face. Morgan is madly in love with Nance and devours her with his eyes. Seizing her two hands roughly, he tells her of his love. She listens with panting hosom, for her heart has gone out to the rough miner. Just then little Millie, who has followed Nance, comes up and halts, frightened at the man, Morgan. Impatient at this unwelcome intrusion, Morgan grasps her roughly by the arm and with a curse tells her to get out of here. Millie flees in terror. Morgan laughs and again turns to Nance. But all her motherly tenderness for little sister is aroused at his cruelty and with trembling lips and gleaming eyes she orders him away.

Scene III.—The Man Determines to Quit the Mine.

Scene IV.—The Man Leaves Buena Vista.

Scene V.—Death of the Father. On Monday morning of the next week Nance is busy with her week's washing in front of the little cahin. Millie is trying to help sister all she can. Nance's face is sad and worn. She is still thinking of Morgan's departure. At the sound of approaching voices she stops work. Around the corner of the house come four miners carrying the mangled form of her father. There has heen an accident at the new shaft and he has heen mortally hurt. At his request they lay him on the ground. Gasping for breath, he slowly dictates a short letter to his sister in a distant camp, asking her to care for his two daughters. He bids them a last farewell. Now he attempts to kiss little Millie. But the effort is too much for his fast-ebbing strength and he falls back lifeless. Weeping convulsively, Nance and Millie throw themselves across the lifeless hody, while the miners stand with bowed heads.

Scene VI.—The Last Farewell to Father's Grave.

Scene VII.—The Girl's Face Follows the Wandering Man. Meanwhile Morgan's restless wanderings have taken him back into the mountains far away from Buena Vista Camp. He has found a small streak of pay dirt and setting up his rude tent by the side of a solitary little mountain stream is busy washing out the gold, an occasional nugget of

"The Exhibitors' Friend"

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE, New York City

Dear Sirs: Your last shipment of reels at hand. That's the kind that makes a "HIT."
(Signed) J. H. Mc.

This is one of many letters received and is on exhibition. Let us give you a chance to write the same thing.

The following Brand New Biograph prints for sale. Never on a machine, &c.:

TRIAL MARRIAGES	STORY THE BIOGRAPH TOLD
PAYMASTER	UNDER the OLD APPLE TREE
THE TRUANTS	ALMOST A KING
KENTUCKY FEUD	FIGHTING THE FLAMES

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 EAST 23d STREET - - - NEW YORK CITY

RENT 2 REELS, $6

A week, three changes; 10 000 Roll Tickets, 90c.; Condensers, 50c; 50 Electric Carbons, $1.15, Electric Lamps, $2.00; Announcement Slides 15c; Prepared Glass for writing or drawing, 10c; Stereopticons, $12.00; Portable Booth, $10.00 Free Catalogue of everything in the business.

$.57.75 or will Rent for $5 a week.

L. HETZ, 302 E. 23d St., New York

CALEHUFF

A Member of the
FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk. MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES
$5.00 per set

N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FILMS FOR SALE

50 new reels of perfect film, in extra good condition, to close out, at $18.50.

Second hand Edison machines for sale at a bargain. Parts to fit all machines in stock.

MAYER SILVERMAN
322 Futon Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

FOR SALE

A Mercury Arc Rectifier, cost $200.00 new, sell for $75 00. A Bargain

BUFFALO FILM EXCHANGE
13 E. Genesee St. Buffalo, N. Y.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

—The Only Motion Picture Machine That Will Build You a Permanent, Paying Business.

The motion picture business has grown from a fad to a substantial, national amusement; a legitimate, remunerative business for exhibitors everywhere. The most successful use the Edison Kinetoscope.

Because it is made by Edison and was the first Motion Picture Machine on the market. Because the pictures are clear and steady. The neighborhood crowd soon learns this and patronizes the best show regularly. The Edison is the most easily and economically operated, and will outlast any other motion picture machine made.

It is the one for you to buy if you are going into the business to make money and to stay. Write to-day for booklet giving full particulars and details, and copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

EDISON FILMS

Releases of October 12th and 15th

RELEASED OCTOBER 12, 1909

A NEW LIFE

The third film in the series based upon Victor Hugo's great novel, "Les Miserables." It depicts the escape of Jean Valjean from the man-of-war, the beginning of his attachment for Cosette, the identification of Valjean by Javert, the Chief of Police; the search by Javert and the gendarmes and the escape over the walls of the convent, and then the escape from the convent, Valjean being carried out in a coffin and narrowly escaping being buried alive. Fully as strong as the preceding films.

No. 6528 Code, VERTEMENT Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 15, 1909

HANSEL AND GRETEL

A pretty story from Grimm's Fairy Tales. Hansel and Gretel get lost in the woods, are put to sleep by the sandman, are guarded by the angels and fairies, are found by the witch, who casts a spell over them and casts Hansel into a cage. The children escape, the witch is put into the oven, turned into gingerbread and eaten by the children and their playmates. A pleasing film for everyone, but especially for the little folks.

No. 6529 Code, VERTEMOS Approx. Length, 630 feet

WHITLER'S WITLESS WANDERINGS

A humorous film illustrating the mishaps that befell an absent-minded man.

No. 6530 Code, VERTENCIA Approx. Length, 330 feet

Releases for October 19th and 22nd

RELEASED OCTOBER 19, 1909

THEIR SOCIAL EDUCATION—Comedy

No. 6531 Code, VERTERIA Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 22, 1909

THE LOST HANDBAG—Comedy

No. 6532 Code, VERTIGINE Approx. Length, 400 feet

A GREAT GAME—Comedy

No. 6533 Code, VERTILGBAR Approx. Length, 590 feet

Special Edison Film

NAVAL PARADE OF THE HUDSON-FULTON

Fine views of the Half Moon, the Clermont, the war vessels and the river craft

Released, September 27th. Approx. Length, 735 Feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.

New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents
P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities

To insure insertion, advertising copy should reach us not later than Wednesday morning of each week.

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

Feature Films for Traveling Show

For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.

ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT

The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE
14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.
10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

fair size rewarding him for his restless industry. As he is working here, slowly there appears seated on the bank above him a vision of Nance just as he saw her the day he surprised her at that other little stream back behind Buena Vista Camp.

Scene VIII.—On the Road to Luck Strike Camp. Down a long stretch of barren, lonely road come Nance and Millie. Millie is lagging behind, tired and worn out from the long walk. Nance tries to cheer her; then, seeing how near asleep she is, stops, lifts her up and staggering under the increased weight, trudges on. Now they have reached a little clump of wood. Nance, seeing Millie is asleep, sets down her bundles and carries Millie into the shade.

Scene IX.—Love's Transformation. In the shelter of a small clump of bushes Nance has left little Millie asleep while she has taken their pail and set out to find some water. Morgan, pushing back the bushes, finds Millie asleep. A wave of newly discovered tenderness creeps over him. Dropping on his knees beside her he lifts her gently into his strong arms and cradles her against his bosom. Through the bushes at the back appears Nance's tear-stained face. She approaches and touches Morgan timidly. At sight of her the love leaps into his eyes, but he cautions her to be quiet or they will wake Millie. Nance drops down beside him, her happy face hidden in his shoulder, and Morgan with his arm about her looks out, with a face out of which triumphant love has driven all the brutality and sullenness and substituted in their place a strange new strength and gentleness. Length, 940 feet.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

WHO DISCOVERED THE NORTH POLE?—The topic of the day is very much discussed by two friends. One is for Peary, the other for Cook. Each one is sure that the other one discovered the North Pole. The argument grows hotter every minute, but no conclusion is reached. On their way home they put the decision up to their friends. Whomever they meet is made an arbitrator in the discussion, "Who discovered the North Pole?" but not one is able to throw any more light upon the subject than has already been done by others. Day and night the two friends figure out who discovered the North Pole. They have not as yet solved the problem. They have gone crazy over the matter and the world still wonders who discovered the North Pole. Length, 535 feet.

BILLIKEN.—The Crisis. A little girl lies in bed with typhoid fever. The crisis is near. The doctor's face is very serious. The mother breaks down; the father tries to console her. Nothing can tempt the little girl, who seems entirely indifferent to her surroundings. Father and mother exit while the nurse keeps a watchful eye on the little patient. The father returns with dolls of all descriptions. The little girl does not care for them. Now he unpacks a "Billiken." The funny face of this doll brings a smile upon the little girl's countenance.

She reaches out her hand for the Billiken and is soon fast asleep. In her dreams she sees Billiken making funny stunts. Billiken also has a circus, which she watches with great interest. Everything is so funny that our little girl can hardly refrain from laughing.

Now Billiken is tired performing stunts, he jumps back to the bed and the little girl awakens. The doctor enters. The crisis has passed. The little girl is on the way to recovery. Billiken saved her life. Length, 465 feet.

A BLANK CHECK.—Bob's young wife is dangerously ill. Naturally his thoughts are at home. Next to him works Fred, a dissipated young man who is gambling a good deal and losing more money than he earns.

One day the proprietor asks Bob how much money he needs for the pay roll. Bob cannot tell yet so the proprietor signs a blank check. Just at this moment Bob is called home to the bedside of his wife. As soon as he reaches home Bob sends a note saying on account of the sickness of his wife he will not come to the office in the morning. Ferd who is again in need of money fills in the amount of $3,500 to the blank check and disguising himself with wig and beard, cashes the check without any difficulty.

The working men ought to be paid out. When Bob returns he is asked for the money for the pay roll. He cannot find the check. He will not accuse his fellowman but as he cannot explain how the check was cashed he is held as a thief.

He explains to the detectives how he watched all night at his wife's bedside. One goes to investigate and finds his story true. The other detective is watching Ferd who enjoys the fruit of his ill-doings. He is going back to the gambling den. In the meantime proofs of his guilt have been found, the gambling den is raided and Ferd made a prisoner.

The next day the crisis has passed and Bob's young wife is on the road to recovery. Length, 955 feet.

PAPA'S HONEYMOON.—Papa's trunks are packed for the honeymoon. Max and Moritz accompany him. The boys do not like the new stepmother and as it is too slow anyhow the take itching powder and soot and put it between the parents' wearing apparel.

The wedding trip is a most eventful one. The boys call everybody's attention to the newlyweds and they receive quite an ovation which however is not very much appreciated.

At the hotel more trouble awaits the newly married couple. Max and Moritz continually think of new tricks to play on father and the stepmother and they succeed beyond all expectation.

At the finish they meet their Waterloo, but the fun certainly was worth the licking. Length, 600 feet.

OUT FOR THE DAY.—Father, mother and six children prepare for a day's outing. You all know what it means to go to a picnic with six children. One is sure to get lost and many mishaps must be expected.

Besides, the children get hungry and cannot be blamed if they take a bite now and then. Thus it may happen when the picnic ground is reached there is nothing left for the picnic. The children get tired, father must borrow a push cart to bring them home. Unfortunately the push cart runs away and has to be caught. When the task is accomplished, father is so tired that he cannot walk any further. He is laid upon the push cart, the wife is the horsey and the children lend their assistance. Don't be uneasy; if they are not home as yet, they will surely come soon. Length, 390 feet.

"SANDY" THE POACHER.—In the Scotch Highlands a game warden's beautiful daughter loves "Sandy" a rollicking young fellow who by continual poaching on the game preserves keeps the wardens constantly in action. The warden's assistant, a rejected suitor, determines to frustrate the love making of his rival and being gradually worked to a frenzy of jealous hatred, resolves to remove him by "fair means or foul." "Sandy" has several narrow escapes. One day in the woods he is caught in the act of trapping hares by the warden, his sweetheart's father. A quarrel ensues.

In his excitement the warden attempts to use his gun. It is accidentally discharged. The old man falls dead. "Sandy" is horrified and thinks himself the unfortunate cause. The assistant has witnessed the struggle from behind a tree and aims at "Sandy," but fate decrees that the guns should both be discharged at the same time and he becomes an assassin. The old woman whom "Sandy" has befriended has witnessed all this from where she was concealed and keeps her secret, in terror of the ways of justice, until circumstances afford her an opportunity of bringing the real offender to his deserts. Length, 840 feet.

THE MAJOR AND THE JUDGE.—The Major arriving at home from abroad discovers that his only daughter is in love with a young man whom he thinks to be a fortune hunter. He ejects him without explanation or ceremony. He then writes to his old friend the Judge and asks him to come lay siege to his daughter's heart.

The young man so unceremoniously ejected is the Judge's own son. He tells his father of his love and his treatment by the Major and is assured that he shall have his assistance. The Judge just then receives the Major's letter and determines to get even with the Major. He writes to him that he will come and marry his daughter. The daughter hearing of the Judge's coming decides to give him a warm welcome. To this end she disguises as a man but the Judge through the photo recognizes his son's fiancee and to play a joke on her requests the "young man" to masquerade as a "young lady." He then calls to see his son who is suprised at the turn of things. The Judge marries the lovers. When the Major is informed of the circumstances he becomes frantic and demands satisfaction from the Judge "on the field of honor," but at the fatal point both weaken and embracing each other decide that they shall live in peace and happiness. Length, 695 feet.

HAPS AND MISHAPS.—Haps and mishaps build the ups and downs in life. Every small hap follows a mishap and every mishap a hap. It is not advisable to laugh at a man who meets with a hap, as a mishap may befall the one who enjoys the hap and "he laughs best who laughs last." A laborer carrying a long board accidentally throws off the hat of a passing gentleman.

An Italian art dealer laughs at the gentleman's misfortune only to meet with a bigger one himself. While the street cleaners are at work a friend of the man with the hose tries to play a practical joke on him, but it is he who at the end is the sufferer. The same is the case with the father-in-law who tries to interfere with his daughter's love affairs. Always he laughs best who laughs last. Length, 240 feet.

G. MELIES.

THE STOLEN WIRELESS.—Two young men love the same young girl. One of them, learning that war has been declared, enlists and goes to the front. Passing with his regiment before the home of his beloved, he leaves the ranks to say farewell. He asks her hand in marriage and she acquiesces. He then slips the betrothal ring on her finger and she, in turn, unclasps a locket she wears around her neck and gives it to him. He swears he will never part with it, and they exchange a last kiss. As he goes away, she bursts into tears.

The other young man is called on the field of operations as war correspondent of an important newspaper. He calls on the young girl and also tells of his love for her. He meets with a repulse, he insists, she shows him her engagement ring. She is no more free, her word has been given to another.

Furious, the war correspondent leaves, but vows inwardly that he will have his revenge—cost what it may—on the man who is the cause of his disappointment and whom he now hates with all his might.

The young soldier, who has distinguished himself in the army, is soon promoted a sergeant, and is charged with carrying, on horseback, an important message to the staff office at the first wireless station. At full speed, he reaches the station, where he meets the war correspondent, who seeks information to impart to the enemy.

Out of vengeance, he steals the sergeant's message and denounces the brave soldier as a traitor. He lies in wait for him in the middle of a wood and has him arrested just as he is returning to the camp after having fulfilled his mission.

During the night the sergeant escapes. After a struggle with the sentinel, whom he strikes senseless, he hastens to the camp and informs them that the message has been stolen and that the enemy may attack them at any moment during the night. They sound the charge and the soldiers rush to the battlefield. The war correspondent arrives at the camp and tries to deceive the officer in charge, but a sharpshooter who was watching his movements shoots him dead at the feet of the commanding officer. Justice is done, and the traitor is carried away by order of the officer.

A battle takes place during the night in which the enemy is pursued into the woods.

The sergeant is wounded, but albeit courageous efforts to take part in the combat, he falls senseless and is carried away to the hospital.

The young girl who is betrothed to the young soldier, devoting herself to her country, offers her services as nurse in the military ambulances and is unsparing in her care for the wounded. Among the latter she recognizes her affianced husband, who is lying unconscious on a litter. She fears that he is dead, but the surgeon reassures her that although he is grievously wounded he will soon recover, provided he has good care. She bends over and kisses him. This caress revives the young man, who, recognizing his fiancee, raises himself, and, happy to see her once more, he covers her with kisses.

The hostilities are over. As soon as the young man is better, he and the young girl will be united, happy to be home and together.

PATHE FRERES.

THE TRAPPERS.—The picture opens, showing the interior of a trapper's camp, where, owing to the rivalry of two of the hunters over the hand of Bess, there is strong dissension. Harry, the one who was fortunate in winning the fair maiden a few years previous, is bitterly hated by his rival, Frank, and the latter in a cowardly manner shoots his enemy. Harry, who is wounded severely, makes his way to the cabin, where he hides in the loft. Shortly after Frank and his comrades enter the place, and search it thoroughly, knowing that their victim is only wounded, they intend finishing him. Their efforts to find Harry are in vain, and Frank seating himself at the table orders food from the terrified woman. Suddenly the ruffian is stupefied to see a drop of blood fall from the ceiling on to his hand. He glances up, and seeing the blood oozing through the crack, he at once realizes that his man is above. Harry, too weak to remain in hiding any longer, and realizing that he is captured, descends, and is bound by his enemies and thrown to the floor. The culprits then take Bess and her father, and carry them off, after setting fire to the house.

Little Billie, Harry's son, who was hidden in a chest, slips out, and after liberating his father, he seizes a bucket and proceeds to extinguish the blaze. Then jumping upon his horse, the youngster dashes off in pursuit of the enemy. He finds their hiding place, after which he returns to his father, whom he guides to the outlaws' camp. An exciting combat takes place, in which Harry hides behind a pile of wood, but his enemy climbs on top, and is about to shoot him, when prevented by the quick action of Billie, who, seeing his father's peril, fires, killing the notorious Frank on the spot. Length, 804 feet.

A LUCKY HUSBAND.—This comedy reveals in the first scene, the interior of a home, where a young woman and her rather antiquated husband are entertaining a friend in a little game of cards. The guest is very much in love with his host's wife, and before taking his departure, slips a note into her hand. When the couple are alone the old husband tries to have a few moments' conversation with his wife, but at the present moment she is not at all susceptible to his flattery, owing to the fact that she is thinking of the departed guest. The woman begs to be left alone, and hastening to her room, opens the little missive, and reads her admirer's alluring invitation to meet him the following day. He requests that if she intends keeping the appointment for her to call him up on the telephone. The young woman, in high glee at the prospects of having a little diversion in her otherwise very dull existence, soon falls asleep upon her bed. She has the pleasant dream that Cupid enters the room, and after fitting her out in a beautiful costume, the little angel of love acts as her guide and directs her footsteps from the house, starting her safely on her journey to meet her loved one. As the young woman goes down the street, she is terrified by every person whom she meets, for they all turn out to be her husband, who

Kalem Films

Issue of October 15th, 1909

LENGTH 940 FEET

A powerful story of primitive love in a western mining camp, telling how love for a young girl worked transformation in the nature of a crude, rough miner. Not a dull moment in this entire film. It will grip the audience's attention at the opening of the first scene, and hold them fascinated until the final appealing climax.

Free Descriptive Lecture to all applicants.

Kalem Posters in Four Colors are Supplied by the A. B. C. Co., Cleveland, O.

KALEM CO., Inc.
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.
235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

SONG SLIDES
$3.50 THE SET

The New Slides for the New Songs

Fraidy Cat.
Stop Your Teasing.
'Neath The Arbor Vita Tree.
Mary Brown.
When The Robin Sings Again.
Let Me Prove My Love To You.

A new song added weekly. Send for special standing order proposition.

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

FOR SALE

Moving Picture Theatre, unusual opportunity. Reasonable terms, owner going south. Address,

T. LINHURST
221 Clarkson Avenue Brooklyn, N. Y.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

RELEASED OCTOBER 11, 1909.

The Little Teacher

A COMEDY OF RUSTIC SCHOOL-DAYS.

Youth and authority never go hand-in-hand. To command, the commander must have either age or whiskers, and it is not to be wondered at, the scholars of the little country school rebelling, when the little teacher, a pretty girl, smaller and younger than many of her charges, was put in position "to teach the young idea how to shoot." She fancied her position would be a disagreeable one, and was really afraid to accept the charge. Her fears were well founded, for the entire class, led by the bully, mutinies, and it is only after the leader is thrashed by a stranger, who learns of her plight, that peace is restored. The bully, however, falls desperately in love with his little teacher, and henceforth becomes her protector.

LENGTH, 982 FEET.

RELEASED OCTOBER 14, 1909.

A Change of Heart

THE DANGERS OF EVIL ASSOCIATION.

The contaminating influence of evil companions has caused more woe than any other moral agent. In this subject is portrayed an episode in the life of the son of indulgent parents. With time and money at his disposal, he falls in with reckless companions, and during one of his auto trips in the country meets a simple country girl, and urged by his friends he plans a deception. With false promises he induces her to go away with him, one of his associates volunteering to perform a pretended marriage ceremony. The poor girl learns the truth, however, and rushes out of the place for home. The timely return of the young man's mother awakens him to his better self, and so he hastens to right the wrong he had done.

LENGTH, 977 FEET.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY
Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.
11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK
GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

A NEW WAY TO PAINT SIGNS
WITH THE BUTTS SIGN WRITING OUTFITS

Anyone can paint all kind of signs and show cards in half the time required by the old way and much better. We furnish these Special Outfits complete with ten alphabets and three sets of figures of the most modern styles of the day, from 2 to 12 inches in height, not printed alphabets but the real letter, cut out of the most durable material. We also furnish with this outfit a complete book of instructions for painting all kinds of signs and cards and a selection of beautiful designs, and guarantee that anyone can do perfect lettering as soon as he receives the outfit.

Special Price For a Short Time Only $5.00. Send in your order to-day.
None sent C. O. D. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money refunded.

THE BUTTS SIGN & NOVELTY CO., 228 Temple Court Bldg DENVER, COLORADO

is aware of every move she makes. Arriving at the rendezvous, she falls into the arms of her friend, telling him of her harrowing experience, when, behold, he, too, takes the form of the deceived husband. Things reach such a state of chaos that the woman jumps from a window, and suddenly she awakens, only to find herself in a heap upon the floor. Her husband rushes in, and while he assures his wife that all is well, the latter, who takes the dream as a bad omen, calls her friend on the 'phone and informs him that the date is off. Length, 315 feet.

WONDERFUL REMEDY.—In the first part we see the main street in a provincial town where the inhabitants are making merry, and ready to be attracted by any sort of amusement to relieve the dull monotony of their lives. Soon a medicine man puts in his appearance, and from the top of his omnibus he announces that he has a remedy for all defects of the countenance. Some of the people who are not over blessed with beauty, feeling that there is an opportunity to change their ugly expressions, offer themselves as subjects for demonstrations. The remedy works wonders, and changes the ugliest of the group into stunning beauties. While the old medicine man has his back turned, a quartet of thieves steal the case containing the lotion and hasten away to their den in the woods. The old fakir soon appears upon the scene and demands the return of the stolen goods, and so great are his powers that when refused he causes the forest to transform into an inferno. The robbers, frightened half to death, are quick to hand over their spoils, but the old conjurer, who, by this time, has become a little more lenient, offers the men some of the lotion, after which he disappears. The happy quartet, thinking that they will start a little side show of their own, go to the village, where they proceed to give demonstrations. The first subject is an old bald-headed man, whom they offer to grow hair on his bead. When one of the party rubs the fluid on the old fellow's face he becomes covered with hair, and resembles a baboon, whereupon the crowd turn on the mountebanks and give them a beating, after which they are driven from the town. Length, 377 feet.

THE ROMANCE OF A POOR GIRL.—This little drama illustrates the trials of a poor domestic servant, who has a sailor lad deeply in love with her. When the youth bids his sweetheart good-bye, promising her that he will return soon to make her his happy bride, the young woman, who is employed in the office of a doctor, goes about her duties with a light heart and happy air. Her employer, attracted by her beauty, one day attempts to make love to her, and when the indignant girl resents his unwelcome attentions, the latter discharges her on the spot. Taking her few belongings, the brave girl secures employment in another household, but her time spent here is of short duration, for she has a similar unpleasant experience. The son of the lady whom she is working for makes advances to her, whereupon the infuriated girl immediately leaves the place. Going then to an employment bureau to secure another position, she takes a seat in the waiting room, and while there a man, who is attracted by her unusual beauty, forces his attention upon the unlucky girl, and as she is in the act of resenting the stranger's effrontery, the superintendent comes into the room. Witnessing the unusual proceedings, the latter, blaming the young woman for the unbecoming affair, orders her out of the place.

The next scene shows the unfortunate girl two months later, when, feeling that the whole world has turned against her, she is an outcast, starving in the streets. Driven to desperation from her terrible distress, she attempts to steal a loaf of bread, but is caught and driven away amidst a tirade of abuse. At this juncture the man whom she met at the employment bureau comes along, and telling her that he will see that she secures food and shelter, he lures her into a den of vice. The poor girl is ill at ease in her new surroundings, but makes the most of her embarrassing situation until she secures some food. A violent quarrel takes place, and in the midst of it the frightened girl makes her escape, glad to be free once more of such degrading associates. While strolling down the street, she falls in a faint from exhaustion and is picked up by a man in a passing automobile, who happens to be her former employer, the doctor.

In the meantime the sailor lad returns in high glee, and immediately goes to the place where he expects to find his sweetheart, but, to his astonishment, learns that she is not there. He is just about to turn away when the automobile bearing the sick girl and the doctor arrives at the door, and the invalid is carefully carried into the office, followed by the awe-struck youth. When the poor girl is revived, she seems to awaken in another world, for she is so surprised to see her sweetheart standing over her, and imbued with the hope which is actuated by love, the poor girl leaves the place with her fiance to become his bride. Length, 656 feet.

BLESSINGTON'S BONNY BABIES.—In the first picture we see the interior of a doll factory, where the little dumb creatures are piled copiously all over the place. The old proprietor soon falls asleep, and has the pleasant dream that all the stock of dolls become animated and leave the place. We see the little creatures flocking out of the factory and making for a public park, where they proceed to enjoy themselves like little children. They skip rope, roll hoops, have a soldiers' drill and perform all sorts of athletics in a most capable manner. Finally their leader gives orders for them to return to their places back on the shelves of the shop, and the amusing little group of puppets start home. The old fellow suddenly awakens, and finding everything in order, proceeds with his labors, glad that it is only a dream. Length, 262 feet.

CHUMS.—It being Spring-time, all available labor is recruited to work in the fields. The peasants go to their daily toil, leaving the farm house in charge of little Fanny and the dog Ned. A trio of tramps, who have been watching the place, seize the favorable opportunity and force their way into the house, where they make short work of Fanny, who offers resistance. They pick the child up and throw her down the flight of stairs into the cellar, after which the trapdoor is closed upon her. The child is in a high state of excitement and for some time she lies at the foot of the stairs, but soon recovers enough strength to call her dog Ned, who is chained to his little house in the yard. When the dog hears the child's cries, his excitement is so intense that he succeeds in breaking his chain, and in a few bounds he is at the window of the cellar, where he jumps in to his little mistress. Fanny succeeds in making the dog understand the nature of her harrowing plight, and send him off to give the alarm to the family. With one bound the dog goes through the window, and starts for the field, where, by his barking, he makes it known that something is wrong at the house. The excited peasants follow the dog back to the house and take the thieves unawares, just as they are about to leave with their booty. After an exciting battle the miscreants are overpowered, and little Fanny is liberated from her prison. Length, 669 feet.

PHYSICAL CULTURE FIEND.—This comedy shows a fellow who is ambitious to become a great athlete, strolling into a gymnasium, where he begs to be admitted to the physical culture class. The master is not long in initiating the new recruit, and immediately he is put to work performing all sorts of clever "stunts." Being an amateur, the poor fellow soon shows the other members of the class how terribly awkward he really can be, and they have no end of fun, teaching him the numerous feats of strength, which he makes a bad mess of. Eventually he shows some signs of improvement, and after a strenuous lesson, the new pupil leaves the gymnasium, feeling that he has the strength of Samson. There is one thing that he forgot to learn, however, and that is the jiu-jitsu, which, had he taken the pains, might have stood him well in hand in defending himself when a policeman arrests him for kicking down a door to accommodate a burglar who is bent on robbing a house. Length, 311 feet.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

PET OF THE BIG HORN RANCH.—Samuel Harrington, owner of the Big Horn Ranch, was a generous man and allowed his cowboys many perquisites. One of these was to allow the boys a certain number of colts (at the yearly round-up), which, when grown to maturity, they sold and divided the proceeds. Samuel was a widower with one daughter, a thorough Western girl and a lover of good horseflesh. Among the horses the boys owned was a beautiful chestnut filly, kind as a kitten and gentle as a lamb, which she admired very much; so instead of selling the filly, the boys had decided to make the owner's daughter a present of the animal. Big Tom, the best cowpuncher west of the divide, was elected to inform her of the fact. Our opening scene finds Tom, awkward and bashful, making the presentation speech. Tom was hopelessly in love with pretty Stella, and although he had never had the nerve to tell her of his secret, Stella, with a woman's intuition, read his heart and enjoyed his confusion. Little did either of them dream that through the giving of the present Tom was to find his voice and win the girl he loved. Our second scene shows Stella leaving the house, mounted on her new filly, going on an errand of mercy to the bedside of a sick woman who lived on a neighboring ranch. Operating in this section at the time of our story was a daring band of rustlers; the leader, a desperado named Macklin, had cast envious eyes on the mare the boys had given Stella, and laid his plans to have her. A favorable occasion soon offered. Seeing the girl pass alone, he rounds up several companions to keep watch, and while the unsuspecting girl is in the house he stealthily unties the horse and gets away. Poor Stella is distracted to find her pet gone and wildly seeks for help. The elderly ranchman goes in search of the horse and comes upon the gang unawares. He is set upon and badly beaten, but manages to get back to Harrington and give a description of the rustlers. Then begins a wild hunt for Pet, in which every man in the place able to mount a horse joins. Toward evening the searchers return in despair. A half-breed rides up with a note:

"Send the foreman of your ranch alone with one hundred dollars to-night to Engle's Crossing and we will give him the horse."

Mr. Harrington doesn't like the idea, for his foreman, Tom Deering, has made several bitter enemies among the rustlers, while guarding his employer's interests, and the whole thing looks like a frame-up to get Tom in their clutches. But Stella is crying over the loss of Pet, and those tears decide Tom. "Never mind the one hundred, boss; I'm goin' after that filly," and he rushes away in the direction of the corral. "Here! What in thunder! You'll be shot; let them have the horse," but Tom, not waiting to hear Harrington's protests, has mounted and gone. "Durn the boy! Half a dozen of you get your horses and ride after him. You can get to Engle's in time to help him, if those devils mean what I think they do."

They arrive at Engle's Crossing, and Navajo Pete's quick eye catches the flutter of a paper pinned to a pepper tree by the roadside. "I've gone to the old mill in Blake's gulch; if I'm not back in half an hour, come after me. Tom." "The boss was right, boys; them devils are going to trim Tommy." Tom's foresight saved his life, for the punchers follow his orders and arrive just as Macklin has fastened the ace of spades over big Tom's heart, stepped back and was carefully aiming a big .44 at the black spot on the card. Tom, with his hands and feet tied and securely bound to a chair, had looked fearlessly into the murderous barrel, murmured Stella's name and said good-bye to all earthly affairs, when the crack of a Colt just back of his head gave him a new lease of life. Navajo had broken Macklin's wrist, and the rest of the gang were soon on the way to the county seat for an early trial, for out in this big country justice moves swift and unerring, and it doesn't take long to select a competent jury to try and convict rustlers.

The next day we are present at an interesting scene. Stella, holding Pet's halter, is thanking Big Tom for her recovery. "And if they had killed you, Tom, I—I think I would have died, too." "What! Gee Whiz! Do you mean you care like that for a big, awkward—I mean, do you love me?" "Why, of course, I do, stupid." "Pet, you're witness," and Tom clasps the blushing girl in his arms.

LOST IN SIBERIA.—Our first scene discloses a room in the Smithsonian Institute at Washington, D. C. Count Makaroff, representing the Czar of Russia, arrives, and presents the American scientists with passports and credentials entitling them to make extensive geological researches in the Czar's icebound regions of Siberia.

The scene then shifts to St. Petersburg; a socialistic meeting is in progress. Count Makaroff, the most bitterly hated aristocrat in the Russian Empire, has been proscribed, and we see the fatal number drawn by Marie Ruzieka, a young girl student of the University. Her sweetheart is also present at the meeting, and when he finds that Marie has been unfortunate enough to be chosen as the executioner of Makaroff, he determines to share her lot. Then we see the two plotting together in the Makaroff home, where they are now employed as servants. Makaroff is entertaining a party of friends, telling them of his recent visit to America. The company decide to visit the play. Maurice and Marie are detailed to accompany their master and mistress. The droskeys arrive; the hour the students have waited for has arrived. They go in separate vehicles. The cortege reaches the giant gateway leading to the Czar's Winter palace. Maurice swings himself to the driver's seat, places a revolver to the astonished man's head: "Get down, run; upon your silence depends your life." The horse comes to a standstill. "Quick, Marie, throw as the carriage goes under the arch. I'll wait for you at the last turn." Simeon Novotsky, the bitterest nihilist in Russia, is also in the plot and at hand. As the Makaroff carriage appears he is watching the half-fainting Marie. Will her nerve fail her? I thought so. With a yell of rage he leaps to the girl's side, wrenches a dark brown object from her hand and hurls it with all his might at the disappearing vehicle that is just passing through the arch. There is a startling report, and Marie staggers to her feet and dashes for the cab where Maurice stands waiting. Too late; the palace guards are upon them. All three, Maurice, Marie and Novotsky, are arrested and dragged before the dying Count Makaroff. He had seen the girl, as his drosky drove past, stand with uplifted arm, but had not seen what followed, and with his dying breath he accuses the innocent girl.

Two weeks later, exiled to Siberia, bound two by two, we see a crowd of half-frozen human slaves staggering under heavy chains. Across the great white steppes of Siberia, bound for the soul-destroying sulphur mines of Russia's farthest north possessions; our student friends are of the number. Uhlan Dahlgren, the burly Czarian of guards in command of the party, has cast lecherous eyes on poor Marie, and only waits a favorable opportunity to press his attentions. Poor Maurice, footsore and ill, is carefully nursed by Marie. At last he is unable to go any farther. Marie begs Uhlan to let the sick boy ride on the sledge. "So he's your sweetheart, eh? Well, give us a kiss and we will see what can be done for him." With this he seizes the helpless girl in his arms. Poor Maurice, aroused to a frenzy at Marie's persecution, grabs a whip from the guard's hand and strikes the brute over the head, thus making a bitter enemy of the man whom the law had placed guard over him.

Four weeks later the interior of the sulphur mines finds our trio of students doggedly working, praying hourly for death to escape the hated persecutions of Uhlan. At last, driven to despair by his actions, they make a dash for liberty. Marie

SLIDES
of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

Pansy The Moon Is Shining.
Someone Else
Hello, Angel Face
I'd Rather Be With You On Old Broadway.
Oh! What I Know About You?
My Southern Rose.
I'm Going To Do What I Please.
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have A Sweetheart.
Oh! Where Is My Wife To-night?
Twilight.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

Do You Realize

Mr. Exhibitor, when paying 25 cents for half an ounce of the new cement, it is costing you $8.00 a pint? My formula will produce a better cement than you are buying, at the small cost of 75 cents a pint. This cement unites non-inflammable and inflammable films without scraping, making a neat, clear, powerful splice. Send 10 cents for sample. FORMULA, $3.00.

H. E. HUFFINGTON
8 So. Carey Street, Baltimore, Md.

United Film Sales Company

Have a large stock of late INDEPENDENT FILM FOR SALE AT BARGAIN PRICES. Write or wire for list of subjects. Prices 1 to 5c per foot. We deal in good Film only and are not renters.

Phone Gramercy 2369 — 30 East 23rd Street, New York City

FILMS FOR RENT
6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week
$2.00 per change. All in good condition
Signs and Banners no extra charge
FOR SALE—20 reels of film at $10.00 per reel
Send for one of our steel slide carriers. Can't burn. Won't break. 75c.
LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

FILMS SLIGHTLY USED on our own circuit
FOR SALE
20 Reels at $10 each, 35 Reels, $12 and 25 Reels, $15
Will sell in one lot or separate
ELDORADO AMUSEMENT CO. - - - 32 Union Square, New York

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY
110 West Thirty-fourth Street
New York City
BROKERS IN
Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.
FILMS FOR SALE. $8, $10, $12, $15 per reel.
One New Dressler Machine, One Second-hand Power's Machine, One Edison Machine. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

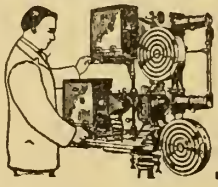
Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES



but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C.H.D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.
Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

SONG SLIDES. LECTURE SLIDES.

WE MAKE SONG SLIDES AS GOOD AS THEY CAN BE MADE FOR MONEY.

WE DON'T MAKE ANY BETTER SLIDES THAN OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BUT NO SLIDE MAKER MAKES BETTER SLIDES THAN WE DO.

WE DO NOT CUT PRICES TO ENTICE OUR NEIGHBORS' CUSTOMERS AWAY FROM THEM. WE WANT OUR GOODS TO SELL ON MERIT ALONE, NOT BECAUSE THEY ARE CHEAPER THAN THE PRODUCT OF OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT. ALL CHEAP SLIDES, LIKE SHODDY CLOTHING, ARE INFERIOR.

WE INTEND TO MAKE SLIDES SO GOOD THAT OUR CUSTOMERS WILL BE WILLING TO PAY THE HIGHEST PRICE FOR THEM.

WE MAKE NO MISREPRESENTATIONS ABOUT OUR GOODS.

OUR SONG SLIDES ARE FIVE DOLLARS PER SET.

To Standing Order Customers we give 10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT.

WE HAVE OVER SIXTY DIFFERENT SUBJECTS FOR LECTURETTES, AT $6.00 PER SET.

LOOK IN THE LIST OF SLIDE MAKERS IN THIS PAPER FOR OUR NEW GOODS NOW BEING ISSUED. SEND FOR LIST.

THE HENRY B. INGRAM CO., INC.,
42 West Twenty-eighth Street, New York.

Genuine Independent Films

We have been buying altogether nothing but the real genuine Independent Films for the last 2 years and we have on hand more Independent Films than all other Independent Exchanges in this territory. Gaumont, Eclair, Lux, Radius, Powhaton, Centaur, Bison, Film Import, Les Lions and Great Northern. We can serve two or three shows in any town. We remodel, rebuild and sell all makes of machines and automatic pianos.

WAGNER FILM AMUSEMENT COMPANY, 120 N. Third Street Machine Dept. 208 N. Fourth Street, Film Dept., St. Louis and Maurice reach the surface and escape in a drosky that Uhlan has just left. Poor Novotsky is shot by a guard. Then we see our exiles riding for their lives across the frozen plains, pursued by a pack of wolves. In their path the party of American scientists, to whom we were introduced in the opening scene, are busy at work over some interesting geological deposits; the crack of a rifle and the howl of the pursuing wolves put them into excited action, and they rescue Maurice and Marie just as all hope had fled.

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

RED WING'S GRATITUDE.—Laid among the most picturesque surroundings, this story of the West is graphically and interestingly told by some of the star members of the Vitagraph Company; the leading roles being sustained by real Indians, a novel departure in picture making. Red Wing is a little Indian maiden, who is the drudge of her tepee. Her brutal father shares the Indian contempt for women and regards her as little better than a beast of burden, though she is developing into an attractive maiden who some day will bring him many ponies and blankets from some amorous brave. Finding her sitting beside the fire at the camp, he drives her forth to gather wild berries, and when her weary feet will carry her no further and she sinks exhausted to the ground, her father happens to cross her trail, and with blows and hard words drives her to her task. His brutality excites the anger of some emigrants who are hurrying to make camp, and the leader of the little band of pioneers drives the cruel chief from the prostrate form upon which he is raining blows. Naiuchi is armed only with a knife against revolvers in the hands of several determined men and he slinks away. That night the emigrant camp is visited and the little daughter of the leader is carried off to be tortured. Red Wing recognizes in her the little daughter of her benefactor and in the early morning she rouses the child before the warriors are awake and leads her down to the river, where she places the wondering child in a canoe and swiftly paddles down the stream. Soon the camp is astir and the absence of the pair is noted. There is a rush for the stream, where a second canoe is manned and some of the red fiends furiously paddle away while the rest of the band turn to rush across country, hoping to reach a point below the fugitives by working in a straight line instead of following the many windings of the stream. Red Wing is overtaken and wounded by a bullet, but before the pursuers can come up with her, the emigrants, who have been searching for the little one, are attracted by the sound of the shot and they reach a bend in the river just in time to fight off the redskins. This is the point for which the land party has been heading, and though they come up in support of those in the canoe, they are beaten off and the sorrowing emigrants make easy the last moments of the grateful girl. This is a notable Indian picture in many important particulars. All of the Indian dresses are of actual native manufacture and are worn as the Indians wear them. The rich head work and the handsome headdresses add to the picturesqueness of the scene, and Indian customs are observed throughout under the direction of the real Indians, who take the leading roles. The interesting story is given added value by a half score of splendid landscapes showing the camp and the flight by water. One interesting point of minor importance is the fact that the canoes are paddled Indian fashion, from one side of the boat only, where there is a single paddler, and not on alternate sides.

TOO MANY ON THE JOB.—Samuel Dobson is about to attend a banquet given by some of the political leaders with whom he wishes to be in touch. It begins to look as though he would have to stay away, for his dress trousers have not come home from the tailor's. Though he is a fat and good-natured man, he is much worried, but worry is turned to rejoicing at the sight of the boy with the box. Joy is short lived. The blundering tailor has made the legs a full two inches too long. Dobson implored his wife to cut them down for him, but she pleads a headache. Her maiden sister is shocked at the suggestion and the daughter of the house hasn't time, she declares. Dobson starts to dress on the promise of Mrs. Dobson that she will try and do the work when her headache is better, and presently she returns and makes the desired alterations. The maiden lady sees the trousers thrown over the back of the chair and notes that it is almost time for Dobson to be starting. She cuts off two inches from the legs and goes her way. The little daughter repents her refusal and she, too, makes a cut and hands the garment to her father. Mrs. Dobson is shocked to see six bits of cloth upon the floor and she is investigating when Dobson enters. Instead of being two inches too long they are now four inches too short, and a generous four inches at that. You can turn up your trousers when they are too long, but you cannot turn them down when they are too short, and Dobson does not go to the banquet, while the family condole with him.

THE DIVER'S REMORSE.—Jim Condon is a deep sea diver and one of the best of his profession. With his partner, Bob Blake, who shares the perils of the descents, he has performed some remarkable feats, but just now business is slack and he and Blake are getting up the last of the wreckage of a schooner which foundered close to shore. Blake, all unknown to Jim, has fallen madly in love with pretty Myra Condon, and so rash does his evil passion make him that he follows her off the dock when she comes to the wrecking tug with her husband and urges his suit without having received the slightest encouragement. He is overseen by Jim, who gives him not as much of a thrashing as he deserves; but Condon is too big-hearted a man to realize the other's smallness, and when the apparently repentant Blake comes to his cottage that evening he makes him welcome, and, all unsuspicious, goes after the pail of water Myra asks for, leaving the two alone. Again Blake renews his suit, and this time Jim gives him more nearly the thrashing that is his due. Blake broods over the incident, and the next day he steals up behind Jim while they are at the bottom and cuts the latter's air hose and life line. Deprived of air and unable to rise because of his leaden shoes and weighted belt, Jim sinks to the bottom of the sea, and Blake signals to be taken quickly to the surface. A submarine, placing harbor mines in practice work, comes upon the scene, and the diver, who leaves the submarine to plant the mine, comes upon the unconscious form before it is too late. Meanwhile there is consternation aboard the wrecker and another diver volunteers to make the descent and look for the missing man, whose air hose and life line have been drawn to the surface. When his mission proves a failure, Blake is relieved, since the cut hose will not show nor do dead men tell tales. But that evening he spends his time by the sea and the apparition of his dead chum constantly appears before him. He rushes off to the Condon cottage, where he relieves his tortured mind by making a clean breast of his offense, and the confession is overheard by his intended victim. This time Condon seeks to kill the man whose evil love has threatened first his happiness and then his life, but Myra intercedes and Blake is permitted to slink away. This is an unusually realistic subject, for the production of which a corps of deep sea divers was employed. With the exception of the scenes at the bottom of the sea, the pictures are all natural poses made from a wrecking tug, with a submarine boat showing above the surface in some of the views. The submarine views are made with a care that perfectly reproduces the under-water conditions as described by the actual divers who take part in the real water scenes. The picture is unusual from many points of view, and both in action and attention to detail make the high standard. The photographic work is excellent and in an unsual degree this release combines novelty and dramatic appeal.

VITAGRAPH EXTRAS.

Grand Naval Pageant, Saturday, September 25.—An elaborate and comprehensive series of views of this great event. The launching of the "Clermont," a reproduction of Robert Fulton's first steamboat; the "Half Moon"; views of the American and foreign warships and crowds on shore and aboard the numerous excursion boats. Length, 700 feet.

Historical Parade, Tuesday, September 28.—A magnificent picture of the procession participated in by people of all nationalities. Scenes taken from several points along the line of march; a splendid view of Vice-President Sherman and Governor Hughes of New York, the various floats and moving tableaux representing different periods in American history. Length, 700 feet.

Military Parade, Thursday, September 30.—Splendid views of the monster military parade of 25,000 men picked from the principal navies of the world and from every branch of the United States Army and Navy. The most brilliant pageant of the Hudson-Fulton Celebration. Length, 500 feet.

Commander F. A. Peary.—In this film, posed especially for the Vitagraph, we are shown the famous explorer interviewing a group of newspaper men, his little son, "Bobby, Jr." (born in the Arctic regions), and his Esquimau dog; Mrs. Peary and daughter, and a beautiful view of their picturesque home at Eagle's Nest Island, Maine. Length, 300 feet.

CHICAGO FAMILY THEATERS.

Bookings—October 4 to October 10.

Apollo Theater.—Manager, Robt. Levy; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. La Moto Phroso, she, he or it, the nineteenth wonder of the world; Denton and Le Boeuf, comedy horizontal bar performers; Rowe and Clinton, presenting "Schoolmates"; Mage Clinton and her piccaninnies, singers and dancers; Florence Brocee, singing and dancing soubrette.

Arch Theater.—Manager, Arthur Jarves; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Four Musical Mays, spectacular musical and singing act; Lottie Wilson, singing and dancing soubrette; Marlow and Nicholson, The Maiden and the Tramp; Shaw and Sargeant, dramatic sketch, "The Burglar"; Manola Family, Greek Acrobats.

Asbland Theater.—Manager, A. E. Weidner; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Drako's Dogs, wonderful canine actors; McCormick and Wallace, novelty ventriloquist; Ward Baker, America's most soulful violinist; John Ennor, the celebrated travelogist, illustrated, on the North Pole; Kittie Stevens, singing and dancing character change artist.

Bijou Dream Theater.—Manager, Sigmund Faller; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Crown Comedy Four, presenting "Dr. Dippy's Busy Day"; Heisler Sisters, character singers extraordinary; Elsie Stirks, novelty cartoonist; Lew La Mar, the laughing comedian; Belle and Forbes, the military comedians; Sara Sedelia, singing comedienne; Griffin Sisters, the original jungle babes; Albert Wagner, the celebrated tenor.

Garfield Theater.—Manager, Fred Schaefer; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Goris Saxaphone Orchestra, celebrated Italian musicians; Mlle. Dolores and Company, pantomime sketch, "Monkeyshines"; W. H. Von Dorn and Company, "Thermos Arktos, or the Mysterious Crucible"; Lillian Maye, singing and talking comedienne; Hannahan's Goats, the only troupe of trained mutton goats in this country.

Janet Theater.—Manager, Harry Hayman; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Rose Johnson, singing and talking pianologue; The Malcoms, travesty entertainers; Edna Ruppert, singing comedienne; The Muehlners, eccentric comedy sketch artists.

Columbia Theater.—Manager, W. P. Shaver; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Memora, the human encyclopedia (this gentleman answers all questions pertaining to any noted event in history); Hillman and Roberts, characters singers extraordinary; Elsie Stirke, novelty aerial artist; Wills and Barron, eccentric comedy sketch, "Have You Seen Happy?"; Frank Walsh, singing comedian, "She Bumped Up a Little Bit"; Denham Sisters, singing and dancing soubrettes.

Hamilton Theater.—Managers, Luders & Anderson; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. The Y. Hayashi Troupe, Japanese equilibrists and acrobats; Eva Thatcher, the Irish lady; Saparo and Campbell, colored singing and dancing comedians; Al. H. Wilde, yodler and mimic; Madlyn Jourue, character soubrette.

Crystal Theater.—Manager, Frank G. Schaffer; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Zeno Zeno Troupe, a circus in one act, introducing tight-wire walking, foot juggling, contortion and acrobatics; Edwin Warren, eccentric monologist; The Six Pekin Graduates, presenting "South Land"; Florence Ellwood, character vocalist; Young and Phiips, presenting "Ma's Star Boarder."

Lyceum Theater.—Manager, Fred Leinnick; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. The Aldeans, European comedy horizontal bar performers (first appearance in this country this season); The Great McCarvey, impersonator of the fair sex; Prinston and Yale, the Chorus Girl and the Hick; Botz and Company, magicians and illusionists; Johnson Brothers, musical artists.

Grand Theater.—Manager, Duke Brahman; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Chambers and Allen, colored singers and dancers; J. Lewis Johnson, monologue and comedian; Sidney Lockhart and Company, plantation singing and dancing sketch; Dixon and White, the society coons; Bessie Bell, singing and dancing soubrette.

Elite Theater.—Managers, Michallstetter Bros.; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Scott and Wallace, eccentric comedy sketch artists; Harry Moulton, comedy ventriloquist; Anglo-Saxon Trio, musical entertainers; Caccomo Duo, Italian singers.

Pekin Theater.—Manager, Robt. Mott; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. H. E. Owens and Company, seven Southern serenaders; Marie Doyle, celebrated lady buck and wing dancer; The Two Johnsons, colored comedy sketch artists; Lions and Daniels, colored singing and dancing comedians; The Daniels, dancing dandies; The Four Swells, of the colored stroll; Davies and Cooper, comedy acrobats.

Franklin Theater.—Managers, Gisel & Beckman; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Geo. Barry and Comnany, presenting "Buttinsky from Texas"; Fairy Plumb, pleasing character change artist, featuring celebrated mirror dress; Fogg and Alger, musical comedians; The Italian Duo, operatic singers; The Brocees, comedy sketch.

Palais Royal Theater.—Manager, Jos. F. Ryan; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Sidney Jerome and Company, in an original, somewhat different comedy act; Vera Hart, prima donna soprano; Prof. Robert Wassmann, magical entertainer; Halley and noble, singing and talking comedians; Frank Morris, eccentric monologist.

Premier Theater.—Manager, Chas. W. Schafer; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Malinoski Trio, Russian singers and dancers; Mart Franklin, tramp comedian; Marian Seeley, character soubrette; Wrigbt and Andrews, comedy sketch artists; Rossini Trio, Italian musicians and dancers; Roy Lewells, humorous monologist; The Tolis, heavyweight balancers and jugglers; Dot Ames, singing and dancing soubrette.

Gem Theater.—Manager, Chas. W. Schaefer; agent, Frank Q. Doyle. Buckley and Stockton, singing and dancing comediennes; Darrell and Marvelli, eccentric singing and dancing sketch; Alice Grant, pleasing soubrette; Adel Rays, comedy sketch; Carrie Winner, champion buck and wing dancer; Cooper and Wilson, eccentric comedians.

Virginia Theater.—Manager, J. V. Ritchey; agent, Frank O. Doyle. Wahlund and Tekla Trio, sensational European gymnasts; Mitilda and Alvera, Spanish sister act; Morse and De Lannoy, eccentric singing and dancing sketch; Chief White Horse, celebrated Indian musician and singer; William and Gilbert, singing and talking comedians.

Union Theater.—Manager, L. Goodman; agents, Washburne & Irving. Fogg and Alger, comedy musical act; Essie Smith, song and dance soubrette; Brown and Spicer, comedians; Clever McGrath, novelty band balancing; Albion Brothers, comedians, in a knockabout boxing sketch; Grace Sisters, song and dance artists; Chris, cartoonist and monologist.

Principal Theater.—Manager, C. F. Hesch; agents, Washburne & Irving; Lew Rashman, German comedian; Raleigh and Raleigh, comedy sketch team; Nancy Lee Rice, singing and dancing harpist.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS

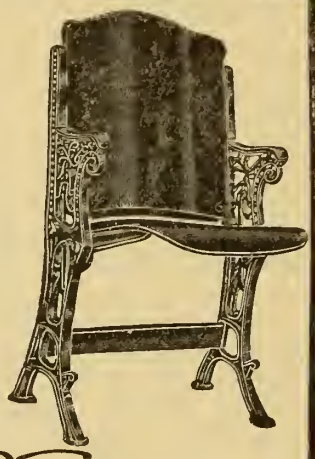
Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.

564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.

Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

A BETTER SHOW
A BETTER CHAIR
And 10 Cents Admission



That is what the live ones are bringing about.

Throw out your old chairs and put in stronger and neater ones—not necessarily expensive.

We carry good chairs in stock for prompt shipments. Write for Booklet T 13 and prices.

American Seating Company

CHICAGO
215 Wabash Avenue

NEW YORK
19 W. 18th Street

BOSTON
70 Franklin Street

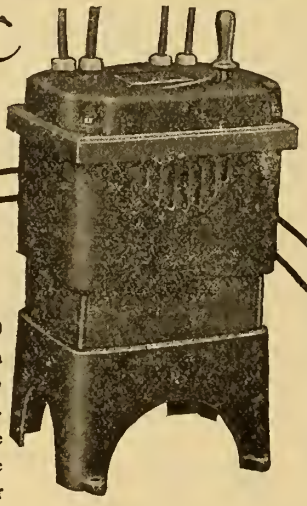
PHILADELPHIA
1235 Arch Street

CINCINNATI, Mitchell Building

BRANCHES IN EVERY PRINCIPAL CITY IN THE UNITED STATES

COMPENSARC

This Machine cuts 2/3 from your Light Bills



Mr. Manager

If you are on a 110 or 220 volt circuit and you are using a rheostat to reduce the voltage to 35 at the arc in your lamp, you are paying for 2/3 more "juice" than you are actually using. Can you afford to waste all this energy supplied from the line, over and above what you really need?

The Fort Wayne Compensarc

saves all this waste by reducing the voltage without losing any: makes a clearer, whiter, steadier light, and eliminates all danger of fires caused by overheated rheostats.

We have a little 22 page booklet "Compensarc vs. Rheostat" that we want to send you. It will tell you plainly how you can make a big saving and a better light. Send us your name and address.

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS

1402 Broadway

Fort Wayne, Indiana

Send TODAY for our FREE descriptive booklet

Oriental Theater.—Manager, Herman Johnson; agents, Washburne & Irving. Curley Ross, character comedian; Chris, cartoonist and comedian; Ritto Conti, song and dance soubrette; Hargesheimer, in clever impersonations; Jessie Adams, soubrette.

Monogram Theater.—Manager, Mrs. Marks; agents, Washburne & Irving. Ray Lummis, novelty musical act; Albion Brothers, comedians; Fogg and Alger, comedy musical act; Fay Delmar, song and dance soubrette.

Standard Theater.—Manager, Wm. Brickhaus; agents, Washburne & Irving. Evelyn Bird, song and dance soubrette; Taylor and Yorke, comedy sketch artists; Francia, soubrette.

SOUND EFFECTS FOR MOVING PICTURES

YERKES & CO.

53 West 28th Street - N. Y.

Phone 594 Madison Square

Choke Coil For Moving Picture Machines

USING ALTERNATING CURRENT

Guaranteed to save 60% Meter Bills for Current

Takes the place of the rheostat and its heat
Will pay for itself in from one to two month's running

Price, $25.00

Address, L. A. FREUDENBERGER
Newark, Delaware

THE WEEK'S RELEASES AT A GLANCE.

MONDAY, OCTOBER 11.

BIOGRAPH—The Little Teacher (Dramatic).
PATHE—The Trappers (Dramatic).
LUBIN—Papa's Honeymoon (Comedy).
LUBIN—Out for the Day (Comedy).
SELIG—Pet of the Big Horn Ranch (Dramatic).

TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12.

EDISON—A New Life (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Convicting Evidence (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—How He Earned His Medal (Comedy)
VITAGRAPH—Red Wing's Gratitude (Dramatic).
VITAGRAPH—Too Many On the Job (Comedy).

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 13.

ESSANAY—The Twelfth Juror (Drama).
GAUMONT—Princess of the Sea (Fairy Drama).
GAUMONT—The Liquid Air (Trick Comedy).
MELIES—The Stolen Wireless (War Drama).
PATHE—A Lucky Husband (Comedy).
PATHE—Wonderful Remedy (Comedy).

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 14.

BIOGRAPH—A Change of Heart (Dramatic).
LUBIN—Sandy, the Poacher (Dramatic).
SELIG—Lost in Siberia (Dramatic).
SELIG—Bear and Forebear (Comedy).

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15.

EDISON—Hansel and Gretel (Comedy).
EDISON—Whitler's Witless Wanderings (Comedy).
KALEM—The Man and the Girl (Dramatic).
PATHE—The Romance of a Poor Girl (Dramatic).
PATHE—Blessington's Bonny Babies (Comedy).

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 16.

GAUMONT—The Broken Violin (Dramatic).
GAUMONT—Alphonse, the Dead Shot (Comedy).
GAUMONT—One-Legged Pete and Pat (Comedy).
PATHE—Chums Comedy).
PATHE—Physical Culture Fiend (Comedy).
VITAGRAPH—The Diver's Remorse (Dramatic).

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

HIS MEXICAN BRIDE.—Frank Howard, a young mining engineer, is in love with Marion Stockbridge, a New York society girl, who is likewise a coquette. Frank comes accidentally upon a little scene in the garden of the Stockbridge mansion, in which he sees his sweetheart being embraced and kissed by one of his friends. Frank writes a note to Marion telling her that he is about to start for Mexico and that he leaves her to his successful rival. Our next scene shows the courtyard of the home of President Alvarez of the Conchita Silver Mining Company in northern Mexico. Frank has just begun his work as an engineer in the company's mine, and is making a report to the president when Anita, the daughter of Alvarez, enters, is introduced to Frank and proceeds promptly to fall in love with him. Her affection is requited; but Alvarez, the father of the girl, has planned to have her marry Valdez, a wealthy Mexican. A week or two later, Frank is seen enjoying the company of the beautiful Mexican girl, Anita, who is singing a love song, accompanying herself on the guitar. Valdez enters. He draws a knife and is about to stab Frank in the back, but the girl turning quickly causes Valdez to forego his plan of revenge until Anita has left the two men alone. posit of silver ore and makes preparations to go to Galveston to interest capitalists in his find. Meanwhile, he receives a photograph from Marion, his first sweetheart. On it she has written: "I was mistaken; I love only you. Come back to me. Marion." Frank puts this photograph into the pocket of his working jacket, and later, Anita, in hanging his coat upon a nail, drops the photograph and picks it up. She reads the message, and seeing Frank packing his valise is prompted by jealousy to believe that he is about to leave her for the other woman. In her frenzy she determines to kill her husband rather than permit him to leave her. She takes from Frank's cabinet of chemicals a bottle of poison and puts some of it into the coffee. Here follows a most dramatic scene: a devoted wife, crazed by jealousy, awaiting the death of the man she loves, and determined to kill herself after he has taken the poison. Luckily Frank Then Valdez denounces Frank and strikes him. A fight ensues. Valdez draws a knife, with which he attempts to kill Frank. Frank seizes the knife and contents himself by turning Valdez over his knee and spanking him. Alvarez and Anita have entered and seen this performance. Alvarez, furiously angry, orders Frank from the house, and informs him that he is dismissed from the service of the company. Later in the day, Frank, on horseback, is met by Anita, who has come to bid him goodbye. He tells her of his love and persuades her to elope with him. A wild gallop carries them on Frank's horse across the border, and the old Justice of the Peace at Rattlesnake Pass makes them man and wife. He also misdirects Valdez, who has ridden up in pursuit. We now see Frank and Anita happy in their little home. Frank finds a rich denotices Anita's peculiar movements; he questions her, and, unable to restrain herself, she shows the portrait and accuses him of infidelity. Frank makes fun of her jealousy and deliberately tears up the photograph. Convinced by this action that Frank does not love the other woman, Anita embraces and kisses Frank. He suggests they finish their supper, and is about to lift the fatal cup to his lips when Anita seizes it and dashes the contents on the floor, and Frank is left to wonder at the queer action of his Mexican bride.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

THE GOLD SEEKER'S DAUGHTER.—The gold seeker, when departing from his family, places about his daughter's neck a locket for remembrance. Six months after his leave-taking, he luckily finds a gold nugget, and makes all preparations to return to his family with his riches. On his way, he stops to rest, and is shot by a bandit, who robs the man of his treasure. In consequence of the wound, the father loses his memory. Made wealthy by the other man's find, the robber goes to the city, and meets the daughter of the man he wronged. She infatuates him, and finally she becomes his wife. The father, when his reason is restored, bids his companions good-bye and starts again for home. Upon his arrival he finds no one to greet him, and his feebleness compels him to seek alms from passers-by. An auto drives up to a store, and from it the old man's daughter and her little one alight. Her father asks for aid, but she passes on. The child, however, cries to be permitted to help him, so her mother gives her money for the old man. As she gives it, he kisses her hand in gratitude, and recognizes about her neck the locket he gave his daughter when he left home. She comes to hasten the little one, and the father reveals who he is. She greets him lovingly and they all enter the auto and drive off. They reach her home and she leads her father to a bench, where they sit, he telling her all that happened. At the end of the recital the daughter's husband returns, and she runs to meet him, happy to tell of the discovery of her father. When the two men meet, amazement shows in both faces, and the daughter becomes alarmed. Her husband, after asking her to go into the house, turns to make peace with the old man, who refuses forgiveness and turns to go away. His daughter runs out of the house and pleads with him to stay, but it is his little granddaughter who alters his decision. He takes her in his arms and extends his hand to her father, and then he is led back to the house. The moral of this play is well worthy of notice, "It is Divine to forgive," and it is worked out in an entertaining manner.

GREAT NORTHERN.

THE RED DOMINO.—The Countess X. receives during a party a young man, who brings her a message from a friend, whom she believed to be in exile, asking her to come and see him the same evening in order to arrange with him how they can revenge themselves on their mutual enemy, the prince. The conversations is heard by a young diplomat, Baron Lerche, who has been concealed behind a curtain. He hurries away from the company and soon after returns in a different dress. He watches the countess, follows her in the night to a remote house, makes his way in, and overhears a plan to kill the prince. Soon after the prince gives a masked ball. The Countess, in Spanish costume, and the baron, in red domino, are among the guests. As the countess sees that the red domino keeps watching her, she boldly addresses him, takes his arm and leads him towards a group of guests, who are her friends and accomplices. There she writes, with the hands at her back, on her hall-card: "Get the red domino out of the way." The card is at once picked up, read and understood, and the next moment a lady takes, with irresistible amiability, the baron's arm and leads him to a remote smoking room. The baron is very much afraid to leave the dangerous countess out of sight, and is about to leave the room again, but two masked gentlemen throw him to the ground, gag and tie him and leave him alone. The baron, however, does not want to give up the exciting play. Straining every nerve, he succeeds in rolling himself on to a cigar-lighter, by aid of which he destroys his bonds. When he is free, he jumps out of the window and down in the garden summons two policemen, whom he had told to keep near the place, and then he goes back to the ballroom. In the meantime, the countess succeeds in getting the prince away from the party. He is very much captivated with her, and takes her to a cabinet, where he can speak to her alone. They get a bottle of champagne, and now the prince cannot keep back his feelings any longer, but falls down on his knees, declaring to her his love. The countess watches the opportunity; she smiles encouragingly, puts her left arm around his neck, and with the right hand she throws a poisonous powder in his glass. But at this very moment her arm is seized by the baron, who comes out from behind the curtain. The countess jumps to her feet, but when she sees that everything is out she falls back in a swoon. In a few words the baron explains what has happened. He calls the servants, who carry the countess out, and then he enters the ballroom again. With revolver in hand he makes the guests take off their masks, and now he points out the conspirators one by one. The policemen take them away, and the guests gather round the prince and baron with eager questions, but the prince answers smilingly: "My dear guests, don't let this little incident disturb our pleasure; it was only an attempt on my life."

PHOENIX FILM CO.

THE NORTH POLE CRAZE.—First scene of "The North Pole Craze" shows us the interior of an Arctic Club after the conflicting reports from Cook and Peary arrive. Scientists are seen arguing and taking sides, the short and ugly word is almost reached. They leave the Club still arguing. Second scene shows these Polar explorers on the street, two of them somewhat more dippy than the rest, frightening the others away, after wrecking the wagon of a peddler selling Cook and Peary buttons. Scene three gives us a bill poster advertising Cook and Peary newspaper articles. The two scientists enter and interfere with the bill poster. Well, we need not tell you what happens, only that he makes them sorry. Scene four. They meet a sign board man, one side of his board advertises Cook, and the other Peary. They butt in on this man and he closes with them giving them a scientific arguments which finishes at the bottom of an embankment, all three having argued the matter while rolling down the hill. In other scenes they meet the iceman and he gives them real Arctic treatment. They finish in the violent ward of an insane asylum, and right here is where we give you the secret of the Pole discovery. Length, 500 feet.

A CHILD'S PLEA.—This "A Child's Plea" opens in the home of a motorman as he hurriedly finishes his breakfast. He kisses his wife and child goodbye and leaves the house fearing to arrive late at his work.

The scenes that follow show the motorman arriving at the barn, then the shift to another car after which we see mother and child leave the house, possibly to buy the motorman some present or article of wearing apparel. We see them crossing the track; of course the little one is on the look for "pop's car." The mother goes into a store, leaving the child on the sidewalk. It seems so anxious to wave its hand to papa as he passes with his car. The child follows a car that passes hoping to meet papa. She does meet him but in a heart-rendering manner. The little one slips on the track. The car approaches. We see his agonized and frantic face as he tries to stop the car. The child is seriously hurt. Of course a crowd rush forward to tear the motorman to pieces. He breaks his way through them to where the little one lies on the track, asking the maddened crowd "Do you think I would kill my own child?" That is sufficient to stop the crowd. It is the one touch of nature that makes this whole world akin. A policeman gently takes the father away. The child is taken to a hospital. Six months later the father's trial takes place. It is going against him. The old charge of criminal negligence is winning out against him, when a new witness enters; it is the child now lame and on crutches. She goes to her papa, puts her arms around his neck. That is enough for the judge and jury. The man is freed and taken back to work in a different position to give his shattered nerves a chance. Length, 500 feet.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

WANTED—Small set scenery cheap. State particulars to P. O. Box 85, Rockaway Beach, L. I., N. Y.

WANTED—To buy Pathe Passion Play; must be in good condition. Apply immediately. Mr. F. L., 98 St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal.

FOR SALE—New Edison Calcium Gas Outfit, consisting of generator, saturator, tubing, dynamic burner and two boxes of oxone. Address CALCIUM, Box 111, Ridgewood, N. J.

FOR SALE—1,000 ft. reels film, feature subjects, $10 to $20 per reel; Edison, Power's used machines, $60, new $100; Model B Gas Outfits, $25; Pearl White Condensers, 75c. For Rent—6,000 ft. film, $12 weekly, one shipment; 12,000 ft., $20. Will buy machines, film. H. DAVIS, Watertown, Wis.

THEATRES FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—Five-cent Theater, doing good business, in one of the best manufacturing cities of 10,000 in State of Indiana. Everything in No. 1 shape. $900 takes it; be quick. I. E. WRIGHT, Fern Theater, New Castle, Ind.

ORPHEUM THEATER for sale; good business; 175 seats; Power's machine; Peerless piano; steel booth; raised floor. Address, Manager Orpheum Theater, 23 Main St., Lockport, N. Y.

Moving Picture Theater for sale in Vermont; well equipped; good proposition; low price. Address H., care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater; fine location; good Connecticut city; doing good business; 400 seats; other business, reasons for selling. Address DALEY, care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Theater in town of 26,000 in New York State. First class condition. Bargain for quick sale. Address COHOES, care of Moving Picture world.

FOR SALE—Two first class moving picture theaters in New York City; good reasons for selling; absolutely no violations. Address P. D. Q., care of Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater; unusual opportunity; very reasonable; must sell, going South. Address T. LINHURST, 221 Clarkson Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

THEATRES WANTED.

WILL BUY moving pictnre theater in city of ten thousand or over. Central States or Middle West. Every detail first letter. Address H. E. BENDER, 450 W. Exchange St., Akron, O.

Vaudette Theater for sale; good business; 180 seats; Power's machine, piano, raised floor. Price, $700. Address, WALTER, Box 652, Grand Ledge, Mich.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

A. Lewis, 234 Ninth Ave., New York, would like position as manager or operator. Good references. New York license.

LICENSED OPERATOR, experienced, references, desires permanent position. Address F. L. R., care of Beach, 235 W. 22d St., New York.

MANAGER—Experienced in moving pictures and vaudeville, press work, baritone singer, lecturer and producer; reasonable salary; good references; responsible parties only. C. W. LAWFORD, Coudersport, Pa.

TRAP-DRUMMER, at liberty after 30th of montb, with full line of traps for picture effects, and experience. LEWIS HECK, Gayety Theater, Lynchburg, Va. (En route.)

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 360 W. 45th St., New York City.

AT LIBERTY—Operator, an electrician and machinist, can run calcium light. Best references; willing to go on the road; seven years' experience. Address Geo. Fisk, 133 West 127th street, New York City.

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

		Feet
Sept.	2—The Little Darling (Com.)	211
Sept.	6—"1776," or The Hessian Renegades	965
Sept.	9—Comata, the Sioux (Dr.)	963
Sept.	13—Getting Even (Com.)	587
Sept.	13—The Children's Friend (Dr.)	386
Sept.	16—The Broken Locket (Dr.)	999
Sept.	20—In Old Kentucky (Dr.)	983
Sept.	23—A Fair Exchange (Dr.)	995
Sept.	27—Leather Stocking (Dr.)	996
Sept.	30—The Awakening (Dr.)	691
Sept.	30—Wanted, a Child (Com.)	296
Oct.	4—Pippa Passes (Dr.)	983
Oct.	7—Fools of Fate (Dr.)	972
Oct.	11—The Little Teacher (Dr.)	982
Oct.	14—A Change of Heart (Dr.)	977
Oct.	18—His Lost Love (Dr.)	968

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Sept.	3—Ethel's Luncheon (Com.)
Sept.	3—Backward, Turn Backard, etc. (Dr.)
Sept.	7—A Dangerous Pair (Com.)
Sept.	7—The Temptation (Dr.)
Sept.	10—The Making of Honey (Indus.)	190
Sept.	10—The Amateur William Tell (Com.)	810
Sept.	14—Little Sister (Dr.)	975
Sept.	17—How the Laudlord Collected His Rents	460
Sept.	17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Com.)	500
Sept.	21—The Ordeal (Dra.)	950
Sept.	24—A Kulght for a Night (Com.)	370
Sept.	24—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (C.)	230
Sept.	24—Love and War (Dr.)	400
Sept.	28—Why Girls Leave Home (Com.)	1000
Oct.	1—The Wallace Jewels (Com.)	720
Oct.	1—Two of a Kind (Com.)	280
Oct.	5—Laddie (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—The Minister's Daughter	830
Oct.	8—Expert Glass Blowing	170
Oct.	12—A New Life	1000
Oct.	15—Hansel and Gretel	630
Oct.	15—Whitler's Witless Wanderings	330

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Sept.	1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C.)	952
Sept.	8—Justified (Dr.)	970
Sept.	15—A Case of Tomatoes (Com.)	495
Sept.	15—Three Reasons for Haste (Com.)	485
Sept.	22—Gratitude (Dr.)	950
Sept.	29—The Brothers (Dr.)	970
Oct.	6—A Birthday Affair (Com.)	550
Oct.	6—The Magic Melody (Com.)	431
Oct.	20—The Widow (Com.)	520
Oct.	20—A Womau's Wit (Dr.)	475

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

Sept.	14—The Tricky Dummies (Com.)	370
Sept.	14—Her Busy Day (Com.)	250
Sept.	14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Com.)	324
Sept.	21—Saved from the Quicksands (Dr.)	600
Sept.	21—Taking in a Reef (Com.)	380
Sept.	22—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dr.)	770
Sept.	22—Dropped from the Clouds (Com.)	240
Sept.	25—On the Crest of the Waves (Dr.)	554
Sept.	25—All for a Nickel (Com.)	404
Oct.	2—The Masterpiece (Dr.)	857
Oct.	2—Papa's Hat (Com.)	140
Oct.	5—The Pill Box (Com.)	450
Oct.	5—Breaking the Bank (Com.)	490
Oct.	9—A Wedding Party in Luna Park (C.)	434
Oct.	9—The Sleuth aud the Wig (Com.)	504
Oct.	12—Convicting Evidence (Dr.)	714
Oct.	12—How He Earned His Medal (Com.)	280
Oct.	13—Princess of the Sea (Fairy Drama)	520
Oct.	13—The Liquid Air (Trick Comedy)	450
Oct.	16—The Broken Violin (Dr.)	377
Oct.	16—Alphouso, the Dead Shot (Com.)	297
Oct.	16—One-Legged Pete and Pat (Com.)	320
Oct.	13—The Twelfth Juror (Dr.)	1000

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

Sept.	4—In Hot Pursuit (Dr.)	514
Sept.	4—Romantic Italy (Sc.)	437
Sept.	15—The Fatal Love (Dr.)	584
Sept.	15—Pontiue Marshes, Italy (Sc.)	367
Sept.	18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Top.)	480
Sept.	18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dr.)	500
Sept.	28—Wife or Child (Dr.)	494
Sept.	28—Breach of Promise (Com.)	484
Sept.	29—Love, the Conqueror (Dr.)	650
Sept.	29—Chasing the Ball (Magic)	347
Oct.	6—Yachting Off Cowes (Sc.)	464
Oct.	6—Gambling Passion (Dr.)	530

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug.	20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal	170
Aug.	27—The Conspirators (Dr.)	410
Aug.	27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Com.)	575
Sept.	3—The Pay Car (Dr.)	930
Sept.	10—Hiram's Bride (Dr.)
Sept.	17—The Story of a Rose (Dr.)	680
Sept.	17—Winning a Dinner (Com.)	245
Sept.	24—The Winning Boat (Dr.)	925
Oct.	1—The Mystery of the "Sleeper" Trunk	870
Oct.	8—The Hand Organ Man (Dr.)	910
Oct.	15—The Man and the Girl (Dr.)	940

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

		Feet
Sept.	2—The Woman Hater (Dr.)	810
Sept.	6—The Call of the Heart (Dr.)	670
Sept.	6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic)	255
Sept.	9—A True Patriot (Patriotic)	735
Sept.	9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Sc.)	200
Sept.	13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dr.)	810
Sept.	16—The Fortune Hunters (Com.)	575
Sept.	16—All on Account of a Letter (Com.)	385
Sept.	20—When Woman Hates (Dr.)	750
Sept.	23—The Conquering Hero (Com.)	730
Sept.	27—A Fish Story (Com.)	510
Sept.	27—Old Love Letters (Com.)	400
Sept.	30—The Judge's Ward (Dr.)	950
Oct.	4—Who Discovered the North Pole (C.)	505
Oct.	4—Billiken (Dr.)	455
Oct.	7—A Blank Check (Dr.)	975
Oct.	11—Papa's Honeymoou (Com.)	600
Oct.	11—Out for the Day (Com.)	390
Oct.	14—Sandy, the Poacher (Dr.)	840
Oct.	18—The Major and the Judge (Com.)
Oct.	18—Haps and Mishaps (Com.)	240
Oct.	21—Mignon (Dr.)
Oct.	21—Aunt Lena's Visit (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Visit to Uucle (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Buried Secret (Com.)
Oct.	28—More Precious Than Gold (Dr.)

GEORGE MELIES.

Oct.	13—The Stolen Wireless (War Drama)	915

PATHE FRERES.

Sept.	4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Sc.)	331
Sept.	6—Versailles (Sc.)	462
Sept.	6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (C.)	475
Sept.	8—The Little Soldier (Dr.)	394
Sept.	8—Sweden: Gotha Canal (Sc.)	456
Sept.	10—Tom Thumb (Dr.)	1016
Sept.	11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics	371
Sept.	11—Sports in Java (Sc.)	298
Sept.	11—How to Tame a Mother-in-Law (Com.)	351
Sept.	13—Amateur Detective (Com.)	390
Sept.	13—The Child's Prayer (Dr.)	571
Sept.	15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dr.)	492
Sept.	15—City of Naples (Indus.)	449
Sept.	17—Mountebank's Son (Dr.)	892
Sept.	18—Oh, What a Beard! (Com.)	335
Sept.	18—The Fresh Kid (Com.)	295
Sept.	18—Construction of Balloons (Indus.)	361
Sept.	20—Aviation Contests at Rheims	607
Sept.	20—Caught in His Own Trap (Com.)	374
Sept.	22—The Tower of Nesle (Dr.)	1088
Sept.	24—Careless Tramp (Com.)	574
Sept.	24—Caucasian Customs (Sc.)	384
Sept.	25—Servant's Good Joke (Com.)	548
Sept.	25—Trained Birds (Sc.)	397
Sept.	27—He Iearned the Trick of Mesmerism	433
Sept.	27—Suitors' Competition (Com.)	518
Sept.	29—Pierrot, the Fuddler (Dr.)	318
Sept.	29—Jane is Unwilling to Work (Com.)	525
Oct.	1—A Game of Chess (Dr.)	558
Oct.	1—An Eventful Trip (Com.)	390
Oct.	2—The Garbage of Paris (Indus.)	407
Oct.	2—Vendetta (Dr.)	541
Oct.	4—The Story of a Banknote (Dr.)	981
Oct.	6—Female Sleuth (Dr.)	604
Oct.	6—The Music Lesson (Com.)	295
Oct.	8—Sister Angelica (Dr.)	705
Oct.	8—How Jack Helped His Little Sister	213
Oct.	9—Anti-Fat Sanitarium (Com.)	653
Oct.	9—Dog Pickpocket (Com.)	315
Oct.	11—The Trappers (Dr.)	804
Oct.	13—A Lucky Husband (Com.)	515
Oct.	13—Wonderful Remedy (Com.)	377
Oct.	15—The Romance of a Poor Girl (Dr.)	656
Oct.	15—Blessington's Bonny Babies (Com.)	262
Oct.	16—Chums (Com.)	669
Oct.	16—Physical Culture Fiend (Com.)	311

SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

Aug.	30—Winning a Widow (Dr.)	450
Sept.	2—The Blight of Siu (Dr.)	995
Sept.	9—The Engagement Ring (Dr.)	995
Sept.	13—Frechooters (Dr.)	995
Sept.	16—Crooked Path (Dr.)	960
Sept.	20—The Bachelor's Visit (Dr.)	775
Sept.	20—False Alarm (Com.)	175
Sept.	23—Stricken Blind (Dr.)	990
Sept.	27—Across the Divide (Dr.)	980
Sept.	30—The Drunkard's Fate (Dr.)	930
Oct.	11—Pet of the Big Horn Ranch (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	14—Lost in Siberia (Dr.)	785
Oct.	14—Bear and Forehear (Com.)	180
Oct.	18—A Tale of the Backwoods (Dr.)	1000

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Sept.	4—The Galley Slave	885
Sept.	7—The Fisherman (Dr.)	430
Sept.	7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dr.)	564
Sept.	11—An Alpine Echo (Dr.)	990
Sept.	14—The Little Father (Dr.)	610
Sept.	14—The Wealthy Rival (Com.)	360
Sept.	18—The Marble Heart (Dr.)	968
Sept.	21—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dr.)	426
Sept.	21—The Siren's Necklace (Dr.)	530
Sept.	25—Fantine (Dr.)	997
Sept.	29—Onawanda (Dr.)	545
Sept.	29—The Romance of an Umbrella (Com.)	450
Oct.	2—The Scales of Justice (Dr.)	983
Oct.	5—Betty's Choice (Dr.)	642
Oct.	5—Never Eat Green Apples (Com.)	290
Oct.	9—For Her Sake (Dr.)	995
Oct.	12—Red Wing's Gratitude (Dr.)	562
Oct.	12—Too Many on the Job (Com.)	410
Oct.	16—The Diver's Remorse (Dr.)	900

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

Film Import and Trading Company.

May	1—Nevada Girl	930 ft
May	8—Cowboy's Sweetheart	854 ft.
May	14—The Temptatious of John Gray	930 ft.
May	22—Johnny and the Indians	877 ft.
May	28—Crystal Ball	Aprox. 933 ft.
June	19—Love Wins	931 ft.
June	24—Private Brown	Approx. 904 ft.
July	7—Cowboy's Romance	Aprrox. 871 ft.
July	21—Tale of Texas	Approx. 945 ft.
July	28—Maryland, 1777	Approx. 956 ft.
Aug.	4—Power of Love	Approx. 995 ft.
Aug.	18—The Lost Letter	965 ft.
Aug.	25—The Blacksmith's Daughter	985 ft.
Sept.	1—Peaceful Jones	Approx 932 ft.
Sept.	8—The Diamond Necklace	545 ft.
Sept.	8—The Wishing Charm	545 ft.
Sept.	15—A White Lie	About 1000 ft.
Sept.	22—Dan Blake's Rival	About 1000 ft.
Sept.	29—A Close Call	About 1000 ft.
Oct.	6—The Sheriff's Girl	960
Oct.	13—His Mexican Bride	970

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

July	17—A Shadow of the Past	464 ft.
July	24—A Clever Nurse	450 ft.
July	24—Off the Coast of Norway	315 ft.
Aug.	14—The Spy	619 ft.
Aug.	14—Water Sports	214 ft.
Aug.	21—False Alarm	353 ft.
Aug.	21—Surroundings of Copenhagen	396 ft.
Aug.	28—The Shell	567 ft.
Aug.	28—Cowboys in Argentina	387 ft.
Aug.	26—A Strange Reunion	910 ft.
Sept.	3—His Two Children	1000 ft.
Sept.	11—The Gray Dame	975 ft.
Sept.	25—The Great Prize	455 ft.
Sept.	25—Life on Training Ship	540 ft.
Oct.	2—Vagabond Life	436
Oct.	2—Adventures of an Emigrant	466

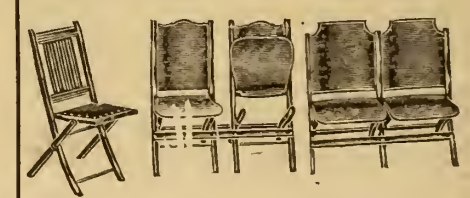
NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO. RELEASES.

May	28—A Fishermaid's Romance (Dr.)	806 ft.
June	4—Davy Crockett in Hearts United (D.)	836 ft.
June	11—The Squaw's Revenge (Dr.)	990 ft.
June	18—A Terrible Attempt (Dr.)	575 ft.
June	18—Jones Gets Arrested (Com)	450 ft.
July	2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.)	935 ft.
July	9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.)	850 ft.
July	23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.)	1000 ft.
July	30—My Wife's Goue to the Country (C)	800 ft.
Aug.	6—Sailor's Child (Dr.)	1000 ft.
Aug.	13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes	450 ft.
Aug.	13—The Yiddisher Cowboy	550 ft.
Aug.	20—Half Breed's Treachery	1000 ft.
Aug.	27—Secret Service Woman	1000 ft.
Sept.	10—The Paymaster	1000 ft.
Sept.	17—A Kentucky Planter	1000 ft.
Sept.	24—The Squaw's Sacrifice	1000 ft.
Oct.	1—Faithful Wife	1000 ft.
Oct.	8—Dove Eye's Gratitude	1000
Oct.	15—The Gold Seeker's Daughter	1000

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Aug.	16—Victim of a Crisis	520
Aug.	16—Salome Craze	435
Aug.	16—Flirtation Collar	335
Aug.	16—Brave Girl on the Fifteenth Floor	917
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl	1016
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—Her Favorite Tune	892
Aug.	16—How the Loser Won	816
Aug.	16—A Young Bachelor's Dream	826
Aug.	26—A Strange Reunion	610
Sept.	16—The Actor Burglar	950
Sept.	23—Nobody Loves a Fat Man	950
Sept.	30—The Man and the Law	1000
Oct.	7—The North Pole Craze (Com.)	500
Oct.	7—A Child's Plea (Dr.)	500

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

PUP PHILOSOPHY

I have noticed that while the hammer is usually considered as the emblem of the knocker, in our office it is used to nail up boxes and things.

MY HOUSE MAKES A SPECIALTY OF

STUDIED SERVICE

IT STUDIES THE EXHIBITOR'S REQUIREMENTS, WHICH ARE QUITE PLENTY—Thank You.

¶ This means that it gives you the best service in the world, which keeps its hammer too busy to be used for knocking.

PUP SOCRATES
His Mark

Theatre Film Service Co.

85 Dearborn Street The House That Bought 110 Reels Last Month CHICAGO, ILL.

The Picture Sensation of the Season

Life Behind the Bars at Joliet

Vividly portraying life and incidents in every-day life of convicts. Individual pictures of some of the prison's most notorious and desperate inmates, all made from life and in prison garb; scenes in the female department, hospital, morgue, cell-houses and chapel.

The Biggest Winner

For The

MOVING PICTURE THEATRES

Since the "Passion Play." So Says:

Paul D. Howse of the Virginia Theatre, Madison and Halsted Sts., Chicago
Lew Jones of the Unique Theatre, State and Van Buren Streets, Chicago
Selig Fichtenberg of the U. S. Music Hall, State Street, Chicago
Sam. Schiller of the Crystal Theatre, N. Clark Street, Chicago
Chas. Schaeffer of the Royal Theatre, State Street, Chicago

And Then Some

If you don't believe it, write 'em. When you hear from the above satisfied managers you will surely write

THE AMERICAN VENDING MACHINE COMPANY, 340 State Street, Chicago, Ills.

FOR FULL PARTICULARS

We'll ship you a show that will cause your patrons—and your competitors patrons to "sit up" and take notice. If in a big hurry, telephone, Long Distance—Harrison 7475

QUALITY FILMS

Great Northern

Awarded first Prize: Gold Medal and Prize of Honor at the Cinematograph Exhibition at Hamburg, 1908.

Licensee under the Biograph Patents. All purchasers and users of our films will be protected by the American Mutoscope and Biograph Co.

SCENE FROM RED DOMINO

Release Saturday, October 16th

THE RED DOMINO

High Class Feature Production. Artistically tinted and colored throughout. Length approx. 900 feet.

Released Saturday, October 9th

Vagabond Life

Adventures of an Emigrant

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

MEMBER N. I. M. P. A.

NOTICE TO EXHIBITORS

Ask your exchange for our large feature film posters. Will positively increase your receipts. Send in your name and address and get on our mailing list at once.

All Exchanges Rent Great Northern Films

Great Northern Film Company

(NORDISK FILM CO. OF COPENHAGEN)

7 East 14th Street - - - NEW YORK CITY

The Best Of All—After All

Chicago Vaudeville Managers Exchange

The Largest Independent Booking Offices West of New York

Booking all of the Best Family Theatres in Chicago

Also other houses in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan

Reputable managers are invited to call and see us when in Chicago

FRANK Q. DOYLE, Mgr.
151 Washington St., (Fourth Floor) Chicago, Ill.

READ THIS CAREFULLY

As a thoroughly, up to the second, perfect, Song Slide Exchange, we recognize no competition. We buy from 10 to 20 new songs a week, and are just the ones you have been looking for. Get in touch with us immediately. We can show you that we have the goods. A weeks supply in one consignment saving you express charges.
A trial order is all that we desire, then you will be highly enthusiastic regarding our service.

Disc and Cylinder Records Furnished

READ THIS AGAIN AND WRITE FOR DETAILS

Chicago Song Slide Exchange
907 Masonic Temple : Chicago, Ill.

THE World's BEST "Films D'Art"

NAPOLEON (Pathé)
2090 feet

LADY OF MONSOREAU (Cines)
1700 feet

THE FALSE OATH (Ambrosio)
900 feet

Ask your "EXCHANGE" and be convinced that these are the only copies in United States. Imported by

Exhibitors' Film Exchange

——Telephone 2775 Stuyvesant——

138 THIRD AVENUE Between 14th and and 15th Sts.
NEW YORK

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, October 15th

THE GOLD SEEKER'S DAUGHTER

Dramatic Code Word, Record Approx. Length 1,000 ft

The New York Motion Picture Co. here presents another feature melodramatic subject, taken with the greatest possible care as to detail and acted by artists of sterling worth. The moral of this picture is well worthy of notice, "IT IS DIVINE TO FORGIVE," and the picture as a whole is worked out in a most entertaining manner.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures
429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY
PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

ask about kosmik economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1897

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p.q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

GAUMONT FILMS

Week Ending October 16th — Gaumont — Licensed by the M. P. P. Co.

RELEASED OCTOBER 12.

"CONVICTING EVIDENCE"

DRAMA. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 714 FEET.

A thrilling Spanish story of intense interest. Love, rivalry, tragedy and a narrow escape of the innocent suffering for the guilty are all included in this stirring, well-acted film. This is a splendid feature subject.

RELEASED OCTOBER 12.

"HOW HE EARNED HIS MEDAL"

COMEDY. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 280 FEET.

The finder of a medal for bravery decides to wear it, and is inspired to several deeds of heroism thereby. Unfortunately for him, however, failure to "look before leaping" gets him into lots of trouble, but causes plenty of fun and amusement to the onlookers.

RELEASED OCTOBER 13.

"PRINCESS OF THE SEA"

FAIRY DRAMA. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 520 FEET.

An exquisite story of the loves of a young prince and a lovely mermaid, depicted with most beautiful surroundings. It is an artistic production of marvelous beauty and strong dramatic worth.

RELEASED OCTOBER 13.

"LIQUID AIR"

TRICK COMEDY. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 450 FEET.

Shows that even scientists who can make liquid air at a temperature of 140 degrees below zero, cannot play pranks with it at the expense of the public without being punished.

RELEASED OCTOBER 16.

"THE BROKEN VIOLIN"

CHILD DRAMA. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 377 FEET.

A clear, pathetic little story of two orphans. Cleverly acted and perfect photographically.

RELEASED OCTOBER 16.

"ALPHONSE, THE DEAD SHOT"

HILARIOUS COMEDY. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 297 FEET.

Full of action, illustrating some splendid revolver marksmanship, though causing considerable inconvenience to the dog whose tail is dexterously shot off.

RELEASED OCTOBER 16.

"ONE-LEGGED PETE AND PAT"

COMEDY. GAUMONT. LENGTH, 320 FEET.

Agile cripples perform wonderful stunts, showing their ability to take good care of themselves.

ALTOGETHER A REMARKABLY STRONG WEEK

IMPORTED BY

George Kleine

52 State St., Chicago 19 East 21st St., New York

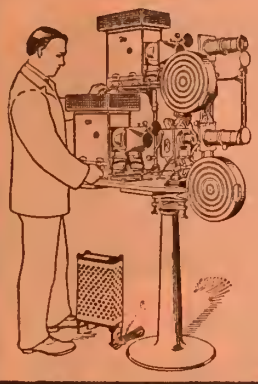
ol. 5., No. 17. October 23, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WITH WHICH IS INCORPORATED THE EXHIBITOR

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

ublished Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."

F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes but none to compare with Motiograph.—PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

Calcium Gas Outfit

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light Write for Catalog to-day

Western Representatives { S. Lubin Geo. Melies FILM

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

On Exhibition at Electrical Show, Madison Square Garden, New York City, October 10th to 21st, by J. H. Hallberg.

Eagle Film Exchange

We handle the most up-to-date European goods, also the following makes:—Great North rn, New York Motion and the Centaur

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY :: :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

YOU NEED IT WE'VE GOT IT

The Service to swell YOUR Box Office Receipts. A Splendid array of Independent Headliners. A Trial will convince you. If you want a square deal consult us.

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE

14 NORTH 9th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

10 E. 14th Street, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 5

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year

POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current

POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current

POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK

DON'T

Make your illustrated song act a secondary consideration. Don't you realize that, with a bum set of slides all marked and patched and faked, vs. a good film, that you're taking away the good impression from that film. Write for our latest renting proposition.

RENTING OUR SPECIALTY

We can supply you with any phonograph record to match our slides. :: :: ::

Chicago Song Slide Exchange
NINTH FLOOR
907 Masonic Temple : Chicago, Ill.
Department I.

KEEP YOU ON US

American Film Brokers
147-157 4th Avenue, New York

FOR SALE

FILMS
1000 Independent and Association Reels. From $8.00 up
A large assortment of Feature Film. From $15 00 up.

PATHE HAND COLORED PASSION PLAY
5 Reels $250.00

SONG SLIDES
From $1.50 per set up.

MACHINES
All makes. New and second-hand. Supplies of all kinds.

Send for Price List

Quick Sales Small Profits

OVERSTOCKED
Illustrated Song Slides

Manufactured by

De WITT C. WHEELER, Inc.

We have several hundred Sets of Slides which have never been off our shelves and which represent the accumulation which is bound to happen in any business. Every set is complete and our regular $5.00 goods, and we only offer them at the reduced price of

$3.00 per Set
To make room for new stock

SEND FOR LIST WHICH WILL BE MAILED YOU PROMPTLY ON RECEIPT OF REQUEST

This offer will hold good for a limited time only, and is an opportunity which should not be missed by anyone looking for a first class bargain.

De WITT C. WHEELER, Inc.
120 WEST 31st STREET - - - - NEW YORK CITY

Here is a song that is going to be sung, hummed and whistled wherever the appreciative ear for music hears it.

Just Let Me Prove My Love To You

We have beat them all to it, and have a great set of slides ALL READY; the dandiest slides that brains, camera and color could devise.

You will agree with us when yon see them.

ORDER NOW! ORDER QUICK!

Be up to the minute with the biggest hit since "Love Me and the World is Mine."

$3.50 the set and your money back if they are not satisfactory.

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY 100 South Wood Street NEOSHO, MO.

WHY—The Motiograph is the Best Motion Picture Machine

Because the Pictures are More Brilliant. The special patented Shutter is so arranged that it saves a lot of illumination otherwise lost.
Because Flicker is eliminated by the new patented Shutter.
Because the Pictures are Rock Steady when using a good film, and are restful to the eyes of your patrons. The result is because of accurate workmanship and excellence of design.
Because it has patented quick Rewind (one and one-half minutes) connected to main crank handle. No other similar.
Because it has the only perfect Fire-proof Shutter, automatic and absolutely reliable.
Because it has Enclosed Spiral Gears. They work smooth and wear longer.
Because it has a Perfect Take Up. Easy on the film and always reliable.
Because it has inclosed Framing Device. Wears longer, is quickly removed and patented.
Because it has "Wide Open" Lamp House, convenient for changing carbons, adjustment, etc.
Because it is absolutely Fireproof.
Because it has Double the Wearing Qualities possessed by other Machines.
Because it is almost Noiseless; runs more quiet than any other.
Because it has Heavy Pedestal Base, adjustable and patented.
Because it has more than 40 other points of special merit. Boston, New York, Chicago and San Francisco approved.

SEE WHAT USERS SAY:

ON MARCH 28TH, F. L. F., CHICAGO, ILL., SAYS:
"I purchased my Motiograph Machine latter part of August, and have not spent one penny for repairs since. To say that I am pleased can hardly express it."

D. F. E., DENVER, COLO., FEBRUARY 1ST, SAYS:
"I have not sold a Motiograph to anyone who is not delighted with it."

O. T., GREAT FALLS, MONT., JUNE 7TH, SAYS:
"It's running fine, and we get the picture and the 'Biz.' We cannot say enough for the Stereo Motiograph. A snap for any operator."

M. F. F., OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., MAY 18TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph is the talk of the town."

E. T. S. CO., PHILADELPHIA, PA., JUNE 2ND, SAYS:
"Machine at the Grand Opera House is a dandy, and is daily making Motiograph converts."

P. & K., ST. ANTHONY, IDAHO, APRIL 16TH, SAYS:
"The Motiograph projects the best picture in the country. We show a much better picture than our competitors."

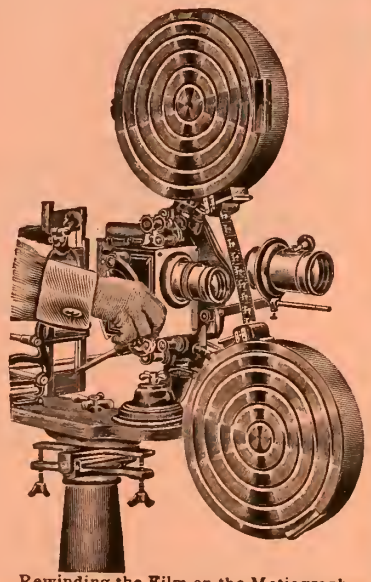
Hundreds of Others Say Similar Things

OUR CATALOG will tell you lots of interesting things about Motion Picture Machines. Write for it To-day

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL MFG. CO.

564-572 West Randolph Street - - - Chicago, Ill.

On Exhibition at Electrical Show, Madison Square Garden, New York City, October 10th to 21st, by J. H. Hallberg.



Rewinding the Film on the Motiograph

Honestly, Mr. Exhibitor, there is absolutely no comparison between the brilliant film service my offices are giving and the humdrum sort you get from the rumdum exchanges. I not only give you the pick of the world's best, but I am almighty fussy in insisting that it shall go to you in first class, perfect tiptop condition. Nobody knows better than I do that good films are the heart and soul and gizzard of your business. I am ambitious to see every customer of mine succeed and I never hesitate to give him every boost that is legitimate and helpful. Slip me a letter and see what's going on.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

The Laemmle Film Service

196-198 Lake St., Chicago 111 E. 14th St., N.Y.

Minneapolis, Minn. Evansville. Ind. Omaha, Neb.
Portland, Ore. Salt Lake City, Utah Montreal, Can.

The demand for machines is terrific, but I'm always ready to make immediate shipments. Rock bottom prices on accessories.

"The Biggest and Best Film Renter in the World."

COMING!

Two Big Productions

MADE IN CANADA

Under the Auspices and with the Co-operation of the Royal Canadian Troops and Northwest Mounted Police

October 29th. THE GIRL SCOUT

A wonderfully thrilling story of The Boer War portraying an historical incident and showing the very troops which took part in the great battles which led to the surrender of General Cronjé. Everything in this production the real thing. Will make a tremendous sensation.

November 5th. THE CATTLE THIEVES

A magniffcent story of the great Canadian Northwest, introducing The Northwest Police in a marvelous exhibition of riding and shooting.

Remember. — These great productions are not studio reproductions, but actual pictures of the very men who have taken so prominent a part in Canadian history.

TRADE KALEM MARK

Splendid Special Posters for These Productions by the A. B. C. Co , of Cleveland, Ohio

THE BEST JUDGES

Declare that our PREMIER FILM SERVICE is expressive of the desires of Particular Moving Picture Theatres.

By "The Best Judges" we mean Exhibitors that seek and install the Film Service of the Highest Class.

We have added many of the most prominent and highest class theatres to our list of customers.

There are critics whose approval is gotten by cornering it.

There's a Reason—Better find out and become the man who knows.

Pittsburg Calcium Light and Film Co.

Pittsburg, Pa. Des Moines, Ia. Rochester, N. Y.
Wilkes Barre, Pa. Cincinnati, Ohio.

PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EX. "The CLEVELAND CIRCUIT"

Suites 535-536-537-538-539 Knickerbocker Theatre Bldg. 1402 Broadway, New York

WHY Does the "Cleveland Circuit" of Theatres outnumber any two others combined
Do ALL the Houses on the "CLEVELAND TIME" ALWAYS MAKE MONEY
Are All Meritorious Headliners Available through PRUDENTIAL Vaudeville Exchange **?

POSITIVELY THE LARGEST—THE ONLY INDEPENDENT BOOKING CONCERN

THEATRES PARKS FAIRS CLUBS CARNIVALS

IF YOU HAVEN'T TRIED

Silverine TRADE MARK

CURTAIN COATING

we want you to do so. It means better pictures for you and better pictures means better patronage. The public demands the best, give it to them and your success is assured. Silverine is the best Curtain Paint on earth.

PRICE, $3.00 THE PACKAGE

Manufactured by

SILVERINE CURTAIN COATING CO.

Oklahoma City Oklahoma

PATHÉ FRÈRES FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

FILM D'ART

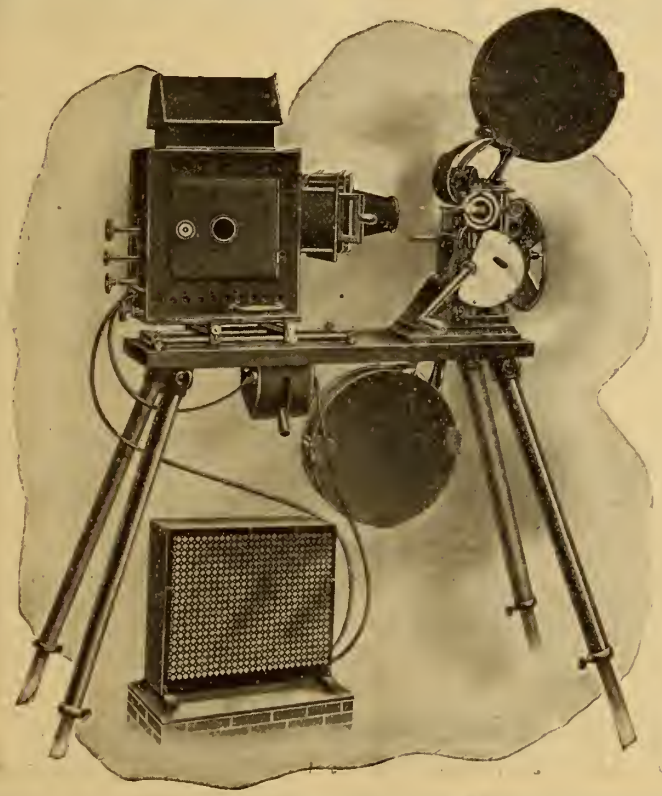
DRINK

By EMILE ZOLA

An authentic reproduction of the famous novel, L'Assomoir. The greatest picture ever produced. Do not fail to run it.

Release day, Friday, October 22nd, 1909 Complete length, 2106 feet

Colored posters can be obtained from the A. B. C. Co., Cleveland, Ohio.



The Pathe Professional Machine

is giving excellent results wherever it is used. If you have a first-class house, and want to give a clear, steady picture, why not install the best machine on the market? Price, $225.00

For sale at all FILM exchanges in the United States

NEW YORK
41 W. 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken,
136 Eddy Street - - San Francisco, Cal.

Selig's Great War Picture Coming

BRITON AND BOER

This will be the greatest war picture ever produced and will be released October 25th, 1909. Get in touch with your Film Exchange at once

SELIG'S GREAT MELODRAMA

No Man's Land

Code Word, Land Length, 990 Feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 18, 1909

Will Show to Packed Houses Everywhere

COMING OCTOBER 21st

Selig's Wild West Feature Film For 1909

The Cowboy Millionaire

Code Word, Cowboy Length, 1000 Feet

Released October 21, 1909

This Picture will be the Hit of the Year

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST. CHICAGO, U. S. A.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

Tuesday, October 19. THE MEXICAN'S REVENGE

The officers of a United States cruiser in Southern California waters come ashore to observe the fiesta. They visit an old mission, where the captain falls a willing victim to the charms of the pretty Rosita, a black-eyed beauty, whose flashing glances have won many a conquest of hearts. But this time Rosita herself is wounded by Cupid's shafts, and it is evident that she returns the captain's admiration. The Padre makes them acquainted in response to the captain's request, and Rosita's preferment rouses the anger of Don Ramon Molina, who wants Rosita for his wife. The two men have words, and Molina draws his knife. He is knocked down before he can strike the blow, and this adds to his desire for revenge upon the American. The captain wins the consent of Rosita and her widowed mother to an early marriage, but as he is riding to his wedding Molina and his friends lay in wait and drag the captain and his best man from their horses with ritas. It is believed the lieutenant is dead and he is left upon the ground, while the captain is dragged off to the timber, where he is laid beneath a tree, from the branches of which swings a half-ton boulder suspended by a rope, the other end of which is tied some distance away. At this end a fire is built and the helpless man is compelled to lie there in suspense while the heavy cable burns through and lets the rock fall upon him. But the lieutenant is only stunned. He gives warning to the wedding guests, and he and Rosita head a rescue party. Rosita drags the captain to safety just as the huge mass crashes upon the spot occupied a moment before by the captain. Molina is taken in custody and the wedding is proceeded with. A vitally interesting story clearly told amid the most picturesque scenes. Length, 680 feet.

A DULL KNIFE

Maggie cannot slice the ham until a keen edge is put upon her knife. She hears the familiar bell of the grinder and stars out to look for him. He steps into a store, but Maggie does not see him, and she rushes madly along in the hope of catching up with him. Everyone in her path supposes her to be a lunatic and they flee at her approach, but Maggie is intent on finding that grinder and does not notice the excitement she is creating until she has turned the knife over to another grinder she encounters. Meanwhile the whole community is all excitement and no end of fun has been created. A brisk comedy film that sweeps the spectator along on a gale of laughter to a most diverting climax. Length, 275 feet

Saturday, October 23. COSETTE

This third subject in the series derived from Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" is a worthy successor to the preceding films de luxe in this special issue. Complete in itself, the story is advanced, taking the adventures from his last escape from the galleys at Toulon to his sanctuary in the Convent of Little Picpus. Jean, once more free of the galleys, makes his way to where he has deposited the store of money which as M. Madeleine he withdrew from the Paris bank and buried at Montfermell. He demands Cosette of the Thenadiers and carries her off to Paris, where he is recognized by Javert, the Inspector of Police, as Jean Valjean. To escape he scales a wall and finds himself in the convent grounds, where Fauchelevant, whom he once befriended, enables him to escape his pursuers in a dramatic scene in which Jean Valjean is buried in the coffin supposed to contain the body of the nun in order that the pursuers may be thrown off the track. Length, 987 feet.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company,
125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative,
913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 OCTOBER 23, 1909 No. 17

Editorial.

Musical Accompaniments for Moving Pictures.

Several months ago we wrote an article on the musical end of moving picture exhibitions, in which we directed attention to the importance of providing good and suitable music to accompany the pictures. That article, we are pleased to know, has borne fruit in many directions, and in our various visits to the theaters we have noticed distinct attempts on the part of the manufacturers to uplift the musical end of matters. Attentive readers of the World will also notice that now and again we single out for commendation an especially good pianist or effect employee whose work deserves encouragement.

From other directions, also, come indications that the musical end of moving picture exhibitions is attracting attention. It has for some time been felt in many quarters that, generally speaking, the music was a weak part of the entertainment. It was either not properly chosen or badly played or the executant had not the necessary ability. As we have already said, improvement is going on in that direction. One of those with whom we have recently conversed on the subject is a music publisher, and he, seeing the need for good and suitable music, has in hand a scheme whereby cheap sheet music can be supplied to moving picture theaters, and the music will suit the subjects of the various films. This scheme is, at present, only in the incipient stage; when it is further developed—if it is further developed—we will let our readers know more about it.

The last two or three numbers of the Edison Kinetogram have also come out with some valuable suggestions to exhibitors of Edison films. Under the titles of these pictures they have indicated the precise nature of the music to be played by way of accompaniment to the picture, so that each situation or scene has its suitable musical complement; just as is done in the case of an ordinary stage play, or an opera, or, indeed, any public performance where it is desired to heighten the effect upon the minds of the auditors by musical sounds.

These are straws showing the direction of the wind. Last week we pointed out that efforts were made to popularize the vocalized moving picture; those efforts are bound in the near future to bear fruit. At present the obstacles to the successful general exploitation of vocalized photographs are both commercial and manufacturing. But those obstacles will no doubt be shortly overcome. Now we draw attention to the fact that there is activity in the musical end of matters. In an early number we shall give other instances of this activity of which at present it would be premature to speak. All this, however, goes to show that the inventive mind is busily at work in an endeavor to put the moving picture on the highest possible plane of public representation.

Concerning J. J. Murdock.

Within a few hours of the foundation of the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance, the president of that august body went to Europe. There was some curiosity as to the suddenness of his departure. It was ascribed in some quarters to health reasons. It was stated that he had been working very hard and needed a rest and change.

Mr. Murdock's visit to Europe had nothing to do with health or philanthropy or the new Alliance of which he is president. He went on behalf of the International Projecting and Producing Company. It was about time, we think. It is a pity he did not go to London before, where, according to our correspondence with well-known English firms of film makers, who are our own personal acquaintances, Mr. Murdock's presence has been necessary for some time past. We hope that Mr. Murdock's European visit will produce successful results for the company of which he is president.

For it was about time that something was done to vitalize that company, which was started to do so much for the Independent cause, and which has done so little. Still the opportunity to do something is as wide open now as nine months ago, when J. J. Murdock came into the moving picture game. We do not wish to do Mr. Murdock any injustice or to be too hypercritical of what he has done, or, rather, of what he has not done, but the plain position of matters in this month of October, 1909, is that all J. J. Murdock has done for the cause of the Independents during these nine months, is to get himself talked and written about a great deal.

In short, whatever his reputation may have been in the vaudeville field, J. J. Murdock, up to the time of his departure for Europe had done absolutely nothing in the moving picture field to justify the position that was assigned to him by his subservient, boot-licking scribes and sycophants of being the savior of the moving picture situation. Murdock was to have given the Independents the best moving pictures of the whole world. He has done nothing of the sort. He was to manufacture American films. He has not. He was to have started his own film exchanges. He has not. He was to drive out the duper, the fakir, and generally to clarify the moving picture industry. He has not. That is Mr. Murdock's negative record up to date.

Murdock is in the position of Adam and Eve when they were turned out of the Garden of Eden. "The world is all before them where to choose." Murdock's career in the moving picture field is still open to him. We will grant that he is a man of promise. We do not know. We have never seen Mr. Murdock; we have never met him. We have tried to see him, in order that we can do the man and his movements justice from personal interview. We hope one day to see him and judge of him for ourselves. If he is the man that he is said to be, he may get over his elusiveness. We hope he will, for the sake of the cause of which he is the head, or the alleged head. Strong men on the Independent side are none too plentiful, and if Mr. Murdock is a strong man, then there is plenty of work, and profitable work, for him in the selling or the manufacture of good moving pictures

The question whether the International Projecting and Producing Company does or does not possess the American agencies for European-made films seems to be a matter of contention at the moment of writing. It will settle itself in time If Mr. Murdock possesses those agencies and his pictures are good, and he can sell them along approved business lines, then there is hope for him of lining up to the position that has been assigned to him —that of the leader of the Independent movement. At present he is a leader who has not led, or, at least, who has not been followed. And this is not said in adverse criticism of J. J. Murdock. As president of the N. I. M. P. A. he is again given a great opportunity. All that is needed is a man of Murdock's alleged ability to direct affairs. Let him make good. Let him do something to benefit the moving picture cause and we will instantly count ourselves amongst Mr. Murdock's warmest supporters and encouragers. At present we are taking him entirely on trust. As we have said before, he is a man of promises. A redemption of some of Mr. Murdock's promises is all that is necessary to establish him in a successful position, especially as he has cabled that he has secured direct contracts from most of the European makers.

Mr. Charles Raleigh and the European Agencies.

History repeats itself. In the early part of this year, when the Independent cause was about to receive the valuable assistance of Mr. Murdock's International Projecting and Producing Company, a factor in the moving picture situation was Mr. Charles Raleigh, of Raleigh & Robert, of Paris, who came to the United States, authorized to obtain American representation for those European manufacturers whom he already represented in Europe. The claim of Mr. Raleigh to the possession of those agencies was doubted by some of the Independents last January, but it soon became evident that Mr. Raleigh was right and his Independent critics were wrong, for the American agency was duly taken up by the International Company.

And, as we have said in our opening sentence, history is repeating itself. Within the last few days, Mr. Charles Raleigh has again found himself in New York, obliged by circumstances to transfer his agencies from the International Projecting and Producing Company. He has transferred them to the Film Import and Trading Company. Doubt having been cast on Mr. Raleigh's abilities and bona fides in this matter, we have made special inquiries and find that the position of affairs to-day is practically what it was at the commencement of the year. Mr. Charles Raleigh has in his possession signed contracts from the various European firms advertised in the Moving Picture World last week, and has transferred his American agencies to the Film Import and Trading Company. The films are being shipped to New York. They are to be immediately placed on exhibition in New York City, and on Mr. Raleigh's return to Paris he will set about the business of keeping up a constant supply of suitable films for the Independent market. This should help to dispose of the rumors that Mr. Raleigh has been deprived of the agencies. To quote Mr. Raleigh, "Other people may claim to have the agencies, but we have the goods."

The Modern Moving Picture Theatre.

CHAPTER VI.

Announcing the Pictures.

The duration of the average moving picture entertainment ranges between forty minutes and an hour and a half. That is our experience at moving picture theaters in New York City. Probably the rule generally applies. Nobody, therefore, can complain that they do not get value for their money, be it five or ten cents, which is paid for admission. Many of the public, as moving picture theater managers know to their cost, have more than their money's worth. For they stay through one and a half or perhaps two performances, defying the gentle hint of the chaser, and otherwise behaving meanly and dishonorably. But, then, this is one of the inevitable drawbacks of continuous shows.

When a plain person pays a promiscuous visit to a moving picture show and takes his seat, he does not, to quote the once popular song, "Know Where He Are." He does not know whether he is at the beginning of the performance, in the middle, or towards the end. He simply sits down and waits developments. We speak from weekly, almost daily, experience. The moving picture theater manager does not seem to have reached that stage or organization when he finds it necessary, and should find it necessary, and will find it necessary to conduct his entertainment in precisely the same manner as any other house of public entertainment. When you visit a theater you know exactly what you are going to get in the way of entertainment. You know that the play consists of so many acts of a certain definite length, with certain definite intermissions. Similarly, when you go to a concert, you know that there are so many items, vocal or instrumental, on the program. Also, when you visit a vaudeville house, your program tells you that the entertainment will consist of so many acts.

It is only the moving picture theater manager who leaves you in a state of blissful darkness as to what you are to get for your money. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule. Some managers we know issue carefully compiled programs. Most of them, however, do not. They just let you find out for yourself. It is a "go as you please" plan which has worked well so far, but stands in urgent need of abolition.

A common practice in a vaudeville house is to give you a program with the acts or items of the entertainment numbered. Moreover, at the side of the proscenium, or stage opening, numbers are placed corresponding with the numbers of the program, so that you could almost identify the one with the other, and should you be late you know exactly what part of the program you are looking at. This is precisely what we suggest should be done in moving picture theaters. Many of the latter announce their programs on boards outside of the theater, but this is done in a very perfunctory fashion. Few of them, as we have said, distribute programs, and only a few that we know exhibit numbers at the side of the stage. Indeed, we have only been in one such theater during the whole of this year. What we suggest, therefore, in respect of the moving picture theater, is that numbered programs should be issued, and that the numbers on them should correspond with the numbers exhibited at the side of the stage. Then the audience will know precisely what it is going to get for its money and can instantly identify each film or act at the moment it comes on.

So far as we can discover, there is no objection to this plan. Its expense would not be great. It would attract rather than repel, and it would have the effect in public estimation of lining up the moving picture entertainment with the theatrical or vaudeville house. It would be a concession to public requirements. At present the public is very much in the dark. First of all, as to the nature of the entertainment that it is going to see; secondly, as to the order in which that entertainment is to be presented to him. The more illumination, the more information that is given to the public on these two points, the more highly, we believe, will the public appreciate it, and respond by increasing patronage of the moving picture theater.

The careful attention of the trade is directed to the remarks of our "Man-About-Town," on another page, in regard to the futility of the first-run craze as a business builder. The greatest menace to the moving picture business to-day is the clamor for daily change and first-run. An exchange man, in bewailing the condition, said the manufacturers are the only ones who profit by it, but they are not to blame, as they would be foolish not to produce and sell the goods that are clamored for on every hand.

The New Addition to the Licensed Releases.

MELIES FILMS TAKE HIGH RANK.

The Melies star again shines in the firmament—and with a new lustre. The already strong representation of licensed film was materially strengthened last Wednesday by the release of "The Stolen Wireless," a war drama, that held the interest of the spectators with its scenery and action, in spite of the fact that the plot was difficult to follow. A few more sub-titles would have helped to make this interesting film still more popular. To convincingly stage a war drama in motion pictures is no easy task and that Melies should have tackled it so successfully in his first American picture is greatly to his credit. With such a start we look forward to still greater feats as his American company get well down to harness. From personal knowledge of the results of his recent scenario competition, he has plenty of good material to work upon which, in such capable hands, should furnish splendid ammunition for the licensed ranks.

"NIGHTS WITH KNOWLES."

A Celebrated Moving Picture Lecturer.

It seems only yesterday that R. G. Knowles was the furore of London, where he was known as the very "peculiar American comedian." His wit, his quaintness, his curious mixture of patter and musical refrain were entirely to the taste of the British public, and for years he topped the bill. Knowles probably never professed to be a singer, but he could talk in an inimitably original way; his anecdotes, his stories, and his brief monologues were so racy, and delivered with such point and rapidity that they never palled on the ears of his public.

In recent years Mr. Knowles has deserted the music hall stage and has turned his undoubted gifts in other directions. He has become a traveler and photographer, and in his enterprises has called to his aid the moving picture. He has traveled in various parts of the world and has, it appears, met with great success as a lecturer. For Knowles is a humorist of the first order. He can see humor in everything. Travel is just one of those things which is calculated to develop the humorous faculties of an observant mind such as his.

This week he starts a series of Sunday evening entertainments at Carnegie Hall, New York City, the first being on October 17, and the others on the 24th and 31st. He relies upon a varied programme, chiefly of motion pictures of the fisher folk of France and Flanders; journey from Scotland to New Zealand; unfamiliar views of New York; views of Venice, Rome, Naples, Athens, Constantinople, Cairo, Jerusalem, Jericho and the Jordan; and a series of South Africa in pictures. As he says in his booklet, you are to have "all the delights of foriegn travel and none of the inconveniences." He features on these Sundays a Hudson series, including England, Hudson's birthplace; Holland, which built the "Half Moon;" and the Hudson from its source to the sea. It will be seen, therefore, that in the latter series of pictures he takes advantage of the interest aroused in England and Holland by the recent Hudson-Fulton Celebration. The latter fact should be sufficient to assure him a very large support from New Yorkers.

The entire programme from which Mr. Knowles draws his pictures is, it will be seen, a full and varied one and, judging by the quality of the photographs which he has secured as well as Mr. Knowles' known ability as a humoristic speaker of the first order, he should be eminently successful in perpetuating what he dryly calls the "Travelaugh." The literature which he is circulating gives promise of an entertainment full of humor, beauty and enjoyment.

There is no doubt that the conjunction of the high class lecture with the moving picture is a feature of modern entertainments which is rapidly making its way in popular favor. The old lantern slide as a vehicle, or rather as an inspiration, for lecturing ability on the platform is as dead as a door nail. The moving picture is to take, nay, is taking, its place. Knowles, therefore, is to be cordially welcomed into the new field, the possibilities of which are only just being grasped by those who can realize what they may become. We have on former occasions given favorable comment upon the work of Lyman H. Howe in popularizing moving pictures of travel subjects. Other men in the field are Niblo, Elmendorf, Craerin, names more or less familiar to the American public. Knowles has all the prestige which attaches to success on the vaudeville stage, and the valuable possession of a rarely humorous personality. When to the latter are joined a rich and varied series of moving pictures, it can be seen that the opportunities before him are great.

We have no doubt that Knowles will be successful in entertaining his public and that he will contribute his quota towards educating the public up to an appreciation of the moving picture as one of the most beautiful and most absorbing methods of imparting public entertainment full of interest, amusement, instruction and delight. We look forward to the Knowles Sundays at Carnegie Hall as being stamped with the approval of large audiences and we are glad to have this opportunity of recording another attempt to make the moving picture an integral part of the entertainment programme of the American public.

Observations by Our Man About Town.

The Exhibitor in Politics.

Last week I gave some advice to the moving picture exhibitors and others in which I advocated that they wake up and make themselves known in politics. The variance of opinion concerning that advice is not unworthy of notice. As usual, some exhibitors have taken the stand that it was sprung to influence sentiment in favor of some certain candidate. It is always thus! The man with the knock is always nearby. Now, to tell the truth, I advocated the candidacy of no one. I simply voiced the sentiment of certain people interested in the moving picture business and urged the people identified with the moving picture interests to take an interest in politics in their own behalf. Now, to be plain about the matter, it is indeed a sad state of affairs to hear people complaining for twelve months in one year about the treatment they receive at the hands of politicians and find that in one day of that year the same people have neither the energy or pluck to help themselves. Why blame a government when those who help make it are too negligent or lazy to build it? It is not a question of sect or class, but simply a matter of demonstration. It is not a matter of evading legal regulations or abolishing just restrictions. It is a matter of enforcing recognition of that which is right and cutting off that which is wrong. Every exhibitor in New York knows that graft has become a pestilence and each one should resolve, irrespective of party ties, to put an end to it. Of course, many politicians, seeing a good investment, have acquired an interest in certain moving picture houses. Such people will guide themselves politically and, no doubt, by local influence will gain protection. But there are scores of exhibitors who are not so fortunately situated, and it is to them that the plea is made to combine and make themselves felt in politics.

The Evils of the First Run Fever.

The moving picture season is now in full swing. Any theater that is not doing business now may as well close for all time. From this time to the middle of December the money should be made, and any place that is not showing a fair return should be closed. This is a frank declaration. Picture places are not peanut stands. It takes money to run them. The public does not patronize them indiscriminately. A program is looked for and disappointments are not overlooked. Gradually the number of moving picture places is growing less. The pace has been too fast. The craze for pictures is the same as it was a year ago, but the public is more observing. A decided change is taking place and managers must keep pace with it. Don't go among the moving picture people to get the sentiment, but seek the opinions of the amusement seeking people. I met a man the other day who told me he was just crazy about moving pictures, but he detested being buncoed. I asked him what he meant and he told me that he went in one place and saw a show that pleased him very much; he then walked to a place a block away and saw the same show over again. To use his own words, he felt that the two places were either operated by one management, or they were being run on a system. I know that the two houses are under distinctly separate management, and are competitors in every sense of the word. Both are running what is called "first run."

* * *

It would be presumptuous to attempt to tell any manager how he should run his house, but it is a certainty that such cases as I have cited are bound to hurt somebody. Competition in the picture business is reaching its limit and judgment must soon step in, or many places will go out of existence. Changes of program daily have about gone the limit. We may soon expect to see the reckless manager demanding a morning program with a change afternoon and evening, and no repeaters! It is simply an extravagant notion of enterprise, and no film exchange and no combination of manufacturers can keep up with the demand.

* * *

It is not a change of program that the public wants, but a proper presentation. The public is frequently disappointed by frequent changes. For instance, on Monday night a certain reel may captivate an audience and people going home will tell their friends of a certain picture they saw. These friends will go to the place the next day but fail to see what they paid for because the program has been changed. This disappointment means money. It likewise means a loss to the management, because the people soon learn that each program is held but one day. Here is where good management comes in. When a pictude makes a hit it is policy to keep it on with "repeated by request," even if the exchange must be paid a little extra. Most managers are misled by the notion that the approbation of an audience is directed to the service. Such is not the case. When an audience wakes up it is because certain parts of a picture appeal to it. An entire play may be a practical failure, but some part of one scene may keep it alive for a season. The pulse of an audience must be felt, and when it is found it must be followed.

* * *

I was in a Western town some years ago and witnessed a performance of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" by a party of "barnstormers." The scenery was scant, the acting bad and the stage effects much worse. There were no bloodhounds and the cakes of ice were whitewashed soap boxes. The audience was disgusted and but for one man the company would have been mobbed. The one man was the stage manager, who appeared and briefly recited the familiar story, supplementing his remarks with an apology for the supposed non-arrival of the train with the required props. A promise of improvement was made for the second night. The next morning the company proceeded to the next stand, but the manager remained behind and presented "Uncle Tom's Cabin" in moving pictures with appropriate illustrated songs. This struck the keynote and the manager filled the balance of the week in the place.

* * *

No manager can prejudge the tastes of an audience. His salvation is in appeasing appetites. Change of program do not always meet the emergency. It is the aptitude of detecting and meeting what the people want. The successful manager is a watchful one. He must see what the audience likes and give it what it likes. Reputation is not all. To put on a good picture to-day and have people go away and praise it is not all that is required of a manager. That picture must be repeated. Friends of those who have seen it will visit the place to see it, and if it is not there they are disappointed. The public pays no attention to first, second or thirty-second runs. They pay their money to see the pictures and managers must discriminate for their benefit, and not be misled by reckless enterprise.

* * *

The most successful nickelodeon managers are those who are willing to take a chance. There are not three out of a dozen managers who can make up a good moving picture program. The more care they exercise in that direction the more pronounced is their failure. This is especially the case with some managers who leave an exchange content with a load of the "latest films," but without the slightest knowledge of the tastes of their audiences. Up-to-date managers are in demand at all times when guided by good judgment. A good headliner with a filling in of appropriate subjects, no matter how old they may be, is worth more than a full program of up-to-date subjects selected without thought. The "first and second run" craze has proved this. Film exchanges have tried to convince exhibitors of this without avail, but experience is gradually accomplishing it.

* * *

The question was asked the other day as to whether there were not too many moving picture places in existence. There can be no doubt of it. There are too many cheap and experimental places. There are too many "side lines" working. The backers give them no attention after the original investment and they are a detriment to the places that are operated on straight lines. There are upwards of ten thousand moving picture places in the United States operated by the licensed and independent interests. If this number were cut in two all concerned would be better off. The business seems to have escaped control. There appear to be too many places operated for the main purpose of keeping others out of the business. Syndicates have gained a strong foothold, some of them controlling as many as forty houses. No complaint could be made on this score, as a business proposition, were it not for the fact that combination is relied upon to fight competition and the quality of entertainment is not maintained. The receipts of each individual place would not support an investor, but the combined receipts make a suitable return to the combination. Some of these syndicates make contracts for the furnishing of a hundred reels a week for their circuits. Anyone acquainted with the business can readily guess what is run off at this rate. I have it from good authority that both the licensed and independent interests have become convinced that this wholesale dumping of attractions is hurting the business and lines are to be drawn.

OLIVER.

First Release of "Imp" Films, Oct. 25th.

HIAWATHA (Independent Moving Picture Company).

Carl Laemmle has scored another success, and that with characteristic Laemmle celerity. It seems only yesterday that he talked about being in the New York film renting business, and here he is with a well-established Fourteenth street institution. Then Carl said to us that he would make moving pictures, and good ones, in two or three months. Now, if a new man at the game turns out a really good moving picture in six or nine months, we count him as something of a phenomenon; for moving picture making, as we are constantly pointing out, is no easy thing, if good results be the aim. But Carl Laemmle has done it well inside six months. Counting the time by weeks since he first started to get the tools of his new trade together, he is ready with a picture which not only does the Independent Moving Picture Company credit, but would be a credit to many film manufacturers who have been years in the business. It is indeed an excellent start.

And we admire the rare shrewdness which dictated the choice of subject for the I. M. P. first release. A subject has been chosen which is full of universal interest, which will appeal to all, which will attract and hold attention in virtue of the theme, irrespective of how it is acted or how it is photographed. It is none other than Longfellow's poem of "Hiawatha," known to us all, of course, in our school days. The producer has handled this subject with considerable adroitness. He has split it up into a number of scenes, the stories of which are told in brief extracts from the poem, which are thrown on the screen; so that you get a connected narrative of the chief doings of "Hiawatha" from his first appearance to the poetical moment when he leads his bride away behind the tent. We have nothing but praise for the way in which the scenes have been chosen, with the historic Minnehaha Falls as a background. We have only praise for the acting and dressing of the principal characters, for the clearness and continuity of the story, and for the excellent impression which the film creates. It is stamped all over with the signs of success. The photography is good, the acting of the story is well sustained all through, and, barring a few minor blemishes of a technical nature, inseparable from the haste of a first production, this film of "Hiawatha" is quite entitled right away to take rank as a first-class specimen of American-made film of an American subject by American labor. With such a good start the "Imp" has jumped fully half-way up the ladder which others have had to climb step by step. Before the film was shown us, apologies were made for its technical faults, which, we were assured, had been overcome in subsequent productions. Therefore we may suggest for the trade-mark, "Improved Motion Pictures" instead of "Independent Moving Pictures," and congratulate Carl Laemmle on his chances of heading his 57 varieties with his own films.

A FEW IMPORTANT POINTS FOR THE OPERATOR TO CONSIDER.

By F. H. Richardson.

Too little consideration is paid to certain points which seem, as a matter of fact, to be but indifferently well understood by operators, particularly those handling a strong light. It seems not well understood that rheostat wires and the asbestos covered flexible cable used to connect the wire terminals with the lamp deteriorate with considerable rapidity. Rheostat wire loses its conductivity particularly fast where used with alternating current, due largely to the rapid vibration caused by the alternations. This vibration has a decided tendency to crystallize the wires. Too little attention is paid to this matter. It is no difficult matter to make rheostat coils and the wire is not at all expensive. Rheostat coils may, therefore, be renewed by the operator with small cost and the added efficiency, where the rheostat has been used for a considerable time, more than repays the trouble and expense. Flexible cable should be renewed occasionally, the length of time depending on strength of current it is called upon to carry. It may look all right—as "good as new"—but at the same time be choking back the current to a considerable extent. If it feels the least bit warm to the hand (away from the lamphouse) renew it. You will perhaps be astonished at how much better light you will get. Anything which causes resistance causes waste. The writer would say that in no case should flexible cable be used more than six months and where forty or more amperes are being used its economical life is shorter even than that. Of course, this is modified by the length of time per day it is used, also. No definite rule may be laid down, but the exercise of judgment in this particular will save money. Few operators, comparatively, there seem to be who understand that there is a very large difference in current consumption according to the distance the carbons are apart. The longer the arc the less current flows. But the big difference lies at the point where the (direct current) lamp begins to "sing" or hum. Suppose your lamp is singing and you open the arc just enough to stop it. You have reduced current consumption by between one-fourth and one-fifth by that operation and you have as good or a better light. Suppose you are drawing forty-five amperes with the arc open just enough that there is no sound from it. You close it a trifle and the arc begins to give off a harsh, sputtering sound. You have increased current consumption by approximately ten amperes and have not one bit better light to show for it. If you doubt this get a reliable ammeter and try it. The longer you can burn your arc (without injuring the illumination, which is not admissible) the less current you draw. Just remember that. Ten amperes at 110 volts is 1,100 watts, and in an hour's run it counts up on the meter, let me tell you. Rheostat jumpers and cable end connections should be taken loose frequently and thoroughly cleaned. They may look all right, but you may take it from me that you will lose nothing by taking them off and scraping them until they shine. Under the influence of heat there is constant erosion going on which forms a slight film of scale. It may be so slight as to be wellnigh invisible to the eye, but it is there and this scale offers very high resistance.

NEW WAY OF SETTING SHUTTER.

The writer has, he believes, evolved a new and surprisingly simple way of setting the moving picture machine shutter. It came to him almost in a moment while he was answering the letter of an operator in Seattle, Wash., who had written, calling my attention to an error in my instructions for shutter setting. It is so simple that the only wonder is no one seems to have thought of it before. Here it is: Make a central mark on the shutter as per Mark A, Fig. 40, Page 371, September 18th issue of Moving Picture World. Now turn the balance wheel of your machine until the cam pin just enters the star slot. Now on some stationary part as near to the rim of the balance wheel as possible make a slight prick-punch mark and exactly opposite it make a scratch mark on the rim of the balance wheel. Now turn the balance wheel in the direction it runs until the cam pin is just leaving the star and make another scratch mark on rim of balance wheel opposite the prick-punch mark. Now measure around the balance wheel rim between the two scratch marks and at a point exactly half way between the two make a slight prick-punch mark. Now set the two punch marks opposite each other and set the center line on shutter (Mark A, Fig. 40, page 371) exactly half way across the aperture opening and tighten on shaft, and the shutter will be right, no matter what make of machine it be or whether single or double shutter. Moreover, you may set the shutter at any time by using the two punch marks, except that should another cam wheel be installed it must be in exactly the same position in relation to the balance wheel or else new marks must be made. It seems to the writer that manufacturers would do exceedingly well to take note of this suggestion. By providing that the cam wheel always be placed in the same position on the shaft (rotary position, I mean), they could affix these marks to the balance wheel, frame and shutter, so that setting the shutter of their machines would be as simple and accurate an operation as one could wish.

From John F. Hayes, manager of Swaab's Palace, Burlington, N. J., we have received tickets and an invitation to inspect this new house, which has been constructed at an expense of $15,000. We will avail ourselves of the privilege at the first opportunity, and thank Mr. Hayes and wish the Palace all kinds of success under his management. He tells us that his seating capacity of 650 is frequently taxed to the utmost and that they present pictures and vaudeville at five and ten cents.

Our Paris correspondent informs us that Monsieur Vandal, director of the Society Eclair, 8 Rue St. Augustin, Paris, is booked to leave Paris on the 16th inst. for New York. M. Vandal comes to the United States to study the cinematographic outlook and especially the standing between the Edison licensees and the new Alliance of the independents. M. Vandal, a scientist, is one of the most active of French manufacturers, and his brand of films, the Eclair, are well known on the market.

Standardization.

THE REASON FOR THE PRESENT GAUGE.

By Arthur S. Newman in "The Bioscope."

The moving picture having passed through the successive stages of being at first merely a seemingly impossible scheme; then an accomplished fact only attained by the overcoming of many difficulties; and, subsequently, a commercial enterprise in the hands of a select few, has finally developed into an important and world-wide industry, providing employment for many thousands of workers, and one engaging the attention of a vast army of actors, authors, operators and mangers. The factories for the production of film have attained colossal proportions and the demand for what may be called raw material (perforated film) is continually on the increase. It is rather surprising that with an industry of such importance demanding so large an amount of raw material, and that always of one size, that no precise statement of that size —no definite standard has been universally agreed to. The photographic trade has its accepted sizes for plates and materials, the engineering and other allied trades have their definite sizes for sundries of all kinds. Metals, wood, cotton, paper, can all be obtained of definite measurements, and as the uses to which such materials are applied are so numerous, the sizes are consequently numerous; but perforated film being used for only one purpose, and all the machines in commercial use being built to take one size only, it is most important that the exact width of the film should be settled once for all, and also the size and shape of the perforated holes and their distance apart should be absolutely determined. To an extent these measurements have been settled and agreed to all round, but so far this has not been completely and scientifically done. Our English system of measurement is responsible for some of the difficulties, but it is, nevertheless, not fair to blame the system. The real trouble is due to the fact that a different unit of measurement obtains on the Continent from that which is generally in use in England, the Colonies and America. For fine work at home, a decimal system, having for its unit the inch, is becoming general among engineers and scientific instrument makers, while on the Continent the millimeter and its multiples and decimal divisions is in use, and has been for many years past. Only during recent years has the decimally divided inch come into favor here. The introduction of the standard wire gauge, the sizes of which are all dependent upon the decimal-inch, has done much to familiarize the men in the mechanical trades with decimal measurements. Many congresses and committees have spent much time trying to get all countries to agree to a universal unit of measurement, but partly owing to conservatism and vested interests, and partly because it is impossible to make different nations see the same things from the same point of view, no agreement has yet been arrived at. In the moving picture industry, an unfortunate history has done much to cause the present confusion. Edison, the first to adopt a definite standard size for perforated film, chose the proportions which are usually acknowledged to be the basis of the present sizes. Whether they are the most suitable that could have been used, is for us, quite beside the subject. We must look at things as they are and, doing so, we shall find that, owing to the tremendous number of machines in use, and the quantity of capital invested in film subjects, any great deviation from any of the existing patterns of width of film and size of perforation cannot be tolerated. Edison originated his gauge for use in the Kinetoscope, for which instrument it was eminently suitable. Its measurements are simple, viz.: width of film, 1⅜ in.; pictures per foot, 16; perforations per picture, 4. The shape of the hole was that of a parallelogram with rounded corners.

The pin machine of Lumiere may be fairly considered as having been the first practical and commercial apparatus for the exhibition of moving pictures. So great a success was the result of its exhibition that in a short time many mechanicians designed and made apparatus for the same purpose and sales were quickly effected at quite fabulous prices. Many of these first machines were quite crude productions, but in spite of this they had a ready sale, and a show of even so small a number as six subjects, each 75 feet in length, would command money. Then a great difficulty was presented to the showmen. Machines there were in plenty, but film subjects were few. The disused films designed for the Kinetoscope were eagerly bought up, although their having been originally photographed at a speed varying from 30 to 40 pictures per second, made them anything but suitable for projection in heavy running machines such as most of these first ones were; but the public was mad for moving pictures, good, bad or indifferent. Lumieres' first style of perforation had only one pair of holes to each picture, and the size of the picture was slightly different from that of the Edison films, so the machines constructed to take one gauge would not work the other. By the time the Kinetograph films were worn out, several people had made taking and printing machines; and as, by that time, the number of machines for working the Edison gauge was far in excess of those for Lumiere gauge, the people who started to manufacture film subjects naturally chose the system which presented to them the probability of the largest market for their productions. Thus the gauge introduced by Edison (or, I should say, an approximation of that gauge) became general —for many of the first productions were very crude imitations so far as the gauge was concerned. Lumieres' gauge also suffered from the fact that it was built on the millimeter unit, and could not easily be originated or verified by English measurement. By the time the Continental firms began to seriously manufacture film subjects, the number of Edison gauge machines was so large that the Edison gauge had become the standard—and so it remains to the present day.

THE SHAPE OF THE PERFORATION.

The perforation of the films made by Edison, for use in the Kinetograph, was of a most excellent description; the gauge was wonderfully accurate and the measurements and dimensions were kept within such close limits that even to the present time, in spite of the ingenuity expended upon machinery and methods, nothing finer has been produced. For years after the introduction of the bioscope, the standard of excellence attained by Edison was not even approached by the general manufacturer of films. I have tried to find a reason for this seeming retrogression, but can only suggest that the laboratories and workshops of Edison had the advantages of unlimited capital, which was expended without hesitation in the desire to reach perfection; while the initial stages of the bioscope industry were curiously hampered by the fact that money was made too easily, because even third-rate results appeared wonderful to the man in the street. As soon as the "pictures" became an assured success, a host of competitors appeared on the scene, many—I may say the larger portion—of whom were neither scientific, mechanical, optical nor chemical experts. The thing was to make money—as much and as quickly as possible—and as long as the public continued interested, all was well. It was reserved for the foreigners to improve the mechanical excellence of the results, and to-day the most steady pictures nearly all come from abroad. We are just beginning to realize that the subject recorded is not the only point to be studied in producing films, and as a consequence, the English-made films are improving in steadiness; but it will be some time before we attain the mechanical excellence shown by our foreign rivals. A proper standard would do much to help to regain our lost position, though standardization will not compensate for want of care and delicacy of manipulation. The shape and size of the holes in Edison perforation (I mean as employed in Kinetograph films) were eminently suited for use in the Kinetograph, and were much smaller than those now in general use. When in the machine, the films ran continuously, there was no intermittent movement, and as they were directly viewed instead of being thrown on the screen, the opening in the shutter was quite a small slit through which the films were seen, apparently still, because the opening in the shutter occupied but a minute fraction of a second in passing over the picture. Continuously running films are not subjected to the same number and variety of strains as are the intermittently moved ones in our present machines, and almost any form of perforation would have answered equally well, provided the gauge were accurate and in coincidence with the pitch of the sprockets; nevertheless, the system of Edison, with its comparatively small, perfectly formed, and exactly spaced holes, was probably the very best that could have been chosen for its purpose. The contour of the hole I have often heard described as "cushion-shaped." I have seen cushion-shaped holes in film, very seldom I am glad to say, because, in my opinion, such shape is most unsuitable for its purpose. I describe the "Edison-shape" as a parallelogram with rounded corners; the sketches —Figs. 1 and 2—will show the difference.

Holes of many different shapes have from time to time made their appearance, some nearly square, some quite round and some with sharp corners; none are, however, better than the Edison shape, which is perhaps the best all round for the several purposes for the carrying out of which the holes are a necessity. The Edison shape has one disadvantage—the mechanical difficulty of forming the punches themselves. This difficulty would soon disappear if a standard shape and size could be agreed upon. Steel of the required section could easily be drawn by the wire drawers, and would soon become a stock size, which being easy to obtain would much facilitate the manufacture of perforators. At present, due to the variety of sizes and shapes of the holes in use, it cannot pay a steel manufacturer to install the tools necessary for this special production, the demand for any one definite size being so restricted. A large proportion of the present day films have holes of the following shape (Fig. 3):

This shape, though not quite so excellent as that of Edison, is still a very good one. It is probable, however, that ease of manufacture of the punches for producing it has had more to do with its introduction, than has its suitability for its purpose. It is comparatively easy to form the punches for this shape. It is merely necessary to obtain round steel of the required diameter, and remove a certain amount from two opposite points to form the flat sides, the only difficulty being the taking off of an exactly equal amount of each side, and of keeping those sides exactly parallel the one to the other. I have before me a piece of film, produced quite recently by one of the most influential of the film producers, in which the holes on one side of the film have the sides of the holes sufficiently out of parallel to be easily seen to be unsymmetrical when casually looked at. I am not altogether surprised, because, as a maker of machines, I know the extreme difficulty of producing small pieces of metal of accurate symmetrical section. This is one argument in favor of a standard of some kind, but it must not be thought that the easy and cheap means of machine manufacture is the most important point to be attained. Perforating machines must always remain but a small part of the bulk of the machinery in use. The essential advantage to the industry will be found in the fact that, given a standard size, shape and pitch for the perforations, and a definite distance of separation of holes measuring across the film, all sprockets, all intermittent driving mechanisms, and all parts at any time required to engage with the perforations, can also be made to a definite standard, instead of on the existing system—or, perhaps, I had better say—want of system. It is usual now to make sprocket teeth with plenty of "shake," or, in other words, very loosely fitting; and to do the same with every other part of a machine which has to deal with the perforations in the film—the said amount of shake being merely dependent upon the judgment of the individual manufacturer. As a consequence, the fit is good, bad or indifferent (generally bad or indifferent) according to the make of the film dealt with by the machine, which depends for the accuracy of its result upon the particular style of perforation in use at the manufactory from which the film subject emanates.

(To be continued.)

A FEW REMARKS BY A READER.

Permit me to say that the Moving Picture World takes exactly the right position in its editorial of October 9. The pot calling the kettle black don't prove anything, nor does it materially improve matters. The exhibitor is not to any extent interested in the trials of either the "trust" or the alliance. It is service he wants. Excellence of films means considerably more to them than do whole pages of "liar," "thief," "blackguard," and pages devoted to telling how really utterly depraved and hopeless the "other fellow" is. Nor should the Moving Picture World encourage such foolish splutter by giving it notice. Spend your surplus time, gentlemen, both trust and alliance, in setting forth how much you propose to better conditions for the exhibitor and then proceed to do it. That is the talk we will gladly listen to from both of you. The day of more or less picturesque windjamming is (thank Heaven) about passed in the moving picture business. As a matter of fact, it would seem to the disinterested observer that the independents, after howling their dear heads nearly off over the "Trust," have set about forming a little trust of their own. The writer predicts that if the Alliance proves successful it will in the end become practically the same identical thing the Motion Picture Patents Company now is, insofar as its field of work is concerned. No doubt this will be strenuously disputed, but just you wait and see. It may not go the same length in some directions, but it will attempt to in some manner control the so-called independent film output and prices and regulate the exchanges to practically the extent the so-called trust now does. And the writer firmly believes that if the moving picture form of amusement is to succeed in any large, permanent way both the prices and the exchange procedure have got to be regulated. Unrestrained, cut-throat competition is not good for any business, particularly if it be a thing depending wholly on public approval for its existence.

R. S. N.

TOO MANY EXTRA RELEASES?

The manufacturers of moving pictures, because of the various big events and celebrations which have taken place in various parts of the country, and which were worth photographing, have flooded the exchanges with extra releases and raised the question, "Are we getting too many extra releases?"

The Hudson-Fulton Celebration in New York was made by two New York moving picture firms, as was Peary's landing in New York. The Essanay Film Company lately released a special picture, "Taft in Chicago and at the Ball Game," and released last week a special number covering the world's championship baseball game between the Pittsburg Nationals and Detroit Americans. This latter picture by the Essanay Company was released to-day (Saturday, October 23) and is reported to be showing to packed houses all over the country. The Essanay Company reports a big sale on the pictures, even selling more prints than of last year's championship baseball pictures.

The general opinion of the film exchanges is that there are not enough special releases and that some events, easily available to the manufacturers, are overlooked. Events, such as the Hudson-Fulton Celebration and sporting pictures of the importance of the late Essanay releases, especially when popularized so much by the press, are always heartily welcomed by the public. There are not too many special releases; the exhibitors want more.

The Brayton Manufacturing Company, Chicago, announce that they will release on October 30 a wonderful set of lecture slides showing the Wright brothers in their aerial flight at Fort Myer, Virginia. These slides are particularly interesting from the fact that they show President Taft, Vice-President Sherman, Secretary of War Dickinson, Secretary of Treasury Franklin MacVeagh, Philander Knox, Alice Roosevelt Longworth, in fact the entire cabinet and the foreign representatives and the elite of Washington that witnessed the record-breaking official flight of the Wright brothers. These slides are 25 in number, with a complete lecture which may be rendered in 10 to 12 minutes. They are prepared to handle a large number of orders for these slides.

The Economy Supply Depot, 97 South Clark street, Chicago, Ill., is the name of a new concern who are manufacturing slides, tickets and other sundries which are much used by moving picture theaters in such enormous quantities as to warrant their selling them to exhibitors at a very low figure. For instance, they are selling high grade, colored announcement slides at 28 cents each, postage paid, which are sold by other concerns at a much larger figure. They are making slides and tickets for the popular schemes, such as the Baby and Young Ladies' Popularity Contests. They have literature for these various contests that they will be pleased to send to any of our readers.

Present indications point to a total sale of about 4,500 moving picture machines in this country during the coming year. At present this sale is largely divided among three makers, but this condition may be changed to some extent. The Kleine Optical Company is entering the field with what appears to be an excellent projection mechanism. Pathe has re-entered the American market with his machine. The independents propose pushing machines made by members of the alliance, and all this in the face of a decreased demand amounting to probably 1,500 machines per annum. There is no huge profit in projection machine manufacture at best, and with too many engaged in the business there is a danger that the time will come when quality will suffer through eagerness to keep up the profit side of the ledger. Let us devoutly trust this state of affairs will never be.

"Launcelot and Elaine," a visualization of one of the most popular of Tennyson's "Idyls of the King," will be released by the Vitagraph Company on November 13. It is a film de luxe, though not advertised as such, and with the aid of a half-dozen captions the entire story of King Arthur's most famous knight is told so simply as to be within the mental grasp of the unthinking, while the richly poetic atmosphere of the poem is fully preserved for those to whom Tennyson is an open book. The tournament is shown in detail and forms a most spirited episode in an alluring story.

ON THE SCREEN.

By Lux Graphicus.

People who live in glass houses should not throw stones. James L., to whom I have made benevolent reference on this page during the past few weeks, should profit by the moral of these words. The edifice in which he has his abode is glazed with a very tender substance, indeed, and the slightest of missiles is sufficient to knock holes in it. As I have already pointed out, besides being an imitator and a copyist, he is a turncoat, for while denouncing the Independents he caters for their support. To quote his own words, "why temporize?" Why not go in solid for the Independents and join forces with his esteemed friend, whom he credits with consistency? James L. and the person to whom he is handing such a highly necessary testimonial would form a combination of talent and rectitude far too great for this rough and tumble world.

* * *

But I am getting a little ahead of my deliverance. James L. has been throwing stones rather wildly and characterizing all Independent film as "junk." James L. is either wilfully blind or stupidly ignorant. If he is blind, he is not the man for his job; if he is ignorant, he deserves to be censured for his presumption. Moving picture journalism is already so seriously handicapped by more than one conspicuous example of monumental ignorance and stupidity that there is no necessity for an addition to the pitiful illiteracy, errors of taste and fact, personal treachery, lack of principle, and sheer downright humbug which is handed out east and west to fool the public. Frankly, James L. on his past record is a cut above such company, and I heartily pity him for the position in which he finds himself.

* * *

James L. in fact knows better, or at any rate ought to know better, than to print the flabby and flapdoodle nonsense which no doubt in his mind passes for criticism. He had a fine chance to dignify the cause on whose behalf he writes, instead of which he elects to adopt the vulgar tactics of irrational abuse and condemnation, seemingly unaware of the fact that, like a boomerang, this sort of thing is bound to recoil on its authors. His latest escapade is to characterize all imported films as "junk," making particular reference to the pictures handled by Raleigh & Robert, of Paris. Raleigh & Robert and the continental European manufacturers may be no nearer perfection in film making that are some of the gentlemen on whose behalf James L. applies his pen, but anybody with the smallest knowledge of the subject knows that among the makers represented by Messrs. Raleigh & Robert there are films produced which, allowing for the fact that they are French and Italian, are quite the equal in photographic and dramatic qualities of some of the pictures made by James L.'s friends.

* * *

Now James L. has been publicly invited by Mr. Raleigh to spend an hour viewing some "imported junk." If he cannot see these pictures, or does not see these pictures, he should not unreservedly damn that which he has not seen. If he does not know a good picture when he sees it, he should enlist the services of somebody who does. At any rate he should try to cure himself of the fatal disease of excessive partisanship. All the world knows that the best moving picture work comes from France and Italy. It is foolish to deny it. James L.'s own pages are a witness to the fact of the foremost place which the French work occupies.

* * *

All James L.'s own geese are not swans. Quite likely there have been some licensed pictures issued which make the judicious grieve. There is the notorious case of the young woman who ate green apples. There are other cases. James L. is fond of quoting the Dramatic Mirror against the Independents. Why doesn't he go to the same authority for some points on the work of his own friends? Jimmy, my boy, you are in a cleft stick. From the stoop of your own glass house you are throwing stones so wildly that you will hit some of your own friends if you are not careful. Take my advice and be a little more circumspect in your criticisms and you will yet make your sheet readable, and reliable. At present it is neither.

* * *

I have been looking at moving pictures from a critical and technical standpoint for over ten years, and I hope that I may be allowed the assumption that I know a little about the subject. As I said last week, a great number of rubbishy subjects are turned out on the Independent's side, but time, experience and work will no doubt cure this state of things. But even as it is, you have some first rate photography quite comparable to that which meets the favor of that accomplished and discriminating critic, James L. Quite good work comes from the Great Northern, the Centaur, the Lumiere Company, to say nothing of the imported element controlled by Mr. Murdock or Mr. Raleigh, as the case may be, and then last but not least of all is James L.'s particular friend, Carl Laemmle, who, this week has demonstrated that he is a man of his word and meant to make good pictures. And he has. If in the face of all this evidence James L. elects to stigmatize the whole of the Independent output as "junk," then James L., to his many other self-revealed ineptitudes will add that of wilful perversion of facts. But frankly, I do not think that James L. is such a fool. At any rate I, for one, hope he is not. I still live in hopes that by hard work, intelligence and experience he will yet succeed in making his sheet a respectable representative of those in whose interests it is published. At present it is not doing them the slightest good, as anybody familiar with newspaper work can clearly see.

BROWNING GIVEN IN MOVING PICTURES.

[From the New York Times.]

"Pippa Passes" is being given in the nickelodeons and Browning is being presented to the average motion picture audience, which has received it with applause and is asking for more. This achievement is the present nearest-Boston record of the reformed moving picture play producing, but from all accounts there seems to be no reason why one may not expect to see soon the intellectual aristocracy of the nickelodeons demanding Kaut's "Prolegomena to Metaphysic" with the Kritek of Pure Reason for a curtain raiser.

Since popular opinion has been expressing itself through the Board of Censors of the People's Institute, such material as "The Odyssey," the Old Testiment, Tolstoy, George Eliot, De Maupessant, and Hugo has been drawn upon to furnish the films, in place of the sensational blood-and-thunder variety which brought down public indignation upon the manufacturers six months ago. Browning, however, seems to be the most rarified dramatic stuff up to date.

As for the "Pippa" without words, the first films show the sunlight waking Pippa for her holiday, with light and shade effects like those obtained by the "Secessionist" photographers. Then Pippa goes on her way, dancing and singing; the quarreling family hears her, and forgets its dissension; the taproom brawlers cease their carouse, and so on, with the pictures alternately showing Pippa on her way, and then the effect of her "passing" on the various groups in the Browning poem. The contrast between the "tired business man" at a roof garden and the sweatshop worker applauding Pippa is certainly striking.

That this demand for the classics is genuine is indicated by the fact that the adventurous producers who inaugurated these expensive departures from cheap melodrama are being overwhelmed by orders from the renting agents. Not only the nickelodeons of New York, but those of many less pretentious cities and towns are demanding Browning and the other "high-brow effects." The clergymen who denounced the cheap moving picture plays of the past would be surprised and enlightened to find the Biblical teaching, eliminated from the public schools, being taken up in motion pictures. Impressive nativity plays have been given with excellent scenic effects, while Mounet-Sully played Judas in an Easter play prepared by a French firm. An American firm is now specializing on the Old Testament. "Jephtha's Daughter" and "The Judgment of Solomon" have already been given in excellent form, and have proved very popular. A play of Joseph and his brethren is being prepared.

A series of historical plays have been done, and more will follow. An experimental afternoon was given in a public school in Fifth street, with a program of instructional plays for history and English courses. One of the district superintendents gave the accompanying talk to assembled teachers and children. The result was regarded as satisfactory, and more is planned along this line, though no public announcements have been made.

SUCCESS OF THE PRUDENTIAL VAUDEVILLE EXCHANGE.

W. S. Cleveland, proprietor and manager of the Prudential Vaudeville Exchange, is very proud of the success he has attained with his vaudeville booking agency. Since the inception of the Prudential in the booking field they have made wonderful progress, and are now booking 165 towns and 90 weeks of time for acts. They have graduated from their original one-room office to a large and handsome suite on the fifth floor of the Knickerbocker Building, at 1402 Broadway, where a large number of acts and actors are booked daily.

Comments on the Week's Films.

THE MINISTER'S DAUGHTER (Edison).

One of those pictures which stir the very spirit by their suggestion. The stern, hard minister, who believes that the theater kills the soul past all redemption and who turns his daughter from him because she dared to attempt a career upon the stage, yet discovered her mistake and returned home. The village drunkard, or ne'er-do-well—everybody knows the type—who embraces religion and departs in peace, only to find the minister's daughter prone on the steps of the church, where she has fallen exhausted. And the terrible awakening when her father refuses to receive her at the altar, where but a few moments before he had been teaching forgiveness of sin and repentance. When the recently converted man leaves, sick at heart, because of the apparent falsity of the religion as taught by the minister, the scene is magnificent, rather because of what it suggests than because of the acting, though that clearly expresses the emotions of the occasion. And the transformation when the minister again receives his daughter and the man accepts anew the religion he has been taught, are equally suggestive scenes. The termination, when the minister clasps his daughter in his arms and the religion he has taught is vindicated, is affecting. It is sufficient to mention it. Each one can see it for himself and draw from it his own conclusions and his own influences. It is not for one in comments like these to undertake to enforce the lesson the picture teaches. That must come home to each heart in its own way and through its own channels. The technical quality of the film is superb, leaving nothing to be desired.

THE HAND ORGAN MAN (Kalem).

An attractive melodrama built around a hand organ man, a real one, too, not a madeup man, who performs a thrilling rescue and secures the everlasting gratitude of the family whom he assists. So far as the story is concerned it is not different from similar stories which have been told before. But the novelty of introducing a hand organ man to assist in working out the plot has merit, and the scenes connected with his characterization of the part are, perhaps, the most interesting of the picture. Thrilling rescues of stolen persons are always good. The audience likes such exhibitions of nerve and bravery and will applaud them vigorously. The company is improving steadily in its technical work. The photography here is a distinct improvement over many films which have gone before and the whole picture is satisfactory. It deserves the warm praise which has been bestowed upon it in numerous instances.

"RED WING'S GRATITUDE" (Vitagraph).

An Indian picture of unusual interest because the leading roles are assumed by real Indians, who direct all the movements, Indian fashion. They wear their clothes Indian fashion, and they are made by Indians, ensuring correctness in every detail. Red Wing is an Indian girl who is brutally treated by her father. He is driven away by some emigrants when abusing her, and in retaliation carries away one of the little emigrant girls to be tortured. Red Wing takes her in a canoe down the river. Then comes an exciting pursuit, in which Red Wing is mortally wounded, but lives long enough to see the white child in the hands of her friends and the Indians beaten off. It is an exciting Western story, brimful of action and carrying conviction. The setting is in a series of beautiful landscapes, well worth seeing. One point was noted which represents the care exercised in working out the details. Where one paddle is used in the canoe the Indians paddle only on one side, instead of changing from side to side. The photography is excellent and the action lively enough to suit the most excitable lover of melodrama.

FOOLS OF FATE (Biograph).

In some respects this picture will be considered the strongest of the week. While the story itself is no different from many other stories of a similar character, still the excellence of the acting and the action itself combine with the suggestions aroused by the story as it passes before one, to create impressions that cannot be effaced. It is, perhaps, not uncommon for a woman to become discontented with her lot and desire to change, even to running away with another man. They have done it since the dawn of the world. They will probably do it until the end. But here is suggested that control of Fate, the impulses and unseen influences which lead or urge one forward, as the case may be, and frequently the individual is powerless to help it. The effect in this instance is realistic and the working out of the plot in the hands of these capable players is effective enough to cause one to pause and search his own consciousness for some indication of wrongdoing or illicit possibilities which may be manifested to a greater or less degree in his own desires and wishes. Perhaps this film represents one of the most powerful, yet subtle, influences of the motion picture. When anything is so graphically represented that it causes one to pause for even a moment and scrutinize his own tendencies it has accomplished much and deserves encouragement. Unquestionably we are all to some extent fools of fate, and whether we know it or not Clothos is spinning the threads of our lives and Lachesis is designing the webs, both doing their work beyond our consciousness, and in most instances beyond our wills. Then when Atropos suddenly severs the threads and we discover what we have done we are often even more astonished than the world around us. The one who looks beneath the surface of this picture and grasps its meaning will sympathize with the young widow as she mourns alone over the dead body of her husband, dead by his own hand, because she, thoughtlessly and almost unconsciously, followed the thread as it was unwound by Clothos.

"THE TRAPPERS" (Pathe).

Beautiful photography and picturesque scenery are combined to tell a story of jealousy, which results in the serious wounding of one man and the death of another. The action is very spirited, with gun play, kidnapping, the escape of a wounded man, and his rescue from death by his son who shoots a man dead just as he is about to kill his father. There are plenty of thrills, some good acting and very good pictorial effect to make it all interesting. The film is very tastefully colored.

"THE PET OF BIG HORN RANCH" (Selig).

One may enjoy to the full the Western pictures released by this firm, feeling sure that they are carefully staged with details well worked out and plenty of human action to add zest to the pictures. Selig's players have studied carefully the life they depict and when one looks at their product he sees a reproduction of scenes which might actually occur. In this picture the audience is treated to a combination of love for a horse and a gang of rustlers, as they are called, who steal a horse and not a girl, an exhibition of self-restraint which is gratifying. And then comes big Tom, desperately in love with the ranchman's pretty daughter, who owns the stolen horse, setting out alone, determined to secure the horse or die. He comes near dying, but his friends save him and all return triumphant with the horse. Tom finds his tongue and he and Stella talk it over, with the recovered horse as witness. This picture should be interesting for two reasons. One is not forced to see a pretty and delicate girl struggling in the clutches of a gang of ruffians, and there is no jealousy represented. But everyone will admit that these two omissions do not detract from the interest of the picture, and they certainly make it pleasanter to look at.

"THE LITTLE TEACHER" (Biograph).

To faithfully depict the interior workings of an old-time country school is a task which has its difficulties, but the Biograph Company has accomplished it as successfully as they have accomplished other difficult feats of the silent drama. This representation of a country school in operation is true to the originals, most of which have disappeared forever. And here is that representation of the first day when the pupils seldom attempted to conceal their contempt for the teacher, especially if, as in this instance, the individual happened to be small and youthful. There was the big bully who determined to make trouble in the school and succeeded, only to be soundly thrashed by an athletic surveyor who assumed the role of protector of the discouraged little teacher. Then the teacher falls in love with the surveyor, only to be disappointed when introduced to his wife. But instead of her being long left despondent, the honest love of Dave, the former bully, comes in to afford a balm for her heart, and she accepts his advances. Even though this sounds commonplace, the working out of the plot, with the glimpses of the old-fashioned school, are really extremely interesting, and for those who have never seen such a school it is a novelty worth more than ordinary attention. The staging and accessories are all worked out with the Biograph's consummate skill. The photography is clear and even the interiors are distinctly rendered. At Keith & Proctor's Bijou Dream, where we saw the film, it was loudly applauded and evidently caught the public fancy.

"Papa's Honeymoon" (Lubin).—Honeymoons are usually trying times for newly married couples, but when a widower, with two devilish youngsters, takes a honeymoon there is certain to be trouble. And there was trouble in this particular instance. All sorts of things happen to the newlyweds as a result of the machinations of the boys. The difficulties finally end with the discovery of the source of the disturbance. What the boys got put them in condition to require cushions. Still they might say with considerable truth that the fun was worth the licking. As usual, Lubin makes the audience laugh.

"Out for the Day" (Lubin).—Whether the outing here pictured is representative of the average is a matter which must be decided by each person for himself; but, however that may be, a good deal of human nature is worked into this picture and a good deal of fun is intermingled. Still, one must be permitted to believe that the picture is exaggerated for the purpose of raising a laugh. The action is sufficient to please the most exacting in that respect, and no one need complain of the technical quality.

"The North Pole Craze" (Phoenix Film Company).—A good many will sympathize with the sound drubbings the two North Pole controversialists get in urging the claims of Cook and Peary. And the fact that they are soundly punished in a number of instances will be received with a good deal of satisfaction, and many will devoutly wish that the same treatment could be accorded many another who is constantly thrusting the claims of one or the other explorer into the conversation with his friends. That they land in the violent ward of an insane asylum is no surprise. Nearly everyone will feel that they got their deserts, and incidentally they indicate in some degree what it all amounts to. The acting and the action are both alive. While this film is listed as comedy, it contains an exhibition of more than the usual development of human nature.

"A Child's Plea" (Phoenix Film Company).—The dramatic quality of this picture is not questioned, but probably many will not agree with the advisability of picturing a street car accident in which a motorman drives a car over his own child, maiming her for life. The motion picture is too realistic for such scenes. They are not amusing. Neither are they educative, and the dramatic ability required could be better utilized in some other play. The only scene in this film which can be commended is the one in the court room when the child's plea saves her father from the consequences of the accident. The reproductions of accidents and horrors should not be encouraged. They tend to create a morbid sentiment which is neither healthful nor desirable.

"Convicting Evidence" (Gaumont).—Here come in quick succession the forcible separation of two lovers, the introduction of an objectionable man, whose offer of marriage is refused, a murder, followed by a false accusation and a case of insanity as a result of unjust imprisonment. The discovery of the murderer's watch in the dead girl's hand starts a train of events which restores everything to its rightful condition, excepting, of course, the dead girl. As has been done many times before, why is all this gloom and difficulty necessary? Who is benefited? Does dramatic art require such a depressing list for its successful development? Some pleasanter subject might be selected. The artists would have quite as favorable an opportunity for their work and the audience would be amused, not depressed.

"How He Earned His Medal" (Gaumont).—The discovery of a medal lost by someone causes a self-sufficient individual to undertake a series of attempts to prove himself a hero. always with the result that he interferes with someone else. For this he gets a number of savage pummelings, and believing he has received enough to entitle him to be called a hero he pins the medal on his coat and wears it proudly as evidence of his prowess in bearing up under severe affliction of this character.

"Love and Sacrifice" (Cines).—One of those pictures which tell the story of a girl loved by two men, one of whom must give her up, and instead of being a man and searching for another girl, he follows her around like a whipped dog, doing all sorts of foolish stunts to show his puppy love. They have a habit of making that sort of film abroad. There may be deep and true love depicted in a sacrifice of this sort, but no man, no matter how deeply he might feel, would follow his former sweetheart to her wedding and dog her steps like a cur. If this is the type of men with whom women have to deal in foreign countries it is small wonder they have numerous lovers. The acting is sickening in places, yet possibly it tells to some a heart story which has its influence. The photography is fair, but is susceptible of improvement. The printer has apparently done as well as possible with a poor negative.

"A Hot Time in a Cold Quarter" (Unmarked).—The manufacturer hid his identity in this picture, though he had no reason to do so. It is a bit of boys' play, to be sure, but is snowballing and rough house in the snow and is in no wise objectionable. The probability is that a larger proportion of the audiences who see this picture will enjoy it. The crowd of boys who constitute the central figures in the film are healthy youngsters doing things quite like actual boys in the street. The photographer needs to jack up his machine a bit. Even though it is an outdoor picture the technical quality is poor. The printer did as well as he could, but he was unable to compensate for all the shortcomings in the original film.

"Glass Blowing" (Edison).—A representation of one of the oldest industries in the world. It is always interesting, this wonderful manipulation of so fragile a thing as glass. Some have seen it done. Many others have never had, and probably never will have, the opportunity. It will serve admirably to see this picture, which reproduces the scenes so graphically that one obtains a satisfactory idea of the operations and processes required in blowing glass.

"A Wedding Party in Luna Park" (Gaumont).—Here is reproduced all the action and glamor which overspread the great amusement institutions called parks, located near the great cities. Very many never have and never will see them. They can look at this picture and obtain a fair idea of what these amusement places are like. They cannot be described and no histrionic ability is depicted in a reproduction of pictures of this character. Yet, because they are full of actual life, because they represent what real people are doing, they hold the interest of every audience fortunate enough to see them.

"The Sleuth and the Wig" (Gaumont).—A bit of comedy which is told around a lost wig, leading to the arrest of an innocent man and the near arrest of a police officer, but closing with nothing worse than a good thrashing which an irate woman administers to her unfortunate husband. There are some humorous features in the picture, but it is only commonplace in its development of humorous situations.

"Sister Angelica" (Pathe).—A beautifully acted and colored film recounting a legend of a nun who wanted to go to the side of her former lover, lying almost dead upon a battlefield, but was refused by the Mother Superior. Praying before the image of the Virgin she is surprised to have the Holy Mother step down, assuming the nun's place in the cloister and urging her to go to the bedside of the dying man. It is impossible to describe the acting in this picture, yet perhaps none that the Pathes have heretofore produced has depicted the wondrous idea of mother love so forcibly or has so clearly represented the real influence of the Virgin upon the church. It is a manifestation of the mother spirit, the one love which sways all mankind alike, no matter what creed or race they represent. The mother love is the great theme here and around it has been woven this tender story. No person can see it without being made better. No one can see it without understanding more clearly what the mother love means.

"How Jack Helped His Little Sister" (Pathe).—A story of childhood which will appeal to children. There is the element of childish helpfulness and sympathy which will appeal directly to the little people, and then the work of Jack in charming back the birds which have escaped from Margaret will please by its novelty. It is a beautiful film technically and the novel work of Jack will make it popular.

"Anti-Fat Sanitarium" (Pathe).—A comedy which develops a number of amusing situations during the training of two women to reduce their surplus flesh. And when the man who has advertised for a bride comes to claim her and she discovers that he is as fat as she used to be she turns upon him and kicks him out.

"Dog Pickpocket" (Pathe).—Everybody enjoys seeing a dog do unusual tricks. In this instance a dog has been trained in the highly genteel art of picking pockets and he performs his work very creditably. Only in this degree is the film interesting, in that it shows an animal doing something unusual.

"For Her Sake" (Vitagraph).—A melodrama from the Vitagraph studio, with accompanying details of unyielding jealousy, business failure, shipwreck and the reunion of friends who have been separated for many years by reason of the jealousy. It is unnecessary to repeat the story. It is the same that has often been told where friends quarrel over a woman and where there is much to be forgiven and forgotten when finally the men renew their friendship following a wreck in which one is badly injured. And then the home coming, and the reunion of all in the home after the unexpected return. It is all here and there is much more that adds to the effectiveness. The action and the acting are alike satisfactory and the thrill of pleasure when the difficulties are amicably settled is sufficient to be noticeable in the audience. The technical work is in harmony with the reputation of the company and the whole picture will undoubtedly prove very popular with the people.

"Forgiven at Last" (Raleigh & Robert).—A picture of some dramatic quality, dealing with the old question of a runaway match, but doing it in a somewhat different way. Instead of the man turning out to be a scoundrel, as is usually the case in such pictures, he is represented as a desirable fellow and comes back and adds his pleading to that of the girl to secure the old man's forgiveness. Aside from this novelty in the working out of the story the picture is not above the average. The acting may be characterized as good, though it has weak places and places where it is overdone rather than otherwise. But it tells a story in a reasonably attractive manner, and in that degree, at least, is of interest to the audiences who see it. The photography is poor and the printer did not get all he might out of a somewhat underexposed negative, consequently the technical quality is rather unsatisfactory.

"The Princess of the Sea" (Gaumont).—A fairy drama which strongly emphasizes the beauty of the sea and coast and the romance of old castles. A prince becomes enamoured of a princess of the sea, marries her and takes her to live in his old castle, but she tires of it and induces him to go with her to the enchanted regions below, where fairy beauties enthrall the senses, and the glories of indescribable marvels hold one in their embrace. The train of richly robed knights and ladies, the grandeur of old castles and the picturesque beauty of sea and shore combine to form a stage setting as unusual as it is attractive. The photography is perfect and no criticism can be made of the acting.

"The Liquid Air" (Gaumont).—A trick film in which air is liquefied at a very low temperature, and the inventor succeeds in freezing everything within reach. A film of this type has little reason for its existence, yet as a variation in an otherwise heavy programme it has its use and forms a not unpleasant break in the monotony of a long list of drama and gloom.

"The Stolen Wireless" (G. Melies).—A war drama which develops some phases of modern warfare in the suggestion of wireless telegraphy. The love story woven into it is based upon the usual jealousy of one man because she accepts another, and there is a complication of charges of traitor and the death of the false accuser by a shot from a sharpshooter's rifle. A battle occurs, the lover is wounded. His fiancee, now a nurse, finds him unconscious and succeeds in restoring him to health again. The inevitable wedding follows. If any more exciting and not unpleasant action could be crowded into one picture the producer deserves a special certificate for good work, faithfully performed. This film will be popular. It contains just the kind of action and is based upon just the kind of plot a majority of motion picture audiences delight in, and they testify to their appreciation by close attention throughout and applause at the end. A good war drama of this sort stirs the blood in a healthy way and serves to arouse an audience that may have become partially indifferent because of the monotony of previous pictures.

"A Lucky Husband" (Pathe).—A variation of the dissatisfied wife and lover episode which seems to be such a common feature in French contemporary life, with a dream introduced as a deterrent influence in deciding the young wife not to keep an engagement. The elderly husband is lucky, presumably, because his young, and apparently dissatisfied, wife is a victim of the dreaming habit.

"A Wonderful Remedy" (Pathe).—The story of a learned professor who discovers a remedy that will transform the ugliest face into one of beauty. Complications arise through the theft of the lotion, their pursuit by the professor who gives them something that transforms men into baboons, whereat the enraged populace rise and administer a sound drubbing. Transformations are always interesting, and these are to some extent, but the film otherwise has little attractiveness.

"A Change of Heart" (Biograph).—The deception of country girls by unprincipled young men is all too common, and perhaps the ruthlessness of this species of cruelty has never been more graphically portrayed than has been done in this motion picture. It is the same old story, the moth and the light, if you will, because these young men dazzle and blind like a light, and the simple trustfulness of the unsophisticated maiden. The fake marriage is performed, but the boastfulness of the young man's companions frighten the girl and she flees. Then the profligate's mother suddenly appears and takes him in hand. The result is a change of heart. The young man picks up the girl, has a real ceremony performed, then they go on to her home, and her people believe it is all a mistake. Not all such nefarious work ends so happily, and the Biograph people are to be commended for their restraint in this respect. Staging and acting are alike up to the Biograph standard, and the old subject looks fresh under the company's vigorous treatment. The succession of picturesque rural scenes are alone worth seeing, even though the story is a repetition of a time-worn subject.

"'Sandy,' the Poacher" (Lubin).—The game laws of Scotland afford a basis for this picture, which is more interesting for its scenic beauties than for the story it tells. Apparently poachers have a common habit of loving game wardens' daughters, which, perhaps, is not to be wondered at, since they are nearly always pretty and vivacious. But it is difficult to understand why there is always a jealous rival in the field. But however that may be, the fact remains that the game warden is killed, Sandy is accused of the crime by the jealous rival; but Sandy had befriended an unfortunate old woman, who saw the actual occurrence. She comes forward and untangles the snarled threads, Sandy goes free and presumably marries the pretty daughter, while the unconscionable villain is probably incarcerated in a deep, dark dungeon. Melodramatic action compensates for the lack of actual dramatic merit. The poacher gets the girl he wants, and the god of love is vindicated yet again in the Scottish game preserves. But it is the technical excellence of this picture that we wish to praise, also the masterly handling of the subject up to the last scene, which ends too abruptly and confusedly. We have regretted Lubin dramas because they deprived us of the needful supply of comedy. But if he can keep his dramas up to the standard of excellence in this picture, let them come, and let others rest on their dramatic laurels and take up the less exacting line of comedy.

"Lost in Siberia" (Selig).—Strong in its suggestions, and strong in some of its scenes, this picture represents a departure from the producer's usual work, but it is none the less successful. The anarchistic scene of the bomb-throwing, the harrowing scenes on the long, weary march across the frozen steppes; the sulphur mines, the escape and pursuit by wolves and the timely rescue by the party of Americans, make a series of melodramatic scenes which hold one's attention. The picture gives an idea of Russian prison life and the sufferings of Siberian exiles sufficiently emphatic to impress the most careless or indifferent with the horrors of prison life in that unhappy country. Technically it is not up to the Selig standard, and the final scene is so unconvincing it might have been omitted to advantage.

Coming Headliners.

BRITON AND BOER (Selig).

It was inevitable that sooner or later the war in South Africa between the British and Boers should offer a choice of subjects for the moving picture maker. It was equally inevitable that Selig should make choice of one of those subjects for a moving picture. It is a case of the opportunity and the man, and Seligs, it should be said, are probably the best equipped moving picture makers in the world for handling such a fine theme. They have the space at Chicago for staging large open-air scenes; they have the grandiose idea in film making; they have the enterprise; they have the necessary resident producing ability and command of all the resources in the way of actors, uniforms, arms and outdoor scenic effects.

When we were in Chicago a few months ago, we noticed two great guns that were to be used in the coming headliner that forms the subject of this notice. These were guns of the "Long Tom" variety which were used in the historic relief of Ladysmith. Hence, it will be seen that this picture has been many months in preparation.

The Boer War was full of highly dramatic incidents. Time after time it looked as though the British could not possibly win. As the British generally do, they started badly and all the world seemed to expect the final discomfiture of the British arms. Then Generals Roberts and Kitchener went out from England and sat down for a month to work out the plan of campaign. It was a month of silence and expectancy. Then the campaign was put into action. A solid steel ring, as it were, was flung over the whole of South Africa. Slowly, gradually, but certainly this ring closed in and notwithstanding the temporary setbacks, sieges, and all the phenomenal gallantry of a brave little nation, the issue of the Boer War was never for a moment in doubt when Kitchener and Roberts got to work with their plan of campaign. The final act of the tragedy was when Roberts got the remnants of the Boer army under Cronje in a trap at Pardeberg, and had them shot down like rats in a trap, until the white flag of truce went up and the Boer War was at an end. The Boer War had ended in the only possible way that it could end: by the success of the British—a feature which ignorant American writers had left out of calculation.

It will be seen, therefore, that in the three years of campaigning in South Africa many incidents occurred for delineation on the moving picture film. We saw thousands of stationary photographs of the contest, but never a moving picture, and the time is now ripe for the production of such a photograph. Selig shows battery after battery in action; the storming of kopjes; Roberts and Cronje at work; the uses of smokeless powder and other features of the war. Reliable data have been available to make the pictures of the various scenes, which are sure to be typical of the martial ardor of the Boer and British nations. For the Boers were brave fighters; they were never disgraced and they taught their conquerors a lesson which has not been lost, for to-day in England the mere schoolboy is taught the use of the rifle. Thus the Boer War, tragic though it was, has produced good; for South Africa is now pacified and united and both sides look back to the contest with feelings of pride and satisfaction.

Such a subject as this, treated in the magnificently spectacular Selig fashion, will no doubt result in the production of a film that will be enormously popular in the moving picture theaters all over the world.

THE GIRL SCOUT (Kalem).

Pursuing their well-known policy of imparting local color to their pictures by the obvious plan of going to the scenes they wish to illustrate with their camera and taking their own stock company with them, the Kalem Company have recently chosen Canada as a field for making moving pictures. Their releases of October 29 and November 5 will show the kind of work they have produced. The subject to be brought before the public on the first named date, though made in Canada, deals with an incident of the Boer War. Nevertheless, it has local color of the best kind in that it has enlisted the services of a number of Canadian soldiers who fought in South Africa, assuring that the uniforms, the accoutrements, the make-up of the Boers, the veldt-like scenery, the kopjes and the other aspects of the theater of war were chosen by men having first hand knowledge of the originals. In other words, every care was taken to assure accuracy by employing recognized authorities on the subject. The story deals with a series of incidents commencing with the rising of the Boers to repel the invader and the final victory of the Canadian soldiers in the local warfare in which they happened to engage. Concurrently a human interest is interwoven, for a Boer girl who becomes a scout and is made captive finally becomes the lover and the bride of one of her captors. This touch will redeem the film from a surcease of merely military happening. The film shows war in one of its least repulsive aspects. Both sides are brave fighters, and there is little of the horror and carnage of the conflict to affright an audience. The film is full of action, and the girl scout particularly attracted us by the thoroughgoing manner in which she did her work. Photographically the picture is full of pictorial quality and richness of developed image. We shall be interested to learn how a Boer subject fares with the American public. In Canada, of course, there is no doubt of its great success.

THE RED DOMINO (Great Northern).

This is the story of how a beautiful woman was foiled in a cleverly concocted scheme of revenge. She is a countess, and the would-be victim a prince, and as the intrigue is carried on amidst all the surroundings of a court, it will be seen that the producer had many opportunities for a great spectacular display, of which he has taken full advantage; and then the photographic colorist has done some excellent work on the film; and these elements, combined with the usual Great Northern high standard of acting, have helped to produce a story full of action, excitement and adventure. We are rather curious to know the source of the story, for the synopsis is silent on the point. It looks like Anthony Hope or Stanley Weyman, both of whom are fond of dealing with court life adventures in imaginary kingdoms and principalities. The charming countess is burning with revenge against the prince, who exiled her lover. So she plots to poison the prince. But one of the latter's friends, a young baron, overhears the plot and dogs the footsteps of the revengeful countess in her poisoning schemes. At a ball, disguised in a red domino, the young baron shadows the countess. Although he is detected, bound and gagged, he escapes and gets on the track of the countess again. At the very moment when the countess, in amorous dalliance with the prince, is about to kill him with poisoned champagne, the baron appears and defeats her. Revolver in hand, he unmasks the conspirators, who are marched off by the police. The prince thus escapes and the wicked countess is foiled.

Viewed as an illustration of court life and intrigue, the film will doubtless please many moving picture audiences in this country. As we have said, there is plenty of life, movement and color in the picture; the acting and the photography are good, and altogether the "Red Domino" as a production is fully up to the standard of Great Northern films.

DOINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

After a very dull Summer season, Philadelphia reopened the closed theaters and added a few new ones with much hope in a good Fall and Winter business. Many of the exchanges and exhibitors are asking themselves what the State and municipal authorities are going to do. Although we know that the laws enacted by the last Legislature worked much hardship on the country exhibitors, the fire in Pittsburg seems to confirm that said laws are an absolute necessity for the safety of the public.

In his last orders to his men, the Chief Factory Inspector of Pennsylvania says: "Turn a deaf ear to those who plead poverty or economy as an excuse for their wishing to substitute cheap and dangerous booths for those called for in the law. A person who is too poor or too mean to provide a safe booth should not engage in the moving picture business."

In other words, the honest and careful exhibitors, who have done their best to insure safety, have been made to suffer for the cheap class of exhibitors, who scrimp on everything, to add a few dollars to their bank account.

I will not be surprised if the next Legislature of Pennsylvania adds still more hardship on the exhibitors, by compelling them to employ only licensed help—men recommended by the State. Such a law is coming, as some of the Pennsylvania exhibitors employ the poorest and cheapest help. One exhibitor has for an operator a mere boy in short pants, and his ushers are boys. In case of a fire, this operator and those ushers would be the first ones to run away, to create a panic, and the very last ones to offer the proper assistance.

I must add that the exhibitor who is employing such poor help does it for one reason, viz.: Those boys are willing to obey the orders of the boss; they think it is great fun to do spy work for the boss; they are very willing to sneak around to find out how many tickets are sold by competitors; to find out what is doing at the other show places; to find out if they pay their rent, their electric bills, etc.

We know that honest courage and hypocrisy do not work hand in hand. The man with a noble heart, ready to face real danger to save a life, is not the man who can spy on his neighbor; his sentiments are too high to be a traitor. The exhibitor in question knows well that if he had real good men to work for him, they would rather leave him than do his spy work, and for this reason he employs mere boys. Is it safe? No. You want men with cool heads and much presence of mind to control a possible panic, and even with strength to stop panic-stricken men from trampling over women and children.

The moving picture sensation of Philadelphia is the opening of the new Victoria Palace. This is a new addition to the already numerous palaces on Market street, and certainly Philadelphia is far ahead. We can claim our Great White Way, but what is it? A few fine buildings with a lot of electric advertising signs. Market street of Philadelphia shows us some marvels in architecture, and the thousands of electric bulbs, decorating the show places, are not letters to advertise a certain brand of whiskey or a new skirt. With all these palaces and the great department stores, Market street of Philadelphia is without any doubt the greatest shopping avenue of the United States. Evidently we have no roses without thorns, and the great beauties of the large department stores and of the moving picture palaces are marred by the deplorable condition of the street. Visitors leaving the great Wanamaker store to go to Lubin palace are forced to wade in pools of mud and sprain ankles in deep holes. If the buildings of Market street, Philadelphia, make it the finest shopping avenue, the condition of the street makes it worse than a dirty country road.

It is said that no expenses have been spared to make the new Victoria Theater the handsomest and best equipped moving picture place in the country. Everything has been studied for the comfort of the visitors.

The Hit of the Season

Come to the Electrical Show

at Madison Square Garden, between October 11th and 21st and watch the Moving Picture combination you have been looking for--

HALLBERG
Electric Economizers

for all circuits, for moving picture as well as incandescent lamps; saving 60 to 90 per cent. on the electric current bills. Designed and made by an Electrical Expert.

MOTIOGRAPH

The Flickerless Motion Picture Machine. Giving about 25 per cent. longer exposure on the screen than any other machine, because of the patented dissolving shutter. Designed and built by Moving Picture and Optical Experts.

ELECTRA
PINK LABEL CARBONS

Giving a steady brilliant white light on the screen, which have never had a rival that you would notice. Made by the Greatest Carbon Experts in the world.

HALLBERG SPECIALTIES

including Spot Lights, with color wheels; 4000 candlepower Flaming Arc Lamps, Exhaust Fans, Asbestos Covered Cable, Terminal Connectors, Tungsten Lamps and other necessary supplies for theatres and moving picture men.

Come to the Electrical Show

and see all of these things. If you cannot come, send for my free booklet No. 5W--It tells you all about it. My goods are the best, and my prices are right.

Every Moving Picture Operator

who presents his license card personally at this office, will receive free tickets to this great show, which would otherwise cost him 50 cents each at the door.

J. H. Hallberg, 28 GREENWICH AVENUE, NEW YORK

JUST TO REMIND Y

FILM IMPORT & T

127 East Twenty-thi

In our previous announcements we said that under our contract with Raleigh and Robert of Paris, we hold the exclusive American agency of the following European manufacturers.

ADOLFO CROCE, MILAN
AMBROSIO, ITALY
AQUILA, TURIN
BUTCHER, ENGLAND
COMERIO, MILANO
DEUTSCHE, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE BIOSCOP, BERLIN
DEUTSCHE VEATASCOPE, BERLIN
DUSKES, BERLIN
ECLAIR, PARIS
GERMANIA, GERMANY
HISPANO, BARCELONA
ITALA, ITALY
LE LION, PARIS
LUX, PARIS
MEESTER, BERLIN
PASQUALI, TURIN
PEGLI, ITALY
PINESCHI, ROME
RALEIGH & ROBERT, PARIS
STELLA, PARIS
WARWICK TRADING CO., ENGLAND
WELT KINEMATOGRAPH, FREIBURG
VESUVIO, NAPLES AND OTHERS

That our representative in Paris, would personally select every reel which we will release. thereby assuring you only the very best in Motion Pictures.

That all releases will be billed by us exactly to measure, thus removing an abuse that has existed in the Moving Picture trade for some time past.

We guarantee every one of these statements to be positive truths and time will prove them. The goods which we announce for our first release, November 2nd, are arriving every day and if you, Mr. Exchange; or you, Mr. Exhibitor, are desirous of satisfying yourselves that we have just what

Don't Be With

Write us for any

FILM IMPORT & T

127 EAST TWENTY-THIRD STREE

OU—THINK IT OVER

RADING COMPANY

d Street, New York

we claim to have, we invite you to our offices, where we have the most elegantly equipped exhibition-room in the country, and we will take great pleasure in exhibiting on the screen these wonderful subjects fresh from the box, and from the feature lists of European manufacturers--regardless of all Proclamations to the contrary.

We are not interested in the claims of others--We have the actual goods and—our word for it—every reel is what we claim them to be Selected World Beaters

We also control exclusively the Centaur productions and their usual high standard obtains in our next shipment from New York, October 20th.

Almost A Suicide—Comedy

Approx. Length, 340 Feet

The Purse—Dramatic

Approx. Length, 650 Feet

Mr. Exhibitor, if you have not been showing Centaur pictures, insist that your exchange supply them. They are just what you need to tone up your show.

out a Centaur formation desired

RADING COMPANY

= = = = = = NEW YORK

The opening of so many new palaces does not seem to worry the managers of smaller places; they seem to say that there is still room for others. We must say that Philadelphians seem to enjoy moving pictures, and as all the places on Market street are well managed, they seem to be prosperous. Philadelphia is conservative, and in motion pictures it is a quality. Market street has not adopted the foolish notion of some of our New York places, showing extra long programs for the object of killing the competitors. "The Family" shows two reels and one song. In New York such a program would mean a flat failure to the manager. It is not a failure to the Family Theater, as the house is doing a very good business and the visitors, entirely satisfied with two reels of good pictures, are tempted and have time to visit a couple of other places. The Family Theater is well named, as it is a real family rendezvous for mothers and children. Ladies do not need to look at the boards; they know that Mr. Bradfield, the manager, will not show questionable pictures; they know that everything is neat and clean. Mr. Bradfield believes in the uniform. His ushers wear a neat, quiet uniform, and he himself wears the uniform. Appearance means a good deal, and when you see, in front of a place, the manager, in loud clothes, with a cigar stump in his mouth or spitting tobacco juice in front of the ticket box, ladies are not tempted to enter the place. The Family Theater is a proof that lovers of good pictures are not asking for vaudeville acts, and if, all over the country, the exhibitors had followed the policy of the Family Theater of Philadelphia, instead of killing each other by showing too many reels and too many vaudeville acts, the business would be far better.

Good pictures will always pay. Trenton, N. J., had a bad scare with the State Street Theater, but to-day, although the said State Street Theater is still running very long shows of many reels and many vaudeville acts, the different moving picture shows of Broad and State streets are satisfied with the business. The cheap classes who want a lot for their money flock to the State Street Theater, where they see some poor vaudeville acts and old junk moving pictures; they have plenty for their money. The better classes, looking for the quality and not the quantity, patronize the other moving picture theaters. The Star Theater of Trenton, which had been tempted to put in a stage and give vaudeville acts, to meet the competition of the State Street Theater, has abandoned the idea, and the manager claims that his business is better since he returned to moving pictures and abandoned the vaudeville.

A new feature of the new Victoria Palace of Philadelphia will be the perfected Lubin's synchronizer, giving the most accurate talking moving pictures.

The non-inflammable film is giving lots of trouble to the exchanges and the exhibitors of Pennsylvania. The new product means a dead loss to the exchanges, as after three weeks the films are ruined. One exchange told me that the Motion Picture Patents Company does not need to stipulate that films have to be returned in seven months, as after three weeks the films are ruined. Some of the manufacturers offer to help the exchanges by sending them duplicate copies at half-price, but this is no remedy for the difficulty, as it is adding to the original cost of the film, bringing the cost to some 15 cents per foot.

If the licensed exchanges and exhibitors have much trouble with the non-inflammable film, the independent exhibitors are offered a genuine treat by the Eagle Film Exchange, which is now securing some of the very finest foreign productions. The manager showed me some of these headliners and it was a great treat. "Don Carlos," by Cines, is what can be called a film d'art. "Theodora" is another master production from an Italian manufacturer. The Eagle Film Exchange has another little surprise for its numerous patrons, as they propose entering the manufacturing field. Geo. Graff retires from the renting field to manufacture films. A well-equipped studio and factory are now in course of construction and it will not be long before the independents will count a new manufacturer. We wish the best success to our friend Graff, if he sticks to his original plan of producing only first-class pictures, depicting scenes of daily occurrence, good sound moral lessons, and leaving aside the highly sensational thrills, which have been so much in vogue and have done more than anything else to ruin the business. J. B.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Edward Fay & Son have posted plans for a moving picture theater on Germantown avenue for G. F. Stumfig.

Philadelphia, Pa.—John Kirby has been awarded the contract for the erection of a moving picture theater, on Cumberland street, for Geo. Alexander.

AMONG THE CHICAGO THEATERS.

By F. H. Richardson.

Finding myself in the vicinity of North avenue a few nights since, I proceeded to investigate a few of the houses on that exceedingly lively street. North avenue is what is commonly termed a "live wire," being one of the most enterprising business streets north of the river. At Nos. 659-661 the Orchard Theater Company, a new corporation, which contemplates the erection of several high-class moving picture theaters in the near future, is erecting a $35,000 house in which illustrated songs and high-grade moving pictures will be the entire bill. The new theater will seat 500 and will be equipped with the finest operating room equipment money can procure. The manager assured me that none but the best pictures would be run, regardless of what they might cost; in other words, money would not be spared in procuring absolutely the best. The house will open about October 15, though the date is not yet definitely set.

* * *

The writer encountered some surprises on North avenue. At No. 617, attracted by the charming front of the "Janett" Theater, he entered, being greeted by Manager Harry Hyman, who is enthusiastic over the house, show and everything connected therewith; and really Mr. Hyman had just cause to feel proud. The writer has seldom or never seen a more thoroughly equipped and beautiful house than is the Janett. It is one of the few houses in which I have found absolutely nothing to criticise. The ushers are in uniform, attentive and polite. Ladies are required, absolutely, to remove their hats. The floor has a heavy slope; the wall decorations are artistic, consisting of panels bordered by plastic scrolls, the whole painted in soft, harmonizing hues. The stage has nothing but metal and asbestos scenery and is supplied with hot and cold water, as is also the operating room, which is a model. The bill consists of two doubles and one single of vaudeville and two reels of film. The projection light was very fine and was well handled by Operator Sullivan. One unique feature of the house is its exterior. One side and the rear faces an alley, and the whole of these two walls are of white enameled brick clear to the roof. The audience seemed well pleased with the show, which lasted one hour. All in all, for a house of its size the Janett is a model and does distinct credit to the moving picture amusement business and its designer and manager, Mr. Hyman.

* * *

Just off North avenue, on Larrabee street, is the Ideal Theater, managed by Mr. George J. Gilmore, formerly connected with the Show World, who comes of a family for years connected with the circus and show business. It was here the writer received a distinct surprise, amounting almost to a shock. Passing in at a very moderately illuminated entrance near the rear of a building, he climbed a zigzag stair, ornamented by some rather tawdry wall decorations, to the third floor. At the head of the third flight he found an auditorium, seating nearly six hundred, packed full of people viewing an exclusively moving picture and illustrated song program. There was a small balcony, and the floor of the main room was flat, or nearly so. The pictures were very well put on, but decidedly not as well as they might be, for the illumination was not at all brilliant and there was considerable vibration which might and might not have been the fault of the machine, but probably was. The hall was decorated in a very moderate and not especially pleasing way. Yet the fact remained that Manager Gilmore was and is doing a land office business. Now, what the secret is the writer does not pretend to say, but the business done by this house, under all the circumstances, location, etc., considered, is nothing short of phenomenal and speaks volumes for the ability of its manager. In justice to the operator let it be said that I had time to view only one film. The faults I have spoken of may possibly have been in the film itself, though I hardly think so. It is of interest that a manager, however able, can and is making a five-cent theater pay, and pay well, two floors above the street, with an entrance very poorly located.

* * *

I dropped in at the Glamour Theater, Wentworth avenue and Sixty-third street, the other night and enjoyed an excellent program of moving pictures and illustrated songs. This house started as a ten-cent vaudeville, moving picture, but was not a success. It reduced the price to five cents and cut out the vaudeville, since which it has done capacity business. Miss Gladys Mills rendered the songs, which apparently pleased the audience. Miss Mills has an excellent voice and engaging personality. The slides were clean and well handled. In fact, Mr. Wm. Smith, the operator, did his work well all through. A mercury arc rectifier is used here and has given entire satisfaction. The light is clear and strong. Mr. John Miller, the manager, spoke highly of its performance. The Glamour has a floor slope of one inch to each foot. The floor is of cement and altogether the house is a beauty.

* * *

I'm afraid the end of the day of the Chicago store-room theater draweth nigh. Beautiful new houses seating from five hundred to a thousand are going up all over the city. They can, of course, give more for the money than can the small place with its limited seating capacity. These new theaters are almost without exception well patronized and it is really wonderful what a strong bill they put up for a nickel or a dime. Most of them are ten cents; some ten, twenty and thirty.

NOTES FROM OHIO.

By W. C. Kunzmann.

The Orpheum Theater, under the management of Chas. Peckman, located on East Ninth street, Cleveland, Ohio, was opened to the public Monday, October 11, with eight high class vaudeville acts and up-to-date moving pictures. This theater is without doubt one of the most up-to-date houses with a seating capacity of 800 in Ohio. The price of admission will be 10 and 20 cents, box seats 25 cents.

The Chic Theater, located on St. Clair and Fifty-fifth street, Cleveland, Ohio, has undergone extensive improvements in the past two weeks, and when reopened under the successful management of Mr. Leo Ulmer, the proprietor, will represent the finest picture house in East Cleveland.

Kohl & Heinz, proprietors of the new National Theater, located on Fifty-fifth street, Cleveland, Ohio, with Mr. Jay Cohen as manager, opened October 5, to turn away business. First run pictures, high class vaudeville and orchestra of four pieces will be featured weekly throughout the Winter with admission price of 5 and 10 cents.

Mr. I. S. Stone, who has been connected for the past two years with the United Film Exchange, Cleveland, Ohio, as road representative and billing clerk, has resigned his position to take charge of the branch exchange for the Globe Film Service Company, Chicago, Ill., which will be opened at Little Rock, Ark., within a week or ten days.

* * *

Mr. Carl Bitzer, formerly manager of the Royal Theater, Sandusky, Ohio, has leased the Star Theater there for a term of years from Bremgartner & Franklein and will reopen same Saturday, October 18. Mr. Bitzer has had a wide experience in the show business and he should prove successful in his new enterprise.

NOTES FROM THE NATIONAL INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURE ALLIANCE.

The exhibitor who has been hesitating in regard to taking Independent service will be interested in learning that Jones, Linick & Schaeffer have abandoned licensed service and are now getting their films for the Unique and Royal Theaters, two of their large State street houses, from the Chicago Film Exchange.

New applications for membership in the National Independent Moving Picture Alliance have been received by Secretary Swanson from the Feature Film Company, New York; G. W. Bradenburgh, Philadelphia, and the Eagle Film Exchange, Philadelphia.

Theo. Brinkmeyer, manufacturer, Wheeling, W. Va., has also joined the Alliance.

The Film Import and Trading Company, with headquarters at 127 East 23d street, New York, and who, under their contract with Raleigh & Robert, of Paris, hold the exclusive American agency for a number of European manufacturers, are about to establish an office in Chicago, with R. C. Jones as manager. This move makes it appear that the Film Import people are really in a position to fulfill every promise they have made to the trade.

Mr. A. G. Whyte, who is well known amongst the trade, has resigned his position as assistant general manager of the Film Import and Trading Company. He may be addressed care of this paper.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Cramp & Co. have been awarded the contract for the erection of a new theater at 156th street and Third avenue, for the Acme Theater Company, at New York City.

All The Best
Nothing But The Best

That's what we have and what you want

READ THE LIST

N. Y. Motion Picture Co.,
Bison, Eclair, Centaur,
Great Northern, Phoenix

and the Pick of all the Foreign Films

No Old Assn. Films in Our Stock

WRITE us today, how many reels you use and how often you change and get OUR PRICE

Philadelphia Projection Co.

Perfection Film Service

44 N. 9th Street - Philadelphia, Pa.

MISS LOUISE M. MARION

In Her Celebrated Sketches

ALSO SPECIAL RECITALS

Illustrated with Lantern Slides

is booking engagements for Vaudeville in Moving Picture Theatres, between the Films. For particulars address

LOUISE M. MARION

321 West 23d Street, New York City

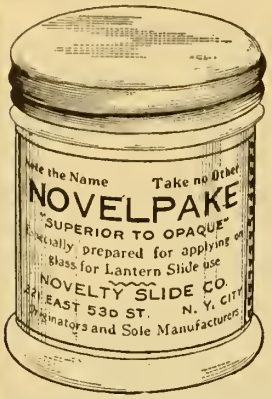
Mr. Exhibitor!

If you want to see your house "packed," ask your nearest Exchange Man to supply you with the GREATEST AMERICAN FEATURE FILM the MOTION PICTURE WORLD has ever produced—"The Only Authorized and Authentic Motion Pictures of the Great United States Military Tournament" held at Camp Taft the week of July 5th to 10th, Toledo, Ohio. Over 3,000 feet of film, reproducing, with wonderful clearness, The Modern Field Artillery in Action—Lively, Thrilling Drills by the Infantry—Wall Scaling and Skirmish Work—Wonderful Saddle and Bareback Riding by the Cavalry—Modern Quick-Firing Cannon in Action—Engineer Troops Building Bridges and Destroying Them with Dynamite—Signal Corps in Scientific and Instructive Field Work—Hospital Corps Showing How the Wounded Are Cared For—and the hundreds of other "stunts" that will excite your audience to the highest pitch of enthusiasm.

Lively now! Be the first in your territory to exhibit these remarkable pictures. Now is the time to "stock up" on a little "Easy Coin of the Realm."

N. B.—If your Exchange will not furnish you, let us know the seating capacity of your theater and we will send you further particulars.

The Tournament Film Co., Toledo, Ohio



"Novelpake"

"That useful preparation for making your own slides at a trifle cost in a few minutes time."

Price, Twenty-five cents per jar, sufficient to make 100 slides. Brush, Ten cents. All postage paid.

Ask Your Dealer or Write

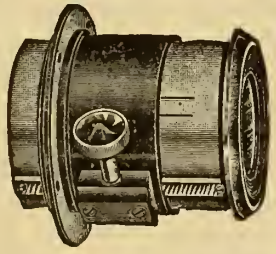
NOVELTY SLIDE CO.
MANUFACTURERS
221 East 53d St. NEW YORK CITY

Reliable And Prompt

We deliver what you contract for

Edison, Powers and Pathe Moving Picture Machines and parts in stock—all supplies. : : : :

The Lake Shore Film Supply Co. CLEVELAND —OHIO—



We make the best lenses in the world for projecting motion pictures and lantern slides. Can you spend a little money more wisely and profitable than by ordering a set of lenses which will

IT'S ALL IN THE LENS

IMPROVE YOUR PICTURES?

NEW PRICES

M. P. Projection Lenses any size with our improved jacket with spiral adjustment	$15.00
No. 1 Stereopticon Lenses	15.00
No. 2 Stereopticon Lenses	20.00

All dealers sell them on approval.

WRITE FOR OUR NEW CIRCULAR

When ordering state the size of your screen and the length of the picture wanted. Give the distance from the lens to the screen. Remit the price of the lens or furnish references.

GUNDLACH-MANHATTAN OPTICAL COMPANY
808 Clinton Ave., So. Rochester, N. Y.

SONG SLIDES

JUST ILLUSTRATED

I've Just Got Time To Say Good Bye
Daddy's Doll
Could You Learn To Love Me
Dreams That I Dream Of You
My Irish Prarie Queen

We make Lantern Slides of anything and everything for any and every purpose

Send for our special prices on Announcement Slides

NORTH AMERICAN SLIDE CO., 143 North 8th Street, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

SONG SLIDES

CORRESPONDENCE.

MUSICAL ACCOMPANIMENTS TO MOVING PICTURES.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—I am indebted to the Edison Manufacturing Company for the September 15 and October 1 issues of the "Kinetogram," in which they have given the "music cues" for their several late releases.

In my personal experience, also through observations of other shows and talks with various small town and some city managers and owners, I find that there is a possible one out of twenty pianists that is competent to follow a picture properly, even in case they have seen the film more than once. The small town show is rarely able to afford a professional show player, and even the professional player is ordinarily given his cues and music to fit the production.

The manager himself cannot often find time to figure out the cues, especially if he be using a large number of releases per week, and few of us would be able to do justice to this department of motion picture work, no matter how competent a judge we may be of the result—the difference between a composer and a critic. At any rate, a cue of this kind is certainly a big help and time-saver to either orchestra leader, pianist or manager.

But to come to the point: I believe that the Moving Picture World would do well to add a music department of this kind with cues for all films of which it gives the synopsis, to its already many instructive departments and helps to the moving picture man. This would, of course, be done by a thoroughly competent orchestra leader or semi-composer, and I am sure that subscribers and purchasers would not object to a fifty per cent. increase in price if necessary to accomplish this extra feature. I think we can all thank the "Kinetogram" for this idea and hope you will find the matter worthy of an investigation.

Yours very truly,

BEN ALEXANDER.

Caldwell, Idaho, Sept. 29, 1909.

[The subject of musical accompaniments to moving pictures is dealt with in an editorial on another page; and we shall also be making references to it on other occasions. Meanwhile, we may say that though we are unprepared to open a musical department in the World, the needs of exhibitors are being considered in several quarters.—Ed.]

"A SPORTING OFFER."

New York, Oct. 11, 1909.

Moving Picture World:

Gentlemen—We are enclosing you herewith copy of letter we are sending Mr. Jas. L. Hoff, managing editor of the Film Index, which is prompted by an editorial appearing in last week's issue (under date October 16) of the Film Index.

We believe we have made Mr. Hoff an offer that all fair-minded people will appreciate as a liberal one and one which we earnestly hope he will be kind enough to accept.

We will be glad to have you publish this correspondence in your next issue, as we wish the public to know that we have extended an invitation to Mr. Hoff which he, in all fairness, cannot refuse.

Very truly yours,

FILM IMPORT AND TRADING COMPANY,

127 E. 23d St.

(COPY.)

October 11, 1909.

Mr. James L. Hoff,
Managing Editor Film Index:

Dear Sir—Although not desirous of entering into any controversy regarding the quality of any manufacturer's films, American or continental, I cannot allow a remark made in your last week's editorial to pass without protesting against the term, "same old brand of junk" as applied to the film product of the many continental manufacturers my firm has the honor to represent in the United States of America.

Americans are known as "good sports"; permit me to make you a sporting offer—come and see some of the film subjects we are placing on the American market and, in common fairness, in next week's issue publish this offer together with a fair and just criticism on what you saw. I will promise you the most interesting hour you have ever passed at a picture show.

To get the continental manufacturers to make pictures exactly to the taste of the American public has been difficult, but my firm has laid itself out to do so, and when you see what we have accomplished in six months toward this standard you will, I am sure, withdraw your undeserved "same old brand of junk."

I am, Dear Sir,

Yours,
CHARLES RALEIGH,
of Raleigh & Robert, of Paris.

THE MOVING PICTURE IN THE CHURCH.

October 12, 1909.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—The trade will no doubt be interested to know that moving pictures have been shown in connection with one of New York's most prominent churches. On October 10, at the regular after-meeting following the Sunday evening service of the Church of the Ascension, Fifth avenue and Tenth street, the Rev. Alexander Irvine introduced John Collier, General Secretary of the Board of Censorship, as the speaker of the evening. The topic was, of course, the moving picture, its social influences and its future development. To illustrate the educational and esthetic side of moving pictures, two reels were run off—one showing the funeral pyre of an Eastern empress, and the other being a recent example of exquisite color photography, exhibiting the life of the girls of old Brittany.

Mr. Collier spoke at length upon the improvement in the character of the pictures put out during the past six months, and showed what may be expected in the future development of the moving picture drama. Turning to the educational value of moving pictures, the speaker cited the use already made of moving pictures by the United States Department of Agriculture, and to hospitals, laboratories, etc. He further explained that such subjects as botany, biology, metalurgy, etc., lend themselves readily to the moving picture camera for purposes of the class-room.

Speaking of the future of the moving picture in amusement, Mr. Collier predicted a tremendous development through its extension for scenic purposes to the legitimate drama and the opera. Concluding, the speaker urged his hearers to look into the possibilities of this hitherto neglected force for socialization, and to co-operate with those who are striving to rid the business of features which hitherto have tended to retard its recognition as such.

FRED'K N. COOKE, JR.,
Executive Secretary,
National Board of Censorship.

P. S.—A full account of this meeting is to be found in the New York Times of Monday, October 11.

EUROPEAN MANUFACTURERS TO VISIT THE UNITED STATES.

Chicago, October 14, 1909.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—We have just received a cablegram from Mr. Murdock, Paris, France, that upon the invitation of the International Projecting and Producing Company, all the manufacturers of the Continent and England with whom we hold contracts will visit America.

J. J. Murdock, President of the International Projecting and Producing Company, has succeeded in accomplishing the purposes of his mission to Europe. Aftetr signing the contracts with the important film manufacturers of the Continent and England, he extended an invitation to them to visit America, and thus glean an intimate knowledge of the conditions in this country and the requirements of the trade on this side of the water. During the past week, J. J. Murdock, President, and E. J. Magerstadt, Treasurer of the International Company, have been in Paris, France, and have held an important conference with thirty-seven of the most prominent film manufacturers in Europe. Mr. Murdock cabled, October 13, that upon invitation of the International Projecting and Producing Company, these manufacturers will visit America and will meet in Chicago early in November. Very truly yours,

INTERNATIONAL PROJECTING AND PRODUCING COMPANY.

Among the Exhibitors.

Piatt, Ill.—E. E. Alger, of Gibson City, has opened a moving picture show here.

Valentine, Neb.—John Stetter has opened a new moving picture theater here.

Hoopeston, Ill.—Clarence Boyce, of Belvidere, is planning to open a new moving picture theater here.

Huntington, Ind.—Schuster & Curtis, of Findlay, Ohio, will open a moving picture theater on West Market street.

Brigham City, Utah.—J. B. Ellis, of Ogden, has purchased the Globe Theater here from Norman Stark and has taken possession.

Brady, Tex.—J. W. Mathews has sold the opera house to W. L. Souther, who is planning to convert it into a moving picture theater.

Virginia, Minn.—I. S. Mistachkin will open a new moving picture and vaudeville theater here.

Lake Mills, Ia.—Cook & Hildreth are making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater here.

Logansport, Ind.—W. H. Lindsay is preparing to open a new moving picture theater at 413 Fourth street.

Carthage, Ill.—Ralph Davis is making arrangements to open a new moving picture theater in the Rams building.

Jacksonville, Fla.—The Jacksonville Amusement Company has purchased the two Main street moving picture theaters here.

New Albany, Ind.—The Grand Amusement Company will open a new moving picture theater on Main street, to be known as the Lyric.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Strothotte & Nichol Eden moving picture show at 4106 North Newstead avenue was destroyed by fire.

St. Louis, Mo.—Louis Wolbrinck and associates will erect a modern vaudeville theater at the corner of Taylor and Delmar avenues.

Logansport, Ind.—Jesse Morgan has purchased the old Crystal Theater on Market street, and will make extensive improvements.

Whiting, Ind.—The Whiting Royal Theater Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $2,000. The incorporators are R. Miller and others.

Red Bank, N. J.—Ryan & Evans have rented the Birdsall Building, on Monmouth street, which will henceforth be an entertainment house for moving picture seekers.

Baltimore, Md.—Fillmore Cook, Law Building, has purchased a lot on North avenue, as a site for a vaudeville and moving picture theater.

Baltimore, Md.—The Mill Amusement Company has purchased the property at 1512 West Lafayette avenue as a site for a moving picture theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A new moving picture theater, known as the Crystal, is being constructed at 146 Riley street, with a seating capacity of 500.

Ft. Scott, Kan.—Mr. Henderson, of Atchison, has leased the Kearns Building, on North Main street, and will convert it into a moving picture show.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Lynch Bros. are taking estimates for the erection of a one-story moving picture theater, at 3156 Kensington avenue, for Frank A. Fisher.

St. Louis, Mo.—The Independence Amusement Company has awarded a contract to the Hartman Construction Company for the erection of a new moving picture theater.

Buffalo, N. Y.—The Hamonia dancing hall has been remodeled and fitted up for a moving picture theater, with a seating capacity of 800. C. Fowler is the manager.

Hamilton, Ohio.—The Star Amusement Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $5,000. The incorporators are L. J. Wittman, Sarah Wittman, Anna E. Reeves and others.

Sandusky, Ohio.—The new manager of the Theater Royal is Elmer T. Lewis, one of the youngest of theatrical managers, being only 18 years of age. Yet Mr. Spathelf, the proprietor, has placed him in sole management and he seems to be making good. He is ably assisted by Voltaire Schweinfurth as head operator and Henry Hopp as assistant operator. Only licensed pictures are run, and Ernest J. Paul, who has just closed an engagement with the Brooklyn Theater, of Cleveland, has been engaged to manage the musical end of the program. Mr. Lewis has already inaugurated some new features and made various changes to beautify the house.

FOR SALE CHEAP

300 Sets of Song Slides all full sets and must be sold at once. The reason for selling going out of business. If you need slides this is your chance. For information address to HIRAM ABRAMS :: 511a Congress Street, Portland, Me.

J. E. NAYLOR & COMPANY

ILLUSTRATED SONG ADVERTISING ANNOUNCEMENT SPECIAL SLIDES

Special Slides Made to Order

58-60 WABASH AVE., ROOM 614 CHICAGO

O. T. Crawford's Film Service

A service FREE FROM REPEATERS; NO DARK HOUSES, and a GUARANTEE to give A BETTER SERVICE than is promised. ¶ You owe it to yourself to get full particulars. Write to-day

O. T. CRAWFORD FILM EXCHANGE CO.
(Licensee of Motion Picture Patents Company)
1401 Locust Street, St. Louis Mo. 319 4th Avenue, Louisville, Ky.

2 Color Film Subject POSTERS

Covering the productions of

Pathe	Biograph
Vitagraph	Kleine
Edison	Lubin
Essanay	Kalem

Selig

5 Cents a Poster

Estimates for Special Posters on Application.

TITLE POSTER CO., 231 Bowery, New York
'Phone 4267 Orchard.
Call or send for samples and list of Posters on hand.

The Automatic Theatre Chair

It is a space saver, life saver and money saver. Shipped built up. It is the only sanitary theatre chair. Used by Keith, Proctor and Poli. It folds up automatically and is revolving, making the theatre all aisles. It is a friend to the public

Send for our circular A. Write today.

THE HARDESTY MFG. CO.
CANAL DOVER, OHIO

LEARN TO MAKE MIRRORS

¶ We furnish complete instructions for making all kinds of Mirrors so simple that anyone can make a first-class Mirror as soon as they read over our copyrighted instructions. For $2.00 we send you the complete outfit. This price is good for a short time only. No machines used, all ingredients can be secured of your local druggist for a few cents.

The Butts Sign & Novelty Co.
228 Temple Court Building, Denver, Colo.

Twenty-Four Hour Shipment

1,500
OPERA CHAIRS
IN STOCK

If you want a GOOD CHAIR, ON TIME at a LOW PRICE, we have it. Inquiries answered same day as received,

Ask for Catalog No. 305

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO.
CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

The Viascope Special Moving Picture Machine

FIRE PROOF!
NOISELESS! FLICKERLESS!
NO VIBRATION!

Guaranteed forever against defective workmanship or material.

VIASCOPE MFG. CO.
109 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.

EBERHARD SCHNEIDER

Miror Vitae Products," Projectors, Cameras, Film-Making Machinery, Films, Slides, Stereopticons, Specialties, Lens Grinding, etc. Special condensors, carbons and lugs.

109 East 12th Street, New York

$7.00 a Day

$15.00 for THREE DAYS

$30.00 A WEEK

For Use of a Set of the

Write for contract blank now. Booklet fully describing the attraction free.

CHICAGO FILM EXCHANGE
Mssler A. Building Chicago, Ill.

Old Films Made New

Our superior process enables you to get MONEY out of your OLD STOCK

Our Rates are Reasonable

Write to-day for terms

Work done promptly.

A trial shipment will convince you of the quality of our workmanship

The Film Renewing Co.
744 Orleans Street, Chicago, Ill.

FOLDING CHAIRS

For Moving Picture Shows Grand Stands Assembly Halls, etc. In sections if wanted.

Write for Catalog No. 2.

The Kauffman Manufacturing Co.
ASHLAND, OHIO

ROLL TICKETS

YOUR SPECIAL TICKET
PRINTED BOTH SIDES
NUMBERING GUARANTEED

50,000	-	$ 6.50
100,000	-	10.00
500,000	-	35.00

Prompt Shipments—Cash with Order—No C. O. D.

THE CARTER PRESS PEABODY MASS.

Special Quotations for Large Quantities

Stories of the Films.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

HIS LOST LOVE.—A brother's sacrifice and its outcome. To yield our beloved for the sake of their happiness is one of the noblest sacrifices man can make. There is a note of unselfishness in it that is without parallel. Such was the deed of the hero of this story. Luke and James are brothers in an old English family. James went to London when quite a boy to engage in business, but Luke remained at home among the simple country folks. Mary, the daughter of a neighbor, and Luke and James were playmates in their early days, and Mary and James were childhood sweethearts. As years went, with James engrossed in the busy whirl of the metropolis, he forgets Mary, and Luke's honest, noble nature appeals to Mary, and they become engaged. James at this time is obsessed with a desire to visit his old home, and, upon his return, the meeting of he and Mary revives the old memories and enkindles the love of their childhood days. Mary, of course, is irresistibly attracted by the manly bearing of handsome James. Luke realizes the situation, and with almost breaking heart surrenders in favor of his brother, considering only Mary's happiness. Oh! the suffering attending a love-blighted life—but Luke is content to suffer if it means happiness for Mary. The young couple marry, and their life is one of sunshine, until Mary's sister pays them a visit. There is at once a mutual feeling between James and the sister, and though they struggle against self, the fight seems hopeless. Meanwhile, a little child blesses the union of James and Mary, and one would believe that this at least would be the means of determining for them the path of duty, but not so, and the sister finally resolves to leave, fearful of the consequences. The announcement of her determination to James makes him forget all else but her, and he goes so far as to declare his intention of leaving with her. All this is heard by the young wife and Luke, who would have struck him at his feet but for the interception of poor Mary. James leaves, however, and the poor wife's heart breaks. She falls into Luke's arms, never to rise. Her death is the harvest of James's weakness. Noble-hearted Luke now kneels by the side of his dead sister-in-law, crushed in spirit, for he reasons that his sacrifice, instead of bringing happiness, had brought death to Mary and orphanage to her child. The thought of the child arouses him. That, at least, could he do—protect the little innocent. So taking the baby from its crib he resolves to give his life for its welfare. Years after we find the baby grown up to innocent girlhood. But the world has not been too kind to Luke, and it is a struggle for him to get along. On the other hand, James has prospered, but his success is only a means by which his conscience may all the more taunt him. His life is unhappy and he longs for his child. Seeking his brother's home, he makes himself known to the little one, and Luke gives her the right to choose between them. She will not leave Luke, for she loves him as the only father she has ever known. James is denied even the love of his own child. In this production the Biograph presents a subject that is bound to sink deep into the hearts of the spectators. Length, 958 feet.

THE EXPIATION.—Atonement of a self-accused wrong. Expiation is almost invariably the act of a noble heart. It is a self-satisfaction as well as reparation for a deed the world may fully condone, but the consistent mind will accept no such condonation if the conscience is disturbed. Hence, voluntary expiation is the most commendable form of atonement. Such forms the theme of this Biograph production, though the real cause of suffering is through the curse of drink. Edward Waterbury is a confirmed dipsomaniac and is assisted to his home from the club by William Trevor, a friend of the family. Trevor's kindly nature has impressed Mrs. Waterbury, and there is a slight suggestion that they love, but both being the souls of honor, hide it from each other. However, Trevor, appreciating the fact that Mrs. Waterbury is wedded to a hopeless drunkard, feels half-inclined to declare his love for the suffering woman, and persuade her to leave Waterbury. But, no. He reasons such a step would not be honorable, so he decides to go away to avoid a wrong. Hence, he plans to go to the far West. He cannot leave without saying good-bye, and repairs to their home with this intention only. Waterbury from the next room, whither he has gone surreptitiously to drink, witnesses their parting and misconstrues the intent of the meeting deeming it an intrigue. Trevor leaves for the West and Mrs. Waterbury retires to her room. Waterbury enters and seizing a revolver is at first inclined to satisfy his jealous rage; but on second thought he feels that he himself is to blame, and the weapon he would use on them should more justifiably be turned on himself. This decides him, and he writes the following: "My Dear Helen—I realize my weakness is incurable. I am your curse. Will be so no longer. You and Trevor love. My last toast—To you both." Leaving the letter on the table, he takes a glass of brandy in one hand and with the pistol in the other, makes good his assertion. The house is at once panic-stricken, and when the wife sees the lifeless form of her husband in the chair and reads his letter, she at once blames herself for his act, although drink was really the cause, and resolves to expiate her self-accused wrong. A friend of Trevor writes to him of the sad affair and he determines to return and declare his love for the widow. However, the poor woman has avowed to lead a penitential life, and no persuasion can induce her to change her determination, so Trevor must bow to the inevitable, and leaves. The subject is rather out of the ordinary, and being beautifully staged and acted, will prove intensely interesting. Length, 992 feet.

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

THE WIDOW.—Robbins owns a fast horse named "The Widow," regarding which his wife is in blissful ignorance. While Mrs. Robbins is visiting her mother Robbins gets a message from his trainer to the effect that The Widow is in fine shap and requesting him to come and see her. Robbins goes, but he leaves the telegram where it falls into Mrs. Robbins' hands. Suspecting that The Widow is a woman with whom her husband is flirting, she rushes over to her mother for advice. The mother hurries her to the police station, where a warrant is sworn out for the unfaithful husband's arrest for abandonment. Robbins is sound asleep in a country hotel when the police arrive, and is dragged to the station. He gets bail an then goes to the mother-in-law's home to find out what the trouble is. Explanations will not go with the mother-in-law, who tells Robbins he can explain in the divorce court. The final scene is in the court room, where the divorce proceedings are in progress. The wife testifies that her husband left her for a widow, and produces a telegram to prove it. Robbins now understands and produces a picture of "The Widow." This convinces Mrs. Robbins that she has made a mistake and there is a happy reconciliation.

A WOMAN'S WIT.—What would you do if you found a burglar in your house? Here is one way as told by pictures. Mrs. Lee returns from the theater to discover that someone has entered her house; she sees a man's face in the mirror of her dressing table. Composing herself as much as possible, she continues to remove her jewels, laying them on the table. Then she makes an excuse to leave the room and goes to the library where she telephones to the police. Returning to her room, she starts to open the safe in which she keeps her jewels, but hesitates and sits down in a chair as though tired, in order to gain time. Then she hears the bell of the police patrol and again starts to open the safe. As she gets it open and takes out her jewel case the burglar grabs her by the throat and chokes her into insensibility. But she comes to in time to see the thief in the corner covered by the revolvers of two policemen. Her jewels are restored and the burglar taken away. The story is worked out carefully in every detail and shows what a woman of nerve might do under such circumstances.

GAUMONT.
(George Kleine.)

HIS HELPMATE.—When the wife is the head of the house. The farce is built on the sentence in the French wedding ceremony which says, "A wife should follow her husband everywhere." In this particular case it is a policeman who marries, and naturally he leads his wife a merry chase when she attempts to fulfill her duty before the law, literally. However, she proves herself very able in all incidents where help is needed by her husband. On one occasion her husband and a fellow officer are attacked by ruffians and are being worsted badly when she arrives and by a few well-planned moves saves them. After, at different times, having proven that she is more agile and of better judgment than her husband, she finally assists in the capture of a thief whom it is necessary for her to follow down a chimney. Arrived at the police station, she presents, after convicting the prisoner, the idea that she is as strong in every way as her husband, and that the law is weak in requiring her to follow. The judge agrees with her, so the man and wife leave in the new order, she majestically leading the way.

HUSBAND'S STRATEGY.—How he won his own wife's love. Costumed and staged to represent the people of 1830. The play opens in the home of a young couple who have been recently married. Although almost strangers at the time of their wedding, it has seemed wise, because of financial reasons, that they should wed. The husband is quite infatuated with his young bride, but she is discontented, for she had hoped for a more romantic marriage. Her every action shows dislike for her husband, while at this particular time she especially wishes to be rid of him, for she is expecting a gallant soon to play upon his mandolin beneath her window. He has serenaded her very often in the short time she has been living in her new home. The husband's efforts to please her with gifts or with attention, proving futile, he leaves, presumably to spend the evening in town. Soon the unknown lover arrives to sing without her window. She is delighted with the message he brings to her. After the serenade she admits that she loves him and importunes him to remove his mask. When, after some hesitancy, he complies with her request, she is greatly surprised to find the faithful singer of ballads is her husband. He has employed this method of gaining her notice and affection. The young wife is, of course, delighted with his accomplishment. Willingly now she gives him her affection.

CROWN PRINCE OF GERMANY DRILLING BATTERY.—This film will be viewed with intense interest, not only by the vast numbers of Germans and German-born Americans, but also by the American public, for it portrays very accurately the marvelous military discipline for which the German army is so justly famous. The Crown Prince himself, although he is the eldest son of the German Emperor and heir to the German throne, takes active part in the army maneuvers and shows by his actions and commands that he is perfectly familiar with every detail of his duties as commanding officer. At his orders the heavy artillery are quickly swung into position, the guns are dismounted, re-mounted and fired and then driven at a rapid gallop across the parade ground. After the strenuous drill and exercises, the "reeall" is sounded and "mess-call" is blown, and then an animated scene is witnessed around the steaming camp kettles, and his Royal Highness, the Crown Prince, inspects and samples the fare provided for the men, thereby endearing himself alike to officers non-commissioned officers and privates.

CASTING BREAD UPON THE WATER.—A poor young man traveling afoot through the beautiful orchard country of France is aided by a well-to-do-farmer and his family. They give him work with them picking oranges and helping with the farm work. While working for them he manages to save a little money. In the next scene we see him just opening a little fruit stand of his own in the city. He is striving to win his trade by courtesy and fair treatment. He prospers more than ordinarily well, so it is only a short time until he is seen in richly appointed offices, for he is now the head of a large wholesale business. Meantime, his former employer has died, and now comes word to the young man that his old benefactor's wife, the one living person who had so nicely started him on his successful career, has met with bad fortune. Bearing in mind the fact that his good fortune began in the orange orchard, he has his men bring him a huge basket of the fruit and within each orange he places a gold coin. He then dispatches the rich gift to the old lady's home. It arrives in time to save the property from the creditors, as well as serving to make her comfortable for the rest of her life.

COUNTRY LIFE IN A FLAT.—A flat dweller, whose business requires him to stay in the city, is possessed of a great love of the country. For this reason he equips his flat with all the chief means of joy to those who live in the rural districts. At his waking hour in the morning he requires his servant to call him by imitating a rooster. He then arises, and after dressing goes to the bathroom, where he catches fish which his servant has placed in the tub for him. After his angling he dives into the tub and enjoys a swim. His drawing room is used for a garden, where he has numerous species of plants and shrubs. Here he entertains his friends at picnic parties, where they sit upon the earth-covered floor and have little trouble to imagine they are actually in the woods. After the garden lunch he shows them his improvised farm and hunting grounds. His servant acts as a hound and tracks a rabbit from one room to another, while the original farmer and his friends follow with guns and finally make a successful capture.

TICKLED TO DEATH.—Mr. X. is so ticklish that even the thought of anything touching him has the effect of throwing him into paroxysms of laughter. Trying on gloves or being measured for a suit are exceptionally hard propositions for him, while being grazed by a lady's hat feather throws him on the ground and starts him rolling in a very laughable manner. Finally, when struck by an automobile and apparently killed, his wife brings him to life again by tickling the soles of his feet.

KALEM MFG. CO.

A BROTHER'S WRONG.—The story of a brother's jealousy. The two brothers of our story, Jack and William, both love the same girl, Lucile, the daughter of their father's lifelong friend and their own childhood playmate. As to dispositions, the brothers are opposites. Jack is a happy-go-lucky fellow, full of animal spirits, inclined to be wild, quick to anger, but as quick to forgive and noble and generous at heart. William is delicate, quiet and studious, the model of the town and his father's favorite, but a bit hypocritical. Lucile prefers the wild Jack and they have secretly plighted their troth unbeknown to their fathers or to William.

Scene I.—Both Brothers Love Lucile. At the opening of the first scene Lucile and her father are seated out on the lawn of their home. As Lucile is reading a letter the maid has brought her they hear someone approaching and both rise to greet the two brothers, Jack and William, who have stopped in on their morning ride to pay their respects. As greetings are exchanged the hands of the four cross and Lucile laughingly calls attention to the old saying that such a hand-crossing means a marriage within a year. Both brothers look self-conscious at this. Now William shows Mr. Ward some investments he made the day before, while Jack and Lucile become engrossed in each other. Soon they stroll away. William plainly shows his displeasure at this and after a moment begs Mr. Ward to excuse him and follows them. Jack and Lucile soon reach a secluded part of the grounds. Glancing cautiously around Jack steals a lover's kiss. But here comes William. He sneeringly remarks that he hopes he is not intruding and reminds Jack of an important business engagement. As he leaves, Jack and Lucile follow, but manage to steal a kiss while his back is turned.

★ Geo. Méliès ★

"STAR" FILMS

Licensed by the Motion Picture Patents Co.

To be released, Wednesday, Oct. 27, 1909

FOR SALE
A BABY

Length about 600 feet. A subject of intense dramatic quality. Will appeal to the women.

Hypnotist's Revenge

Length about 350 feet. A comedy of unusual metit, showing the antics of a clever magician and hypnotist.

GASTON MÉLIÈS
204 East 38th Street
New York

ENTERPRISE OPTICAL COMPANY
564-572 West Randolph St.
Chicago, Ill.

CALEHUFF

A Member of the
FILM SERVICE ASSOCIATION

Headquarters for only the best of latest FILMS and SONG SLIDES. No junk. MACHINES, SUPPLIES, Etc.

LATEST SONG SLIDES
$5.00 per set

N. E. Cor. 4th & Green Streets,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

FILMS FOR SALE

50 new reels of perfect film, in extra good condition, to close out, at $18.50.

Second hand Edison machines for sale at a bargain. Parts to fit all machines in stock.

MAYER SILVERMAN
322 Futon Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE
Is the Machine that Draws the Crowd

The pictures are steady and clear, and the continuous "come again" crowd goes where the pictures are best. That's where the Edison makes money for you.

The Edison Kinetoscope will last longer than any other moving picture machine, is more easily operated, and costs less to run. That's where the Edison saves money for you.

If you are going into the game to win, start with a machine that's a winner. The Edison will build up a business for you and keep the profits coming your way.

Write to-day for booklet of details and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

EDISON FILMS
Releases for October 19th and 22nd

RELEASED OCTOBER 19

THEIR SOCIAL EDUCATION

Mr. E. W. Townsend's delightful comedy. A millionaire's daughter imports from Europe advanced ideas in social deportment and an insignificant "Count," both of which she attempts to unload upon her parents. After a series of most laughable events, she abandons both enterprises and marries a young American. The story is splendidly acted.

No. 6531 Code, VERTERIA Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 22

THE LOST HANDBAG

Comedy. Portraying the pursuit of a hang-bag, supposed to contain theater tickets, through a chapter of mishaps, that eventually ends in the river. A succession of roars. One of the best of our comedy films.

No. 6532 Code, VERTIGINE Approx. Length, 400 feet

A GREAT GAME

Comedy. Story of a baseball game. Close views of players, grandstand and bleachers are shown during exciting plays and close decisions. It will get any audience "going." Photography unusually fine.

No. 6533 Code, VERTILGBAR Approx. Length, 590 feet

Releases of October 26th and 29th

RELEASED OCTOBER 26

THE LIE—Dramatic

No. 6534 Code, VERTILGEN Approx. Length, 1,000 feet

RELEASED OCTOBER 29

ALL'S FAIR IN LOVE—Costume Comedietta

No. 6535 Code, VERTRAGUS Approx. Length, 415 feet

THE THREE KISSES—Comedy

No. 6536 Code, VERTRAHA Approx. Length, 500 feet

SPECIAL PEARY FILM

The landing at Sydney, Nova Scotia, of Commander Robert E. Peary, discoverer of the North Pole. An especially interesting picture, showing the arrival of Commander Peary, close views of the "Roosevelt," the Peary family and the various members of the Peary expedition. A picture of great historic value.

ORDER AT ONCE. MAY BE EXHIBITED AS SOON AS RECEIVED.

No. 6544 Code, VERULAMIUM Approx. Length, 500 feet

EDISON MANUFACTURING CO.

MAIN OFFICE and FACTORY: 72 LAKESIDE AVE., ORANGE, N. J.

New York Office: 10 Fifth Avenue. Chicago Office: 90 Wabash Ave.
Office for United Kingdom: Edison Works, Victoria Road, Willesden, N. W., England.

Selling Agents

P. L. WATERS, 41 E. 21st St., New York. GEORGE BRECK, 70 Turk St., San Francisco, Cal.

Dealers in All Principal Cities

To insure insertion, advertising copy should reach us not later than Wednesday morning of each week.

Just Received a Carload of

LANG'S FILM REWINDERS

Place Your Order Now. Price, Five Dollars Net
At Any of Our Offices

PATHÉ FRÉRES

NEW YORK
41 West 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Scene II.—Lucile Refuses William.
Scene III.—William's Jealousy is Aroused.
Scene IV.—William Plans Jack's Disgrace. He sees Jack's coat on the ground. Here is a chance to be rid of Jack as a rival. At first he hesitates. Then his mind made up, he picks up the coat and drawing money and valuable papers from his pocket he places them in the pocket.
Scene V.—Next Morning—The Accusation—Jack Disowned. Jack bewildered, but not angry at his father's little faith in him says, "Yes, I will go never to return." He turns to William, who retreats in fear, then is leaving when Lucile grief-stricken steps forward and holds out her hand. He takes it, bids her a passionate good-bye and rushes away, leaving his weeping father heart-broken and William triumphantly smiling.
Scene VI.—A Vision of Lucile Turns Jack Homeward.
Scene VII.—William's Dying Confession.
Scene VIII.—Home and Happiness. It is the day of William's funeral. His wasted body has been laid away in the family vault. Lucile and her father accompanied Mr. Ward home and now after bidding him good-bye they go slowly down the path leaving the desolate old man standing alone as if too afraid to enter his lonely house where he had hoped one day would resound the merry voices of his grandchildren. As Lucile and her father turn from the outer gate they hear a cry and turn to find Jack beside them. Lucile flies to his arms. In a few hurried words they tell of William's dying confession. Jack's lips tremble for he has always loved this brother of his. Now all hasten back to the house. They find Mr. Ward just as they left him gazing out hopelessly with sorrowful eyes. The future holds nothing for him. One son is dead, the other lost to him by his own rash temper. Suddenly he hears the word "father" spoken softly and turns to find Jack standing before him. With a glad cry father and son embrace. Now Jack takes Luelle in his arms and Mr. Ward extends his hand to Major Crandon, for while he still thinks sorrowfully of the erring son he has just laid away, he sees here the consummation of his dearest wish, the union of their two families.

LUBIN MFG. CO.

MIGNON.—Mignon, a beautiful dark-eyed girl, is the famous bareback rider. Tom, the clown, is in love with her and his feelings are reciprocated, even though Donita, the Spanish girl, her rival, tries very hard to take her lover away from her.
Mignon has many admirers wherever she goes.
Tired from her work Mignon returns to her dressing room, where she lays down for a rest and is soon asleep. In her dream she accepts the hand of one of her admirers. For some time she lives in luxury, but her admirer soon grows tired of her and casts her aside. She has to go back to the show, where she arrives broken-hearted. She lies down and is soon fast asleep. Just then she is awakened from her dream by a scream of her rival who stood over her with a drawn dagger. Her lover had entered, saw her danger and, showing the door to Donita, he embraces Mignon. Length, 575 feet.

AUNT LENA'S VISIT.—Aunt Lena is visiting her brother, Heine, together with her little daughter, Louisa. Max and Moritz, instructed to play with Louisa, try their best to get rid of the fat German girl.
They play all kinds of jokes on her. When at last the whole family joins in the pursuit of the mischievous boys, they all come to grief. As usual, the scene ends with the boys getting the worst of it. Length, 350 feet.

A VISIT TO UNCLE.—Uncle Hiram sends his nephews an invitation to spend their vacation with him and his family. The nephews decide to accept. The country life, however, is too slow for them, so they look for some adventures. Meeting an actor walking the rails they purchase his wardrobe and disguised as tramps get busy with uncle's cow.
They paint the white cow black and sell it to uncle. Pretty soon the color comes off and uncle is looking for the tramps who cheated him. The whole town helps in the search, the tramps are covered with guns but before any shooting is done they take off wigs and beards and the joke is on uncle. Length, 505 feet.

A BURIED SECRET.—A young lady, emerging from a store, tries very hard to dispose of a bundle which she holds in her arm. Whenever she drops the bundle it is brought back to her. Whenever she thinks that she has a chance to throw it away somebody is in the way. Her actions create suspicion and the policeman and a goodly crowd follow her. Now she gets frightened and begins to run, the crowd after her. When she gained on her pursuers she quickly drops the package in an open hole dug by an Irishman and throws earth over it. Her ruse has been discovered, the package is unearthed, she is caught and brought before the police captain, where the package is opened. Imagine the surprise when an old pair of corsets is unwrapped, which the young lady had tried to throw away. Greatly embarrassed, she young lady leaves the police station, while the crowd laughs heartily. Length, 445 feet.

MORE PRECIOUS THAN GOLD.—A poor working girl has a hard time to keep her mother from starvation. The miserly, old landlord never fails to appear promptly for his rent. They are unable to meet it and he forthwith removes the bulk of the furniture. "Emma" has a sweetheart, a husky, young fellow, "Tom," who is drafted for service in the Asiatic Department. During his absence the landlord vigorously presses his suit. The sight of her mother, is too much for Emma and she gives her consent.
"Tom," the lover, receives no letters; he suspects the worst, and applies for leave of absence, which is reluctantly granted. Arriving home, the moment is at hand when "Emma" will sacrifice her future to the grasping old scoundrel. "Tom" learns this and, digging spurs to his horse, arrives a moment ahead of the wedding party. The lovers are reunited and enter the church, where they are made one. The rage of the landlord, and the maledictions which he rains on the heads of the young people, brings on a stroke of apoplexy, from which he dies a miserable death on the church steps. Length, 975 feet.

GEORGE MELIES.

FOR THE CAUSE OF SUFFRAGE.—Mrs. Duff has invited to lunch the celebrated Mrs. Mary Talker, the champion suffragist, who is to make a speech at a meeting on the same day. The board of suffragists have also been invited and are present. The maid, who waits at table, resembles a man in gait and manners. The unhappy Mr. Duff attempts to take part in the general conversation, but his wife severely admonishes him. In three instances he is told to keep silent, and the guests are shocked at the presumption on the part of Mr. Duff.
The meeting admitting of no delay, they hurry over their lunch and depart. Mr. Duff is ready to accompany them, but Mrs. Duff commands him to remain in the house and await her return. The unfortunate husband goes into the kitchen and tells the woman cook of his great disappointment. The cook is a large Irishwoman who does not in the least understand what women suffragists mean. She keenly shows her displeasure to the maid, of whose manners she does not approve, and when the latter makes any remarks threatens her with an iron.
She gives Mr. Duff advice. He should no longer stand the tyrannical domination of his wife, and should find out for himself what is being discussed at the meetings of the suffragists. Alas! he cannot attend, as men are debarred. The good woman has an idea! She will lend him her clothes and he will go to the meeting. He accepts. The woman's clothes are much too large for him. Mr. Duff is very slender. They, however, fill up the waist with any old things they find handy and the cook takes off her wig and puts it on Mr. Duff's head. There is yet to do away with the whiskers, and although this is a great sacrifice on his part, with a few strokes of a razor he cuts them off. Mr. Duff, minus this ornament which heretofore revealed his sex, leaves for the meeting. Nothing is more laughable than the gathering of the suffragists. The orator, Mrs. Mary Talker, is dressed like a man. She is repeatedly interrupted in her speech by one of the persons present, and the latter is finally called upon to speak. Mr. Duff ascends the tribune and carries the audience to such a pitch of excitement by his theories, which are contrary to those of the suffragists, that he is obliged to escape, and jumps out of the window. Then begins a most exciting pursuit; every moment it seems that Mr. Duff is to be overtaken by his pursuers; he tries to explain, and in his excitement he does not perceive that he has reached the end of a pier, and falls backwards into the water. His wife follows. Fortunately, someone in a motor boat catches sight of the couple as they fall, and noticing the excitement of the pursuers, who hesitate to throw themselves in the river, he hastens to the spot and rescues Mr. Duff, who has fainted, and his wife, who is very much alive. The crowd cheers the man who has saved the couple from drowning.
Mr. Duff is very sick in bed. He is surrounded by all the suffragists of note and his wife gives him some nourishment whilst one of the ladies reads something which will teach him quiet and resignation.

PATHE FRERES.

THE BELATED WEDDING.—An extremely amusing incident is revealed in this picture, which shows how the plans of several wedding parties were upset by the dilatoriness of the mayor of a little town, where the happy young couples gather at the city hall, to enter into holy wedlock, only to be informed that the mayor is away on a vacation. The righteous indignation and anger of the disappointed assemblage, soon gives way to strenuous merriment, and the whole crowd in passing the time while waiting for the mayor, sing, dance and have a real jolly time. The Registrar sends a hasty wire to the much needed mayor, who is away in the country, entirely forgetful of the fact that he should have returned to town to perform the wedding ceremonies. Upon receiving the message, the absent-minded official who is out fishing, starts immediately for town. After numerous delays and all sorts of accidents, he finally reaches the town hall where he is nearly pulled to pieces by the anxious mob. So effusive is his reception, that he rushes from the place, closely followed by the crowd, who are all trying to be the first couple married. The terrified mayor rushes into a pond to escape his pursuers, but one determined couple follows him, and insists upon being married on the spot. The mayor seeing no other way out of his embarrassing position, rises to the occasion, and performs the ceremony while standing knee deep in the water.

BOB'S ELECTRIC THEATER.—This is a beautifully colored trick picture, and opens, showing the interior of the nursery where Bob, who has a miniature electric theater, given him for his birthday, gives a performance for the benefit of his brother and sister. The two little actors give evidence of their wonderful skill in the arts of fencing, boxing, wrestling and all sorts of clever acrobatic stunts.

A HOME WITHOUT CHILDREN.—As an interesting study of human nature, this beautiful picture stands in a class by itself, and is bound to evoke enthusiasm wherever it is shown. The characters are cleverly portrayed by famous French artists, who handle their parts in an intelligent manner, bringing out every detail of the tender, sweet little story, making it wholly inspiring and elevating.
The story treats upon the lives of a happily married couple who have everything that money can buy, but lack that which they most desire—the love of a tender little child. The man has been married before, and although having a little girl who is being cared for by a friend, he has never informed his wife of the existence of the youngster. The good woman is a philanthropist, and makes daily trips to the homes of the rich, collecting money for the orphans. One day she happens into the place where her husband's little daughter is living, and without ever realizing that the child is so closely related to her, she takes a great fancy to the little girl, and the feeling being mutual, it is with great difficulty that the kind hearted woman tears herself away from the child. Immediately after her departure, her husband comes to visit his little girl, and while the latter is telling her daddy of the strange lady, he picks up the parasol which she left behind, and immediately recognizes it as the property of his wife. At this juncture the latter returns for the parasol, and is greatly surprised to meet her husband, of whom she demands an explanation. The bewildered man confesses, but his wife who doubts his veracity, leaves the place after denouncing him for his base deception. The couple arrive home about the same time, and the husband is not long in convincing his wife that all he said was true, for going to his desk he produces the last letter he ever received from his former wife, before she died, in which she requests him to marry again and be kind to their little girl. The good woman upon hearing the truth of the matter starts out immediately, and soon returns with the child, whom she takes to her heart, and gladly accepts the little one into the happy home, where she will be raised under the careful guidance of her father and stepmother who loves her like her own.

HUNTING JACK RABBITS IN HUNGARIA.—In Hungaria the jack rabbits are so numerous that their presence reaches the proportion of a common pest in the rural districts, where they destroy agricultural products in such large quantities that the losses sustained by their ravishment is greatly felt by the farmers. For this reason, the latter form a crusade against the destructive creatures during the Winter months, and in this interesting picture we are shown how the farmers turn sportsmen in their efforts to rid the country of the rodents. The men travel in large groups, going through the underbrush, where they drive the rabbits out into the open, and as the animals take flight, leaping and bounding across the snow covered farms, the sharpshooters fire upon them. It is all done in a sportsmanlike manner, for in no way is the game trapped, their destruction depending wholly upon the sure fire of the hunters. After the hunt some wonderful specimens are shown in large quantities.

DRINK.—Part One: The opening scene shows the interior of the squalid little home, where Gervaise has waited all night for Lantier's return, but when the latter enters the place, he casts the tearful woman aside with a gesture of ill-humor, begging her to leave him in peace. Gervaise takes her bundle of clothes and starts for the public wash house, where, after being assigned to a place, she begins her toil. A young woman named Virginie enters, and taking her place at a tub next to Gervaise, taunts the latter about the loss of her lover, for it is Virginie who has supplanted Gervaise in the affections of Lantier. Soon a little boy arrives at the laundry with a note which he hands to Gervaise, and the latter on opening it reads the following soul-crushing words: "I have had enough of your jealous outbursts, and have decided to leave you. Don't worry about me; I have found consolation. Lantier." The disconsolate woman's rival stands by with a triumphant sneer on her face and under her breath makes slurring remarks, whereupon Gervaise turns on Virginie, giving her a terrible beating. Gervaise has still another shock in store for her, for on leaving the place she is horrified to see her rival Virginie enter a cab with Lantier and drive away.
The next scene takes place a few months later, when we see Coupeau, who has been Gervaise's staunch friend all through her sorrow, meet the latter in the park and propose marriage to her. The happy Gervaise accepts the generous hearted fellow, and on their way home they stop to inform their friends of the coming event. Gervaise, who has a strong aversion to drink, makes Coupeau swear that he will never touch a drop of intoxicating liquor.
The couple are married and live happily together for five years, for Coupeau, who is a tinsmith, works steadily and is devoted to his wife and proud of

Kalem Films

Issue of October 22d, 1909

A BROTHER'S WRONG

LENGTH 955 FEET

An absorbing dramatic portrayal of how a brother's jealousy sent a man into exile with a shadow over his name that was only lifted by the erring brother's dying confession. A powerful theme splendidly presented. One well known critic said. "It is a rare treat to find in a single film such a combination of perfect photography and good acting."

Free Descriptive Lecture to all applicants.

Kalem Posters in Four Colors are Supplied by the A. B. C. Co., Cleveland, O.

KALEM CO., Inc.

Licensee of the Motiou Picture Patents Co.

EASTMAN KODAK BLDG.

235-239 W. 23d St., New York City

SONG SLIDES

$3.50 THE SET

The New Slides for the New Songs

Fraidy Cat.
Stop Your Teasing.
'Neath The Arbor Vita Tree.
Mary Brown.
When The Robin Sings Again.
Let Me Prove My Love To You.

A new song added weekly. Send for special standing order proposition.

NEOSHO SLIDE COMPANY
100 S. Wood Street, Neosho, Mo.

THEATRE FOR SALE

Big money making moving picture theatre, 455 seats, 150 standing room, 30,000 population.

GEO. COHEN, Jamestown, N. Y.

BIOGRAPH FILMS

TRADE MARK TRADE MARK

Released October 18th, 1909

His Lost Love

A Brother's Sacrifice and Its Outcome

To yield our beloved for the sake of their happiness is one of the noblest sacrifices man can make. There is a note of unselfishness in it that is without parallel. Such was the deed of the hero of our story. Luke and James are brothers. James goes to London, but Luke remains among the simple country home folk. Mary was the childhood sweetheart of James, who forgets her in the business whirl of the metropolis, and Luke's tender attentions move her young heart and they become affianced. James, however, revisits the old home, and the old love is enkindled. Luke, considering only her happiness, surrenders in James' favor. They marry, but Jim neglects Mary for her sister, finally deserting her to leave with the sister. The shock proves fatal to the poor wife, and Luke now realizes that woe instead of happiness is the outcome of his sacrifice, so he resolves to give his life to the care of her little baby, which is now orphanaged.

Length, 958 feet.

Released October 21st, 1909

The Expiation

Atonement of a Self-Accused Wrong

Expiation is invariably the act of a noble heart. It is a self-satisfaction as well as reparation for a deed the world may fully condone, but the consistent mind will accept no such condonation if the conscience is disturbed. While the heroine of this Biograph story was in no way responsible for the tragic end of her husband, yet she felt that it was due solely to her actions that he took the rash step. He was a confirmed dipsomaniac and irretrievably lost to the drink habit. Night after night he is assisted home by a friend of the family. This friend at first bears profound sympathy for the wife, as she appreciates his kindness. Later, however, they love, but honor compels them to dissemble. The friend decides to leave for the West to avoid a wrong. He must at least say "good-bye." This meeting is misconstrued by the husband, who, to rid them of his unworthy self, commits suicide. The wife resolves to spend the rest of her life in expiation of the deed she felt she incurred.

Length, 992 feet.

A Full Description of these Subjects will be Found on Another Page

Release days of Biograph Subjects — MONDAY and THURSDAY

Get on Our Mail List and Keep Posted. Write for Our Descriptive Circulars

BIOGRAPH COMPANY

Licensee of the Motion Picture Patents Co.

11 EAST 14th STREET :: NEW YORK

GEORGE KLEINE, Selling Agent for Chicago (52 State St., Chicago, Ill.).

A NEW WAY TO PAINT SIGNS

WITH THE BUTTS SIGN WRITING OUTFITS

Anyone can paint all kind of signs and show cards in half the time required by the old way and much better. We furnish these Special Outfits complete with ten alphabets and three sets of figures of the most modern styles of the day, from 2 to 12 inches in height, not printed alphabets but the real letter, cut out of the most durable material. We also furnish with this outfit a complete book of instructions for painting all kinds of signs and cards and a selection of beautiful designs, and guarantee that anyone can do perfect lettering as soon as he receives the outfit.

Special Price For a Short Time Only $5.00. Send in your order to-day.
None sent C. O. D. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money refunded.

THE BUTTS SIGN & NOVELTY CO., 228 Temple Court Bldg DENVER, COLORADO

their little home. Virginie, however, has never forgotten the humiliation she endured that eventful day in the laundry, when Gervaise attacked her, and she is ever on the alert to have revenge. One day when Gervaise and her little daughter carry Coupeau his lunch, we see the latter come down from the housetop where he is working, and going with his little family to a secluded spot, he enjoys a hearty repast. Virginie, who has been haunting the neighborhood, climbs upon the scaffolding and loosens some of the boards. As Coupeau climbs the ladder to return to work he stops for a moment to wave good-bye to his dear ones, when suddenly the planks give way under his feet and he is precipitated to the ground below. The other workmen who hurry to the scene tenderly raise the injured man and carry him to his home.

Part Two: During Coupeau's convalescence, Gervaise has a birthday, and in honor of the event the happy couple give a little party to their few good friends. It is at this function that Gervaise sees her husband take his first drink. From that day, Coupeau loses all ambition and self-respect, and refuses to return to work. His poor wife is made to shoulder the responsibilities of the household while he spends his time in the tavern. One day Coupeau happens to meet Lantier in the saloon and in the course of conversation bets the latter than he can drink eight brandies while the clock strikes eight. The wager is placed, but Coupeau loses, for he is only able to finish six before he is helplessly intoxicated. At this juncture Gervaise enters the place and, seeing the condition of her husband, begs him to go home with her, but the drunken man positively refuses to move. Finally Coupeau is attacked with delirium tremens and after a difficult struggle with his companions, is carried a raving maniac to the hospital, where he remains for two years.

On leaving the hospital, Coupeau is warned against the use of strong liquors; the smallest glass, he is told, will cause immediate death; he may, however, partake of a very little red wine. He is accompanied home by a friend, who stops on the way and purchases a bottle of wine. Great indeed is the joy in the little home when Coupeau arrives, and after an effusive greeting, Gervaise takes her basket and hastens off to purchase some food for the poor invalid. While Gervaise is absent the heartless Virginie slips into the room and substitutes a bottle of whiskey for the wine. Soon the sick man feels the need of a drink, so going to the closet he picks up the bottle and raises it to his mouth, but scarcely has it touched his lips when he realizes that he is doomed. Burning with the desire for liquor, the unfortunate man drains the bottle of its contents and is immediately seized with delirium tremens. After much suffering the victim of drink falls prostrate upon the floor, where his lifeless form is found by his unhappy wife upon her return.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO.

THE COWBOY MILLIONAIRE.—Bud Noble, a handsome specimen of manhood, is foreman on the Circle "D" ranch outside of Circle City, Idaho, and our opening scene pictures Bud as the cowboy roping and tying a steer.

With its bucking broncbos, pitching mustangs, bucking steers, and the biggest novelty ever—the acme of all thrillers—"see Bud bulldog a steer." Only three men have successfully accomplished this feat and lived to tell about it.

Then Bud receives a shock. The local operator appears with a telegram.

"Your Uncle John dead. You are sole heir to his estate valued at several millions. Come to Chicago at once."

The astounded cowboys tumble over with sheer amazement. Bud buys and the scene closes with a characteristic rush for the bar.

"One year later" Bud tires of society. We see Bud and his new wife entertaining and our cowboy shows plainly that he is desperately weary of the effete East, then Bud goes to the club and the men he meets there and their conversation is getting on his nerves. "After the theater"—a return home and Bud longs for the fresh air of the vast West. As he sinks wearily into a chair a Remington painting catches his eye. It is one he had recently purchased—a broncho buster and his locoed horse. The artist had caught the wild spirit of his subject, and as Bud's mind returns to scenes of a similar nature, a happy inspiration comes. "By Jove, I'll do it." He seizes a telegraph blank, rings for his butler, and sends the following message:

"Col. Dalton, Foreman Circle 'D' Ranch,

"This high brow life is killing me. Am sending you special train. Bring the whole outfit, hand, horses and all. This town needs excitement. Come and help wake it up. BUD."

A few days later we see the boys at a swell suburban depot; Bud and his wife in their auto, and the punchers in chaps and sombreros soon create a world of exeltement on the city streets. Then Bud takes the boys yachting; next to see a melodrama, where the Colonel takes exceptions to the villain's heartless treatment of "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl." "Bud, either send those horrid creatures back where they came from or I get a divorce," declares Mrs. Bud. So the boys are next seen in a palatial cafe car homeward bound. The Colonel gets into an argument with the colored cook and that worthy dives through an open car window to escape the cowboy's wrath.

Our closing scene is in the cozy home of the millionaire. He and his wife are enjoying a quiet tete-a-tete when the butler hands in a telegram. It reads:

"On roof. Everybody enjoyin' theirselves. The Colonel sure some happy. He just shot a coon. Will send the bill to you. THE BOYS."

Bud laughs heartily. The wife joins and as she nestles up to her big manly husband, says: "You won't ever want to be a cowboy again, will you, Bud?" Bud turns slowly; looks at the Remington painting which has been the innocent cause of their recent quarrel, and walking over, he turns the picture to the wall, holds out his arms to his wife, and as her head nestles against his shoulder, we plainly catch his words, "Never Again."

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

THE MEXICAN'S REVENGE.—A delightful love story of Southern California with an intensely dramatic episode which holds breathless attention, but from which the hero is extricated in sensational fashion to form a happy conclusion. It is a fete day in one of the coast towns just above the Mexican border and the officers of a United States warship have come ashore to enjoy the fun and visit the old mission which was built a couple of centuries before the settlement of the State by Americans. They mingle with the merrymakers, and one, Rosita, the acknowledged beauty of the town, attracts the attention of the captain of the cruiser. He asks the Padre for an introduction and this request is granted. It is apparent that the captain has strongly caught the fancy of the pretty Rosita, for she gives him a rose with a smile and a glance far more eloquent than the gift. The incident has not escaped the jealous observation of Don Ramon Molina, a rauch owner, who intends to marry Rosita himself when he gets ready. There are words, to which the only answer is a blow, and Molina's ready knife leaps from its sheath. He is knocked down and now he is doubly eager for revenge. But the American is not slow to press his advantage. He wins Rosita's heart and her mother's consent to their marriage and, as the cruiser is to sail shortly, preparations are hurried forward for the wedding. The day of the ceremony Molina lies in wait for his enemy and as the captain comes galloping along, attended by his best man, they are dragged from their horses by well-thrown ritas and Molina and his friends hurry the captain off to the timber. The lieutenant is left for dead, but he soon revives and makes what speed he can to where the wedding guests are waiting. Meanwhile the captain is securely bound and laid beneath a tree from the branches of which hangs an immense boulder, to which a rope is attached. The other end of this rope is carried some distance away and beneath this end a fire is built. There is a strain of Indian blood in Molina's veins and he would first torture and then kill his victim. The rope will take some time to burn through. When it does it will fall directly upon the helpless man, but meanwhile the suspense is far more terrible than even the thought of death. The men are gathered about enjoying the situation when, with a rush, Rosita leads the bluejackets to the rescue. The lieutenant has given warning in time and Rosita draws her lover out of the way the instant before the half-ton rock comes crashing to the earth. Molina is placed in custody and the wedding party hurried back to the hacienda, where the ceremony is soon completed and the festivities are resumed.

A DULL KNIFE.—Maggie starts to slice some ham for luncheon, but the knife is too dull. It will have to be sharpened before she can go on with her work, and at that moment she hears the bell of the knife grinder and charges for the street. She startles a beggar woman, who decides that she is crazy and running amuck, and she flies from the assassin. The grinder steps into a store to see if there are any jobs for him, and Maggie, coming around the corner too late, does not observe this fact and puts on more speed to catch up with the elusive grinder. She gives no heed to the attention she is attracting, and though she starts a full-grown panic and a crowd madly rushes away from what they suppose to be butchery, she does not pause in her mad flight until she tears through a sidewalk band, throwing the terror-stricken musicians right and left, to turn her weapon over to another knife grinder. Then for the first time the crowd realizes what the trouble is and, sheepishly enough, they disperse.

COSETTE.—The third in the series of films de luxe based upon incidents of Victor Hugo's Les Miserables. Cosette will be found to be a worthy successor to The Galley Slave and Fantine. Although telling a complete story in itself, the action forms a continuation of the earlier releases. Jean Valjean has escaped from the galleys at Toulon and is supposed to have been drowned, but he is seen emerging from the sea and concealing himself in the thicket. He makes his way to the little village of Montfermeil, where, when eluding the police after the galley slave had been recognized as M. Madeleine, the Mayor of his town, he buried the money he withdrew from the Paris bank. Provided with funds he makes his way to the inn of the Thenardiers, where poor little Cosette, the child of the dead Fantine, is the slave of the brutal innkeeper and his still more callous wife. Jean purchases Cosette's freedom, but Thenardier repents his bargain and the letter given Jean by Fantine, to whom he had promised the release of her child, is produced. Jean hurries away with the child and makes for Paris, but here he is again recognized by Inspector Javert and is pursued by the police. He seeks safety in scaling the wall of the Convent of Little Picpus, and here he finds Fanchlebant, whom he had befriended in the old days. The old man secretes him in the coffin prepared for the dead nun as the soldiers demand admittance. To evade suspicion old Fanchlebant accepts the proffered aid of the soldiers in burying the coffin, and though each spadeful of earth brings the cold sweat to his brow, he continues his task until the soldiers retire and he is able to break open the coffin and remove the insensible man.

THE WEEK'S RELEASES AT A GLANCE.

Monday, October 18.

Biograph—His Lost Love (Dr.).
Luhin—The Major and the Judge (Com.).
Luhin—Haps and Mishaps (Com.).
Pathe—The Belated Wedding (Com.).
Pathe—Boh's Electric Theater (Com.).
Selig—A Tale of the Backwoods (Dr.).

Tuesday, October 19.

Edison—Their Social Education (Com.).
Gaumont—The Help Mate (Dr.).
Gaumont—Husband's Strategy (Dr.).
Vitagraph—The Mexican's Revenge (Dr.).
Vitagraph—A Dull Knife (Com.).

Wednesday, October 20.

Essanay—The Widow (Com.).
Essanay—A Woman's Wit (Com.).
Melies—For the Cause of Suffrage (Com.).
Pathe—A Home Without Children (Dr.).
Urban—Casting Bread Upon the Water.
Urban—Crown Prince of Germany Drilling Battery (Scenic).

Thursday, October 21.

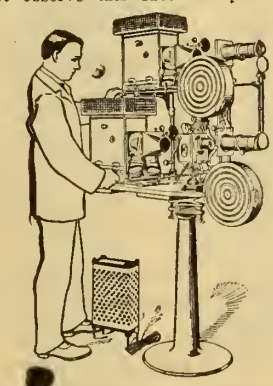
Biograph—The Expiation (Dr.).
Luhin—Mignon (Dr.).
Luhin—Aunt Lena's Visit (Com.).
Selig—The Cowboy Millionaire (Dr.).

Friday, October 22.

Edison—The Lost Handbag (Com.).
Edison—A Great Game (Com.).
Kalem—A Brother's Wrong (Dr.).
Pathe—Drink (Dr.).

Saturday, October 23.

Gaumont—Tickled to Death (Com.).
Gaumont—Country Life in a Flat (Com.).
Pathe—Part II. of Drink (Dr.).
Vitagraph—Cosette (Dr.).



Successful Exhibitors

insist upon using the Best Machine and Film Service. We sell the best. We are special agents for the Motiograph, Powers, Edison and other machines.

There's a big difference in Motion Picture Machines but our book entitled "The Motion Picture Theatre" tells all you want to know about the motion picture business and it's yours for the asking.

Are You Satisfied with your Film Service? If not, write us. We get at least one copy of each of the 18 reels produced by the licensed manufacturers each week.

We feel sure we can improve your service. Tell us your requirements and we'll submit you prices.

THEATRE FILM SERVICE CO., 85-87 Dearborn St., Chicago, Ill.

SLIDES
of Highest Quality

LATEST SONG SETS

Happiness.
There's a Mother Old and Gray Who Needs Me Now.
I'd Rather Be With You On Old Broadway.
Pansy, The Moon is Shining.
Someone Else.
Hello, Angel Face.
Oh! What I Know About You?
My Southern Rose.
I'm Going To Do What I Please.
I Wonder If I'll Ever Have A Sweetheart.

High class slides made and colored to order from prints and negatives

Scott & Van Altena
59 Pearl St., New York City

THE LANG REWINDER
Is Recognized as the Standard of the World.
Sold Everywhere.
PRICE, FIVE DOLLARS NET
MANUFACTURED BY
The Lang Manufacturing Co.
Olean, New York, U. S. A.
Send for 1909–'10 3d Edition Catalogue

FILMS SLIGHTLY USED FOR SALE
From $7.50 per Reel Up
Electra Carbons, 5/8 x 6, $2.25 per 100 — Pure White Condensers, 55 cents each
Noninflamable Cement, 15 cents a bottle
New and Secondhand Edison and Power Machines and General Supplies
STERLING FILM CO., 32 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK

United Film Sales Company
Have a large stock of late INDEPENDENT FILM FOR SALE AT BARGAIN PRICES. Write or wire for list of subjects. Prices 1 to 5c per foot. We deal in good Film only and are not renters.
Phone Gramercy 2369 — 30 East 23rd Street, New York City

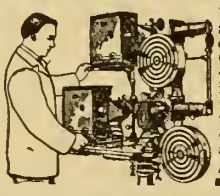
FILMS FOR RENT
6, 12 or 18 Reels of Film a Week
$2.00 per change. All in good condition
Signs and Banners no extra charge
FOR SALE—20 reels of film at $10.00 per reel
Send for one of our steel slide carriers. Can't burn. Won't break. 75c.
LIBERTY FILM RENTING COMPANY
Fulton Building - - - - Pittsburg, Pa.

INTERNATIONAL FILM COMPANY
110 West Thirty-fourth Street New York City
Dealers in Films, Moving Picture Machines and Supplies, Song Slides, Announcement Slides, Carbons, Tickets, Etc.
FILMS FOR SALE. $8, $10, $12 and $15 per reel.
One Pin Edison Machine and Power's No. 5 For Sale. OUR SPECIALTY—A-1 Films at two cents per foot.

Simpson's Celebrated Song Slides
The Finest Made. $5 per Set
All of the New Song Hits.
A. L. SIMPSON, 113 W. 132 St., New York City

BIG MONEY IN SHOWING MOTION PICTURES


but when you need a Machine or supplies write to us. We are Specialists on Machines and Supplies, and we can save you money and increase your profits. C. H. D. writes: "Making a Big Hit, Business increased wonderfully." Astonishing opportunity in any locality for a Man with a little money. Experience not necessary. Easy to start. We tell you how. We sell the MOTIOGRAPH, Powers, Edison and all other Machines and Supplies. We negotiate a first class Film and Song Slide Rental Service. Write for Catalog.
Amusement Supply Co., 833 Ill. Bank Bldg., 115 Dearborn St. Chicago

SLIDES NOW READY
FOR THE FOLLOWING HITS

It's A Lonely World Without You.
There's Something Fascinating 'Bout the Moon.
Take Me Up In Your Airship Willie.
Carrie or Carrie Marry Harry.
Rosa Rosetta.
Show Me the Way.
How Do You Do Miss Josephine.
Red Head.

CLIMAX VIEW COMPANY
133-137 West 23rd Street, New York

SONG SLIDES. LECTURE SLIDES.

WE MAKE SONG SLIDES AS GOOD AS THEY CAN BE MADE FOR MONEY.

WE DON'T MAKE ANY BETTER SLIDES THAN OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BUT NO SLIDE MAKER MAKES BETTER SLIDES THAN WE DO.

WE DO NOT CUT PRICES TO ENTICE OUR NEIGHBORS' CUSTOMERS AWAY FROM THEM. WE WANT OUR GOODS TO SELL ON MERIT ALONE, NOT BECAUSE THEY ARE CHEAPER THAN THE PRODUCT OF OTHER GOOD SLIDE MAKERS, BECAUSE THEY ARE NOT. ALL CHEAP SLIDES, LIKE SHODDY CLOTHING, ARE INFERIOR.

WE INTEND TO MAKE SLIDES SO GOOD THAT OUR CUSTOMERS WILL BE WILLING TO PAY THE HIGHEST PRICE FOR THEM.

WE MAKE NO MISREPRESENTATIONS ABOUT OUR GOODS.

OUR SONG SLIDES ARE FIVE DOLLARS PER SET.

To Standing Order Customers we give 10 PER CENT. DISCOUNT.

WE HAVE OVER SIXTY DIFFERENT SUBJECTS FOR LECTURETTES, AT $6.00 PER SET.

LOOK IN THE LIST OF SLIDE MAKERS IN THIS PAPER FOR OUR NEW GOODS NOW BEING ISSUED. SEND FOR LIST.

THE HENRY B. INGRAM CO., INC.,
42 West Twenty-eighth Street, New York.

Genuine Independent Films
We have been buying altogether nothing but the real genuine Independent Films for the last 2 years and we have on hand more Independent Films than all other Independent Exchanges in this territory. Gaumont, Eclair, Lux, Radius, Powhaton, Centaur, Bison, Film Import, Les Lions and Great Northern. We can serve two or three shows in any town. We remodel, rebuild and sell all makes of machines and automatic pianos.
WAGNER FILM AMUSEMENT COMPANY, 120 N. Third Street Machine Dept. 208 N. Fourth Street, Film Dept., St. Louis

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.

ALMOST A SUICIDE.—Clarence Smythe is married to a charming young woman, whose only fault is that she will sing and accompany herself on the mandolin. During one of these performances, after dinner, wifey catches Charlie asleep. She shows her displeasure at his lack of appreciation of her singing by breaking the mandolin over his head, and announcing to him that he is a horrid man, and that she is going right back home to mother. Despite Clarence's appeals wife flounces out of the house. Clarence is hearthroken. He determines to commit suicide. Writes wifey note: "Life is not worth while without you, so I am going to commit suicide.—Clarence."

First he tries hanging himself with a curtain cord to the chandelier, but the cord breaks and Clarence lands on the floor with a dull, sickening thud.

There are other ways. He looks about and finds a revolver. He points it at his head and pulls the trigger. But the revolver will not shoot. Then Clarence remembers that there is some rat poison in the kitchen. He is about to take a dose of it when he notices that the label guarantees a slow and painful death. "Not for me," says Clarence. "There are easier ways." He goes to the kitchen and gets a carving knife. Meauwhile Second Story Bill, an enterprising burglar, enters the house. As Clarence comes in with the carving knife uplifted the burglar seizes him, and then gets the surprise of his life. Clarence begs the burglar to kill him; and when the latter refuses to do so, Clarence gives him a large sum of money to plunge the knife into his vitals. Wifey, who has changed her mind about going home to mother, re-enters just as the burglar lifts the knife to kill her Clarence. With a shriek she grasps the burglar's arm and pleads with him not to kill her beloved Clarence. The burglar insists on finishing the job he has been paid for. Wifey gives him all her jewels, and the burglar with a laugh takes his leave. Clarence and wifey embrace. Clarence reaches behind wifey, picks up the note that he had written telling her of his intention to kill himself, and tears it into bits.

THE PURSE.—A laboring man returns to the wretched attic room that shelters himself and his sick wife after a fruitless search for any work that will save them from starvation. The sick wife's pitiful pleadings for food drive the despairing husband to resolve that he will get money regardless of the means.

We see the poor fellow begging from a well-to-do gentleman and his richly clad wife in front of their mansion.

The rich man refuses the poor laborer's plea, and the latter, hardened by despair, snatches the silver purse from the hand of the lady and runs away with it, pursued by the rich man and a policeman.

A thrilling man hunt follows. The laborer jumps over a fence and thinking he is safe he goes into a grocery store and buys some food, wine, and firewood. As he comes out full of the happy thought that he can bring food and warmth to his suffering wife, the policeman seizes him. A struggle, short but exciting, follows. The laborer knocks the policeman down and escapes.

The laborer enters his attic room and forgets his dangerous position at sight of his wife's smiling face when he shows her the food and wine, and explains that he has "found some money."

Footsteps are heard. The husband hides the purse just as the policeman enters the room. Deaf to the agonizing appeals of the sick wife to release her husband, the policeman drags the poor wretch toward the door.

At this moment the rich man enters. At a glance he realizes the awful situation of the poor laborer. A generous tip to the police secures the release of the laborer; the purse is given back and the benevolent rich man offers his hand of friendship to the laborer, then exits.

When the has gone, the dumbfounded victim of a terrible temptation finds in his hand a hundred dollar bill. With a cry of joy the poor laborer clasps his wife in his arms and hope shines in their faces.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

IONA, THE WHITE SQUAW.—A small child, not yet worldly wise enough to join in the wild rush made by the men and women of the mining settlement to inspect a gold nugget found by one, is carried off by an Indian. The women upon returning to their duties, and discovering what has happened, gives the alarm, and the men go in pursuit, but are unsuccessful in finding the little girl. The Indian rides into his camp with the child and tells of her captive. A young girl befriends her and taking her into a tepee, dresses her as an Indian, to the delight of all. The proprietor of a Western inn reads that a large reward is offered for the return of a girl stolen by Indians fifteen years ago. He and his friends are discussing the matter, when a stage coach pulls up to the tavern and a young man alights. He makes known he is the brother of the mining child, and tells the story of her disappearance. One cowboy leaves the party, and when an Indian boy rides up he asks him about the little girl. He will reveal nothing, but after he is presented with liquor, tells that the child is at his camp. The cowboy returns with the Indian and is shown welcome by all. He sees Iona, the white girl, and succeeds in speaking with her, arranging for her escape. They mount a horse and ride to the tavern. The cowboy gets the reward from the girl's brother for her recovery. The Indian boy comes into the inn, but is prevented from doing harm by Iona's rescuer. He finally leaves the place and Iona with her brother and another get into the stage coach and start away. The Indians, who have been warned by the boy of events, overtake the coach and recapture Iona. They return to their camp, and pull down the tepees and pack preparatory to moving. The driver of the coach returns to the tavern, tells of the mishaps, and the cowboys go in search of Iona. They reach the Indian camp, and finding it deserted, go further on. The Indians are overtaken and a fight ensues. The chief is about to end Iona's life, but a cowboy lassoes him, and the girl is rescued. From the opening scene to the finale, this picture is one of lively interest. The portrayal of Indian life is remarkable for its truth.

PHOENIX FILM CO.

THE TELEPHONE CALL.

It tells the story of a man who lives in a suburban town and who is called to the city on business. While away, burglars enter his house and overcome his wife. She communicates with him by telephone, telling him that burglars are in the house and he finally, after an exciting ride, arrives in time to capture the thieves.

The story opens showing a desperate-looking character sitting in the park. A little girl, our hero's daughter, sees him there and they become quite friendly. Their acquaintance ends when her mother takes her away. As they leave the park he is approached by a fellow cracksman, Jim, with a plan to burglarize the little girl's home. They are talking about it when the butler comes on the scene and gives them the ground plans of the house. A beautiful outdoor scene showing the road leading from the park, the mother and little girl walking along it will bring utterances of "Oh! how grand!" from all who see this film. It is here we again find Joe looking longingly after the little girl, but Jim, his pal, chastises him, and drags him away, warning him that they had some important business on hand.

The next scene opens showing Mr. Martin bidding his wife and child good-bye and leaving the address of the hotel at which he intends to stop. In order to drive away their fear of being left alone, he places his revolver in a drawer and calls his wife's attention to it. He then kisses her and the child good-bye and leaves.

He reaches the hotel in the city in the next scene, unaware that his butler enters his home, takes the revolver left for his wife's protection and makes an excuse for leaving the house. As soon as the butler leaves, his wife telephones and you can see him in the hotel cafe trying to cheer her up as she talks. The scene ends with the mother holding the little one up to the phone to exchange kisses with her father, and the butler on the outside showing his pals how to enter the house. His wife seems to scent impending danger and her fear becomes greater. Suddenly she notices a shadow and hears someone trying to unlock the door. She hurriedly puts the child in a chair and places an extra key in the lock and rushes to tell her husband.

It is in the next scene where the acting is superb. The husband in the cafe is called to the phone and his wife at the other end tells him that burglars are trying to enter the house. He reminds her of the revolver he left in the bureau drawer; she goes there only to find it gone and then rushes back to the phone. As she speaks to him she sees the burglars enter and her poor husband hears her scream. You can tell his agony from his facial expression as he listens for her voice again. The burglars seize her and as they do the frantic man rushes out of the cafe and makes his way to the depot, but upon arrival learns that all suburban trains have gone. He must get to his wife in some way and the closing scene shows the frantic father racing for life in order to get to the rescue of his wife and child.

But they are not to be harmed, as Jim recognizes the little girl as the one he met in the park and decides to protect her and her mother. A hot fight between him and his former pal is taking place when the father enters.

"DE LUXE" SLIDES
Posed from life, extremely beautifully colored, and the "CRY" of the year.
"Wild Rose" (Remick)
"Bonnie Annie Laurie" (Remick)
"Kangaroo" (Shapiro) Novelty Song
"Cherokee Maid" (Rossiter)
AT $4.00 PER SET
EXCELSIOR SLIDE CO.
138 East 14th Street = NEW YORK
P. S. 300 Slides Like New at $1.25 Per Set

Mention the Moving Picture World.

FILMS HOWARD MOVING PICTURE CO. FILMS
Repair Work a Specialty. Agents for Motiograph, Power's and Edison Machines. Supplies and Sundries.
564 Washington Street, - - Boston Mass.
Established 1894. (Opposite Adams House). Incorporated 1908.

THIS WILL GET THEM GOING

This colored 28 cents postpaid
We Make Slides at RIGHT PRICES
ANNOUNCEMENTS Colored 28c. each
Slides from Photos for Contests
SINGERS and ADVERTISERS
Plain 40c. each
Colored 50c. each
TICKETS—Contest Coupon 22½c. (1000)
OUR BABY SHOW GETS THE MONEY
Economy Supply Depot
77 So. Clark Street, Chicago

COMPENSARC

That's the device that saves Moving Picture men two-thirds on their electric light bills, and yet gives better light. Did you see our ad last week? Well, don't look it up. Just write for our

Booklet 15018

FORT WAYNE ELECTRIC WORKS
1402 Broadway
FORT WAYNE, INDIANA. 733

Mention the Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE
Second-Hand Films

Have a lot of Independent and Association Films in good condition that will sell CHEAP to anyone acting quick.

Address FILMS
Care of Moving Picture World

"The Exhibitors' Friend"

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE, New York City

Dear Sirs: Your last shipment of reels at hand. That's the kind that makes a "HIT."
(Signed) J. H. Mc.

This is one of many letters received and is on exhibition. Let us give you a chance to write the same thing.

The following Brand New Biograph prints for sale. Never on a machine, 6c :

TRIAL MARRIAGES	STORY THE BIOGRAPH TOLD
PAYMASTER	UNDER the OLD APPLE TREE
THE TRUANTS	ALMOST A KING
KENTUCKY FEUD	FIGHTING THE FLAMES

PURDY'S FILM EXCHANGE
300 EAST 23d STREET - - - NEW YORK CITY

Opera Chairs

of Standard dimensions—in plainest to most elaborate design.

Several styles of inexpensive stock chairs, suitable for Vaudeville and Moving Picture Theatres.

Walk into any theatre in your city, and you'll probably see them.

Write for Booklet T-13

Samples and prices submitted on application.

AMERICAN SEATING COMPANY

CHICAGO
NEW YORK
BOSTON
PHILADELPHIA
Branches

215 Wabash Ave.
19 W. 18th St.
70 Franklin St.
1235 Arch Street.
Everywhere

Mention the Moving Picture World.

Classified Advertising.

Rate 3 cents per word, Cash with order.

FOR SALE—One No. 5 Power's Cameragraph; also Edison one-pin movement. Bargains. Address "B," care Moving Picture World.

WANTED—Small set scenery cheap. State particulars to P. O. Box 85, Rockaway Beach, L. I., N. Y.

WANTED—To buy Pathe Passion Play; must be in good condition. Apply immediatcly. Mr. F. L., 98 St. Lawrence Boulevard, Montreal.

FOR SALE—New Edison Calcium Gas Outfit, consisting of generator, saturator, tuhing, dynamic burner and two boxes of oxone. Address CALCIUM, Box 111, Ridgewood, N. J.

THEATRES FOR SALE.

FOR SALE—Half interest in picture theater, Massachusetts; city of 40,000. No competition. Great opportunity. Capacity 500. Address "SACRIFICE," care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Five-cent Theater, doing good business, in one of the best manufacturing cities of 10,000 in State of Indiana. Everything in No. 1 shape. $900 takes it; be quick. I. E. WRIGHT, Fern Theater, New Castle, Ind.

ORPHEUM THEATER for sale; good business; 175 seats; Power's machine; Peerless piano; steel booth; raised floor. Address, Manager Orpheum Theater, 23 Main St., Lockport, N. Y.

FOR SALE—Moving Picture Theater; fine location; good Connecticut city; doing good business; 400 seats; other business, reasons for selling. Address DALEY, care Moving Picture World.

FOR SALE—Theater in town of 26,000 in New York State. First class condition. Bargain for quick sale. Address COHOES, care of Moving Picture world.

THEATRES WANTED.

WILL BUY moving picture theater in city of ten thousand or over. Central States or Middle West. Every detail first letter. Address H. E. BENDER, 450 W. Exchange St., Akron, O.

SITUATIONS WANTED.

AT LIBERTY, A-1 piano player, wishes position in a moving picture theater. Address Miss J. Freeman, 317 North Elm street, Nevada, Mo.

WANTED—Position with person or persons operating chain of amusement houses. Business, advertising sign painter, pictorial work, lantern slide photographer, small scenery. For particulars and references address A. Maxfield, 235 Thurhers avenue, Providence, R. I.

A. Lewis, 234 Ninth Ave., New York, would like position as manager or operator. Good references. New York license.

LICENSED OPERATOR, experienced, references, desires permanent position. Address F. L. R., care of Beach, 255 W. 22d St., New York.

MANAGER—Experienced in moving pictures and vaudeville, press work, baritone singer, lecturer and producer; reasonable salary; good references; responsible parties only. C. W. LAWFORD, Coudersport, Pa.

TRAP-DRUMMER, at liberty after 30th of month, with full line of traps for picture effects, and experience. LEWIS HECK, Gayety Theater, Lynchburg, Va. (En route.)

SINGER—Young man with good voice desires position to sing in moving picture show. Address ARTHUR CASSIDY, 360 W. 45th St., New York City.

HELP WANTED.

WANTED—Expert film renovator. Permanent position. Give reference and salary expected. Address "FILMS," Moving Picture World.

Here You Are —A—
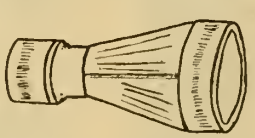
Carbon Sharpener
ONE DOLLAR
Prepaid



Any part of U.S.

Less trouble than a knife or file
A positive quick point. A time saver
Cash with order. No C. O. D.

Clarke Carbon Sharpener
106W. State St. - Rockford, Ills.

INDEPENDENT FILMS

CENTAUR FILM COMPANY.
Film Import and Trading Company.

May	1—Nevada Girl	936 ft.
May	8—Cowboy's Sweetheart	854 ft.
May	14—The Temptations of John Gray	930 ft.
May	22—Johnny and the Indians	877 ft.
May	28—Crystal Ball (Aprrox.	933 ft.
June	19—Love Wins	931 ft.
June	24—Private Brown (Approx.	904 ft.
July	7—Cowboy's Romance (Aprrox.	871 ft.
July	21—Tale of Texas (Approx.	945 ft.
July	28—Maryland, 1777 (Approx.	956 ft.
Aug.	4—Power of Love (Approx.	995 ft.
Aug.	18—The Lost Letter	965 ft.
Aug.	25—The Blacksmith's Daughter	985 ft.
Sept.	1—Peaceful Jones (Approx	932 ft.
Sept.	8—The Diamond Necklace	545 ft.
Sept.	8—The Wishing Charm	545 ft.
Sept.	15—A White Lie (Abont	1000 ft.
Sept.	22—Dan Blake's Rival (About	1000 ft.
Sept.	29—A Close Call (About	1000 ft.
Oct.	6—The Sheriff's Girl	960
Oct.	13—His Mexican Bride	970
Oct.	20—Almost a Suicide	340
Oct.	20—The Purse	650
Oct.	27—For Sale a Baby (Dr.)	600
Oct.	27—Hypnotist's Revenge (Com.)	350

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY.

		Feet.
July	17—A Shadow of the Past (Dr.)	464
July	17—Carnival Merriment in the North	352
July	24—A Clever Nurse (Com.)	450
July	24—Off the Coast of Norway	315
Aug.	14—The Spy (Dr.)	619
Aug.	14—Water Sports	214
Aug.	21—A False Alarm (Com.)	353
Aug.	21—Surroundings of Copenhagen	396
Aug.	28—A Sheli (Dr.)	564
Aug.	28—Cowboys in Argentina	380
Sept.	4—The Henpecked Husband (Com.)	469
Sept.	4—The Cycle Rider (Com.)	195
Sept.	4—Norrkoping	321
Sept.	11—The Gray Dame (Dr.)	968
Sept.	18—Dr. Nicola (Dr.)	989
Sept.	22—Dr. Cook at Copenhagen	419
Sept.	25—The Great Prize (Com.)	451
Sept.	25—Life on Board a Training Ship	540
Oct.	2—Heroism Reconciles (Dr.)	670
Oct.	2—The Cremation	305
Oct.	9—Vagabond Life (Dr.)	412
Oct.	9—Adventures of an Emigrant (Com.)	460
Oct.	16—The Red Domino (Dr.)	902

"I. M. P."

INDEPENDENT MOVING PICTURE CO. OF AMERICA.

Oct.	25—Hiawatha	About 985

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE COMPANY.

		Feet.
May	21—Disinherited Son's Loyalty (Dr.)	887
May	28—A Fishermaid's Romance (Dr.)	806
June	4—Davy Crockett in Hearts United (D.)	836
June	11—The Squaw's Revenge (Dr.)	990
June	18—Jones Gets Arrested (Com.)	450
June	25—A Cowboy's Narrow Escape (Dr.)	965
June	18—A Terrible Attempt (Dr.)	575
July	2—A True Indian's Heart (Dr.)	935
July	9—The Blacksmith's Wife (Dr.)	850
July	16—I Love My Wife, But Oh, You Kid (Com.)	775
July	23—The Gypsy Artist (Dr.)	1000
July	30—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C.)	800
Aug.	6—Sailor's Child (Dr.)	850
Aug.	13—Sheltered Under Stars and Stripes	450
Aug.	13—The Yiddisher Cowboy (Com.)	550
Aug.	20—Half-Breed's Treachery (Dr.)	1000
Aug.	27—Secret Service Woman (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	3—His Two Children (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	10—The Paymaster (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	17—A Kentucky Planter (Dr.)	1000
Sept.	24—A Squaw's Sacrifice (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	1—Faithful Wife (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—Dove Eye's Gratitude (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	15—The Gold Seeker's Daughter	1000
Oct.	22—Ioua, the White Squaw	2000

PHOENIX FILM CO.

Aug.	16—Victim of a Crisis	520
Aug.	16—Salome Craze	435
Aug.	16—Flirtation Collar	335
Aug.	16—Brave Girl on the Fifteenth Floor	917
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—It Takes Gasoline to Win a Girl	1014
Aug.	16—Spanish Girl	816
Aug.	16—Her Favorite Tune	892
Aug.	16—How the Loser Won	816
Aug.	16—A Young Bachelor's Dream	826
Aug.	26—A Strange Reunion	610
Sept.	16—The Actor Burglar	950
Sept.	23—Nobody Loves a Fat Man	950
Sept.	30—The Man and the Law	1000
Oct.	7—The North Pole Craze (Com.)	500
Oct.	7—A Child's Plea (Dr.)	500
Oct.	14—The Telephone Call	1000

Directory of Film Exchanges

Licensed Film Exchanges.

ALABAMA.

Birmingham Film Supply Co., 2008½ Third Ave., Birmingham.
Theater Film Supply Co., 2104 First Ave., Birmingham.

ARKANSAS.

Mitchell Film Exc., 102½ Main St., Little Rock.

CALIFORNIA.

Clune Film Exchange, 727 S. Main St., Los Angeles.
Kay-Tee Film Exchange, 224 Pacific Electric Bldg., Los Angeles.
Talley's Film Exc., 554 S. Broadway, Los Angeles.
Miles Bros., Inc., 790 Turk St., San Francisco.
Novelty Moving Picture Co., 418 Turk St., San Francisco.
Theater Film Service Co., 76 2d St., San Francisco.
Turner & Dahnken, 136 Eddy St., San Francisco.

COLORADO.

Colorado Film Exc. Co., 320 Charles St., Denver.
Denver Film Exchange, 713 Lincoln Bldg., Denver.
Kleine Optical Co., 302 Boston Bldg., Denver.

ILLINOIS.

Chicago.

American Film Service, 186 Madison St.
Calumet Film Exchange, Masonic Temple.
H. & H. Co., Monadnock Bldg.
Kleine Optical Co., 52 State St.
George K. Spoor & Co., 62 N. Clark St.
Standard Film Exchange, 79 Dearborn St.
Theater Film Service. 85 Dearborn St.

INDIANA.

H. Lieber Co., 24 W. Washington St., Indianapolis.

IOWA.

Iowa Film Service, 229 Commercial Bldg., Des Moines.
Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 421 Walnut St., Des Moines.

KENTUCKY.

O. T. Crawford Film Exchange Co., Hopkins Theater, Louisville.

LOUISIANA.

Imported Film & Supply Co., 708 Union St., New Orleans.
S. Nye Bass Film Exchange, 823 Union St., New Orleans.

MARYLAND.

Miles Bros., 412 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore.
Pearce & Scheck, 223 N. Calvert St., Baltimore.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Howard Moving Picture Co., 564 Washington St., Boston.
Kleine Optical Co., 657 Washington St., Boston.
Miles Bros., Inc., Washingtou & Dover Sts., Boston.

MICHIGAN.

National Film Co., 71 Griswold St., Detroit.
Vaudette Film Exchange Co., 103 Monroe St., Grand Rapids.

MINNESOTA.

Twiu City Calcium Light & Stereopticon Co., 709 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis.

MISSOURI.

Western Film Exc., 201 Miner's Bank Bldg., Joplin.
Yale Film Renting Co., 622 Maiu St., Kausas City.
O. T. Crawford Film Exchauge Co., Gayety Theater Bldg., St. Louis.
Western Film Exc., 949 Century Bldg., St. Louis.

MONTANA.

Montana Film Exchange, 41 N. Main St., Butte.

NEBRASKA.

Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 1318 Farnum St., Omaha.

NEW YORK.

Buffalo Film Exc., 272 Washington St., Buffalo.
Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 501-503 Central Bldg., Rochester.
Moving Picture Service Co. of Syracuse, 527 S. Salina St., Syracuse.
Actograph Co., 22 3d St., Troy.
Imperial Film Exchauge, 299 River St., Troy.

New York City.

Actograph Co., 50 Union Sq.
American Vitagraph Co., 116 Nassau St.
Greater New York Film Rental, 116 E. 14th St.
Imperial Film Exchange, 44 W. 28th St.
Kleine Optical Co., 19 E. 21st St.
Miles Bros., Inc., 250 Sixth Ave.
People's Film Exchauge 126 University Pl.
P. L. Waters, 41 E. 21st St.
Alfred Weiss Film Exchange, 219 Sixth Ave.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Theater Film Supply Co., 202 S. Tryon St., Charlotte.

OHIO.

Luhin Film Service, 140 W. 5th St., Cincinnati.
Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 132 E. 4th St., Cincinnati.
Southern Film Exc., 148 W. 5th St., Cincinnati.
Lake Shore Film & Supply Co., 314 Superior Ave., N. E., Cleveland.
United Film Exchange, 414 Superior Ave., N. W., Cleveland.
Ohio Film Service, 20 E. Broad St., Columbus.
Kent Film Service, 218 Nicholas Bldg., Toledo.
Superior Film Supply Co., 325 Huron St., Toledo.

OKLAHOMA.

Monarch Film Exchange, 11 N. Robinson St., Oklahoma City.

OREGON.

Edison Display Co., 165½ 4th St., Portland.
Morton Film Exchauge, 107 6th St., Portalnd.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 108 S. Main St., Wilkes-Barre.

Philadelphia.

C. A. Calehuff, 4th & Green Sts.
Electric Theater Supply Co., 47 N. 10th St.
Luhin Film Service, 21 S. 8th St.
Swaab Film Service, 338 Spruce St.

Pittsburg.

Columbia Film Exchange, 414 Ferguson Bldg.
Duquesne Amusement Supply Co., Bakewell Bldg.
Pennsylvania Film Exchange, 403 Lewis Bldg.
Pittsburg Calcium Light & Film Co., 121 Fourth Ave.

TENNESSEE.

Mitchell Film Exchange, Memphis.

TEXAS.

Alamo Film Exchange, 405 Main St., Dallas.
J. D. Wheelan, 339 Main St., Dallas.
Alamo Film Exchange, 509 Travis St., Houston.

UTAH.

Progressive Motion Picture Co., 408 Eccles Bldg., Ogden.
Trent & Wilsou, 63 E. 3d St., Salt Lake City.

VIRGINIA.

Luhin Film Service., Paul-Gale Greenwood Bldg., Norfolk.

WASHINGTON.

Spokane Film Exchange, Pantages Theater Bldg., Spokane.
Edison Display Co., 221 Madison St., Seattle.
Morton Film Exchange, 214 Shaffer Bldg., Seattle.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Imperial Film Exchange, 434 Ninth St., N. W., Washington.

WISCONSIN.

Western Film Exc., 307 Grand Ave., Milwaukee.

Independent Film Exchanges.

CALIFORNIA.

Pacific Film Exc., 830 Market St., San Francisco.
Pacific Coast Film Exchauge, 1724 Fillmore St., San Francisco.
Up-to-date Film Exchange, 438 San Fernando Bldg., Los Angeles.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington Film Exchange, 506 Westory Bldg., Washington.

ILLINOIS.

20th Century Optiscope Co., Gayety Theater, Springfield.

Chicago.

American Film Service, 125 Monroe St.
Antl-Trust Film Exchange, 77 South Clark St.
Chicago Film Exchange, 46 Jackson Boulevard.
Eugene Cline, 59 Dearhorn St.
Exclusive Film Co., 225 Dearhorn St.
Globe Film Service, 107 E. Madison St.
Laemmle Film Service, 196 Lake St.
Royal Film Service, 188 Madisou St.
Schiller Film Exchange, Schiller Bldg.
Star Film Co., 120 Randolph St.
20th Century Optiscope Co., 59 Dearborn St.
Unique Film & Construction Co., Unity Bldg.

INDIANA.

Indianapolis Calcium Light and Film Co., 114 S. Capitol Ave., Indianapolis.
Laemmle Film Service, 6th & Main Sts., Evansville.
Lyric Film Supply Co., 720 Wabash Ave., Terre Haute.

IOWA.

Northwestern Film Exchange, Webster.
Waterloo Film Exchange, 503 Commercial Bldg., Waterloo.

KANSAS.

Wichita Film & Supply Co., Wichita.

LOUISIANA.

Dixie Film Co., 722 Maison-Blanc Bldg, New Orleans.
World Film Co., 177 University Pl., New Orleans.

MAINE.

L. E. Adams, Lewiston.
W. E. Greene, 511 Congress St., Portland.

MARYLAND.

Celtic Amusement Co., 250 W. Preston St., Baltimore.
Consolidated Amusement Co., 28 W. Lexington St., Baltimore.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Eastern Film Exchange, 578 Washington St., Boston.
Greene, W. E., 228 Tremont St., Boston.
New England Film Exchange, 611 Washington St., Boston.
J. J. Quigley, 233 Tremont St., Boston.

MICHIGAN.

Central Film & Supply Co., 702 Genessee Ave., Saginaw.
Detroit Film Exchange, Newberry Bldg., Detroit.
Jaxon Film Service, Jackson.
Michigan Film & Supply Co., 1106 Union Trust Bldg., Detroit.
Star Film Co., Sault Ste Marie.
Wolverine Film Exch., 407 Hodges Bldg., Detroit.

MINNESOTA.

Laemmle Film Service, 100 Lumber Exchange, Minneapolis.
Mullin Film Service, 226 S. 4th St., Minneapolis.

MISSOURI.

Kansas City Film Exc., Bryant Bldg., Kansas City.
J. W. Morgan, 121 E. 5th St., Joplin.
Mullin Film Service, Argyle Bldg., Kansas City.
Park Film Exchange, Gem Theater, St. Louis.
Wm. H. Swanson St. Louis Film Co., 200 N. 7th St., St. Louis.
20th Century Optiscope Co., Argyle Bldg., Kansas City.
Wagner Film Amusement Co., 208 N. 4th St., St. Louis.

NEBRASKA.

Freeman Bros., Neligh.
Laemmle Film Service, 1517 Farnum St., Omaha.
Wm. H. Swanson Omaha Film Co., 106 S. 14th St., Omaha.

NEW YORK.

Acme Film Exchange, Larned Bldg., Syracuse.
Motion Picture Supply Co., 401 Cox Bldg., Rochester.
Mullin Film Service, Rosenbloom Bldg., Syracuse.

New York City.

Atlas M. P. Co., 281 Broadway, Brooklyn.
Empire Film Co., 150 E. 14th St.
Electric Film Exchange, 28 E. 23d St.
Exhibitors' Film Exchange, 138 Third Ave.
Great Eastern Film Co., 21 E. 14th St.
Harstn & Co., 138 E. 14th St.
L. A. Hetz, 302 E. 23d St.
Improved Film Service, 34 E. 14th St.
International Film Co., 429 Sixth Ave.
Knickerbocker Film Exchange, 39th St. & Broadway.
Laemmle Film Service, 111 E. 14th St.
New York Film Exchange, 7 E. 14th St.
New Jersey Film Rental Co., 214 Sixth Ave.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 438 Sixth Ave.
Purdy's Film Exchange, 300 E. 23d St.
Sterling Film Co., 32 Union Sq.

OHIO.

Akron Ind. Film Co., 39 E. Market St., Akron.
Cincinnati Film Exch., 214 W. 5th St., Cincinnati.
Cleveland Film Exchauge, 71 Superior Ave., N. E., Cleveland.
Eureka Film Exchange, 317 Everett Bldg., Akron.
Miami Film Exchange, 11 Fountain St., Cincinnati.
Toledo Film Exchange, Spitzer Arcade, Toledo.

OKLAHOMA.

Oklahoma Film Exchange, 7 West California St., Oklahoma City.

OREGON.

Independent Western Film Exchange, 204 McKay Bldg., Portland.
Laemmle Film Service, Wells Fargo Bldg., Portland.
Pacific Film Exchange, Pacific Bldg., Portland.
Rose City Film Exchange, Portland.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Keystone Film Exchange, 303 Lackawanna Ave., Scranton.
Mullin Film Service, Real Estate Exch., Scranton.

Philadelphia.

Eagle Film Exchange, 143 N. 8th St.
Mutual M. P. Supply Co., 934 Arch St.
Philadelphia Film Exchange, 14 N. 9th St.
Philadelphia Projection Co., 44 N. 9th St.

Pittsburg.

American Film Exchange, 650 Wahash Bldg.
Acme Film Exchange, 605 Smithfield St.
Eastern Film Exchange, Wabash Bldg.
J. Frank Hatch, Lewis Block.
Independent Film Exchange, 305 Bijou Bldg.
Liberty Film Rental Co., 713 Fulton Bldg.

TEXAS.

Texas Film Exchange, 311 Elm St., Dallas.

UTAH.

Laemmle Film Service, Salt Lake City.

VIRGINIA.

Richmond Projection Co., Richmond.

WASHINGTON.

Pacific Film Exchange, Seattle.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Nixon Film Exchange, Parkersburg.

LICENSED FILMS.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY.

		Feet
Aug.	30—The Mills of the Gods (Dr.)	672
Aug.	30—Pranks (Com.)	328
Sept.	2—The Sealed Room (Dr.)	779
Sept.	2—The Little Darling (Com.)	211
Sept.	6—"1776," or The Hessian Renegades	965
Sept.	9—Comata, the Sioux (Dr.)	963
Sept.	13—Getting Even (Com.)	587
Sept.	13—The Children's Friend (Dr.)	386
Sept.	16—The Broken Locket (Dr.)	999
Sept.	20—In Old Kentucky (Dr.)	983
Sept.	23—A Fair Exchange (Dr.)	995
Sept.	27—Leather Stocking (Dr.)	996
Sept.	30—The Awakening (Dr.)	691
Sept.	30—Wanted, a Child (Com.)	296
Oct.	4—Pippa Passes (Dr.)	983
Oct.	7—Fools of Fate (Dr.)	972
Oct.	11—The Little Teacher (Dr.)	982
Oct.	14—A Change of Heart (Dr.)	977
Oct.	18—His Lost Love (Dr.)	968
Oct.	21—The Expiation (Dr.)	992

EDISON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Sept.	3—Ethel's Luncheon (Com.)
Sept.	3—Backward, Turn Backard, etc. (Dr.)
Sept.	7—A Dangerous Pair (Com.)
Sept.	7—The Temptation (Dr.)
Sept.	10—The Making of Honey (Indus.)	190
Sept.	10—The Amateur William Tell (Com.)	810
Sept.	14—Little Sister (Dr.)	975
Sept.	17—How the Landlord Collected His Rents	460
Sept.	17—'Tis Now the Very Witching Time of Night (Com.)	500
Sept.	21—The Ordeal (Dra.)	950
Sept.	24—A Knight for a Night (Com.)	370
Sept.	24—True Love Never Runs Smoothly (C.)	230
Sept.	24—Love and War (Dr.)	400
Sept.	28—Why Girls Leave Home (Com.)	1000
Oct.	1—The Wallace Jewels (Com.)	720
Oct.	1—Two of a Kind (Com.)	280
Oct.	5—Laddie (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	8—The Minister's Daughter	830
Oct.	8—Expert Glass Blowing	170
Oct.	12—A New Life	1000
Oct.	15—Hansel and Gretel	630
Oct.	15—Whittier's Witless Wanderings	330
Oct.	19—Their Social Education (Com.)	1000
Oct.	22—The Lost Handbag (Com.)	400
Oct.	22—A Great Game (Com.)	590

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

Aug.	18—The Wonders of Nature (Sc.)	1000
Aug.	25—On Another Man's Pass (Com.)	950
Sept.	1—My Wife's Gone to the Country (C.)	952
Sept.	8—Justified (Dr.)	970
Sept.	15—A Case of Tomatoes (Com.)	495
Sept.	15—Three Reasons for Haste (Com.)	485
Sept.	22—Gratitude (Dr.)	950
Sept.	29—The Brothers (Dr.)	970
Oct.	6—A Birthday Affair (Com.)	550
Oct.	6—The Magic Melody (Com.)	431
Oct.	20—The Widow (Com.)	520
Oct.	20—A Woman's Wit (Dr.)	475
Oct.	13—The Twelfth Juror (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	27—Maud Muller (Dr.)	982

GAUMONT.

(George Kleine.)

Sept.	1—An Awakened Conscience (Dr.)	627
Sept.	7—The Mason's Paradise (Com.)	414
Sept.	8—The Stolen Gems (Dr.)	464
Sept.	8—Glimpses of Paris (Sc.)	417
Sept.	11—Mozart's Last Requiem (Dr.)	940
Sept.	14—The Tricky Dummies (Com.)	370
Sept.	14—Her Busy Day (Com.)	250
Sept.	14—The Fiddle and the Fan (Com.)	324
Sept.	21—Saved from the Quicksands (Dr.)	600
Sept.	21—Taking in a Reef (Com.)	380
Sept.	22—The Legend of the Lighthouse (Dr.)	770
Sept.	22—Dropped from the Clouds (Com.)	240
Sept.	25—On the Crest of the Waves (Dr.)	554
Sept.	25—All for a Nickel (Com.)	404
Oct.	2—The Masterpiece (Dr.)	857
Oct.	2—Papa's Hat (Com.)	140
Oct.	5—The Pill Box (Com.)	450
Oct.	5—Breaking the Bank (Com.)	490
Oct.	9—A Wedding Party in Luna Park (C.)	434
Oct.	9—The Sleuth and the Wig (Com.)	504
Oct.	12—Convicting Evidence (Dr.)	714
Oct.	12—How He Earned His Medal (Com.)	280
Oct.	13—Princess of the Sea (Fairy Drama)	520
Oct.	13—The Liquid Air (Trick Comedy)	450
Oct.	16—The Broken Violin (Dr.)	377
Oct.	16—Alphonso, the Dead Shot (Com.)	297
Oct.	16—One-Legged Pete and Pat (Com.)	320
Oct.	13—The Twelfth Juror (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	19—The Help Mate (Dr.)	517
Oct.	19—Husband's Strategy (Dr.)	387
Oct.	23—Tickled to Death (Com.)	434
Oct.	23—Country Life in a Flat (Com.)	504

URBAN-ECLIPSE.

(George Kleine.)

		Feet
Sept.	4—In Hot Pursuit (Dr.)	514
Sept.	4—Romantic Italy (Sc.)	437
Sept.	15—The Fatal Love (Dr.)	584
Sept.	15—Pontine Marshes, Italy (Sc.)	367
Sept.	18—Aeroplane Contests at Rheims (Top.)	480
Sept.	18—The Farmer's Treasure (Dr.)	500
Sept.	28—Wife or Child (Dr.)	494
Sept.	28—Breach of Promise (Com.)	484
Sept.	29—Love, the Conqueror (Dr.)	650
Sept.	29—Chasing the Ball (Magic)	347
Oct.	6—Yachting Off Cowes (Sc.)	464
Oct.	6—Gambling Passion (Dr.)	539
Oct.	20—Casting Bread Upon the Water	453
Oct.	20—Crown Prince of Germany Drilling Battery (Scenic)	517

KALEM COMPANY.

Aug.	20—The Dog Circus Rehearsal	170
Aug.	27—The Conspirators (Dr.)	410
Aug.	27—The Dyspeptic and His Double (Com.)	575
Sept.	3—The Pay Car (Dr.)	930
Sept.	10—Hiram's Bride (Dr.)
Sept.	17—The Story of a Rose (Dr.)	680
Sept.	17—Winning a Dinner (Com.)	245
Sept.	24—The Winning Boat (Dr.)	925
Oct.	1—The Mystery of the "Sleeper" Trunk	870
Oct.	8—The Hand Organ Man (Dr.)	910
Oct.	15—The Man and the Girl (Dr.)	940
Oct.	22—A Brother's Wrong (Dr.)	955

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY.

Sept.	2—The Woman Hater (Dr.)	810
Sept.	6—The Call of the Heart (Dr.)	670
Sept.	6—Our Country in Arms (Patriotic)	255
Sept.	9—A True Patriot (Patriotic)	735
Sept.	9—Glimpses of Yellowstone Park (Sc.)	200
Sept.	13—Her Face Was Her Fortune (Dr.)	810
Sept.	16—The Fortune Hunters (Com.)	575
Sept.	16—All on Account of a Letter (Com.)	385
Sept.	20—When Woman Hates (Dr.)	750
Sept.	23—The Conquering Hero (Com.)	730
Sept.	27—A Fish Story (Com.)	510
Sept.	27—Old Love Letters (Com.)	400
Sept.	30—The Judge's Ward (Dr.)	950
Oct.	4—Who Discovered the North Pole (C.)	505
Oct.	4—Billiken (Dr.)	455
Oct.	7—A Blank Check (Dr.)	975
Oct.	11—Papa's Honeymoon (Com.)	600
Oct.	11—Out for the Day (Com.)	390
Oct.	14—Sandy, the Poacher (Dr.)	840
Oct.	18—The Major and the Judge (Com.)
Oct.	18—Haps and Mishaps (Com.)	240
Oct.	21—Mignon (Dr.)
Oct.	21—Aunt Lena's Visit (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Visit to Uncle (Com.)
Oct.	25—A Buried Secret (Com.)
Oct.	28—More Precious Than Gold (Dr.)

GEORGE MELIES.

Oct.	13—The Stolen Wireless (War Drama)	915
Oct.	20—For the Cause of Suffrage (Com.)	905

PATHE FRERES.

Sept.	1—The Little Street Singer (Dr.)	426
Sept.	1—Sam Not Wanted in the Family (Dr.)	502
Sept.	3—A Visit to Biskra (Sc.)	443
Sept.	3—Show Your License (Com.)	420
Sept.	4—A Grave Disappointment (Com.)	361
Sept.	4—Launching the "Voltaire" (Sc.)	253
Sept.	4—Training Bulls for the Fight (Sc.)	331
Sept.	6—Versailles (Sc.)	462
Sept.	6—They Robbed the Chief of Police (C.)	456
Sept.	8—The Little Soldier (Dr.)	394
Sept.	8—Sweden: Gotha Canal (Sc.)	456
Sept.	10—Tom Thumb (Dr.)	1016
Sept.	11—Chasing a Sea Lion in the Arctics	371
Sept.	11—Sports in Java (Sc.)	298
Sept.	11—How to Tame a Mother-in-Law (Com.)	351
Sept.	13—Amateur Detective (Com.)	390
Sept.	13—The Child's Prayer (Dr.)	571
Sept.	15—The Pretty Girl of Nice (Dr.)	492
Sept.	15—City of Naples (Indus.)	449
Sept.	17—Mountebank's Son (Dr.)	892
Sept.	18—Oh, What a Beard! (Com.)	335
Sept.	18—The Fresh Kid (Com.)	295
Sept.	18—Construction of Balloons (Indus.)	361
Sept.	20—Aviation Contests at Rheims	607
Sept.	20—Caught in His Own Trap (Com.)	374
Sept.	22—The Tower of Nesle (Dr.)	1088
Sept.	24—Careless Tramp (Com.)	574
Sept.	24—Caucasian Customs (Sc.)	387
Sept.	25—Servant's Good Joke (Com.)	548
Sept.	25—Trained Birds (Sc.)	397
Sept.	27—He Learned the Trick of Mesmerism	433
Sept.	27—Suitors' Competition (Com.)	518
Sept.	29—Pierrot, the Fuddler (Dr.)	318
Sept.	29—Jane is Unwilling to Work (Com.)	525
Oct.	1—A Game of Chess (Dr.)	558
Oct.	1—An Eventful Trip (Com.)	390
Oct.	2—The Garbage of Paris (Indus.)	407
Oct.	2—Vendetta (Dr.)	541
Oct.	4—The Story of a Banknote (Dr.)	981
Oct.	6—Female Sleuth (Dr.)	604
Oct.	6—The Music Lesson (Com.)	295
Oct.	8—Sister Angelica (Dr.)	705
Oct.	8—How Jack Helped His Little Sister	213
Oct.	9—Anti-Fat Sanitarium (Com.)	653
Oct.	9—Dog Pickpocket (Com.)	315
Oct.	11—The Trappers (Dr.)	804
Oct.	13—A Lucky Husband (Com.)	515
Oct.	13—Wonderful Remedy (Com.)	377
Oct.	15—The Romance of a Poor Girl (Dr.)	656
Oct.	15—Blessington's Bouny Babies (Com.)	262
Oct.	16—Chums (Com.)	669
Oct.	16—Physical Culture Fiend (Com.)	311
Oct.	18—The Belated Wedding (Com.)	584
Oct.	18—Bob's Electric Theater (Com.)	361
Oct.	20—A Home Without Children (Dr.)	669
Oct.	22—Drink (Dr.)	2106

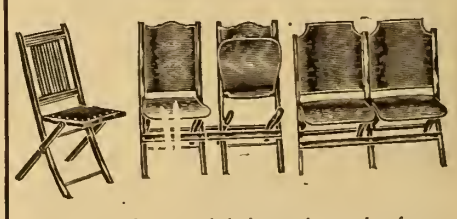
SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY.

Aug.	30—Winning a Widow (Dr.)	450
Sept.	2—The Blight of Sin (Dr.)	995
Sept.	9—The Engagement Ring (Dr.)	995
Sept.	13—Freebooters (Dr.)	995
Sept.	16—Crooked Path (Dr.)	960
Sept.	20—The Bachelor's Visit (Dr.)	775
Sept.	20—False Alarm (Com.)	175
Sept.	23—Stricken Blind (Dr.)	990
Sept.	27—Across the Divide (Dr.)	980
Sept.	30—The Druukard's Fate (Dr.)	930
Oct.	7—Wheels of Justice (Dr.)	950
Oct.	11—Pet of the Big Horn Ranch (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	14—Lost in Siberia (Dr.)	785
Oct.	14—Bear and Forehear (Com.)	180
Oct.	18—A Tale of the Backwoods (Dr.)	1000
Oct.	21—The Cowboy Millionaire (Dr.)

VITAGRAPH COMPANY.

Aug.	28—The Evil That Men Do (Dr.)	925
Aug.	31—The Hunchback (Dr.)	633
Aug.	31—Niagara in Winter Dress	350
Sept.	4—The Galley Slave	885
Sept.	7—The Fisherman (Dr.)	430
Sept.	7—He Tried on Handcuffs (Dr.)	564
Sept.	11—An Alpine Echo (Dr.)	990
Sept.	14—The Little Father (Dr.)	610
Sept.	14—The Wealthy Rival (Com.)	360
Sept.	18—The Marble Heart (Dr.)	968
Sept.	21—The Unspoken Good-bye (Dr.)	425
Sept.	21—The Siren's Necklace (Dr.)	530
Sept.	25—Fantine (Dr.)	997
Sept.	29—Onawanda (Dr.)	545
Sept.	29—The Romance of an Umbrella (Com.)	450
Oct.	2—The Scales of Justice (Dr.)	983
Oct.	5—Betty's Choice (Dr.)	642
Oct.	5—Never Eat Green Apples (Com.)	290
Oct.	9—For Her Sake (Dr.)	995
Oct.	12—Red Wing's Gratitude (Dr.)	562
Oct.	12—Too Many on the Job (Com.)	410
Oct.	16—The Diver's Remorse (Dr.)	900
Oct.	19—The Mexican's Revenge (Dr.)	680
Oct.	19—A Dull Knife (Com.)	275
Oct.	23—Cosette (Dr.)	987
Oct.	26—The Two Mr. Whites (Com.)	543
Oct.	26—He Fell in Love With His Wife (C.)	435
Oct.	30—Entombed Alive (Dr.)	994

Folding and Assembly Chairs



Most popular priced chairs on the market for picture show use

Prompt Shipments. Write for Catalogue

PEABODY SCHOOL FURNITURE CO.

NORTH MANCHESTER, - - - INDIANA

Open Twenty Four Hours Every Day—Write, Call, Wire or Phone Any Hour, Day or Night

ELECTRIC THEATRE SUPPLY CO., Inc. The Home of Good Film Service The Birthplace of Original Ideas

We handle everything needed by Moving Picture Exhibitors 44 N. Tenth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

We have every subject issued by the Licensed Manufacturers

MOTIOGRAPH, PATHE FRERES, POWER'S, EDISON and LUBIN MACHINES and PARTS ALWAYS ON HAND

Write for our new proposition:—Supplying two customers in the same town each with twelve reels a week, keeping each one's supply away from the other, and no repeaters to either.

THE OLSON VAUDEVILLE BOOKING AGENCY

Now Booking vaudeville acts for a large number of Picture shows and Vaudeville theatres throughout the middle West.

If your theatre is not a paying proposition, write us at once. Our acts will double your box office receipts.

We carry a complete line of moving picture supplies.

THE OLSON VAUDEVILLE BOOKING AGENCY :: :: 122 North Market Street, Wichita, Kas.

WRIGHT BROTHERS AERIAL FLIGHT

Wonderful Slides of the Official Flight at

FORT MYER, VIRGINIA

Showing President Taft, Alice Roosevelt Longworth, Uncle Joe Cannon, Sec'y of Treasury Franklin MacVeagh, Elihu Root, Senator Lodge, Sec'y of War Dickinson, Senator Philander Knox, and the elete of Official Life in Washington. These Slides are like all our creations, Perfect in Every Particular, taken on the spot and are official.

RELEASED OCTOBER 30, '09

25 Slides with Lecture $7.00 per Week

BRAYTON MANUFACTURING CO., 122 E. RANDOLPH ST. CHICAGO, ILL.

Makers of the Best Announcement Advertising Slides

WANTED

OPERA CHAIRS and EQUIPMENT for MOVING PICTURE OUTFIT

C. H. KERR - - - - - INDEPENDENCE, KANSAS

QUALITY FILMS

GREAT NORTHERN FILMS CO. COPENHAGEN

MEMBER N. I. M. P. A.

Next Week's Release

A Lunatic's Day Off

Comedy Success

GOTACANAL—OVER NORWAY'S ROCKIES

This Week's Release

The Red Domino

High Class Feature Production
Artistically Tinted and Colored

ALL EXCHANGES RENT GREAT NORTHERN FILMS—Photographic Excellence Unexcelled

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY

NORDISK FILM COMPANY, COPENHAGEN

7 EAST FOURTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

NEXT S and A FILM ISSUE

A Dramatization of Whittier's Beautiful Poem

"MAUD MULLER"

(Length Approx. 982 feet)

A story based on the beautiful poem "Maud Muller," by John Greenleaf Whittier, in which the pretty pastoral atmosphere is preserved and the spirit that moved the great poet finds expression again in a sweet, simple story.

READY

Wednesday, October 27, 1909

ORDER ESSANAY POSTERS

From any film exchange or from us. "The best is cheapest."

ESSANAY FILM MFG. CO.

62 N. Clark St., Chicago, Ill.

CHEAP

Steel Frame Theatre Chairs

ABSOLUTELY Non-BREAKABLE

Suitable for small theatres and Moving Picture shows. We carry these chairs in stock and can ship immediately.

Second Hand Chairs

Also Seating for Out of-Door Use.

Address Dept. W,

STEEL FURNITURE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich

New York Office, 44 Park Place

Boston Office, 224 Congress St., Boston, Mass.

Western Office,
Monadnock Building, San Francisco, Cal.

Feature Films for Traveling Show

For Sale 40 reels feature films 2½, 3 and 4 cents per foot.

ECONOMY FILM COMPANY
314 Sheppard's Hotel
Sixth Street Pittsburg, Pa.

OUR MOTTO: BIG SALES and SMALL Profits

Latest and Best FRENCH-ITALIAN and AMERICAN Subjects

NEW JERSEY FILM RENTAL COMPANY
214 SIXTH AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

F. PENNINO, Prop. Tel. Chelsea 2442

Drop us a line or a trial will convince you that we can give you the entire satisfaction

THE CHRONO

(Licensed)

The latest moving picture machine with a new and improved movement—The Cam. No Star Wheel to get out of order, Steady, Flickerless, Durable.

A new and better machine, yet costs no more than the ordinary.

We have a New Chronophone Proposition bringing Talking Pictures within the reach of all.

The best and cheapest line of accessories, Lamps, Rewinders, Reels. Write for our new machine catalogue. Special arrangements with exchanges.

Gaumont

GAUMONT CO.
124 E. 25th St., N. Y. City

GAUMONT CO. OF CANADA
403-405 Birks Building
Montreal

Canadian Chromophone Co.
310 Kennedy Building
Winnipeg

Gaumont

FILMS

RELEASED OCTOBER 18.

THE MAJOR AND THE JUDGE

The Major is satisfied with his daughter's choice and invites the Judge to take a hand in the marriage Court. This the Judge does so well that even the Major is greatly surprised.
LENGTH, 695 FEET.

HAPS AND MISHAPS

Life consists of haps and mishaps, and so does this film. Every hap follows a mishap, and he laughs best who laughs last. LENGTH, 240 FEET.

RELEASED OCTOBER 21.

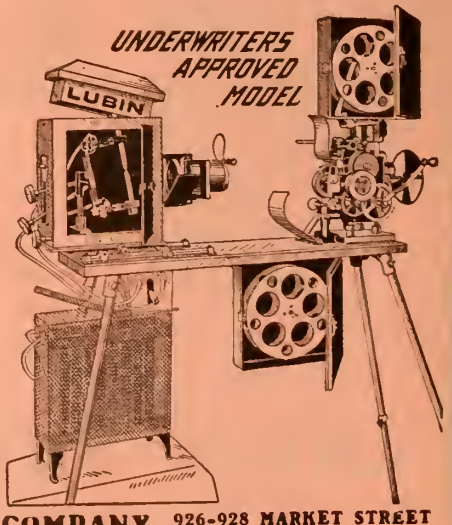
MIGNON

The clown is in love with Mignon, the bareback rider. Her rival is the Spanish dancer, who tries her best to win the clown away from Mignon. After many dramatic incidents, the lovers are united. LENGTH, 575 FEET.

AUNT LENA'S VISIT

Aunt Lena, with her daughter, Louise, is visiting her brother, Heinie. Max and Moritz entertain their little cousin so well that Aunt Lena decides to go home. LENGTH, 345 FEET.

LUBIN'S 1910 CINEOGRAPH Combined With STEREOPTICON



equipped with improved Fire Magazines, Automatic Fire Shutter and Automatic Fire Shield (Lubin's patent), Asbestos Covered Wire Connections, new improved Lamp House, new style Fireproof Rheostat, improved Electric Lamp, new Condenser-Holders for rapid change, outside Shutter, POSITIVE REWINDING ATTACHMENT, the only correct one, ONE PIN MOVEMENT and innumerable other important new features.

ASK FOR OUR FREE CATALOGUE.

LUBIN MANUFACTURING COMPANY 926-928 MARKET STREET PHILADELPHIA, PA.

The Best Of All—After All

Chicago Vaudeville Managers Exchange

The Largest Independent Booking Offices West of New York

Booking all of the Best Family Theatres in Chicago

Also other houses in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Michigan

Reputable managers are invited to call and see us when in Chicago

FRANK Q. DOYLE, Mgr.
151 Washington St., (Fourth Floor) Chicago, Ill.

BISON FILMS

ONE REEL A WEEK TRADE MARK

REGULAR RELEASE DAY FRIDAY TRADE MARK

Next Issue, Friday, October 22nd

IONA, THE WHITE SQUAW

Dramatic Code Word, Rebut Approx. Length 1,000 ft

In the release of this subject The New York Motion Picture Company presents a feature film in the extreme sense of the term. This picture far surpasses any previous release, and is remarkable for its trueness in portraying Indian life.

NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CO.

Manufacturers of "Bison" Life Motion Pictures

429 Sixth Ave., Cor. 26th St., NEW YORK CITY

PHONE 4084 MADISON SQ.

SLIDES

Our Second Annual October Offer for this Month Only—Announcement Slides, Thirty-Five Cents Each, Three for One Dollar.

Every year we give our patrons this great offer for one month only to stimulate trade. Our new thirty-two page illustrated catalogue of over two hundred difierent kinds of slides is a wonderful piece of work. Send for it, its free.

LEVI COMPANY, Inc.

24 UNION SQUARE, NEW YORK, U. S. A.

ask about kosmik economizer

Kleine Optical Co.

INCORPORATED 1899

rents all licensed films

chicago—52 state street
new york—19 e. 21st street
boston—657 washington street
denver—nassau building

handling the product of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse, edison, pathe and vitagraph

st. john, n. b.—94 prince william st.
montreal, p. q.—la patrie building
toronto, ont.—37 yonge street
winnipeg, man.—613 ashdown block
vancouver, b. c.—410 hastings street

specializing in canada the films of the following licensed manufacturers:

biograph, selig, essanay, kalem, lubin, (geo. kleine) gaumont and urban-eclipse

all standard licensed machines

Gaumont

ADVANCE FILM DESCRIPTIONS

WEEK OCTOBER 17 TO 23, '09

ECLIPSE

Oct. 19th—"HIS HELPMATE"—Gaumont
Comedy 517 Feet

Shows how a wife can distinguish herself when she is permitted to assist her husband in his affairs. In this case however, the wife proves to be the head of the house and the husband is left far behind. Women will be very favorably impressed with this lively comedy.

Oct. 19th—"HUSBAND'S STRATEGY"—Gaumont
Drama 387 Feet

Teaches how to win a wife's affection. The husband who realizes that his wife is in love with a serenading lover, disguises himself as his wife's rival, deceives his own wife and only reveals his identity when she confesses her love.

Oct. 20th—"CROWN PRINCE OF GERMANY DRILLING BATTERY"—Urban-Eclipse Military 517 Feet

A splendid and stirring subject, sure to arouse great interest and enthusiasm.

Oct. 20th—"CASTING BREAD UPON THE WATER"
Urban-Eclipse Drama 450 Feet

An exquisite country scene, illustrating simply but graphically a kind action and its reward.

Oct. 23rd—"COUNTRY LIFE IN A FLAT"—Gaumont
Comedy 504 Feet

A sportsman equips his city flat with sporting attractions of the country, and hunts and fishes in his parlor. A most novel and amusing idea in a film.

Oct. 23rd—"TICKLED TO DEATH" Gaumont
Comedy 434 Feet

Depicts the fearful tortures endured by a ticklish man. His sensitiveness, however, eventually saves his life.

IMPORTED BY

George Kleine

52 State St., Chicago 19 East 21st St., New York

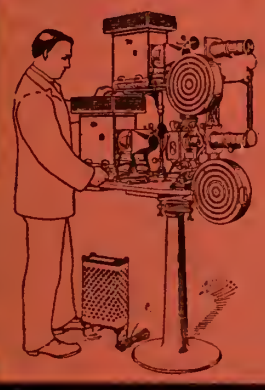
Vol. 5., No. 18 October 30, 1909 Price, 10 Cents

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

WHICH IS INCORPORATED WITH THE EXHIBIT

ALL THE FILM AND SONG SLIDE NEWS

Published Weekly by THE WORLD PHOTOGRAPHIC PUBLISHING CO., 125 E. 23d ST., NEW YORK



The Motiograph Motion Picture Machine is A Wonder

AND WILL INCREASE YOUR BUSINESS

It projects Flickerless, Steady and Wonderfully Brilliant pictures, has Patented 1½ minute Rewind from main crank, revolving Magazines, Automatic Fireproof shutter, etc., not found in other Machines.—WILL WEAR TWICE AS LONG.

C. H. D. of Keokuk, Iowa, writes: Motiograph Making a Big Hit and Business increased wonderfully.

F. L. F. of Chicago, Ill., writes: "Used every day for seven months, and not one penny for repairs."

F. J. K. of Kansas City, writes: "Operating Motiograph nearly two years. Have operated all makes but none to compare with Motiograph.—PRICES, $150.00 AND UP

Calcium Gas Outfit

The Enterprise Calcium Gas Outfit is the only satisfactory substitute for electric light Write for Catalog to-day

Western Representatives { S. Lubin Geo. Melies

FILM

Enterprise Optical Mfg. Co., 564-572 West Randolph Street, Chicago

Eagle Film Exchange

We handle the most up-to-date European goods, also the following makes:—Great Northern, New York Motion and the Centaur

Dealers in all makes of Machines, Carbons, Cement, Tickets, Condensers, Fort Wayne Compensarcs.

143 NORTH 8th STREET, PHILADELPHIA, PA.

BALTIMORE THEATRE SUPPLY :: :: :: Builder's Exchange Building, Baltimore, Md., Mr. A. Steen, Mgr.

FROM POVERTY TO PROSPERITY

This is the road that is mapped out for the Exhibitor who will use his good judgment, and deal with the Philadelphia Film Exchange

A Splendid Array of Headliners

PHILADELPHIA FILM EXCHANGE, 14 North Ninth Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

438 Sixth Avenue, New York City 8 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

"Power's" Means Perfect in Moving Pictures

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 5

POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH No. 6
Guaranteed for 1 year

POWER'S INDUCTOR
For alternating current

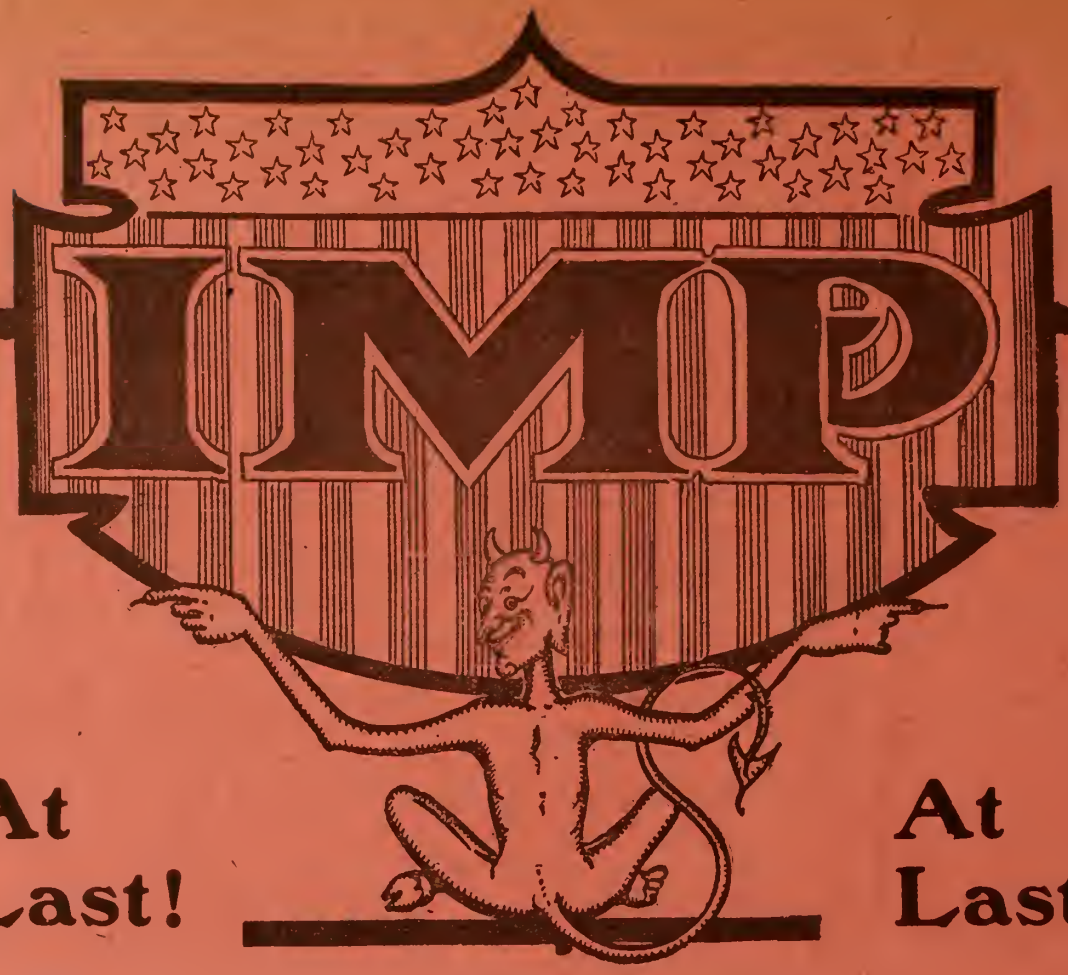
POWER'S "BILL SPLITTER"
For direct current

POWER'S TOOL KIT

Send for Catalogue G

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY

115-117 Nassau Street NEW YORK



At Last! At Last!

With a soul full of hope and a heart full of pride and enthusiasm, I now announce the

First Release of "IMP" Films Monday, October 25th

Film exchanges and exhibitors by the hundreds have been urging me to hurry up with this first release, but to all alike I have said: "None of the going-off-half-cocked business for mine!" I have held back week after week to be absolutely certain that everything is in ship shape. And I now present

"HIAWATHA"

Length 988 feet. Taken at the Falls of Minnehaha in the Land of the Dacotahs. And you can bet it is classy or I wouldn't make it my first release. The title explains the nature of the picture. It is taken from Longfellow's masterpiece of poesy and it is a gem of photography and acting. Following this I will release some more pictorial corkers and some screamingly funny stuff, bearing the true stamp of American humor. Get "Hiawatha" and see if you don't agree that it starts a brand new era in American moving pictures.

CARL LAEMMLE, President

MY MOTTO WILL BE:

The best films that man's ingenuity can devise and the best films man's skill can execute.

and no cheating on measurements

All genuine "IMP" films bear this little trade mark which is fully protected by law. Address all IMP mail to

111 East 14th Street
New York, N. Y.

One of my customers has the nicest little house in Illinois for sale. Write to me and I'll put you next

PATHÉ FRÈRES

FILMS

COMING HEADLINERS

The Gambler

Highly Dramatic Story with a Happy Ending

Released October 27 — Abt. 699 Fee

Life Behind the Scenes

The Ups and Downs of the Actor, on and off the Stage

Released October 29 — Abt. 446 Feet

The Lonely Bachelor

A pretty story of how a little child brought two lonely hearts together

Released November 1 — Abt. 636 Feet

Prodigal Son (Colored)

A dramatic sermon that surpasses all previous efforts

Released November 5 — Abt. 1017 Feet

Flight of Mr. Valette

Historic episode of the reign of Napoleon I

Released November 10 — Abt. 878 Feet

SPECIAL RELEASE

Rigoletto—Film d'Art

Sunday, November 14 — Abt. 1000 Feet

NEW YORK
41 West 25th Street

CHICAGO
35 Randolph Street

NEW ORLEANS
813 Union Street

Pacific Coast Agency—Turner & Dahnken, 136 Eddy Street, San Francisco, Cal.

SELIG'S GREAT WAR PICTURE

BRITON AND BOER

The greatest war picture ever produced.

RELEASED OCTOBER 25th, 1909

Get in touch with your Film Exchange at once

THE SENORITA

A Stirring Story of the Chivalry of the Mexican Gentleman

RELEASED OCTOBER 28 1000 Feet

Order from Your Film Exchange. They all rent Selig's. They must be Good--Ask Anybody. They Always Show to Crowds.

Get in touch with your Exchange and order a Selig, which means packed houses always. Don't Forget Our Posters. Price 10 cents. Write today. Best Hit Ever for the Lobby.

THE SELIG POLYSCOPE CO., Inc. 45-47-49 RANDOLPH ST., CHICAGO, U. S. A.

VITAGRAPH FILMS

THE FILMS OF "QUALITY"

Tuesday, October 26th, 1909

The Two Mr. Whites

A clever comedy, in which John White, a lawyer of convivial proclivities, accepts an invitation to spend a few days with a friend at his country home. At the same time, Jonathan White, a temperance reformer, is asked to address the "Sons of Temperance" in the same town where John White is to visit. The temperance committee get hold of the lawyer and are horrified when he insists upon having a beer, while Jonathan is carried away by some club men, who shock him by offering a drink. The reformer leaps out of the window, encountering his own committee, who are amazed over the actions of the other White. The error is quickly rectified and the conference breaks up when the lawyer offers to treat. LENGTH, 543 FEET.

He Fell in Love With His Wife

Another pleasing comedy, depicting the waning gallantry of a young husband after the honeymoon is past, and the clever manner by which the wife regains his affection. Three gentlemen guests and the wife concoct a scheme in which each one of the three declares his love for the woman, as the husband looks on in amazement. He orders his supposed false friends away and upbraids his wife for her unfaithfulness. After explanations, the husband realizes that he is still in love with his wife and thanks his guests for their part in impressing it upon his mind. LENGTH, 435 FEET.

Saturday, October 30th, 1909

Entombed Alive

An adaptation from a French classic and the first production played by the Italian company of actors and pantomimists recently added to the Vitagraph staff. An intensely pleasing production, of exceptional photographic quality and pantomimic acting. LENGTH, 994 FEET.

THE VITAGRAPH COMPANY OF AMERICA NEW YORK, 116 Nassau St. CHICAGO, 109 Randolph St. LONDON, 25 Cecil Court PARIS, 15, Rue Sainte-Cecile

Moving Picture World

Founded by J. P. CHALMERS.

Copyright, 1908, by

The World Photographic Publishing Company,
125 East 23d Street (Beach Building), New York.

Telephone call, 1344 Gramercy.

Editors: J. P. CHALMERS, THOMAS BEDDING, F.R.P.S.

Subscription: $2.00 per year. Post free in the United States, Mexico, Hawaii, Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands.

Advertising Rates: $2.00 per inch 2½-inch col.; $3.00 per inch 3½-inch col. Classified advertisements (no display), 3 cents per word, cash with order.

Time discounts: 5% two or more insertions, 10% three months order, 15% six months, 20% twelve months.

G. P. VON HARLEMAN, Western Representative,
913-915 Schiller Building, Chicago, Ill.
Telephone, Central 3763.

Entered at the General Post Office in New York City as Second Class Matter.

Vol. 5 OCTOBER 30, 1909 No. 18

Editorial.

Pictures and Politics.

Tammany and Mr. Hearst have missed their opportunity. Anybody in search of a little cheap amusement and a smattering of political education can gratify themselves just now on the west side of Union Square, New York City, where a couple of free entertainments are in daily progress. One of these is provided by Mr. W. R. Hearst. Anti-Tammany facts and figures, are on the walls, the megaphonic barker sits at the door; and inside the orators revile Tammany and all its works to such of the electorate as can spare the time to go and listen.

A few doors off, Tammany goes one better. There is a monkey, an elephant, and caricatures of Mr. Hearst and the members of his literary staff. Outside, the band plays; inside, orators tell what a nice man Mr. Gaynor is; and it is all free. Decadent and decaying Union Square has not been so lively for a long time. But both Tammanyite and anti-Tammanyite have missed their opportunity. They should have had free exhibitions of moving pictures, illustrative of the political iniquities of their opponents. There is plenty of field for it; there is plenty of field for pictorial propaganda of the kind. The alleged crimes of Tammany as regards the civic administration of this city, could all be arranged by a competent producer, photographed, and shown on the screen. Similarly, the adventures and misadventures of the elusive Mr. Hearst could also be produced and exhibited. Neither side has risen to the level of its opportunities.

But still, the moving picture is to play a part, and an important part, during the present election. The Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association has taken sides; pictures are being made of the candidates as well as of incidents in the fight, and these are to be shown in theaters through the city. Yet, after all, this is a somewhat half-hearted way of putting into use what might be made a very effective aid in electioneering. Printers' ink and pictures talk, but moving pictures convince. People are agitating for more subways. A clever operator at Fourteenth or Forty-second streets could tell a most harrowing tale with a moving picture camera, and so bring home to the minds of the electorate the horrors which have to be endured on account of the ineffective subway system. So with regard to perfunctory street-cleaning when the snow comes; so with regard to excessive crowding on the East Side; badly paved thoroughfares; and other signs of defective municipal administrations. The moving picture camera would be an accurate, infallible and cogent witness.

It is to be hoped, by the way, that moving picture men will impress on the candidates, or the candidates they are supporting, the desirability of supporting rather than harrassing a very important section of the entertainment business, such as the moving picture is. Mayor McClellan was no friend to the moving picture. He was imperious, nay, autocratic, in his policy. He closed and opened theaters in a very irrational way; he persecuted where he should have encouraged; and generally he behaved towards the moving picture theater in far from a statesmanlike way. Opportunity should be taken to impress Mr. Gaynor, Mr. Bannard, or Mr. Hearst, that moving picture men form an important section of the community, and that their interests are worth conserving. If this election demonstrates the fact that moving picture men are an active factor in city politics, it does not matter whether Tammany or anti-Tammany is victorious. The end justifies the means, and what is needed is a wiser administrative policy towards the most popular amusement in New York City. The advice given by "The Man About Town," last week, to the exhibitor to combine and make himself felt in politics, is very opportune, and we hope it will bear good fruit.

To the Poets of the People.

We are all extremely busy in reforming the moving picture; we are reforming the plays and the method of writing them, and we are reforming the morality of the subjects; we are reforming the producing end of things; we are reforming the photography of the picture; we are reforming the theaters, the exhibitors, the operators;—in fact, we talk reform, we breathe reform all round It is reform first, last and all the time.

Then there is the music. Each and every one of these subjects has been dealt with in our columns are being dealt with week by week, and of course will be continued to be dealt with each successive Saturday of the year. But with it all there is one little factor in the moving picture entertainment that has hitherto escaped notice in these columns, to which we think reference should be specially directed. We mean the illustrated song slide. The illustrated song slide is a composite production. Music from the piano accompanies the vocalized efforts of the performer on the stage, who is supposed by a pleasant fiction to find his inspiration from a colored picture projected on the screen. Now, to none of these factors do we specially refer on this occasion. Aforetime when the colored lantern slide had been criticised in these pages, indignant slide makers have risen in their wrath and rebuked us for our strictures. The producers of these colorific gems are very touchy and perhaps justly so in regard to the basic qualities of their pictures. So we will let them pass on the present occasion. We will also let the singing and the music pass. They do not concern us now.

What then thus concerns us, gentle reader? If neither the music, the singing, nor the photography of the illustrated song slide is the object of this criticism, what is? Clearly by this process of elimination the only thing that remains for notice on this occasion are the words of the songs. The words of the songs, we repeat. Frankly speaking, we are unable in a majority of cases, to dignify these productions by the sacred name of poetry or the more gentle appellation of verse. For they are never either. This is a bold statement, but we shall uphold this contention in any body of educated critics or literary men. We do not know the authors of these collections of doggerel, and we do not want to know them. All we have to say is that a more deplorable collection of maudlin, verbal banalities could not possibly be found than a group of rhymes—nay, they are not even rhymes, —well, let us say a group of verses—forms which go to make up a number of songs to which colored photographic slides and music are fitted.

Reform in this direction is urgently needed. The music publishers of New York City should combine to assassinate the miserable bards who afflict Broadway with their wretched productions. Let any intelligent reader who is acquainted with the fundamental theories of verse construction just apply one or two tests to these so-called songs and he will see how miserably they fail to rise to them. We do not know whether a little book on this subject is to be had in this country; probably it is. It is "Hood's Rules of Rhyme." Thomas Hood, who was a noted humorist, lays down the formulæ for verse construction. From that book the would-be rhymsters could learn the rules of the game. It is probable that not one single author of the songs we are condemning, chiefly on technical grounds, has ever heard of or read this invaluable little manual. It should be circulated broadcast amongst the Broadway music publishers, who of course are the real culprits in issuing such vapid, flabby, meaningless, pointless twaddle as does duty for the words of the average cheap song.

Of course it is out of our province to discuss the poetical side of matters. Poeta nascitur non fit—the poet is born not made. We do not look for Rudyard Kipling, James W. Riley, Eugene Field, Stephen Philips on the moving picture screen; in other words, we do not look for real poetry. But what we do look for and what we have a right to expect, and what the public is looking for, are good sensible verses on suitable topics properly constructed, properly scanning, and conveying the sentiment of the song in clear, intelligent, musical English. This sort of thing is painfully rare. The moving picture makers are inviting well-known authors to write the scenarios for their plays. Now let the music publishers take note of this protest of ours and let them seek the co-operation of good verse writers for their songs, and then something more will have been done to uplift the moving picture entertainment, which at its song slide end just now is painfully and deplorably weak.

